I turned to my one o'clock and saw the flash of a motorcycle headlamp from between two buildings. The buildings were so close together that the alley in between was in almost total darkness. I casually headed in that direction and after checking that all was clear, I casually faded into the alley darkness.

"Smooth!" Petra said approvingly in her electronically enhanced voice.

She was astride her black motorcycle, looking as menacing as ever.

"So, I assume you didn't drag me into this alley to fuck me, so what's the plan?" I demanded.

Petra looked me up and down before responding.

"It would definitely be a consideration!" Petra laughed.

I did swing that way, but not right at that moment.

"You can eat me, once the city is safe, Petra, so wind in those hormones!"

"You are no damn fun, you know that!" Petra whined before getting serious. "It's the fucking Sicilians again!"

"Is that all?"

"You're shitting yourself, just like I am, so let's keep perspective," Petra growled back. "Those explosions were set to cause maximum terror, now look at this..."

Petra produced a tablet computer from beneath her seat and showed a map of the city. "

You see these points. All have had explosions in the past half hour. So the Cops will have gone to the sites of the explosions, now look here."

Petra pointed to an area that had no point marked, it was where there should have been an explosion and if so, it would have completed a circle.

"That point will have no cops," Petra finished.

"Maybe the bomb didn't explode," I countered.

"Fucking crap choice!" Petra replied as she pointed to the map. "Go find your tools and meet me here."

"Thirty minutes!" I announced and left the alley, heading back towards my apartment.

Thirty-five minutes later I parked my old, beaten up, SUV round the back of an eight-storey apartment block. I grabbed my equipment from the trunk and ran up the external fire escape. Once I reached the roof, I scanned it before stepping out and running to the far side. It took me another six minutes to assemble my sniper file and dial Petra.

"Overwatch is ready!" I called.

"About fucking time!" Petra growled. "What do you see?"

I aimed my scope at the point where we expected to find something, exactly what we were looking for I had no idea. I scanned the roads, the intersections and then the cars and buildings. Finally, I stopped dead on a store. I recognised it immediately; it belonged to a friend of Tony's, back in New York.

"They're moving in on Nikki's store," I told Petra.

"Nikki?"

"He's a friend of a friend; an Italian. I think the Sicilians are staking their claims to this City."

"Like fuck, they are!" Petra replied. "How many?"

"Looks like twenty or so."

"Can you trim them down and cover my back?"

"Not a problem!"

I watched as Petra showed herself, down near the store. She drew her Tactical Katana Swords and I heard her challenge the cunts as I took aim on the largest man there.

I caressed the trigger and took a breath.

"You're fucking with the wrong people, motherfuckers!"

"Vigilantes cazzo!" One man growled in Italian. {'Fucking vigilantes!'}

"Sicilian scum!" I growled back.

Then the head of the man exploded like a melon and pandemonium descended on the street as I started slicing into the Mafioso. The blood looked so good as it flew through the air. I saw men dropping to Mathilda's bullets as she covered my back so I could continue my fight forwards. I felt a bullet hit my chest, then another. I ignored the pain and channelled it to my advantage, turning it into anger and violence.

I saw a Mafioso move into the store and head over to where I could see Nikki cowered, with his wife and two sons. I ran in and drove both blades into the man through the back, almost cutting his body in half as I withdrew the blades. I nodded to Nikki.

"You are safe!" I said, as Sergeants Fellowes and Murphy came in the rear of the store, pistols raised and dragged the family to safety out the back door

"Dio vi benedica, Petra!" Nikki called as he left. {'God, bless you, Petra!'}

I turned as three more men entered the store.

"I've lost you!" Mathilda called out. "You have six left!"

"I'm okay; Nikki's out. I can take them!"

I rapidly broke down my rifle and ran down the fire escape.

I heard Petra's yell as I went; the fight had begun.

"Come get me, you bastards; you sure do bleed a lot!"

I arrived at the store minutes later and found Petra lying on the floor. I could see blood on her armour, but it all seemed to have come from the dead bodies around the store. She stirred.

"I think I fell!"

"You have a bullet scrape on the side of your mask. You were knocked out."

"Did he get away?"

"No, he didn't!" I replied, holstering my pistol and looking towards the back door and the dead body. "Let's get you back to your feet."

"Not bad for a day's work, if I do say so, myself!" Petra said, looking around as she stowed her blades on her back.
"Anyway, how about that promise?"

"What promise?" I asked.

"You said I could eat you, once the city was safe!"

Chapter 177*: Chicago

Chicago

Almost three weeks later Wednesday night

The responsibility, to not fuck things up was overwhelming.

I had a legacy to uphold, on my own. The legacy that was Fusion. I was enjoying myself, don't get me wrong; Hit Girl had a great support network set up of tame Cops and other Fusion supporters; I was really, very pleased to be a part of it all.

I had survived three weeks of looking after Chicago. Yes, I had received help from Mathilda and two tame Cops, Sergeants Murphy and Fellowes, but I was going to be able to hand back an intact Chicago to Hit Girl.

I finished securing the hands of the two cunts and sat them down with their backs against the wall of the alley.

"You two just sit there and be nice!" I growled as I pulled out my cell. "Hey, I need you guys to put down your donuts and come get a pair of assholes, or do I just send 'em by UPS?"

"Funny bitch! Give us the address....," came the response from Murphy.

The following morning Wednesday

My routine began as soon as I awoke.

I opened the window, placed the plant on the windowsill. I poured and downed a large glass of milk, plus another. Always two, never less. One for me, and the other for Leon. Next came my morning exercises, thirty minutes worth.

After that and another glass of milk, I started cleaning my weapons. They had not been fired, but they still needed to be cleaned.

West Columbia

I was not happy!

Cathy had been round and she had informed Paige and me that Curtis had been shot and that Megan was hurt, but okay. I hated it when any of them got hurt, but in that case it was the youngsters and one was my daughter to be.

There was nothing, I could do. I could only worry. It was my fault that Mindy had taken her team to that Godforsaken, hellhole. I sincerely hoped it would all be over soon and we could all be together again.

I missed Mindy. She was a big part of my life, and with her gone, I was lost.

"What was she like, when you got her back from Damon?" Paige asked.

"Distant. She didn't really know me anymore. It was as if those five years that I had spent bringing her up had never happened. Yeah, she knew who I was, but she could not remember how things used to be. I was also more than a little scared of her!"

"I suppose that was understandable, considering..."

"Yeah, I had just watched her mow down a large group of armed men that hardened cops would think twice about approaching! I saw it all LIVE dammit!"

I welcomed Paige's touch as she sought to keep me calm.

"But I almost cried when I saw her walk up to the camera and say those words, shooting the camera out. I was so happy that my girl was alive. That had been the first time in six years that I had seen my Mindy. I knew it was Mindy, instantly. How the hell, she managed to do what she did without injury was beyond me. I saw the damn D'Amico penthouse after Dave and Mindy trashed the place. Again, how the hell, she got out of there alive, at the time, I had no idea. It was much later that I learnt how much Dave had done to keep Mindy alive. Without that boy, Mindy would have been killed."

"Those two have a very complicated relationship," Paige admitted.

"Tell me about it! That was why I moved to Chicago, I had to be with her. I hated being so far away from her; Mindy is a part of my life and I can never let her go. She's been gone for almost four weeks and it hurts so badly."

"Well, future husband, it's good to know that you are human inside!"

"Once Mindy is back in Chicago, everything will be back to normal; no more complications."

I gently rubbed the bump that was my unborn child.

"Maybe one day Mindy will have kids – but that'll be a long ways off, I suppose!"

"As far as I am concerned, if Megan turns out half as well as Mindy, I'll be happy."

Western Chicago

"How the fuck could you screw up like that?"

The men arrayed around the desk were scared and very concerned for their wellbeing. Joseph Valachi was a nasty piece of work and the brother-in-law to Vito Genovese. Together they ruled with an iron fist and anybody who did anything that could upset that iron rule was expendable.

None of the men dared to respond.

"You were whacked by a girl and fucking young girl who thinks she's a vigilante!" Joseph roared.

Joseph was not happy, considering he had been forced to fly from Sicily to Chicago to try to sort out the mess that had been created.

"We knocked her down, Boss, she was shot..."

"Where's the fucking body?"

"She was gone when we checked, Boss..."

Joseph just closed his eyes to give himself a moment to compose his emotions.

"Where is Hit Girl? Where is Kick-Ass?" Joseph asked.

"They're in Gotham, Boss. They seem to be fucking over Maroni and Falcone."

"So this little girl, Petra and some other vigilantes have been fucking up my plans?" Joseph was incredulous. "Only in fucking America!"

Joseph stared around at the men, most of whom flinched at least a little.

"I want Petra, I want her head. There will be a bounty of $10,000 for each vigilante that is killed. Keep that within the family for now."

The men filed out of the office, thankful that they were still breathing. They also knew that they had no more chances – next time they would die.

Indian Knoll Road

"You hear that?" Kyle asked.

"Yeah, I did. Mom's not due home for hours."

I left my bedroom where I had been with Kyle – nothing happened! As I went downstairs, I saw somebody running, a short somebody. I seized a lock-knife from my pocket, flipped it open and threw it.

There was a scream as the runner stopped dead, their right arm pinned to the wall by the sleeve of their top. I walked over and I saw the outraged look on the girl's face.

"Jesus, what's the matter with you? You could have killed me!"

"What are you doing here?" I demanded.

"Nothing, just curious, is all."

The girl pulled out the knife and studied it, then her sleeve.

"Dammit, you cut my friggin' top!"

I seized the girl by the wrist and retrieved my knife, flipping it closed and placing it back in my pocket.

"How did you get in here?"

"The door was open..."

"No it wasn't!"

"Yeah, it was!"

I dragged the girl over to the front door and checked the lock.

"Hmm, it's unlocked!" I commented after checking it.

I looked at the girl and she coloured slightly, turning away.

"So, what did you steal?"

"Nothing; what do you think I am?"

I seized the girl's other wrist and forced open her fingers. It was a necklace, which I had removed the other day and left in the kitchen.

"Please don't call the Cops. My Dad will kill me."

"In some parts of the world they just cut your hands off..."

The girl turned to run, but I moved very fast and blocked her.

"Wow! How did you do that?"

"Get out of here!" I growled.

The girl smirked and ran.

I went to the stairs and saw Kyle looking down at me; he smirked.

"That was, err, interesting, Hailee: 'in some parts of the world they just cut your hands off', nice!" he commented.

I felt myself blushing.

"Good throw with the knife, too!"

I had just revealed a capability from my other life.

"Learnt it from my Dad," I said, not too convincingly.

Chapter 178*: Everything Changes

Author's Note: This chapter (Chapter 178) of Forsaken picks up after the events covered by another one of my stories: The Gotham Vigilantes and you are advised to read that story before starting this chapter.

Chicago

Four days later
Sunday night

The jet landed at Chicago Executive Airport and we disembarked into a pair of waiting SUVs that were being driven by Sam Fellowes and Paul Murphy. Curtis was picked up by Cathy and taken to Morton Grove where she would see to Curtis' healing injuries.

Chloe, Megan, the twins and I headed directly for West Ridge. The twins had slept most of the flight, which had only been ninety minutes. I had called ahead and a rather stunned Paige had prepared a pair of mattresses in our bedroom, along with some suitable food for a pair of seven-year-olds. Paige was there at the house waiting for us, with Sophia. I had also sworn Paige to secrecy as far as Marcus was concerned. At least for the moment.

Sophia was super-pleased to see us all and the twins rushed over to maul the large dog. Sophia just laid down and allowed the two kids to pat and stroke her. Not bad for a killer dog! It was also a great distraction. For now, the two kids had no idea that they were never going to see their Daddy again... Ever.

I was scared. I had absolutely no idea how to bring up a pair of young kids and I was not looking forward to going across the road to see Marcus, who, once he found out about the twins, would probably be only inches away from killing me! I had no regrets; I could only look forwards. Dave was supportive; we had talked over the phone on the jet and he had told me to be strong.

Mindy Macready, Hit Girl, Mom!

What the hell, would Daddy say?

West Columbia

"YOU DID WHAT!"

"This ought to be good!" Megan had commented.

Megan loved it when I was being shouted at by Marcus. One glance from Marcus, though, and the girl bolted, or rather hobbled, out of the room.

"I'll recap shall I?" I asked. "I've come back from Gotham, where I avenged you and your officers... And I brought back a pair of twins to live with me and Dave."

I said the last dozen or so words very quickly. I felt like I had just stolen something from the store, for fuck's sake! Marcus could make me feel so much shame with hardly any effort.

"Mindy, you're still a kid yourself!"

I bristled at that. We had talked animatedly before about my being a kid...

"What was I supposed to do, just leave the brats to die?"

"Mindy!" Paige cautioned.

I turned to say something, but then I took a moment to calm down. I was not about to yell at Paige.

"Mindy, I applaud you for what you do and what you did in Gotham on my behalf; we still need to talk about that. However..., two kids, that young, you're gonna have a lot on your plate and your plate is already very full!"

"I know, Marcus, but with your help and everybody else's, I can do this..."

Marcus paused before replying.

"You're going to listen to Paige and me?" Marcus was a little astounded.

"I'm scared Marcus. I could not leave them, but I need help. I can do many things, but none of what I know will help me in bringing up two seven-year-old kids. I cannot fuck this up; I know that. You've been a Dad and Paige has been a Mom. Dave will make a great Dad; he had a great Dad. I need somebody to show me how to be a Mom. My Mom's long dead and to be brutally honest, Daddy's parenting skills sucked!"

"You've got the last bit right!" Marcus had growled.

I was glad to be home and I was glad that Marcus was out of the hospital and that first hug had felt wonderful.

I just hated it when we argued.

West Ridge

That first night was not fun, for any of us.

I fell asleep in tears after talking to Dave as he was driving home. He would arrive much later in the day, with the others, at Safehouse D. I had Chloe staying with me until then, to help with the twins who were both fast asleep just a few feet away. They had not asked about their father, yet, and I wondered if they knew he was dead. They were perfect little angels, which had surprised me. Their father had packed up almost everything they owned in their cases. Plenty of clothes, some toys and books, not to mention paperwork, including the kids birth certificates and I had also found a signed letter from Ed Jamieson naming Dave and me as the legal guardians of his children if anything should happen to him. It had been witnessed by a notary in Gotham. The man had known that he was going to die and had prepared things for his kids.

I missed Dave, hence the tears. I was also crying with the fear of the unknown. The talk with Marcus had not been fun; however, I think I may have passed my first test to be a Mom. Tomorrow, I needed to sort out school for the kids. Everybody who attended school was late back to their classes, us being well into the first month of school. With the help of Dr G, we were going to provide suitable excuses and the kids would all start back in their respective grades after a couple of day's rest.

As I thought over things I realised that I had a lot to do over the coming weeks.

The twins, Petra, the twins, Hailee, the twins, Mathilda, the twins, Bruce and Selina, the twins, the new house, the twins... There was a pattern building!

I was awoken some hours later by movement on the bed.

I looked up and saw Anne-Marie creeping up the bed towards me. She stopped when she was just inches from me.

"I miss Daddy."

"I know."

"Can I sleep with you, Mindy?"

"Of course, but only until Dave gets back."

"I promise," Anne-Marie said with a weak smile.

The girl crawled under the duvet, cuddled into me, and was soon fast asleep. I swept her shoulder-length light brown hair out of her face and then closed my own eyes.

The following morning Monday

I awoke early, as was usual and went to check on Mindy and the twins.

I gently eased open the bedroom door and saw Sophia wagging her tail happily. I looked over at the mattresses where the twins had slept; they were empty. I looked over at the bed and smiled.

There was Mindy, lying on her back, fast asleep with a boy to her left and a girl to her right; both fast asleep and cuddling into Mindy.

I left them to sleep.

I awoke to find myself being shaken by a small girl.

"Hi, Anne-Marie!" I said with a smile.

"Is it time to get up?" the girl asked.

I looked over at the clock. It was just seven-fifteen!

"I suppose so!"

I sat up and saw Danny watching me from the far end of the bed.

When I went back to see Mindy after taking a long shower and getting dressed, I found Mindy sitting alone on the bed.

I looked questioningly at Mindy who simply nodded her head towards the open door of the bathroom. I could hear laughing and a lot of splashing.

"They wanted a bath, so..." Mindy explained.

"They seem to be enjoying themselves!"

Mindy looked over at the clock.

"I think it's time for them to get out; they've been in there for almost twenty minutes. If I get them out, will you get them dressed while I take a shower?"

"No problem, Mindy!"

Mindy vanished into the bathroom and after a couple of minutes, a lot of splashing, not to mention some arguing, two unhappy looking kids appeared, wrapped in large towels. I got the impression that Mindy had interrupted their fun!

I saw two sets of clean clothes laid out on the bed and set about getting the twins dried and dressed. I had not had to do anything like that since Curtis was their age! By the time I had finished, Mindy came out of the bathroom, dressed and putting her damp hair up into a ponytail. Anne-Marie looked up at Mindy and then over at me; my hair was up in a ponytail too.

"Can I have my hair up, like yours, Mindy?" the girl asked.

Mindy smirked and indicated a pile of hair bobbles on the dresser. I grabbed a pair of purple ones and a hairbrush. Two minutes later, Anne-Marie's hair was neatly brushed and pulled back and up into a ponytail.

"You want your hair in a ponytail, too?" I asked Danny with a grin.

"Just try it!" Was the reply.

"You guys like a cooked breakfast?" I asked.

"Yeah!" both kids replied excitedly.

"Just don't ask Mindy to cook!" Chloe said quickly.

My mouth dropped open in shock and I glared at Chloe before smiling.

"Okay, McDonald's it is!"

We headed downstairs. As the SUV was still on its way back from Gotham, we would have to take Speedy, which was at that moment parked in the garage. I grabbed the keys from a hook on the wall in the kitchen and took the kids down into the garage. We got them both strapped into the rear of Speedy. Just as I was about to climb in, Danny commented on the car.

"I have a picture of a car, just like this one, except it's red and it was called the Mist Mobile!"

I laughed and looked over the roof of Speedy to Chloe who smiled hugely.

"Nothing like it!" I replied as I climbed in.

"You sure?" Danny persisted looking around.

"Okay; it is the Mist Mobile – well it used to be!"

"Cool!"

After breakfast at McDonalds, I drove us out towards the north of Chicago.

Chloe gave me a strange look as I eventually turned left up a tree-lined street and then stopped in front of a pair of enormous gates. I reached into my purse and pressed the button on a small remote control. The gates swung open noiselessly. I drove in and pulled up to the side of the large property.

"Nobody other than Dave and I know about this place. We bought it a few weeks before we went to Gotham. We wanted a place to call our own, a place to get away from it all. We were going to move in after we got married. Now, though, we need the space."

I climbed out. I was followed by Chloe and the twins. I unlocked the front door and walked in. The two kids and Chloe gasped audibly.

"Danny, Anne-Marie, welcome to your new home. Go explore, see if you can find your bedrooms..."

"Awesome!" Both kids exclaimed and I could see the same look on Chloe's face too. The twins ran off.

..._...

I turned to Chloe and saw her expression change to one of concern. I felt myself close to tears; I was worried.

"How am I doing?" I asked my closest friend.

"No problems, so far," Chloe said soothingly. "You're doing great..."

"What if they reject me...?"

"We have no idea what is going to happen, but I'm with you for the long haul, okay."

"Thanks, Chloe, you really are my best and closest friend, if not more," I replied and Chloe blushed.

"I'll miss the old house."

"Only because that was where you had your cherry exploded!"

"Mindy, shush!" Chloe exclaimed as the twins reappeared.

..._...

"A cherry exploded?" Danny asked innocently.

I looked at Chloe, whose face was now the same colour as the proverbial cherry and who was far too mortified to speak.

"Err, Chloe had a problem with her fruit salad," I said quickly.

Chloe mouthed 'I hate you', in my direction along with a mock scowl.

Danny then grinned enormously. "I've found an indoor pool!"

"You bought a house with an indoor pool?" Chloe asked incredulously.

"I bought a house with an indoor pool!" I confirmed with a chuckle.

Chloe was seized by each hand and dragged towards the kitchen by Danny and Anne-Marie. The kitchen led to the pool.

..._...

The property was, to say the least, enormous.

It was located about ten miles to the north of West Ridge in a part of northern Chicago, called Glenview. The property had five bedrooms and was spread over four levels. The property also included an indoor swimming pool, and an awesome lower level with sauna and an exercise area.

The entrance hall was large and double height with a sweeping staircase curving up on the right. Under those stairs, on the right, was the entrance to the Master Bedroom, which was located on the first floor and in addition provided a large en-suite bathroom and dressing room. This was for Dave and me.

Directly ahead was a gently curved archway that led into the double height living room that had a large chimney and open fire. The room had floor to ceiling windows.

Next, to the left of the living room, through another, wider arch and up two steps, came a large open plan kitchen and breakfast room with its own open fire. There was a breakfast bar that could seat five comfortably as well as a table for four in a bay window that overlooked the back garden. Across from the kitchen was a dining room that could easily seat eight.

From the kitchen, you could also access the indoor swimming pool, which was full height and air-conditioned. Also on the first floor was garage space for five vehicles.

On the second floor, there was a library, which overlooked the living room, a laundry and three bedrooms, plus an office. Two of the bedrooms, shared a bathroom, and they would be used by the twins. The other bedroom would be a spare bedroom.

One of the twins' bedrooms had a spiral staircase that led upwards to the third floor, which had additional space for a playroom, which looked down onto the bedroom. There was also some storage space with stairs that led down to the second floor.

The lower level had a small cinema, a sauna, an exercise area and a large recreational area with a bar and kitchen. There was also, what was supposed to have been a fifth bedroom, but we decided to improve the doors and turn it into a 'Panic Room' with a secondary role as secure storage for certain 'not so legal' items.

After examining the pool, we all went upstairs and the kids found their rooms.

Anne-Marie opted for the bedroom in the corner of the house while her brother preferred the bedroom with the spiral staircase. I decided that we would need to go shopping for some clothes, toys and some bedding. Not surprisingly, Anne-Marie wanted pink, but Danny wanted blue!

Our final stop was the garage.

"Oh – my – God!" Chloe exclaimed as we entered. "Josh is going to want to have your babies!"

I laughed.

"After our visit to the UK, I found I liked the cars over there and especially those that Natasha and Cameron had. This is one step up; I ordered it months ago, it arrived a few days before we went to Gotham, so I have not had a chance to drive it much yet."

"It's enormous!" Danny exclaimed.

"It's beautiful, Mindy!" Anne-Marie added.

Chloe walked around to the rear and looked at the trunk.

"Josh will kill you if you dare mispronounce the name," Chloe cautioned. "You know what he thinks about us 'uneducated Yanks!'"

"I'll be nice and he'll get over it," I laughed.

Chapter 179*: Petra Revealed Again

Later that morning
Monday

Glenview

"Can we take that car shopping, please?"

"Okay, Chloe, just for a moment's peace!" I replied.

We locked up the house and I reversed the car out of the garage onto the drive.

"What colour is it?" Danny asked.

"British Racing Green in metallic," I replied.

"I like it!" the boy replied.

I pulled open the back door and both kids climbed onto the red leather seats. Once they were both strapped in, I climbed in myself, with Chloe beside me. I looked out over the enormous hood with its twin air vents. I pressed the brake with my foot and then the 'start' button, the engine rumbled to life instantly, the rotary gear selector rose out of the centre console, and I turned it to the right, selecting 'D'.

"Awesome!" Chloe said from the other seat.

I eased the enormous car out of the drive and the gates closed automatically behind me.

Four hours later, after an expensive trip to the mall, we had filled the trunk and we headed back to Glenview.

Both kids had selected toys and clothes, plus some bedding, towels and various other items. I had spoilt them. Chloe had warned me not to go too far or the twins might start expecting it. That was good advice.

After unloading all the new stuff at the house, we headed back to West Ridge. It had been a busy day, but the twins had enjoyed themselves and so had I.

The new car would not fit in the garage, so I left it parked outside the front of the house where I could keep an eye on it. Next, we walked across the road to see Marcus.

I watched Marcus as he waited in the living room.

Megan had gone to open the front door once she had seen Mindy, Chloe and the two young kids walking over to us. I had only briefly met the twins the previous night. I was very pleased to have Megan back home and even happier that she had not been shot, stabbed or suffered any one of a hundred things that I had dreamt about while she had been gone. A twisted knee and bruised leg was very good, considering!

My daughter had grown in the month that I had not seen her and was filling out nicely. Megan had talked almost non-stop during the morning about what had occurred. She was desperate to show me her birthday presents she had received from Mindy, but they were still in transit from Gotham. I also noticed how much Megan had grown up mentally, as well as physically. She seemed a different girl, but in a good way. The snappy, belligerent girl had been replaced with a more thoughtful young girl who seemed to think before she spoke. Even Marcus had commented on her politeness and new behaviour.

Marcus smiled as Mindy led the twins into the living room.

"Anne-Marie, Danny, please meet Marcus," Mindy said.

"Hi, Marcus," Anne-Marie and Danny said together with a little nervousness.

"It's very good to meet you both," Marcus replied. "What has Mindy had you doing today, then?"

That set the twins off telling Marcus all about the new house and the new car. I looked questioningly over at Mindy. Marcus had briefly mentioned a new house, but had not gone into detail. I looked out the window towards the other house, saw the car parked outside and then looked at Mindy with a raised eyebrow. Mindy blushed, but nodded.

"Nice set of wheels!" I commented approvingly.

"Thanks!"

That evening

I drove to Safehouse D, with Chloe and waited for the convoy to appear.

They were not far away. I had left the twins with Marcus, Paige and Megan. Marcus had hit it off with the twins almost immediately, so I decided to leave them there. This was to be a repeat of our waiting for everybody in Gotham, just Chloe and me. Only this time we were welcoming them home and not to some stinking hellhole!

I heard the air horn as Dave turned into the parking lot. I triggered the door and it raised in time for Dave to drive straight in, followed by Mia and the SUV. Dave looked shattered, as did the others. As soon as Dave and Josh had climbed down, we jumped them both, kissing them for all we were worth. When we finally let them breathe, Josh turned to Dave.

"We really must go away more often!" he quipped.

"I agree!" Dave replied.

"Assholes!" Chloe and I said together.

I told Marty to use the SUV to take him, Abby, Erika and Tommy home.

"How are we getting home?" Josh asked and then his jaw dropped as he saw the new car.

Dave smirked. He knew all about it.

"Mindy, I love the car and I love you for buying it, but you dare say the name wrongly and I will not be held responsible for my resultant actions," Josh said. "Which model is it?"

"I bought a Jag-u-ar XJR; I thought you'd approve!" I laughed, ensuring that I pronounced the name correctly for Joshua.

"Love the Jag!" Josh said approvingly.

We left all the kit for another day and headed straight home.

While Josh and Chloe were reacquainted with each other in their room at West Ridge, I took Dave over to see Marcus and the twins.

"Dave!" The twins called out as we walked in the door.

Dave was more than a little surprised to receive a hug from the twins.

"They been okay?" I asked Paige.

"No problems. Marcus has kept them very busy; he's a marvel with young kids."

"I know; I just wish I could remember back that far..."

"Marcus remembers and he says you were the perfect little angel for him," Paige said quietly.

"Now look at her!" Dave quipped.

West Ridge

We finally managed to pry the twins away from Marcus and we headed home across the street.

"I think Marcus is cool," Danny admitted.

"I like Paige and Megan; they're nice, although Megan seems a little nutty!" Anne-Marie said.

Dave and I laughed.

Ignoring the noises coming from the other bedroom, I got the twins changed into their pyjamas and they got into their temporary beds with Sophia watching them. The big dog followed both kids around everywhere they went.

I was now able to spend some quality time with my fiancé.

Josh was not happy!

He sat there completely naked and just stared at me. Okay, I was naked to – it was our first sex since that evening with Mindy and Erika. After an extended making out session, we got undressed and then Josh started feeling a little unhappy with my comments at the time.

"You said that Mindy ate you out better than I did!"

I squirmed on the bed.

"Well, I'm sorry, but she did!"

"I can't believe that I was upstaged by another girl with my own girlfriend!"

"Come on, Josh, it wasn't that bad!"

"You shouted it out so the whole of fucking Gotham heard you!" Josh said loudly and I flinched.

I threw my arms up in the air.

"Okay! I screamed; I couldn't help it!"

"Well, let me see if I can improve on my method..." Josh grinned.

Josh moved forward and I spread my legs open. I closed my eyes and laid back as I felt Josh's fingers gently caress me and then as he came closer, his tongue.

The following morning Tuesday

Tuesday was to be a very busy day!

"Do we have to go back to school?" Anne-Marie complained over breakfast.

"Yes, you do," I said calmly.

"But we won't know anybody," Danny added.

"You'll know Megan and Curtis will be there by the beginning of next week. They will be there if you need somebody to talk to, or you need help," Dave explained.

Neither child was convinced, but they seemed to accept their fate as they finished eating their cereal.

..._...

After breakfast, Dave and I took the XJR, with the twins, south towards Chicago and the North Park Elementary School.

The kids seemed very apprehensive and clung to either Dave or me as we entered the school. There was a lot of noise, kids laughing, playing and learning. We were welcomed by the Principal, a very pleasant woman. We spent the next hour and a half going through some paperwork and the Principal had a chat with the twins. I felt apprehensive, too, but I had no idea why. After a tour around the school, Anne-Marie and Danny seemed a lot less apprehensive about starting second grade the following morning.

So far, only five people knew who Petra really was: Dave, myself, Josh, Chloe and Erika.

It was now time to widen who knew and to allow somebody else into Fusion. I had spent a good couple of hours talking to Hailee since our return from Gotham. We both agreed that for her to be a part of Fusion meant that all of Fusion needed to know who she was. There was also the issue of her Mother and of Marcus. I had fretted for hours figuring out how to break the news.

Finally, I decided that Hailee and I would both speak to the parents, first.

Early that afternoon

Burnham Marina

Hailee and I persuaded both Marcus and Vicki to meet us at The Salty Swallow.

We cruised a few miles offshore and I turned on our signal jammers ensuring complete privacy. While Dave kept watch from the flying bridge, I sat down with Hailee and the two, somewhat confused, parents in the Main Salon.

"I hate this boat, out of principal!" Marcus moaned.

"I like the name," Vicki commented with a grin, knowing that she was annoying Marcus.

"We have a small announcement to make," I began and Marcus started to groan.

"Problem?" Vicki asked.

"If this is what I think it is..." Marcus moaned. "Then, yeah!"

"Get a grip, old man!" I growled taking a deep breath and then turned to Hailee. "You ready, Petra?"

I saw Marcus brace up and Vicki reach for her pistol. Hailee glared at her mother.

"Yes, I am, Hit Girl!" She replied.

Vicki slumped back, ignoring her gun and Marcus just groaned even more. Vicki was stunned.

"Mom, meet Hit Girl, otherwise known as Mindy Macready."

"Marcus, meet Petra, otherwise known as Hailee Richards, daughter of Vicki."

Marcus turned to Vicki.

"You kept that a secret – not that I can talk!" Marcus commented dryly.

"Can't exactly blame you for having a nutcase for a teenaged daughter, can I, considering I have one, too!"

"I get no respect!" Hailee moaned with a grin.

"I'm used to it – all respect went out the window when I hit puberty," I replied.

"I see you have all been introduced," Dave commented with a broad grin as he came into the salon from the cockpit.

"Hi, Kick-Ass!" Hailee called then grinned fiendishly. "Mom thinks Kick-Ass is hot!"

Vicki blushed at that revelation.

"I think you guys need to meet the rest of the team."

That evening

Safehouse F

The place was heaving with almost everybody who knew about Fusion.

Marty Eisenburg AKA Battle Guy, Joshua Williams AKA Jackal, Chloe Bennett AKA Shadow, Abigail 'Abby' Hunt AKA Hal, Kim Burgess AKA Hawk, Paige Wilson AKA Lynx, along with her daughter, Megan AKA Wildcat, Curtis Bennett AKA Trojan, Kyle Andrews AKA Max, Cathy Bennett AKA Medic, Erika Cho AKA Mist, Tommy Morgan AKA Splinter, along with his parents, Tony and Shannon. Also present were Paul Murphy and Sam Fellowes, not to forget Sophia AKA Eisenhower and Isaac Swanson AKA Dr Gravity.

As we drove in, both Vicki and Hailee were wide-eyed as they saw the underground Safehouse for the first time, Marcus not so much, having seen the place previously. I grinned at seeing everybody together; it was rare! We climbed out of the SUV and made our way onto the mat, everybody was peering down eagerly from above us.

"Fusion! Please welcome our newest member, Hailee Richards, otherwise known as Petra!"

There were several gasps of astonishment and Hailee took a step forward and curtsied for everybody with a broad grin on her face.

"You sure she's Petra?" Megan called down.

"Come and fucking try me, Wildkitty!" Hailee called back. "Mindy's told me all about you!"

Megan scowled and blushed as everybody laughed. Marcus stepped forwards next.

"The very beautiful woman beside me is my second-in-command, Sergeant Vicki Richards who, for her sins, is the mother of Hailee, yet another nutcase teenaged vigilante!" Marcus said. "She has my full sympathies!"

"Vicki, I'm sure you know these two gentlemen," I said, indicating Fellowes and Murphy.

"I do; we need to talk, gentlemen!"

"I like angry women, don't you?" Fellowes quipped to his partner.

"Women are always angry – at least around here!" Murphy replied with a grin.

We all mingled for a drink, introducing themselves. It was great to be able to socialise together. Kim was almost ready to pop, literally, but I missed the twins who were being looked after at home by Sharon Fellowes.

After a while, I called for silence.

"While we are all here, I need to make another announcement."

There was silence as Dave came over and stood beside me; he knew what I was about to say.

"Most of you will be aware that ten of us went to Gotham, but not many of you will know that twelve came back. Dave and I have taken custody of seven-year-old twins, Daniel and Anne-Marie."

There were murmurings from the assembled crowd.

"Details can follow later, but these two kids are not members of Fusion, they will not know about Fusion for as long as I can help it. Nobody here will mention any Fusion identities in front of Daniel or Anne-Marie. The twins will be a part of everyone's lives, but only the public side. It will be difficult, but you are all able to keep secrets. I am not going to put those kids on the same path that I took from six-years-old. By the time I was their age, I was a blooded vigilante; I do not want that for them. The time will come when they will find out what we all do, but until then they are going to have a normal childhood.

"Okay, some of you will ask what I know about a normal childhood; I admit I know absolutely nothing about what a normal childhood is like. I hope that Dave and I can rely on help from all of you. I cannot do this alone..."

I faltered and Dave put his arm around me. Only a small proportion of those there that evening had ever seen me cry, so it was a shock to some.

"Would you believe it; Hit Girl is human!" Josh announced, taking the attention from me. "I think I speak for everybody here, Mindy, in saying that we will all help in any way that we can!"

There was a general murmur of ascent and I nodded my thanks, unable to speak.

Chapter 180*: Life Continues

The following morning
Wednesday

West Ridge

I awoke early, showered and dressed before anybody else was up.

The school would provide lunch so I did not have to put together anything, which made life a little easier. At seven, I woke Anne-Marie and Danny, pushing them into the bathroom. Once they were showered and dressed, they had breakfast and by quarter to eight, we were ready to leave for school. I said goodbye to Dave and then called Megan to tell her to hurry up or she was walking!

Once the twins were strapped in the back of the XJR, we drove over to get Megan who quickly jumped in the front, looking more than a little embarrassed. Paige came over to my side of the car.

"Megan had a slight argument with the razor this morning!" She smirked. "She's still trying to get the hang of it."

I laughed and received a nasty glare from Megan as I drove off.

North Park Elementary School

The hardest thing that morning was saying goodbye and there were tears on both sides!

"Any problems you go find a teacher or Megan, okay?"

"Yes, Mindy," both kids replied.

I said goodbye to them at their classroom and said hello to their teacher. Megan rushed off to see her friends, Zach, Jake and Nikki. I felt anxious about leaving the twins, but knew that I would see them again, at ten past three that afternoon.

I hated driving away.

Safehouse D

The first visit of the day was meeting up with Tony Morgan at the Safehouse, so we could assess the damage to vehicles and equipment during our visit to Gotham.

Tony would compile a list of the required replacement parts and equipment, and then I could go shopping! We had a new van to buy for Marty to start with, not to mention all the equipment he and Abby would want to stuff the van with to bring it up to spec. There were more than a few bullet strikes to fix in both Titan and Iron Hide. The motorcycles also had moderate damage from bullet strikes.

Tony was very impressed by Chloe's new motorcycle and I showed him my upgraded mask, including how it worked. Between us, we would be compiling a list of equipment that would be obtained from Lucius Fox.

The trip to Gotham had cost us tens of thousands of dollars, if not much more. It was worth it, though.

I loved shopping!

Later that morning

Now that everybody was back at school, it was down to Hit Girl and Mist to make a high profile daylight patrol.

Battle Guy was in the Command Centre, while we both headed out on our motorcycles from Safehouse D. We wanted everybody to know that Fusion was back in town! We made our way through the City and received many waves of appreciation from civilians and Cops alike.

There was a thrill to riding around in a combat suit during the day. Normally we hid in the shadows, but not that day. I knew we were tempting fate and daylight was dangerous, but it had to be done. I loved it and Mist loved it, too.

After an hour, we were joined by Petra on her graphite-black Fireblade. The three of us made an impressive sight as we cruised the streets and it reinforced the fact that Petra was now an integral part of Fusion.

To help our friendly Cops, we also staged a pursuit where Voight's team and Marcus' team pursued us through western Chicago at speed. It was great fun, especially as both sides knew nobody was going to be caught.

We played it close, though, as we teased the Cops. We purposefully allowed them to get close, but not too close. A few shots were exchanged, but nothing came remotely close to hurting anybody. I actually received a rare smile from Voight as we came face to face at a red light before I accelerated away, pulling a wheelie. The chase raised our street cred no end, but it also showed the Mayor and Commissioner that Marcus and Voight's teams were still actively pursuing those 'bad-ass vigilantes that plagued Chicago'!

Fusion was back!

Safehouse F

"That was awesome!" Hailee yelled as she pulled off her helmet.

We were all dripping with sweat from the morning's action, but all very pleased with the results.

"Well done!" Marty announced, as we stowed our equipment.

Petra now had her own section in the armoury for her equipment. After everything was put away, we all went for showers and fresh clothes.

North Park Elementary School

I was parked close to the school by a quarter to three that afternoon.

At three, I joined the other parents awaiting the end of school. I was anxious to see how the twins' day had gone. Had they enjoyed themselves? Had it all gone wrong? Damn, I was a nervous wreck!

Fifteen minutes later, I was grinning so badly it hurt, as I saw Anne-Marie and Danny emerge. They both ran towards me and almost knocked me to the ground in their excitement. I took them back to the car and waved to Megan who ran over to join us.

"How'd it go?" I asked.

The trip back home was constant chatter from the twins as they explained every minute of their first day back at school. They had loved every minute of it. I felt a wave of relief sweep over me. They had even made friends, which was brilliant. Megan managed to squeeze in a few comments about her own day, but she was generally drowned out by the twins' excitement.

Finally, Anne-Marie turned to me.

"How was your day?" she asked.

"Pretty boring, really," I said, with a wink at Megan. "I don't get to do anything exciting."

West Ridge

While I was putting together something for the kids to eat, I heard screaming coming from the living room, plus an excited bark or two from Sophia.

I ran through expecting a problem, but instead Anne-Marie, Danny and Sophia were staring at the TV. It was the local news and they were showing some Police dash-cam footage of our chase, earlier that afternoon. In the current shot, I could see my purple Panigale with Mist's black and light-blue Streetfighter close behind as we both took a turn at high speed, leaning right over our knees almost touching the blacktop before we came back up again, accelerating away.

The Police SUV pursuing us skidded into the turn and I recognised Murphy's voice; he swore as he fought to keep the SUV on the road and then trying to keep up with the speeding motorcycles.

I laughed.

"They are so awesome!" Anne-Marie exclaimed, looking around. "That's what I wanna do when I grow up."

"Really?" I asked, trying to sound unconcerned.

"Hit Girl is the best and I love purple!"

"She does too," Danny confirmed. "Me? I hate purple!"

"Vigilantes are bad people..." I said.

"No they aren't!" Anne-Marie countered. "They help people, like they did in Gotham..."

I could not think of anything else to say, so I headed back into the kitchen, just as I saw myself pulling a wheelie as I pulled away from Voight.

At least I now knew what the twins thought about vigilantes and more specifically, Hit Girl!

That night

Once the twins were in bed and asleep, Paige babysat, while Dave and I went out on the town.

By 'out on the town', I meant riding through the darkened streets side-by-side with Kick-Ass. It was great for it to be just the two of us for a change and in relative safety. It gave us time to talk and plan. Abby was on command duty, monitoring us from her home in northwestern Chicago. The streets were annoyingly empty, but it allowed us to talk which was useful.

We talked about anything and everything. New combat suit designs, incorporating the new lighter, more flexible armour from Lucius Fox. The new command van. Upgrades for 'The Vigilante'. The twins. We even talked about the 'boot camp' for Bruce and Selina, which was due to commence the coming Monday when they arrived in Chicago. I had some great ideas, none of which Bruce or Selina would enjoy. I had enlisted Hailee and Erika to lead the training. Dave and I would help, as would Megan, Chloe and Josh.

I loved to be a bitch – I lived to be a bitch!

I was itching for some action.

Nothing serious, but something we could get our teeth stuck into! It was quite a shock going from Gotham to Chicago. It was like night and day. I was glad to be away from that cesspool too. I was even more pleased that we had all survived and come back in relatively one piece.

Hit Girl and I talked about the following week's 'boot camp' that we were preparing for Bruce and Selina. I was a little concerned that Mindy might go too far and I hoped that Hailee and Erika would be able to keep control.

We discussed possible superhero names for Bruce and Selina. Actually, Selina was relatively easy: 'Cat...' – something – maybe 'Catgirl!' Hit Girl came up with several, some unrepeatable, selections for Bruce, but the theme that seemed to have a good ring to it was 'Bat...' – something – although 'Batboy' sounded crap! Then Abby got in on the game and started sending images through to our head-up-displays of possible 'Catgirl' outfits.

"Absolutely not!" I called out as one image popped up. "Too much leather and way too much skin! Less porno, more hero!"

Hit Girl, though, with her sewer system mind thought it would be fun to suggest some of the sexier outfits to Selina. Something told me that Selina would most probably slap Mindy if she saw them!

..._...

Our reverie was interrupted as a destination flashed onto our visors and Hal ordered us into action.

"Police radio call. Rape underway Addams Park, two-point-two miles from your position. No units are able to respond at this time."

We both accelerated to over sixty miles per hour, heading south down South Ashland Avenue. We separated at the intersection of West Roosevelt Road. Kick-Ass went straight ahead, while I turned left at speed and then made another high-speed right hand turn down South Laffin Street. I slammed on the brakes and cruised slowly into the darkened park. My head-up-display showed Kick-Ass joining from the west side of the park.

I triggered the external sensors mounted on my helmet that allowed me to hear what was going on around me and the loudest sound was a scream. My visor showed me the direction to the scream. Not far ahead of me was a kid's play area. I stopped the motorcycle, dumped my helmet and ran into the darkness.

The screaming was getting louder. I did not have my NVGs with me, but I could see what was happening as if it was day. A man was riding the screaming woman, down beside a kiddie-slide. Rapists were the scum of the earth; I despised them more than I did murderers. What rapists did was worse than murder for the victims.

"Bastard!" I growled and the man turned. His eyes grew to the size of a dodge ball before he leapt up and began to run. He managed to run only a couple dozen yards before he was caught in the glare of a blazing headlamp and then Kick-Ass flattened the man with a well-aimed punch as he rode past.

While Kick-Ass saw to the bastard, I turned to the woman. She was desperately trying to cover herself up. The screaming had stopped, but the woman shook from head to toe and could not speak.

I knew we were less than half a mile from the nearest firehouse and I could hear the sirens as they approached. Abby had called them. I stayed with the woman as the ambulance drove straight onto the grass and headed towards the play area, now lit by the headlights of mine and Kick-Ass' motorcycles. The bastard was trussed up with plastic ties and lying face down on the grass a dozen yards away. Kick-Ass watched him.

Two female paramedics jumped out of Ambulance 61 and ran over.

"What you got for us, Hit Girl?"

"Rape, Sylvie," I growled, recognising the Paramedic.

"You got him?" Sylvie Brett asked, as she began examining the woman.

"Oh yeah!" I replied, nodding towards Kick-Ass.

"Outstanding!" the other Paramedic, Gabriella Dawson, replied as she opened her bag.

Minutes later a pair of Police cars arrived and with profuse apologies from the Cops for the delay, one car left with the bastard, while the other remained to take a statement. Nobody touched us or came near us, but we were asked to give our side of the story.

"They're never gonna believe this," the young officer said as he took my. "Taking a statement from Hit Girl!"

"In case they don't believe you," I said and handed over one of my 'HG' cards. I saw Kick-Ass shake his head in exasperation; he hated my 'calling cards'.

There was a gathering crowd building as we left to rousing cheers. We rode off, following the ambulance out of the park.

Later that night

West Ridge

"I see that Kick-Ass and Hit Girl had a busy night!" Paige commented as we arrived home.

"Did they?" I replied innocently and Paige just pointed to the late night news on the TV.

I could see images of Kick-Ass and Hit Girl talking to the Police, as the victim was loaded into the ambulance.

"I just wish..."

"I know," Dave said, knowing that I had desperately wanted to kill that bastard, but I knew that I had to let justice have its way.

"Any problems?" I asked.

"Not a one; they're still asleep."

"Thanks, Paige, we owe you one."

"No you don't. You brought my daughter back to me; that's enough."

We tiptoed past the sleeping twins and crept into bed.

"I need you, Dave!"

"I need you, too!"

Dave ran his hands across my chest, my breathing started to increase and Dave's touch was encouraging the feelings between my legs, which I loved so much, and then his hands moved gently across my stomach and down to my...

"Mindy?"

I bolted upright, covering my chest with the sheet. It was Danny. Dave chuckled – asshole!

"I had a bad dream..."

I felt my shoulders slump and I allowed the sensations that had built up in my crotch to subside. Dave passed me an oversize t-shirt and I pulled it on.

"Come on!" I said, allowing Danny to crawl under the duvet between Dave and me.

"Night, Danny!" I said feeling slightly annoyed.

"Night, Mindy," he replied. "Night, Dave."

"Night, Danny," Dave said with a laugh.

Chapter 181*: Integrating

Thursday

I woke up right on the edge of the bed.

In my back were a pair of feet, small feet! There was nowhere else to go, so I allowed myself to fall gently to the floor. There was an immediate chuckle from above me, and a giggle from just a few feet away. I looked over and saw Anne-Marie looking at me with a big grin on her face. I felt so stupid.

"What you doing down there?" Anne-Marie asked.

Before I could reply, Dave stepped in. "I think your brother kicked her out of the bed," he laughed.

"So funny, both of you!" I growled, but I laughed anyway.

I wanted to swear, badly, but knew that I could not swear in front of the kids, so I scrambled up off the floor and dived into the bathroom, slamming the door shut behind me.

There was a muffled explosion from the bathroom that I interpreted as: "Fuuuck!", but thankfully, Anne-Marie did not.

We were sticking to a routine, both for the kids and us. Mindy liked routines; they were like mini-missions. I knew that Mindy was not happy about missing out, on sex the previous night, so I knew that she would be cranky.

Nothing new there, then!

After dropping the kids off at school, Dave and I headed over to the south of Chicago.

We stopped off at a certain coffee shop. On entering, we both looked around until Dave nudged me and indicated a young woman sitting at a table alone. We walked over to the table and indicated the empty chairs on the other side of the table, across from the woman.

"These taken?" Dave asked.

"Can I help you people?" The woman asked.

The girl had long brown hair and brown eyes.

"We would like to talk with you, Mathilda," I said, sitting down across from her.

Dave and I did our best not to look threatening to her; we knew her capabilities. I saw the girl instinctively look around, checking her exits and possible threats. She was good.

"Hey, you've got me all wrong there, girl!" I said, holding my hands up and I saw Mathilda frown. I had used the exact same phrase and hand movements that I had used when we had first met.

"I'm listening..."

"We would like you to join us; you have some unique skills that have proved very useful."

"Join who?"

I smiled at Mathilda.

"Do you need your ass, kicked?" Dave said quietly.

Mathilda's eyes widened in surprise.

"Penny dropped?"

"I think so..."

The famous Hit Girl and Kick-Ass were sitting across from me and asking me to join them!

It was a lot to absorb.

"I – I'm a little overwhelmed that you should ask me..."

"You've earned it. Petra had only good things to say about you."

I hoped that Petra kept her gob shut about the other things...

"Can I think about it?"

"By all means; we are not forcing you. You join under your own steam. You have my number, give me a call."

West Ridge

We had left a rather shocked Mathilda to her morning coffee.

Mindy was off shopping before heading over to get the twins. I was resting with Sophia when my cell rang; it was Megan.

"You're not supposed to use your cell at school..." I began before Megan interrupted me, her voice sounding urgent.

"Dave, can it! You need to get down to the school, now!"

"What's happened?" I asked, suddenly alarmed.

"Somebody hit Anne-Marie and started her nose bleeding. If Mindy sees the blood..." Megan explained.

"Oh, shit!" I dropped the call and ran for my RS7.

Mindy had her Jag; I had my Audi RS7!

North Park Elementary School

I had pushed the Audi as hard as I dared.

The turbo-charged V8 engine accelerated the car steadily as the gearbox moved automatically through the eight-speed transmission and fed the power to all four of the twenty-one-inch wheels. The Sepang Blue car cut through the traffic with ease and I arrived at the school just minutes after the kids had started to come out.

As I approached the main door of the school, I could hear raised voices – one of which was my dear fiancée! The conversation was animated. The Principal was trying to explain to Mindy that kids fought and that the school would deal with it. Mindy was having none of it and I was a little concerned. I could read her body language and I could tell that she was doing everything she could to control her emotions – and her fists, which were clenched behind her. I rapidly closed and seized Mindy, pinning her fists between her back and my stomach.

"Ah, Mr Lizewski!" The Principal said, sounding a little relieved.

Mindy was struggling, so I hissed into her ear.

"Stop it, Mindy, you're scaring the kids!"

Mindy froze and looked down at Danny and Anne-Marie. They were both looking up at her and their faces showed the beginnings of concern.

"We know you care about them both, Miss Macready, but we will handle the discipline here," the Principal explained.

"I'm sorry for causing a scene," Mindy said.

"Not your fault, honey," a woman said. "It's part of being a Mom."

"It doesn't get any easier," another said. "But kids love to know they have parents who'll fight for them!"

"Thanks," Mindy said as she blushed with embarrassment.

West Ridge

Mindy was fuming by the time she arrived home.

Megan had ridden with me and we had arrived back first. I told her that she should be changed and ready to go in twenty minutes. Mindy arrived just as Megan was running across the street. As the three of them entered, I told the twins to get upstairs, giving each one a small bag and told them to get themselves changed straight away.

"Calm down, Mindy!" I said as soon as the twins had vanished up the stairs.

"I'm sorry; I saw the blood and panicked," Mindy said. "I see blood, I react!"

"As that other woman said; you behaved just like any Mom would."

Mindy blushed and smiled. The two kids reappeared at the bottom of the stairs. They were each wearing a pure white Taekwondo Gi and had sandals with Velcro fastenings on their feet. On the back of the Gi was the logo for 'D-JAK Martial Arts'. The kids looked a little uncertain and had been unable to tie the white belts and both simply held them in their hands.

"Jag - move it!" I ordered.

Megan was just running across the road as we walked out of the house. She too was wearing a Gi, this time in navy blue and with a green belt that had a blue stripe, wrapped around her waist. She too wore sandals on her feet. She pushed Danny into the middle and jumped in the back.

D-JAK

I had wanted them to have some after school activities and what better than an hour of Taekwondo. It would teach them co-ordination, courtesy, integrity, patience, perseverance and self-discipline. Neither of them had ever done anything like that before. I wanted the twins to gain some fun experiences as they grew up and I hoped that their experiences would be nothing like what I had endured.

"This place looks awesome!" Danny said as we entered D-JAK.

"Not bad, I suppose," his sister, Anne-Marie commented.

"Both of you go see Kyle and he'll start you on your first lesson and no fighting with each other!" I called out as the two kids scampered excitedly across the mat, chucking their bags in two completely different directions.

"Don't worry; I'll pick your bags up!" I called after them sarcastically.

"You make a lovely young Mom!" Paige teased as she walked over.

"Fuck me, if it isn't exhausting!" I moaned.

"You're doing fine, Mindy; it's only been four days, though!"

I sat and watched Kyle as he added Anne-Marie and Danny to the class of other novices.

Kyle stood in front of them, with Megan beside him.

"You are going to learn how to block and how to defend yourselves," Kyle lectured. "You are not going to be taught how to fight, not yet."

There were groans and I saw Anne-Marie grimacing.

"You will be taught how to prevent injury, how to prevent a fight from starting, how to get yourself out of a fight once one begins," Megan went on. "We will not teach you to start a fight or join a fight; first you need to learn how to defend yourselves."

The group was made up of twelve boys and girls of between seven and ten-years-old. Megan and Kyle usually helped teach the younger kids. I waved as Hailee appeared; she was my newest instructor. She wore a black Gi with her black belt wrapped around her waist.

Once Megan and Kyle had warmed the kids up with some basic exercises and shown each of them how to tie their belt properly, Hailee started to introduce the basic blocks.

"Arae Makki – the low block. It is the most basic of the blocks and it is the technique to defend against low attacks with the outside of your wrist. Your blocking arm should start at the shoulder of the opposite arm, quickly coming down and stopping your wrist about two fists from your belt. Do not forget to keep your blocking arm straight," Hailee explained, before demonstrating each part of the movement.

With the help of Kyle and Megan, Hailee ensured that each child could perform the movement properly. This took a while for some of the kids to master. I noticed that Anne-Marie caught on very well and seemed a little bored, while she waited for the other kids, including Danny, to catch up. Once everybody was ready, Hailee moved onto the next movement.

"Olgul Makki – the high block. It is the technique to defend your face with the outside of your wrist. Your blocking wrist should start at your waist and move across the front of your body to finish right above your forehead. The distance between your wrist and your forehead should be one fist. During this motion move the other arm to the side with a closed fist, like pulling it. Keep your neck straight and look forward. The point is to deflect the attack by keeping your blocking wrist slightly above your elbow to make an angle. It is very important to block attacks that come above."

The rest of the class was spent practicing the two blocks and after the full hour, most of the kids were looking tired, including our two. Once the class had been dismissed, Kyle and Megan went over to the punch bags to do some of their own training. I saw Anne-Marie and Danny watching Megan with interest, along with a couple of the other kids.

..._...

Megan laid into her punch bag with enthusiasm. I noticed she was showing off, too. She span, kicked, punched and jumped. The other kids went home once their parents arrived, leaving just Anne-Marie and Danny watching Megan and Kyle. They then turned to watch Hailee who was showing off how flexible she was as she span and flipped across the mat, proving that she had what was required to wear the black belt.

"Can you do that?" Anne-Marie asked, looking up at me.

"I can..."

"Show us..., please!" Danny asked.

I looked at Dave who just shrugged. I went through to the back past a grinning Paige and changed into my own black Gi and black belt. I suggested to Hailee that we take things easy, so as not to give anything away.

She nodded, but smirked, which just told me that I was in for a beating if I eased off.

I watched as Mindy and Hailee stood on the mat, faced off and bowed to each other.

Megan and Kyle stopped their training, as the next class began to arrive. Seeing two senior instructors spar was something worth watching, so everybody gathered around the mat to watch. Only Mindy and Hailee wore the black Gi, as it was the sign of a senior instructor at D-JAK. I had one too, but rarely wore it. The other adult instructors wore yellow, while junior instructors wore blue, like Megan and Kyle. Chloe and Josh also wore the blue Gi.

There was cheering and gasps coming from the small crowd as Mindy and Hailee span around the mat trying to outwit each other. I just hoped that they remembered that they were in a Dojang in front of young kids and not on the streets of Gotham! For the coming class one of our adult instructors was present, Jim Cartwright. He wore a yellow Gi and watched with interest, before he looked over at me and I nodded towards the mat with a smirk.

It was time to up the ante. I whispered something in Megan's ear and she smirked and ran off to the far side. Jim and Megan started on each side of the mat, both holding a training Jō-staff. Megan nodded and both moved towards the two girls. I saw Mindy turn her head slightly. Hailee also clocked what was happening and the two girls both moved fast as the Jō-staffs swung horizontally to trip them both. Within seconds, Megan was on her back clutching her side as Mindy kicked her. Jim had jumped sideways just missing Hailee's strike.

Megan rolled quickly and jumped back to her feet, just as Mindy flipped up the Jō-staff from the ground and brought it down towards Megan. The younger girl blocked the Jō-staff, used it to pivot around, and somersaulted over Mindy, catching Mindy's shoulder with a perfect kick. Unfortunately, Mindy then caught Megan's right foot and Megan landed with a short scream on the mat and rolled into a group of boys, knocking them over like bowling pins. Jim was fighting Hailee and never saw Mindy kick his feet out from under him and pin the man to the mat. Hailee moved in to take advantage, but Mindy caught her left leg with a Jō-staff and Hailee fell to the mat and Mindy brought her lower leg down across Hailee's throat.

The sparring was over and cheering with some applause erupted from the watching kids and parents. Megan was helped to her feet by the smirking boys, who always seemed to enjoy helping Megan for some reason or other. Megan did not seem to mind having the boys help her, either; a month or so ago, she would probably have slapped them all for touching her!

"Next class; Kyle sort them out, please, while Hailee gets her breath back!" Mindy said with a laugh. "Thanks Jim, Megan!"

"I think you need to get your own breath back, old girl!" Hailee quipped leaving Mindy speechless with indignation.

The sparring had gone down very well with all who had watched the advanced movements. I also knew that Mindy loved to show off and it seemed, so did Hailee.

"You enjoy being in that group of boys?" I asked Megan facetiously.

"Yes actually!" Megan responded with a smile.

Chapter 182*: Amber Alert

Thursday evening

We took the twins out for some pizza after leaving D-JAK.

They were both worn out, but they had done well in their lesson and I was very proud of them both. They had talked non-stop about what they had learnt; not to mention the sparring that they had witnessed.

Dave and I wanted to go shopping, but as the twins were tired, Paige offered to drive them home, with Megan, after locking up D-JAK once the final class was finished. We only got a mile down the road when Marty called us.

"An Amber Alert has been issued for the state of Illinois. A school bus with fourteen kids has gone missing, somewhere near Columbus Park. CPD is rolling; I have Shadow and Jackal here, suiting up. Mist is inbound with Medic and Trojan, as is Petra. Clock is ticking; we are at twenty minutes and counting."

We were only five miles from the Safehouse as I buried the accelerator into the thick carpet and changed direction rapidly, avoiding a mailbox by just inches.

Safehouse F

We had left the Jag at the Warehouse and taken the tunnel into Safehouse F.

Marty had a digital counter up on a large screen; it showed twenty-six minutes. Chloe was putting on the last of her combat suit and Josh was sorting out his comms cabling. I started stripping off as I ran for the armoury. Dave was right behind me. The first thing we both did was grab a wireless headset each, so we could talk to Marty, as we got ready.

"The bus was seen to stop on the shoulder. A dark coloured SUV pulled in front of it and some men were seen to force their way onto the bus, then the bus moved off and just vanished!" Marty explained.

"How the fuck can a bright yellow bus just vanish?" I demanded.

"Still figuring that one out. I have access to the cameras on the I-290, but they are shit quality and some haven't been cleaned in two hundred years," Marty moaned.

I heard feet running on concrete as Hailee appeared, pulling off her clothes.

"You heard?" I asked.

"Hell, yeah!"

"Mindy, I have Voight on the line and I have conferenced in Vicky," Marty said.

"Hi!" I said briefly.

"CPD and the State Troopers are ringing the City, but people who kidnap kids are ruthless and can be unpredictable. They may have already left the City, or they are staying put until the heat dies down. A lot of it depends on what they want the kids for... From what we can tell, none of the kids comes from a rich family, so ransom seems out," Voight explained.

"That sucks!" I commented. "We'll provide whatever support we can – we have three two-person teams about to leave and others out there already."

"Thanks, Hit Girl – we need everybody on this," Vicky said.

Nobody was joking around, not with what was at stake.

"I need to check my snouts; as I assume you are Hank."

"Yeah, every fucker is gonna be wrung dry!" Voight growled. "Remember, with kids involved, anything goes..."

Voight let it hang. I knew exactly what he meant.

"Anything goes..." I repeated, picturing my own two kids.

Western Chicago

Shadow and Jackal would head north.

Kick-Ass and I would head west. Mist and Petra would head east. Mathilda was out in her SUV, to the south. Medic was remaining at the Safehouse, with Trojan in case anything blew up, literally. Tony and Tommy were heading to Safehouse W to make the necessary preparations there, just in case.

I had warned everybody that we would go to any lengths to find the missing kids. Those who knew me well knew exactly what 'any lengths' meant and the first person to push me was a snout called Frank.

"I fucking know nothing – leave me alone, bitch!" Frank said as soon as he saw me.

"You're lying to me..."

"Why the fuck would I lie to you?"

"Because you know something..."

"I know lots of shit, but nothing that can help you..."

"Now, why don't I believe you?"

"You're a suspicious bitch, that's why!"

"He's right, you know..." Kick-Ass commented.

I was bored with word play; I was not very good at it. Half a second later my Tanto rested on the man's throat and blood was trickling down his throat as the hyper-sharp blade touched his skin with only a slight pressure behind it.

The man was shaking which just made the bleeding worse.

"Speak!" I ordered in a tone that the man could not ignore.

"There were rumblings a week or so ago. Two men were putting together a team – no idea what for, but they needed somebody who could access some computers and move some valuable merchandise under the radar, so to speak."

"Anything else?"

"It was way out of my league, so I ignored it..."

I whipped out a throwing knife and stabbed the man in the thigh, rapidly removing the knife. The man screamed.

"Don't make me ask more than once, again!"

Northern Chicago

"Since when did you have a snout?"

"About two months now."

"Come on, Shadow, I need more than that!"

"Tough shit, Jackal!"

Shadow stopped outside what I would call a 'greasy spoon'. It was a restaurant and it sold food which while tasty would rot your insides. It was a part of the UK I missed; all-day fried breakfast: bacon, fried eggs, sausages, fried-tomatoes, baked-beans, tattie-scone, mushrooms and some black pudding!

"You coming, or you just gonna play with yourself?" Shadow called pulling me out of my dream state.

Damn, I was hungry; I would have killed for a bacon butty right at that moment! I followed Shadow down the side of the shop. I was surprised to find a woman waiting for us. By her dress, she was a working girl. She saw me and looked very apprehensive.

"You're safe Jessi; we just need some information..." Shadow said calmly.

Jessi looked up.

"I heard some things, that's why I called you... Those kids? They are gonna be sold..."

Safehouse F

Abby had joined me and we were passing the information gathered to Voight and Vicki.

All hell had broken loose in the City; every Cop, every Citizen was out looking. The kids had been on the way back from a school trip. Their teacher was with them, too. I had the names of all sixteen on the bus, including the driver. I also had the numbers and unique identifiers for the sixteen cell phones, which were believed to be on the bus. None was reporting into any cell towers and neither was the bus' Lo-Jack system. Whoever took the bus knew exactly what they were doing.

I had come across some reports that all cell reception went down near where the bus had been seized; that indicated a cell jammer. Abby had suddenly jumped into action and she started digging into the internet.

"What you up to?" I demanded.

"If they left the jammer on, then we might be able to track the dead zone..."

"Fuck!" I said slapping my forehead. Why had I not thought of that!

Eastern Chicago

I was numb with what had occurred.

Fourteen kids! They were all aged around twelve and thirteen. Eight boys and six girls along with the male driver and female teacher. As we rode, we could see signs above and to the sides of the streets and Interstates. They were broadcasting the Amber Alert and the licence plate of the school bus. As we cruised up I-55 towards the I-94, I noticed something strange in my head-up-display. The cell signal went down to nothing and I saw a warning flash up as our communications system automatically shifted over to a different transmission method.

Normally I would have ignored something like that, but I had just spoken with Battle Guy and he had warned us to look out for any anomaly, no matter how small, including loss of cell service. We left the I-55, passing onto the I-94 heading south. Petra and I left the I-94 at West 29th Street, back tracking towards the anomaly.

I had called in the anomaly and Battle Guy had an exact fix of when our comms dropped off. I looked over at Petra as we headed west. I knew that she was very worried, just as much as I was.

Palmisano Park

We found it.

We had found the bus, only it was empty. No kids, no adults, just a cell jammer and a pile of sixteen cell phones. I reported the bus to Hal who passed it onto the Cops. They appeared within minutes and took over the scene that we had protected.

I was very surprised to receive handshakes from the appreciative Cops. Even Mist, although I noticed some of the male Cops and maybe the odd female one checking out my butt! I was pleased that we could have helped. I watched as the forensics people boarded the bus and I hoped that they would find something that would lead us to the next link in the chain.

Time was running out.

The basement

It was dark, very dark.

I could hear crying and I could sense the fear in the fourteen children that were under my protection. The bus driver, Jacob, was unconscious. He had tried to prevent the men boarding the bus, but he had been coshed by one of the masked men.

I had no idea why the bus had stopped on the shoulder, but Jacob said he had no choice as he had lost power. There was no knowing where we were. We had been bundled off the bus, with our hands tied and with blindfolds over our eyes.

I had to be brave for the kids.

Chicago PD, District 21

"The bus was hacked, well, sort of."

"What?" Sergeant Vicky Richards asked.

"We found a small box of tricks wired into the bus' wiring harness. They made absolutely no attempt to hide it. It looks like they just shut down the fuel and the driver had no choice but to pull over. Once the kidnappers had control they just re-enabled the fuel, all wirelessly, probably using a cell phone."

"Can you get anything off the box?"

"We hope so, but it's going to take time."

"We don't have any time to spare – get on it!"

Safehouse F

"I see their logic. A soft kill that can be easily reversed," I commented to Hal and Medic.

Trojan was peeking around the corner of the Command Centre. The kid was concerned for those out on the streets. He was still sidelined while his injuries healed. I smiled at him.

"Come and sit down, Trojan," I said, waving to a spare seat.

Normally the kids were not allowed in the Command Centre, but I did not want him left outside alone. I smiled as I watched his eyes roam across all the equipment that filled the room.

"What's that?" Trojan asked, pointing to a screen off to the right.

I looked over to where he was pointing and saw which screen it was he was looking at.

"That shows the status of the Safehouses," I said.

Then I looked closer. A warning was flashing up.

"Oh, fuck!" I groaned. "How long has that been there?"

Hal looked over and tapped some keys, bringing up a log.

"About two hours!" she replied, looking aghast.

"What?" Medic asked.

"The secondary data link to Safehouse K is down..."

Hal was hammering away furiously on a keyboard and white writing was moving up a black window on the screen.

"Primary is up, but no connection over the secondary, although I cannot see why!" Hal said, perplexed.

"It's being jammed!" I exclaimed in sudden realisation.

"Please explain," Medic demanded, confused.

"Every Safehouse has multiple data links. They all connect to each other like a web. The primary is hard-wired, fibre-optic. The secondary is wireless, over the cell network. The secondary is down, but everything checks out. So it must be being jammed," I explained as simply as I could.

"So that means that the kidnappers could be somewhere close to Safehouse K?" Medic asked.

"Possibly. Depends on the range of their jammer," Hal explained.

"We picked that location as there are deep underground basements there. The actual Safehouse is underground, like here. The above ground section is a sham," I began.

"It is very possible that the kidnappers are using a building nearby and more specifically the basement to keep the kids in. It's not all that far from where they found the bus, either," Hal finished.

I brought up a schematic of Safehouse K on the large eighty-inch horizontal touch-screen table.

"It extends down three stories and is surrounded by six feet of reinforced concrete in all directions. Sensors monitor for digging or any other form of intrusion into the Safehouse," I said, pointing out the entrances. "That was where Kick-Ass hid with Petra, on the upper level, but when we found Mathilda we took her down to the first basement level, into the briefing area there."

"Time to let the team know!" Hal advised.

Safehouse K

We had approached with as much stealth as possible and the six of us met up inside, on the surface level of the Safehouse. The place was devoid of anything, just bare concrete. Our motorcycles were parked side-by-side, ready for a quick getaway.

As we walked over to a section of concrete that was marked with a dashed yellow square, a slight rumble could be heard as a section of the concrete floor moved down and to one side, revealing a concrete staircase. We all vanished downwards and the concrete slab returned to its previous position, hiding the staircase.

We came out into a comfortable lobby that had carpet tiles on the floor and walls painted a pleasant light purple. We removed our masks and headed through a pair of double doors into a large open area that contained a briefing area, a kitchen and a place to sit to eat. As we entered lights clicked on across the facility.

On a large eighty-inch horizontal touch-screen table that was a duplicate of that at Safehouse F, we examined a map of the area surrounding the Safehouse. As we had approached the area, from six different directions, Battle Guy had used our personal communications equipment to map the extremities of the jamming. We had an approximate circumference and Battle Guy had superimposed this on the map.

I looked up at a monitor located on the wall. On it was displayed the Command Centre at Safehouse F. I could see Battle Guy, Hal, Medic and Trojan.

"It was Trojan who drew our attention to it, sorry!" Battle Guy explained.

"Not your fault," I replied with a reassuring smile. "Better late than never. Well done, Trojan!"

I saw Curtis beam with pleasure.

The approximate centre of the jamming was located about one-hundred and sixty-five metres to the west of the Safehouse. Battle Guy zoomed in and brought up an image of the building. It was in the form of a right-angled triangle and from what Hal had been able to find out it had a large basement that extended down almost six stories. Some of the levels dated back almost seventy years or more. The building was supposedly abandoned and for good reason.

The building had not had any maintenance in almost twenty years and was on the verge of collapsing.

It was a perfect hiding place and a very dangerous one, too. If the building was breached in the normal manner by SWAT, it could come crashing down. We had some planning to do. I got on the phone to Voight and Vicky.

The clock was still ticking and time was running out.

Chapter 183*: Closing In

Thursday night

West 37th Street

We approached the building with our NVGs mounted on our heads.

Kick-Ass and Jackal wore the additional thermal detection systems and were looking out for anybody who might be watching for our approach. We had to get in unseen and we hoped that our own research of the area and the basement systems would give us an edge over the kidnapers.

We had passed on all of our new information to the CPD, but they had decided not to believe the information – no surprise there! Voight did, however, and his team was on the way to support us. They would secure the area around the building. We carried no explosive devices, except for some detcord; anything heavier than that might have brought the whole building down on top of both us and the kids that we were supposed to be rescuing.

Our NVGs would help to show us the way with a map showing on our head-up-display. Communication were expected to be difficult underground, but Battle Guy had boosted the radio signals from Safehouse K and we were using a frequency that was not being jammed. It would be the depth underground and the construction of the building that would cause problems more than the jamming might.

...+...

There had been one stroke of luck, though.

I had received a phone call. How Marty had been able to route it to my cell, with all the jamming, I had no idea!

"Good evening, Miss Macready," the very British voice had said. "I am Lieutenant Craig Lawrence, Royal Navy."

"Hello," I said.

"We have a mutual, err, well not exactly friend, but arsehole!"

"You mean, Mitchell!" I growled.

"That's the bastard!" Lawrence responded.

I suddenly began to like the Naval Officer.

"You have a lot of respect in the Intelligence Community, Miss Macready, hence this phone call. Now, we are very aware of what is going on in your great City, right now."

"How...?"

"It's what we do at GCHQ..."

"Oh..., sorry..."

"We have had chatter from signal intercepts concerning an unknown event. However, what is going down in Chicago fits with that signals traffic. We are only telling you this for two reasons. One, we all hate Mitchell and loved what you did to him a few months back and two; we have our own interest in the man whom we believe is behind the events currently underway in Chicago. We want the man dead and we know that you can accomplish that."

"You want me to kill for you, again?"

"No. Nothing like that. No blackmail. However, just imagine, HM Government would owe Hit Girl a favour!"

Put like that... How could a Hit Girl resist!

"Okay..."

"He's a terrorist who will sell anything for money – even his own family... Therefore, he has no scruples about selling somebody else's family. There is a kill order out on him, unofficially of course; we don't actually kill people anymore!"

"No...!" I commented dryly, vividly remembering our trip to the UK earlier that year.

"This man is intending to put those kids onto a ship, in Chicago. We have no idea which one, unfortunately. That ship will take them through The Great Lakes – ring a bell? You had a little fun on your cruise during the summer...," I grimaced as I remembered the summer cruise! "Once through the Great Lakes they will be passed to another vessel that will take them onwards to Africa and then from there, to the Far East. Many die on the trip..."

"You need me to get the names of the ships?"

"I believe you are familiar with extracting information from people..."

That actually gave me a thought.

"How big is the file you have on me?"

"Officially we don't keep files on vigilantes, but it's over eight-inches thick and a damn good read!"

I felt myself blushing at that comment.

"You going to tell me his name?"

"Gerry Thompson. He operates with teams of eight."

...+...

We closed the building from two directions.

Kick-Ass was with Petra and Erika. I had Jackal and Chloe.

"Contact!" Kick-Ass growled. "Third window from left, second floor."

I looked and could just make out a dim form in my NVGs.

Kick-Ass with his thermal capability would see much more.

"Petra, get up there!" Kick-Ass ordered and I moved towards the building, staying in cover.

There was a hole in the wall, about six feet up and I jumped upwards, pulling myself inside the building. Thankfully, none of the bricks gave way. I ran quietly across the concrete floor, avoiding anything that might make a noise.

Once on the second floor, I ran towards the man. He was holding a set of binoculars and had a radio on a chair beside him. In his hand was a pistol and the pistol had a six-inch suppressor on the muzzle. The man tried to turn just seconds before I drove my armoured fist into his kidney, doubling him over. My armoured knee drove upwards, into his face, smashing his nose. I twisted his neck, snapping it and allowed the body to fall to the floor.

"One down hard!" I called.

I picked up the radio from the chair and called in the displayed frequency settings to Battle Guy.

Sub-level four

The radio on the desk started to squeal.

The other radios began doing the same.

"What the fuck?" Gerry Thompson exploded.

"They're being jammed, Boss."

"I fucking know that!"

"Who?"

"They must be close, or else they're using a military grade jammer," Thompson moaned. "Check all the entrances and start patrolling the first and second sub-levels."

Thompson was worried.

The basement

The door was pulled open.

A flashlight shone in and waved across us, one at a time. Somebody was counting to make sure that we were all there.

"Hey!" I called out.

There was no reply as the door was shoved closed, and I could hear a pair of bolts rasping closed.

Sub-level one

"This place is some scary shit!"

"Why?"

"Kind of reminds me of either that episode of Stargate Universe where they get stuck underground, or possibly Aliens."

"Fuck off, Jackal!" Hit Girl growled.

The basement was dark and very creepy. We were using active infrared to allow ourselves to see. The active infrared was invisible to the human eye, but was bright when viewed via our NVGs. There was crap everywhere, which could be hiding the enemy. Jackal had the thermal sensor, so could check for body heat before we moved into an area.

I had to agree, though, the place reminded me of some programs on TV and that got my imagination working. I was not scared of the dark, but I did not exactly like it much. Oh, well, what was the point of being 'Shadow', if you didn't like shadows!

I was desperate for a rest after all the crap that we had endured in Gotham. My fifteen-year-old body had not taken kindly to all the abuse that I had been throwing at it. I was lucky, apart from being covered in quite a lot of bruises, I was not hurt; nowhere near as much as Curtis. I worried about him every day and every night. He was healing well, according to Mom, so there was nothing to worry about, but he was still my cousin and I loved him dearly – I just hoped that he never found out!

I was sorely tempted to tell Mindy that I wanted to take a week off, but I had no intention of letting Mindy, or anybody else, down. Maybe I would speak with Dave and see what we could do about getting some rest, without Mindy laughing at me.

I snapped out of my thoughts as I heard a noise. It sounded like a piece of fallen masonry being kicked across a concrete floor. I had very good hearing! I indicated to the others and turned towards the noise.

We could not use automatic firearms, nor could we use un-suppressed weapons as the sound could cause the masonry to collapse. I pulled out my FN that was already fitted with a suppressor. I aimed it into the darkness before me and used my active infrared to scan the area ahead of me. I saw a light ahead of me, it was aimed low on the ground. It was a flashlight and somebody was moving in my direction. I raised my left hand, fist clenched, halting Hit Girl and Jackal behind me.

We all moved backwards against the sides of the passageway. As long as the flashlight stayed on the ground then there was a good chance that the 'somebody' would walk past. The flashlight was screwing up the active infrared and the NVGs. It turned out to be only one man and as he began walk past me, I grabbed his neck and threw him against the wall of the passageway, which knocked him out cold. I looked over at Hit Girl, who nodded. I pulled out my short-bladed knife and slit the man's throat, allowing the blood to spread across the concrete.

For good measure, Hit Girl kicked the corpse in the head as she went past. I knew exactly how she felt about criminals who hurt kids and I agreed, as would all of Fusion and most normal human beings for that matter.

Sub-level two

I was leading, which was a surprise.

Among the many things that I was learning about Fusion was that despite the fact that Kick-Ass and Hit Girl were obviously in charge and some seemed more senior than others, everybody was treated the same; there was no real ranking system and different operations were led by different people. I was the newbie in Fusion; yeah, I could fight better than most of the others, but I was always treated with respect and at that moment, I had Mist and Kick-Ass following my orders!

I supposed that was what made Fusion function so well. The training was top-notch and I knew that one day I might be under the command of Wildcat who was seven years my junior, but I did not care; that was one young girl that I did respect and I seriously wanted to spar with her but had not had the chance. I was just grateful to be part of something great and something so exciting. Mindy had promised me that I was a full part of Fusion and that that made me equal to everybody else. She also said that my experience automatically made me a senior member of Fusion and that everybody would listen to me, even her and Dave.

Another surprise had been D-JAK. I had offered my skills and Mindy had instantly made me a senior instructor and given me a black Gi. It gave me an income, which was very useful as I had cut deeply into Mom and Dad's money, and it was also a way to better my skills. I loved sparring with Mindy and I knew that she was often holding back on me, but no matter how hard I pushed, Mindy would always play dumb. Privately, Dave had told me that Mindy never sparred to her limit; and that if she did then she might actually kill people.

I was also surprised to find Chloe and Josh welcoming me in. I had expected that they might be put out by my joining Fusion, but no – mind you, I had heard murmurings concerning some bedtime related activities from when they were all in Gotham; I needed to find out a bit more about that – it sounded juicy!

I was dragged out of my thoughts by a light, somewhere up ahead. I raised my left hand with the fist clenched, signalling Mist and Kick-Ass to halt. The light seemed to originate from another room, over to the right about twenty feet or so away.

I moved forward slowly, watching my feet amidst the fallen rubble. I turned and made the hand signal for a door, pointing to my right. I could hear movement very close and as a result, I did not want to speak. I waved for Mist and Kick-Ass to come up to me and they stopped, with Mist resting her left hand on my left shoulder.

I pulled a flexible fibre-optic cable from my belt and gently eased it past the doorway. The other end was connected to a camera that transmitted to a receiver on our NVG head-up-displays. We could all see the same image. As the image stabilised, we could see four men, all grouped around a table. One of the men matched the image of Gerry Thompson that we had all seen earlier, before commencing the attack.

I felt Mist squeeze my shoulder and I looked back, receiving a nod from Kick-Ass.

It was time to engage.

The basement

The door was pulled open.

A flashlight shone in and waved across us, one at a time. Somebody was counting, again.

"Hey!" I called out, just as before.

Just as before, there was no reply, but then I heard a grunt. The flashlight fell to the floor and rolled towards me. I grabbed it and shone it at the door. I almost dropped the flashlight in I shock as I saw what I had illuminated.

A man stood in the doorway. He held a pistol in his right hand, which he dropped. The flashlight must have been in his left hand. Now, though, the left hand was wrestling with a purple arm that had wrapped itself around the man's neck. The right hand joined the left in trying to wrestle the arm off his neck. I heard screams from the kids around me as they saw what was going on at the doorway.

There was a loud crack, which my mind told me was the man's neck, some more screams from the kids and the man fell to the ground.

"Good evening!" The purple, armour clad form that owned the purple arm growled. "My name is Hit Girl!"

I did drop the flashlight!

We were saved; we could get the hell out of the dark, filthy place! There was sudden movement as others moved into the room. By the light of the flashlight, I saw a set of blue-clad legs and then some of a reddish-brown.

"I am Shadow. My pal Jackal is just going to check you all out. Are you Miss Evans?" The blue-legged vigilante asked.

"Y – Yes, I am."

"Is everybody here, are any missing?"

"Two girls and a boy were taken a while ago, otherwise we are all here."

"Hi, I'm the driver, call me Roy!"

"Let's move!" Hit Girl announced and we were all passed, one by one, from one vigilante to another and out of the door.

"Are we getting out of here?" A voice asked. I recognised it as being that of one of the girls, Heather.

"It's not gonna be a walk in the park, but, yeah!" Shadow replied.

All of the vigilantes spoke with artificial voices, which sounded freaky, especially in the near total darkness.

Sub-level two

We all suddenly froze, just as we were about to enter the room.

I could hear screaming, crying and shouting coming into the room from another direction; that was an unexpected complication. The screaming and crying was obviously from kids while the shouting was some fucker who deserved to die.

"Move it, bitch!"

"P – Please..."

That was the voice of a young girl on the verge of panic. My temper was building and I felt Mist's hand grip my shoulder reassuringly. I fed the fibre-optic back out and around the doorway.

"Nice!" Thompson said, examining his merchandise.

The two girls had been stripped down to their underwear and were being examined by Thompson. I was incensed by what I was witnessing.

"Should get some good money for you two, and if the others are just as good then we're onto something. As for the snivelling brat..."

I had had enough and pulled back the fibre-optic. I was trembling with rage and I heard a whisper from Kick-Ass.

"Petra, you cover the two girls. Mist, take the boy. I'll take the bastards."

Sub-level two

I was shaking worse than I had ever done in my life.

I kept talking to myself, repeating the same sentence to keep focussed on anything but what was happening to me.

"My name is Lauren Edwards and I am thirteen-years-old; I am going to get through this."

I had never known such abject fear, it was cold standing there, in just my underwear and every limb shook, both with the cold and with the fear. I had no idea what was going to happen to us. I had no idea where I was, I just knew that Lauren Edwards was probably going to die along with her friends, Katie Gray and Philip Jacobs.

My skin crawled as I watched the men run their beady eyes across my half-naked body. I was no longer crying as I had run out of tears. Katie was still sobbing and Philip was hurting from having been kicked in the stomach by one of the men. My feet hurt from being forced to walk bare-foot across the rubble strewn floor.

I was standing next to Katie and we were both near to another doorway, opposite to that which we had entered by. Philip was on the floor, where he had been thrown, several feet away. The man who seemed to be in charge, seemed to be talking.

"Should get some good money for you two, and if the others are just as good then we're onto something. As for the snivelling brat..."

..._...

Suddenly there was movement at the doorway, a few feet away.

Into the bright lighting of the basement room came three armoured individuals one of whom was enormous and instantly recognisable by his green and yellow armour.

Kick-Ass!

Chapter 184*: Tidying Up

Thursday night

Sub-level two

I dove at the two frightened girls, dragging them to the floor and covering them with my body.

Across the room, Mist was doing the same with the boy. Kick-Ass was going wild; he shot two of the men with his suppressed Glock before throwing himself at the next man, smashing him against the wall. The fourth man, Thompson, had run for it.

There was an ominous cracking sound. It had come from the wall that Kick-Ass had driven the man against, maybe a little too hard. I grabbed up the two girls and shoved them towards the doorway, but bricks and other shit fell before we could get there. I turned and pushed the girls towards the other doorway, but felt something heavy land on my right shoulder blade and it hurt, knocking me down to the floor.

Then a green arm reached out and a gauntlet seized my arm dragging me out from under the fallen masonry. I seized hold of one girl as I was dragged past and saw that Kick-Ass had the other girl under his other arm.

I could not see Mist.

Friday morning

Sub-level one

I looked at the clock that sat at the top right of the HUD in my NVGs.

It was just minutes after midnight when I felt a disturbing vibration and worse, I heard the collapsing masonry.

"Fusion, check in!" I called instantly.

"Shadow up!"

"Jackal up!"

"This is Battle Guy; I've lost markers for Kick-Ass, Mist and Petra!"

For a moment I just stood there before galvanising myself into action.

"Shadow, Jackal, the exit is just ahead; let's get these kids to safety..."

I was cut off by a louder and much closer rumbling sound.

On the surface

"Holy fuck!"

I watched, appalled, as part of the building seemed to implode on itself. I turned and looked at Olinsky, who just stood there before running towards the collapsing building. Dawson and Lindsay were already there and staring into a pit that went down two storeys.

Fusion were down there and so were the kids. Nobody else in CPD believed that the kids were down there, but I trusted Hit Girl and if she said that they were down there; then they were down there...

Sub-level one

Our exit was blocked, completely.

The only way out was to go back, then down to the second or third sub-levels, and then I hoped to find a route back to the surface. The kids were scared and choking on the brick dust. We did our best to reassure them, but I was worried.

"We're gonna die!" One boy shouted.

I span around.

I moved towards the boy I had illuminated in my flashlight beam.

"If you think you're gonna die, one thing is certain – you are going to die," I said. "Say to me: 'I am not going to die!'"

The boy hesitated. I repeated the line again and the boy responded.

"I am not going to die!"

"Repeat it!" I demanded.

"I am not going to die!"

"All of you!"

Everybody was saying the same line repeatedly and I even saw some smiles. I started moving away from the fallen masonry and deeper into the basement followed by the kids, teacher, driver and then Shadow and Jackal.

Sub-level two

I could hear coughing, once the noise of falling masonry had ceased.

That was good – dead people did not cough!

"Sound off!" It was Kick-Ass.

"Petra, here!" I called.

"Mist, here!" I heard from a short distance away.

"Kids?"

"Err, Katie, here!"

"Philip, here!"

"Lauren, here, Kick-Ass!"

"Good, now we've been introduced, is everybody okay?" Kick-Ass asked.

After hearing five 'yes, Kick-Ass', I dug through the rubble and found my flashlight. It still worked! I illuminated each person in turn. First was the boy, Philip. He looked scared, but he was still in one piece. The first girl, Katie, was shivering and I could see cuts and bruises on her pale skin. The girl smiled a little as I moved over to the last girl. Lauren grimaced from a bruise on her left shoulder, but seemed in one piece nonetheless.

I could hear Kick-Ass calling over the comms, but there was no answer. I tried and so did Mist; still nothing. I checked my belt – the comms package was badly dented, but seemed intact. I went forward to see what the route was like and found a body – it was breathing and it was Thompson. My rage returned and I hauled the unconscious form out of the rubble and sat him upright. His eyes flicked open.

"Give me the name of the ship," I asked simply.

"Never!"

I picked up a brick and brought it down onto the man's left knee, smashing it. He shrieked with the pain.

"I will break every fucking bone in your body – you fucking worthless piece of shit!"

Well, at least we were no longer in the custody of those dead bastards!

However, we now seemed to be trapped underground, which was not exactly a huge improvement. Anyway, we were all still, breathing so I could not complain. Petra had wandered off into the darkness and Mist was talking to us, keeping our spirits up.

"Bet you never thought you'd be trapped with three vigilantes, did ya?"

"To be honest, no!" I admitted and actually laughed. "I just can't believe I've been face to face with Kick-Ass, Mist and Petra!"

"Oh dear," Kick-Ass said. "Fan girl time!"

The three of us all laughed at that. I was a huge fan of the vigilantes and rather strangely, I felt awed at being in their presence. I heard a loud scream and turned towards the doorway, there was another scream. I looked at Kick-Ass.

"Petra has found the fourth man," he said simply.

I felt nothing, which surprised me. The man who had kidnapped us was being tortured. Did I care? Not really and that surprised me, too!

Several minutes later, Petra reappeared and I could see fresh blood glistening on her armour. I looked up at her as she sat down beside me.

"Thank you," I said.

Petra turned to Kick-Ass.

"I think we have a route to the surface – there is a gap in the masonry about a hundred yards down the passageway."

"Let's go – lead on Petra!" Kick-Ass ordered.

Sub-level three

We had made our way downwards and the level we were on seemed relatively intact.

The going was slow, but we managed to find another staircase that led back upwards towards the surface. We spent almost an hour and a half clearing rubble, which was hard going in combat suits, but we had no choice. I was uncertain when we could be able to escape, but we had to keep moving. The moral in the kids was at a good level and I intended to keep it that way.

Shadow and Jackal were telling jokes to try to keep the kids' spirits up as much as possible and it seemed to be working. We were still in communication with Safehouse F and Battle Guy was doing what he could to help us get around obstacles. However, there was still nothing from Kick-Ass, Mist and Petra.

I was worried about them, but I had no time to dwell on that.

Sub-level one

We made our way down a long corridor before turning at yet another pile of rubble.

Suddenly Petra raised her fist and we all went quiet. Somebody was coming. We moved into a sheltered position, with the kids behind us. I stood between Mist and Petra, waiting for whatever was coming towards us.

"We have activity ahead!"

At Jackal's warning, Shadow and I stopped the kids and moved in front of them.

"Go check, Jackal!" I ordered.

I watched as Jackal moved forward, his suppressed Five-seveN raised in front of him.

"I have multiple heat signatures!" Jackal reported.

Then I heard a suppressed pistol shot, followed by a loud exclamation.

"You fucking bastard, Jackal – that hurt!"

I rubbed my chest and glared back at Jackal as he shrugged and holstered his pistol. As I walked past him, I cracked him around the back of the head.

"Fucking ow!" Jackal exclaimed and I heard Lauren laugh.

I was very pleased to see Hit Girl and Shadow – not so much Jackal!

"Hi!" Hit Girl whispered as I reached out to touch her.

"You were actually worried about me!" I teased as she looked up at me.

"Nah – you usually turn up!" She replied, however I knew her too well and could tell by her body language that she had been worried about me.

I watched as the kids met up and welcomed each other. Now we had only to get ourselves out of there.

Easier said than done!

Dawn

Kick-Ass pushed through the final layer of bricks and daylight flooded down into the sub-level.

Within a minute, the light was blocked and I recognised the voice of Hank Voight.

"Stay out of sight – there's a shoot to kill order on you. Snipers!"

Nothing changed in Chicago!

"Fuck that!" Kick-Ass growled and I heard Voight laugh. "The kids first!"

Voight's team widened the hole and the first girl was passed up. Slowly, the kids were passed out, one by one, into the growing sunshine. They all held their hands over their eyes. Having been in semi-darkness for so long, none was ready for the bright onslaught that met their tired eyes.

However, the screams of joy were only to be heard by the fourteen children, their teacher and their driver.

I turned to look back into the hole, to thank Kick-Ass and Hit Girl, but the vigilantes had vanished from sight.

A Detective helped me out of the crater and passed me a blanket as I was still in my underwear. I had heard the other Cop's warning to Kick-Ass and I felt rage against the idiots that tried to hunt down the vigilantes. Without them, I would be dead. I owed them and I wanted to be one of them.

Ambulances began to descend on the site along with more Cops. A Paramedic checked me over and pronounced me healthy after she had cleaned and dressed my cuts. After an hour, parents began to arrive, including my own.

"How did you escape?" I was asked.

"It was Hit Girl and Kick-Ass, with their team; they saved our lives..."

"What happened to your kidnapers," the Police Officer pushed.

"Them?" I replied without emotion. "Those fuckers are dead!"

Safehouse K

We watched from one of the upper levels of the Safehouse.

Despite being amazed that we had escaped, I was overjoyed as I watched the kids smiling and crying as they were reunited with their parents. We were still the hunted, nothing new there, but I was happy with that if we were able to bring so much happiness to the families of Chicago. As we turned away from the scene, in the crowd below us, a man shouted for all to hear.

"Thank you, Fusion!"

"Fusion! Fusion! Fusion!"

The chant could be heard for quite a distance as we all climbed into the back of Mathilda's SUV. She took us away from the area and dropped us off close to Safehouse F. Once there, I thanked Marty, Abby, Cathy and Curtis.

They all went home, as did Dave and I, once we had showered.

West Ridge

It was a little after six in the morning when Dave and I arrived home.

Paige was asleep in our bed and as I looked into the bedroom, Anne-Marie opened her eyes and smiled at me.

"Hi, kid," I said with a smile of my own.

Anne-Marie scrambled out of the bed and ran over to me, giving me a big hug while smiling up at Dave. I was very tired, but it was almost time to get the kids ready for school, so I sat and chatted to Anne-Marie while Dave woke up Danny. Paige also woke up and headed home with our thanks.

During breakfast, Danny called us both through to the living room where there was a 'breaking news' story concerning fourteen missing kids and two adults. Apparently, the CPD, so said the Superintendent, was able to track down the kids and save them. There was no mention of Fusion at all.

I smiled at Dave – it was nothing new.

Friday night

'The Vigilante'

There was one more task to perform.

The suspect vessel was flying under the flag of Canada, which we knew was fake; she was US registered. Our job was to ensure that nobody escaped as the US Coastguard boarded from the shore to take possession.

After a few hours' sleep, Dave and I had headed down to Safehouse W and once darkness had fallen, we had headed out onto Lake Michigan. Along the way, we had picked up Petra and Mist. We had passed on the name of the ship, which Petra had obtained from that bastard. She was the 'MV Wolf' and as we watched from the darkness, the US Coastguard boarded the vessel.

As expected, we saw activity off the starboard side of the vessel as several men ran down a boarding ladder and down into a twin-engine RIB. For reasons unknown to us, no Coastguard boats were available. It was up to us to find out the ultimate destination of the 'MV Wolf' and which ship she was meeting up with on the high seas.

Once the RIB had moved away from the ship, Kick-Ass advanced the throttles and 'The Vigilante' accelerated in pursuit of the fleeing RIB. We were racing northeast at over thirty knots and gaining on the RIB.

The feeling human traffickers had no idea that they were being pursued as we closed to less than one hundred yards.

The RIB

The man peered into the darkness behind the boat.

Something was out there; he could see the flash of white that could only be a bow-wave. Nothing could be heard over the roar of the twin outboard engines. The man leaned forward and whispered into the ear of the man in front. The message was passed down the line of six men to the driver.

The driver looked astern and his eyes widened as he saw the bow of another vessel not more than two feet from his stern. Just as he made a move to advance the twin throttles fully forward, there was a pair of explosions as the two outboards stopped dead and the RIB drifted violently to a stop.

The other vessel came alongside and the driver raised his hands, as did the other men at the sight of three sub-machine guns aimed at their heads.

While Kick-Ass rigged the RIB with explosives, us girls had some questioning to complete.

The men were handcuffed and made to kneel along the starboard side of 'The Vigilante'.

"I need information, gentlemen. The first to give up the name of the ship you were to rendezvous with will live longer than the others," Petra growled.

Nobody said a word, so Petra moved alongside the first man.

"I am now going to show you what we think of men who traffic kids!" She growled and pulled out a six-inch blade from her belt.

She hauled the man's head back with his hair and placed a knee into his back between the shoulder blades.

"You heard the word 'enucleation', cunt?" Petra asked without feeling.

The man shook his head.

"Neither had I, till the other day. Let me show you..."

In a swift movement, Petra stabbed her blade into the man's right eye, flicking the organ into the sea. Blood spurted from the empty eye socket and the man screamed. He wrestled with the cuffs that held his wrists together behind his back but to no avail.

The horrified looks on the other men made me grin. Petra stepped to the next man in line. She leaned forwards and cut the man's belt, then with the help of Mist pulled his trousers down. The man was starting to sob as Petra seized his manhood and deftly removed it with her knife. The man screamed in agony and fell to the deck beside his enucleated friend.

The next man was beyond horrified as Mist pulled his head back and forced his mouth open. Petra then crammed the other man's genitals into the open mouth and shoved the jaw closed and held it. The man choked and then swallowed involuntarily. He collapsed to the deck.

"Now, who is brave and who is not?" Petra demanded of the remaining men.

There were times that Petra's ruthlessness concerned me, but I knew that she had demons in her past that she had not talked to me about yet. However, it was nice to have somebody who did not balk at extreme methods.

"Atlantic Trader, Atlantic Trader – please!" A man begged.

I looked towards the bridge and two minutes later, I saw Kick-Ass raise a thumb. Battle Guy had confirmed the name. I raised my Glock and shot the first three men, Mist finished off the next three and then Petra seized the final man.

"See you in hell!" She growled as she slit his throat and threw him backwards into the RIB.

The other six bodies followed and we backed off two-dozen-yards before Kick-Ass pressed a button on the console of 'The Vigilante'. There was a bright flash as the RIB settled in the water and slowly sank, taking the men to their watery graves. I quickly sent a coded signal on a certain satellite channel, before finally relaxing. Our part of the action was over.

Kick-Ass span the wheel and turned 'The Vigilante' back towards shore, advancing the throttle to full power.

Chapter 185*: Moving

Friday night

Three thousand miles to the southeast

The two warships were cruising within one nautical mile of each other.

The closest vessel, the eight-thousand tonne destroyer, HMS Dragon, cut through the waves at twenty-two knots. The other vessel, painted in a slightly different shade of grey, was holding position off the Dragon's starboard quarter. That warship was the nine-thousand tonne, USS Churchill. The two warships, operating together, had been diverted and were on a mission for the British Admiralty.

Commander Ryan Bennett studied the container vessel through his binoculars and issued commands to the OOD. As they closed, the MV Atlantic Trader continued to accelerate and despite numerous radio calls from both vessels, the British registered vessel refused to stop. It was now in the hands of HMS Dragon as Commander Ryan focussed his binoculars on the destroyer's bow.

The 4.5-inch Mark 8 Mod 1 gun swung a few degrees to port and the barrel raised slightly. With a puff of smoke and a loud bang, a shell ripped through the air, landing two-dozen-yards ahead of the fleeing merchant vessel. The automatic mechanism cycled within the turret, loading another round into the gun breech. The operator in the operations room, beneath the bridge made a slight adjustment to his aim, pressed the foot pedal and another shell ripped through the air landing only a few yards ahead of the container ship which immediately cut power and the bow wave could be seen rapidly diminishing.

After a brief radio conversation with the Captain of HMS Dragon, the two vessels separated and took up position with the HMS Dragon off the container ship's port quarter and the USS Churchill on the container ship's starboard bow.

The OOD (officer of the deck) took a moment to glance at the ship's mascots. At the rear of the bridge was a three-foot tall, two-foot wide, poster. The high-resolution poster depicted Hit Girl and Shadow in their combat suits. Hit Girl had her twin Katana swords drawn, while Shadow posed with her bō-staff. There were similar posters throughout the ship. Anybody who dared to interfere with them risked hell on earth.

Commander Bennett issued orders to the boarding party as they lowered the ship's boats. Through his binoculars, he could see the Merlin helicopter on the stern of HMS Dragon lift off. She carried eight Royal Marines Commandos who would rapid-rope down onto the container vessel's bridge. They would ensure that the ship remained stopped. The USS Churchill's boarding party would then race over and board, searching the ship from stem to stern.

..._...

The search had taken a little over four hours, but it had been worth it.

Commander Bennett headed down to his cabin to make a very important phone call, even before he sent a signal to CINCLANT.

Chicago

West Ridge

I answered my cell.

"Good morning, Mindy!"

"Commander," I replied.

"Two hundred and twenty-nine."

"My God!" I replied, astounded at the number.

"All safe, thanks to you and your team," Ryan Bennett said.

"Thank you for telling me, Ryan, it means a lot to know we were successful."

"Any survivors at your end?"

I knew what he meant.

"Not a one!"

"As it should be," Commander Bennett replied coldly.

USS Churchill

"... In other news, Hit Girl and Kick-Ass, along with their team have put their lives on the line, yet again, and rescued fourteen kids and two adults from a people trafficking gang that was closely related to the activities today... There are understood to be no surviving traffickers in Chicago..." Commander Bennett told his crew, over the 1MC announcement system.

There were broad smiles on the bridge and several glances at the ship's mascots. Around the ship, there were similar smiles and expressions of triumph. Everybody was pleased when bad guys got what they deserved.

Commander Bennett was secretly very proud of what his only daughter did in the name of protecting the innocent.

Chicago

Saturday morning

Glenview

We were moving in, officially, to the new house.

That afternoon and evening, we were going to have a housewarming party, with everybody invited. It would also be a great opportunity for people to meet the twins. We spent the morning moving our possessions from West Ridge and doing an awful lot of shopping for supplies!

It took every minute that we had to prepare the house for our visitors. It was the end of the second week in October, but the weather was still reasonably mild and the twins spent most of the morning running around the garden with Sophia.

..._...

Anne-Marie's bedroom was now festooned with toys. Her bed was now sporting a 'Frozen' themed duvet cover and pillow set. There were also 'Frozen' curtains and bedside lamps! Danny had opted for a 'Transformers' themed bedroom, which I thought was much better as I was more a 'Transformers' fan than a fan of 'Frozen'!

I had spoiled them both, just a bit and there was a large screen TV with a Sony PlayStation for them both share, which lived in the room above Danny's bedroom.

That afternoon

The first to arrive were Marcus and Paige along with Megan.

"The house is amazing, Mindy!" Paige said in awe.

"Wow!" Megan exclaimed, so amazed that she never thought to swear.

"Nice place," Marcus commented.

When Megan saw the pool, she begged to go swimming. I had mentioned to everybody coming that there was a pool and that people could swim if they so wished. I suggested to her that she go find the twins and then they could all go swimming together.

Minutes later, Megan, clad in a dark green one-piece swimming costume re-appeared in the kitchen with Anne-Marie in a pink one-piece suit and Danny in blue swim shorts. Paige said she would keep an eye on them and took them through to the pool. I had given Danny and Anne-Marie very strict instructions never to go near the pool unless an adult was present.

Soon all three were splashing around in the water.

..._...

Within the hour, many more of our guests had arrived and the pool was getting busy. Megan and the twins had been joined by Tommy, Curtis, Chloe and Josh. Dave warned the two lovebirds to keep their swimming costumes on!

I felt privileged to have such good friends and I enjoyed having the house heaving with people who were all there for Dave and me. It was about as close to normality as I had ever been. Marty and Kim appeared, along with Abby. Tony and Shannon Morgan were chatting with Jack Bay, while Vicky was talking with Sharon Fellowes and Rachel Murphy. Vicky was enjoying exchanging stories about their husbands. Brad Fellowes and Cam Murphy soon joined the other kids in the pool.

Isaac Swanson was helping Paige keep an eye on the kids in the pool, while Kyle and Hailee were vigorously checking each other out on a couch in the living room. Abby was not too bothered about splitting from Kyle and had not yet decided on a new boyfriend. Erika eventually joined the kids in the pool, much to the delight of Josh and the other boys!

Everybody commented on how cute the twins were and I had been able to introduce them to everybody. Even better, everybody quietly offered every assistance that they could provide in my quest to become a Mom.

Looking across the kitchen, I saw Dave chatting with Isaac.

I soon found myself chatting with Isaac in the kitchen, from which he still had a good view of the pool.

We watched as Chloe threw Megan across the pool. Surprisingly, Megan resurfaced in a fit of giggles and had a big smile on her face.

"Chloe can be pure evil when she wants to be," Isaac commented.

"Comes in handy when she's out at night," I replied.

"I suppose it does, Dave. She's a very strong girl, but she comes across very soft and gentle."

"So can Mindy..."

"Point taken!"

"She gets her evil streak from her mother," I said with a laugh.

"Somebody talking about Catherine Bennett?" Cathy asked as she joined us.

"Yes, Doctor!" I replied with a grin.

"I am not evil – well some may think so. Now I wanted to talk to you, Dave. A friend gave me this..."

I stared. It was a copy of Curve Magazine.

"What are you doing with a copy of a lesbian magazine?" I asked with a smirk.

Cathy did not even blush.

"Like I said, I borrowed it from a friend," she replied before continuing. "Look what I found on page twenty-three..."

Cathy opened up the magazine at the relevant page and passed it over. My eyes bulged out and so did Isaac's. It was an array of photos taken outside a certain bar in a certain city and right there in the foreground were two very familiar girls, kissing. It was not just a peck on the cheek, either – you could see the tongue...

"It was a mission, Cathy – nothing untoward. They had to play it perfect, or they would die," I explained seriously.

"Did they, err, pull it off...?" Isaac enquired.

"Oh, yeah!" I explained on for a bit.

"Anything else happen?" Cathy pushed when I had finished.

I explained about Josh, Chloe and Erika. I then went on and explained about the following, all girl 'threesome', without giving too many details.

"Oh my!" Cathy exclaimed. "Josh must have felt a little, err, inadequate!"

"What you guys talking about?" Mindy asked as she joined us.

Cathy looked Mindy up and down before replying.

"Just talking about the 'eating-out', you three had."

Mindy went so red I thought she might faint.

"Chloe told me everything – I just had to confirm it all. I found this, you see and I'm very good when it comes to interrogations..."

Mindy glanced at the photos for a minute, then turned, and stalked away upstairs. Two minutes later, she returned in a sleek, slightly revealing, swimsuit. As for the colour...

Mindy strode through the crowd of people and dived into the swimming pool. She did not resurface, but Chloe suddenly vanished underwater. Both girls soon reappeared and Mindy was whispering into Chloe's right ear. Chloe's face exploded and she looked over at us, then instantly looked away in acute embarrassment when she saw Isaac grinning. She bit her lip and sank under the water. Mindy was smiling.

"Yeah, Cathy, you are the ultimate Doctor Evil!"

Cathy smiled at that and went off to talk with Kim. I looked over at Kim; she was the size of a beached whale and I wondered how something so enormous could actually get out; Kim was a slim woman.

I turned back and smiled as I saw Mindy playing with Anne-Marie. Danny was putting a lot of effort into trying to drown Josh as Curtis watched; the boy was still being cautious due to his wounds. Chloe was hiding behind Erika, avoiding anybody's gaze.

That evening

We had ordered in a lot of pre-cooked food as I did not want to cook and neither did I want Mindy to give everybody food poisoning! The kids seemed to have made a good dent in the food as soon as it had appeared.

I was enjoying entertaining and decided that we needed to do it more often. The twins were enjoying all the attention, too. It was difficult to believe that it was less than a week since we left Gotham and brought the twins with us. They had settled into school well and we had not had too many issues, considering it was also less than a week since they had lost their father. Mindy and I were expecting that trauma to hit the kids very soon.

..._...

It was nearing eight o'clock and I was looking for Curtis and Megan, as they seemed to have vanished from sight.

"Have you seen Curtis or Megan?" I asked Cam Fellowes.

"Up in the 'petting corner'..." he replied, pointing up to the library above the living room.

Apparently, we had a 'petting corner'; 'okay', I thought! I wandered upstairs to the library and there, in the far corner there was indeed a lot of 'petting' underway. Curtis was doing the petting and Megan was doing the kissing. As for the other pairs, Chloe/Josh and Kyle/Hailee, I was not sure if it was more pornographic rather than just simple petting!

Anne-Marie was watching closely, though. Danny was talking to Marcus on the other side of the library, who kept throwing dirty looks at the 'petting corner', especially at Megan. I was surprised to see Megan with Curtis. The girl used to be very shy about her changing body. However, that had been before we went to Gotham. That City had changed a lot for us all! Now Megan was almost happy to be touched. Mindy had told me about how much Megan had seemed to enjoy the boys helping her get back to her feet at D-JAK. Mindy had also noticed how the boys had allowed their hands to, 'accidentally', wander across Megan's chest and butt.

Considering that Hailee was now slipping off her bra from underneath her shirt, I decided that it was time for Anne-Marie and Danny to go to bed. Marcus offered to read them a bedtime story and threw Megan a dirty look as he left the room with the twins in tow.

I was tired after the previous two night's activities and more than a little sore. That was part of the price, which we paid to keep the City safe.

That night

I awoke and looked around the strange room.

It was the second new bed that I had slept in within a week. I was not complaining; the bed was wider than I was tall and the duvet cover, it was to die for! I had never had such a big room and normally I had always shared a room with my brother, but now he had his own room, too. My bedroom was almost as big as our entire house had been!

It felt strange – I knew that Daddy was never coming back and that our home was now with Dave and Mindy. They were very nice to us, but I had no idea if they might get bored and dump us. It had felt good when Mindy had gone bananas over my being hit by that other girl at school. I had also enjoyed the time at D-JAK and seeing Mindy spar with Hailee; that had been very cool!

Everybody had been so nice to us today and being able to splash about in the swimming pool had been awesome. I was still worried though, but I had no idea why.

I climbed out of bed and looked out of the window and down onto the front garden. I missed Daddy, but he had told us to stay with Dave and Mindy and I intended to follow his instructions. I walked out of the bedroom into the dark passageway that led past Dave and Mindy's office – we were not allowed in there. Next came the door to Danny's room on the right and then the spare room on the left.

Currently Josh and Chloe were sleeping in there – those two had made a lot of noise after they went to bed, no idea what they were doing. I then reached the balcony over the entrance hall and looked down to the front door and across the stairs. Behind me was the entrance to the library where Hailee and Kyle, amongst others, had been doing interesting things to each other.

I knew I was not supposed to be there; Mindy told us that we were not allowed to leave our rooms during the night. I knew she meant it for our own safety, but I saw rules as something to be broken, at least some of the time.

"What are you doing out here?"

I turned and saw Danny standing in the passageway.

"I couldn't sleep, so I went for a walk."

"Mindy'll freak!"

"We've had a lot of change over the past week and I want to be able to look after us. Dave and Mindy may get bored of us and..."

"No they won't – they promised to look after us."

"Yeah, but adults don't keep promises."

"They really care about us..."

"How do you know?"

"I overheard people talking at the party thing, last night. Marcus said that Mindy never wants to give us up and is doing everything she can to do right by us."

I hated it when Danny was right and I was wrong!

"Let's get back to bed before Mindy sees us. I know they will look after us – I think they're wonderful; I just don't want us to be disappointed if we don't work out."

"I know – come on."

Anne-Marie was not the only one who could not sleep.

I smiled to myself as I gently and silently followed the two kids as they walked back to their bedrooms. I then padded down the stairs and into our bedroom. I cuddled into the sleeping Dave and thought about what Anne-Marie had been saying.

I hoped I could do the right thing for them both, I really did. Anne-Marie had an active imagination and a brain that needed constant stimulation to keep from getting bored. Danny was less so, but I knew that he would probably change, as he got older.

Many things were due to happen over the next two weeks, with a large life-changing event finishing it all off. Was I ready for that commitment? Yes, I was.

I fell asleep happy.

Chapter 186*: Breakfast

The next morning
Sunday

Glenview

"Wakey, wakey!"

"Huh!"

I laughed and the tired girl slunk down under her duvet.

"Breakfast is almost ready."

"Okay!" came the grumpy reply.

"Morning, Mindy!"

I turned to see the grinning face of Danny peering out from the shared bathroom.

"Morning, Danny – I think your sister is a little tired this morning."

Danny ran forward and dived onto the bed, then pulled the duvet cover off his sister. Unsurprisingly, Anne-Marie was not amused.

"Leave me alone; I'm tired!" she complained burying her face in the pillow.

"Maybe if you stayed in bed instead of wandering around the house at three in the morning you might not be so tired!" I commented with an evil grin.

Anne-Marie turned over and sat up quickly.

"You know?"

"I couldn't sleep, either."

"I'm sorry, Mindy; I won't do it again..."

"Just don't make a habit of it, please," I warned. "Come on, Dave is just cooking breakfast."

"Give me a few minutes."

Anne-Marie scrambled out of bed and vanished into the bathroom.

The kitchen

I laughed as I watched the rather tired looking, pyjama clad, girl grab a seat at the counter.

Her brother, though, was all smiles.

"Bad hair day, Anne-Marie?" I chuckled.

"I need food!" She replied ignoring my teasing.

I had just finished cooking the first round of pancakes when Josh came into the kitchen trailing a tired looking Chloe, still in her pyjamas.

"What is it with the females this morning?" I asked.

"Josh kept me up all night," Chloe growled.

"Yeah, I heard a lot of noise from your room..." Danny added and Chloe blushed as she took a seat next to Anne-

Marie.

"This is no good!" Mindy stated happily, when she came into the kitchen. "Josh, help me out here."

Josh smirked as he saw where Mindy was indicating. I stepped over and opened the door. Josh seized Chloe around the waist and Mindy did the same with Anne-Marie. I laughed as both girls were unceremoniously dumped into the swimming pool. They woke up very fast indeed!

"That was not funny!" Anne-Marie exclaimed as she glared up at her laughing brother, brushing her hair from her face.

"I suppose I needed that," Chloe commented wringing out her own hair.

Once both girls had dried themselves off and wrapped themselves in a towel each, I placed a plate in front of each of them and started dishing out bacon, eggs and pancakes.

"Thanks, Dave," Anne-Marie said.

"Yeah. Thanks, Dave," Chloe added.

That morning

After everybody had finished breakfast and was dressed, we took Sophia for a long walk around the surrounding houses.

I wanted to check things over and I wanted the twins to learn their way around the area. Josh spent most of the time winding up Chloe, much to the twins amusement. Dave was also in a wind up mood and he kept annoying me! We had a lot of fun and for once, I felt very happy as I cuddled into Dave and watched the twins laughing with Josh.

We actually walked quite a distance in a large square that allowed us to see much of the neighbourhood. We stopped on the way for lunch at a convenient Burger King before finishing off our walk.

That Afternoon

After we had completed our walk, I headed to D-JAK with Anne-Marie and Danny.

Today was an open house for people to just drop in and see if they liked what we had to offer. Dave took Josh and Chloe back home. I parked around the back as usual and entered by the back door. I was met by Paige.

"So, how many for an introductory class?" I asked.

"Fourteen kids."

"Not bad," I commented as I went to get myself changed and found Hailee already there.

"Hi, Mindy," she said cheerfully.

"Got your bra back on, I see!" I teased.

"Yeah – Kyle got a little bit carried away," Hailee, grinned with a slight reddening to her cheeks.

..._...

D-JAK was busy.

Along the sides were parents and other onlookers. On the mat were two lines of seven kids who seemed to vary from about ten-years-old into the early teens. It was an even mix of boys and girls. Kyle was there, along with Megan organising them. They were all bare foot and wearing loose clothing.

"Good afternoon!" I called out. "I am Mindy, and this here, is Hailee. We are the senior instructors here at D-JAK. Today we will give you all a brief introduction to, Taekwondo. If you have any questions, please ask."

I noticed Hailee looking a little uncomfortable so I took her off to one side for a moment.

"The girl, second in from the left on the back row. You see her?"

"Yeah?"

"That is Lauren Edwards; I rescued her on Friday. The girl next to her? I caught her breaking into my house a couple weeks back."

Interesting!

"Just continue as normal and pretend you don't know them," I suggested.

..._...

Hailee settled into her introductory class, while Kyle and Megan provided demonstrations. I wandered around chatting to parents and worked my way around to the back of the class where Lauren stood. I nodded at Hailee.

"Time for a short break, I think – Mrs Wilson, over there, can provide you with a drink and something to eat," she said.

I watched as Lauren went to grab a can of Coke and a candy bar. She was followed by a younger girl, who did the same. Both girls stood together; I went to talk to them.

"Hi, I'm Mindy; who are you two?"

"I'm Lauren Edwards and this is my little sister, Lizzie."

"You enjoying yourselves?" I asked.

"It's amazing," Lauren said and she sounded excited.

"It's interesting," Lizzie added. "I think!"

It seemed that Lauren enjoyed the idea of Taekwondo, but not so much Lizzie. They both seemed very different girls.

"How old are you two?"

"I'm thirteen and Lizzie is eleven," Lauren replied.

"You want to learn to defend yourself?" I asked Lauren.

"Yeah!" Lauren replied excitedly, and then she grimaced. "I don't know if Mom will be able to afford the classes, though."

"I'll give you both a month's free classes – twice a week and then we'll see how you go..."

Lauren almost screamed with delight and ran off to tell her mother, which was the plan – I know knew who Mrs Edwards was.

"Not enjoying the class?" I asked Lizzie once Lauren was gone.

"I don't know – will I learn to hurt people?"

"No – you will learn to defend yourself. While that may hurt the person attacking you; we do not teach you how to initiate an attack."

"That's okay then – I'll do it; I don't like hurting people."

"Pleased to hear it," I chuckled.

..._...

Next, I wondered over to the corner where Anne-Marie and Danny were being shown some movements by Curtis.

"Having fun?" I asked.

"Yeah – Curtis showed us how to defeat a knife attack," Danny said with a broad smile.

I scowled at Curtis – that was not what I wanted the twins to learn about – not yet at least! I was interrupted by a voice behind me.

"Mindy?"

I turned to find myself facing Mrs Edwards.

"That's me!"

"I'm Mrs Edwards, Lauren and Lizzie's Mom. You work here?"

"I own the place, with my fiancée," I replied.

"Oh!" Mrs Edwards replied, sounding a little surprised. "Lauren told me what you did, thank you. She is very keen to learn how to defend herself."

Mrs Edwards hesitated before continuing.

"Lauren was part of the Amber Alert, the other day. She was taken by those awful men; when she escaped, she wanted to learn to defend herself. Despite what the CPD said, Lauren insists that she was rescued by those vigilantes. I believe her; she has no reason to lie."

I nodded.

"I am sorry to hear that. I saw fire in her eyes, which was why I offered her the lessons."

"You have kids?"

I turned and pointed at the twins.

"They are wonderful. If you don't mind my saying, you seem a little young to have kids of that age."

"They only came into my life very recently," I admitted.

"Kids are hard work, but it is worth the struggle, Mindy."

"Thanks, Mrs Edwards."

"Call me Emily, please."

"Excuse me please, Emily... Anne-Marie – don't kick your brother like that – those bits don't grow back!"

That evening

Glenview

It had been a pleasing afternoon.

I had made a couple of kids happy, including one who had suffered through a lot. We had all been fully debriefed after the Amber Alert was over and I had listened intently to Hailee's debrief. She had described Lauren very well. The girl was very brave and had shown a lot of courage. She seemed to have an aptitude for the Martial Arts, hence giving her the lessons. I wanted to keep her around for the time being. As for her little sister, Lizzie, there was something not quite right about that girl.

The twins had had fun as usual, despite Curtis teaching them things that he should not showing them. I had enjoyed having the house filled with people, but it was also good to have the place for just the four of us – well five if you included Sophia!

Dave pressed play on the remote and we snuggled down on the couch in the living room with Anne-Marie and Danny. It was a classic – but it was family friendly; which most of my DVD and Blu-ray collection most definitely was not!

Danny had picked out one or two films, none of which was remotely suitable for either of them! 'Let Me In' would have given him nightmares and as for 'Mr and Mrs Smith', that might have given them both ideas! I also declined 'Mulan', I was not exactly sure how that had found its way into my movie collection, but never mind.

Dave and I loved the film and we had both seen it plenty of times, the twins apparently never had. Dave was convinced that I had a thing for Harrison Ford, no comment... The song that began the film suited me too: 'Anything goes'!

"Where's Shanghai?" Danny asked.

"It's a city in China," Dave explained.

Chapter 187*: Boot Camp

Monday morning

Chicago Executive Airport

The jet landed smoothly and taxied over to the waiting car.

The luggage – several large cases – was loaded into the trunk and then the jet's two passengers climbed into the back of the waiting Jaguar XJR.

"Hi, guys!" I said cheerfully, turning in my seat. "Good flight?"

"Hiya, Mindy!" Selina Kyle replied with a grin.

"Hello, Mindy, the flight was not bad, thanks," Bruce Wayne, added.

"You guys ready to start your training?" I asked.

"We can take anything you throw at us!" Bruce said simply.

I grinned fiendishly.

Bruce would not be saying that in a few hours!

Forty minutes later Mindy pulled over to the side of the road and passed something soft and black to each of us.

"Put them on!" She ordered.

It was a blindfold. I looked over at Selina, who just shrugged as she pulled on her blindfold. I followed suit a little concerned, but I trusted Mindy.

"Thank you." Mindy replied.

The car accelerated hard and swung left and right. I lost track of the turns that Mindy made, then the noise changed and it sounded like we were in a parking lot, we then took a tight turn and went around and around until finally we stopped and Mindy turned off the engine.

"You can remove the blindfolds now..."

"Oh!" Was all I could say as I saw where we were; I was astounded and saw that Selina was similarly speechless with her mouth hanging open.

We had entered via a large vehicle-sized steel door. Beside the Jaguar was an armoured Range Rover and several motorcycles that included Shadow's blue Ducati Panigale. They were parked behind an eight-foot tall armoured glass shield that ran across the available width of the forty-foot wide cavern and had a large six-foot tall figure '1' on it. The top of the shield was angled over at forty-five degrees, to prevent anybody climbing the structure from our side. The floor of the 'cavern' was ribbed steel and concrete.

About a hundred and forty foot away, I could see the far end of the cavern. We passed through a door in the shield and headed towards where Mindy waited on a large padded mat. Beside her, I recognised Erika and Dave. There was also another girl about the same age as Mindy. Erika and the other girl were both clad in a Gi each. Erika's was dark blue, whereas the other girl wore black. That in itself seemed a little ominous.

Over to the far left was a glass-enclosed room that housed computer equipment and large flat screens. It was obviously the Command Centre and had a biometric palm scanner, similar to those that we had already seen in the cave beneath Wayne Manor in Gotham. Immediately beside the Command Centre was an external steel staircase.

The staircase provided access to a walkway, which ran around the central section of the cavern and provided access to a number of rooms on the second level. Another steel staircase came down to our right from the same walkway. The walkway was about ten feet off the ground and ringed with a steel and glass barrier that rose to a level of three and a half feet and the walkway itself was made of steel, but had a foam rubber covering. There were various doors, visible, that led off the walkway into rooms, with unknown purposes. The ceiling and some of the walls had foam rubber sections that reduced the echo in the cavernous room.

"Selina Kyle, Bruce Wayne, please meet Hailee Richards, otherwise known as Petra," Dave said with a flourish.

"Pleased to meet another one of Mindy's team," I said, taking Hailee's hand.

"Good to meet you!" Selina said cheerfully.

Safehouse F

After giving Bruce and Selina an hour to say hello to Erika, Hailee and Dave, and to get themselves acquainted with the Safehouse, I decided it was time to begin their training.

"Master Wayne, Miss Kyle! Welcome to Fusion Boot Camp and Hell Week!" I growled, throwing each of the startled teenagers a small pack. "Your clothing. I suggest you both go and get yourselves changed. You have fifteen minutes before hell drops on you both."

Both of them hesitated, a little confused.

"Or, we can just kick the shit outta you, right the fuck now!" Dave growled ominously.

"We'll, err, go get changed!" Cat said quickly, grabbing Bruce and dragging him in the direction of their rooms.

Both kids reappeared within ten minutes – a good sign.

Each wore a pure white Gi and they were bare foot. They were very apprehensive as they came down the steel staircase and onto the mat.

"You two want to become bad-ass vigilantes, huh?" Hailee began.

Bruce nodded and so did Selina.

"Well there's a lot of work to be done!" Hailee continued and I saw Selina frown at the jibe.

"The next two weeks are going to be hard," I warned. "For the first week, you will spend eight hours here at the Safehouse, each day, training. We will teach you to defend yourselves. We will teach you to attack. We will teach you to use firearms. We will teach you to use bladed weapons. You will leave here with enough for you to continue with your training back in Gotham."

"It is going to take you months, if not years to get to a suitable level. We have promised to help you. Hailee will be your main instructor. She knows a hell of a lot, so ask her questions and do not let her slim form fool you," Dave cautioned. "Watch!"

With that, Erika and Hailee faced off against each other.

Hailee started the sparring with a kick that span through the air and which was intercepted by Erika's arm and she in turn span herself sideways absorbing the energy of the kick. Erika kicked out and was flipped over and down by Hailee. Erika landed with a brief scream of pain, but jumped up immediately as Hailee moved towards her.

Erika rolled and as Hailee moved to attack, Erika took advantage and kicked Hailee's legs out from under her.

There was something about seeing girls fighting each other, even when you were a girl!

I watched as the two, very beautiful, girls span around the mat kicking the crap out of each other. I craved to be as good as they were, but I knew that would take years. I looked over at Bruce and he was a little shocked by what he was seeing. The kid was not as used to violence as I was and the next two weeks were going to be very hard on him.

Being a street-kid in Gotham had exposed me to a lot of ugly shit and I had nightmares about a lot of it. I had learnt the hard way – learn or die! Bruce would need to learn the same thing or he would not last a minute on the streets of Gotham.

Hailee was really, very good. I had only seen one other person move as fast and that was Mindy.

I had a distinct feeling that I was not going to be enjoying myself over the next couple of weeks.

Alfred had been gloating a little too much when he had said goodbye in Gotham. He obviously knew some of what Mindy had planned for Cat and I. He could be really, really, devious at times! Alfred was expected to be joining us mid-week.

The two girls looked awesome as they flew across the mat. They were a pair of the hottest girls that I had ever seen! Suddenly they stopped and turned to face us both.

"I kid you not, this week will be hard work and deadly serious," Dave warned. "If you want to walk away then do so, right now."

I glared at the two teenagers and neither moved a muscle.

"Brave fuckers!" I growled with a grin.

Bruce looked a little unsure and the kid was so far out of his comfort zone I was surprised he had not turned and fled; I would not have blamed him.

"Let's start you off easy, shall we?" I said slowly. "I think that before we beat you through the mat, we should teach you how to defend yourselves."

"It's only fair!" Erika smirked.

"We'll see you two later...," Dave said with a laugh.

"... If you're still alive!" Mindy grinned.

"Taekwondo has a handful of basic blocks..."

Lunchtime

"Well done!"

They had performed very well. Poor Bruce was sweating badly, but Selina was very fit and coped with the rapid movements.

"Time for something to eat!" Came a voice from above us. "Assuming you're hungry!"

Bruce and Selina looked up eagerly.

"Go, see Cathy and she'll feed you," I said.

The five of us settled down to lunch and chatted, giving the two kids time to recover and build up their energy for the afternoon.

"You're Chloe's Mom?" Selina asked.

"For my sins!"

"Chloe was very brave in Gotham and I enjoyed her company," Selina added.

"Thank you, Selina."

"You look after Curtis, too, don't you?" Bruce asked.

"Yes, I do. His parents were killed almost a year ago."

"What's it like – I mean, you have two kids in Fusion?" Selina asked.

"I have many sleepless nights, but I know that what they both do; it makes me proud. They've both been wounded and I hate any of them getting hurt; even Mindy – she's like a daughter to me."

"You patched up many bullet holes, I assume?" Bruce asked.

"Yes, I have."

I lay on the mat, staring at the roof of the Safehouse.

My back hurt, my legs hurt, my arms hurt; actually, the list of what did not hurt was way shorter and contained one word: nothing! Selina came over and helped me up; she was grimacing with pain, too.

"Get up, Bruce!" Hailee yelled and I rapidly got back to my feet.

After showing us how to block, we had moved on to some basic punches and kicks. We also learnt that if we stayed still too long, or stayed down too long, we would be attacked. We were only allowed to rest when we went up to the kitchen for a break. I had never been so exhausted in my entire life, but I resigned myself to the hard work, as I really wanted to succeed. I was also happy in the knowledge that I was being pounded by professionals. I knew Erika, but Hailee was new to me, although I knew of Petra by her reputation and the fact that Hailee had looked after Chicago alone, while Fusion was in Gotham.

I willed Bruce to get up, as I did not want him to be pounded by Erika again.

Erika could be very cruel, especially to me, but I knew there was a good reason for it and I really wanted to become a successful vigilante. As far as I could, I also tried to look after Bruce and I did my utmost to help him as much as I could.

I actually glared at Hailee for yelling at Bruce. I knew this was supposed to be a week of hell, but I was concerned that things might go too far.

I felt bad about yelling at them and I knew Hailee did too, but Mindy had said that we had to push Bruce and Selina to breaking point. We had to find out what they were really, capable of if they were to become big, bad vigilantes.

I kicked my right leg and Bruce blocked it. I followed through with a punch, which Bruce deflected. Hailee was doing the same with Selina. I smiled at Bruce, who lost concentration; I kicked his left leg from under him, and he went down again, for what had to be the eightieth time that afternoon. The kid had stamina, tons of it!

I noticed that Selina was getting mad every time that somebody picked on Bruce; that was good. We wanted the two of them to become a close-knit team. I was not picking on Bruce on purpose; well actually, I was, but only to find out how Selina would behave. I nodded at Hailee and I started to go easy on Bruce while Hailee turned nasty towards Selina.

..._...

Over the next ten minutes, Hailee planted a few very good kicks on Selina and the girl was grimacing with the pain. After another five minutes, I could see tears in Selina's eyes; Hailee was cutting it fine, but then Bruce snapped.

He flew across to Hailee and drove a punch into her left side. Hailee had seen him coming, but had pretended not too. Bruce then kicked Hailee, rather hard, into her left thigh and Hailee fell backwards onto the mat.

"Stop it! Leave her alone! Can't you see she's in pain?" Bruce demanded angrily.

Hailee grinned and nodded.

"Yes, Bruce, I did," She said.

Selina came forward.

"Bruce, they're testing us. They're pushing us to our limits and I think you passed," Selina said with a smile, and then she gave Bruce a kiss on the lips. "Thanks."

Bruce looked a little astounded, not to mention embarrassed!

"Well done, Bruce – you both passed. You are both actively looking after each other. I saw your expressions, Selina, as Erika pounded on Bruce and I yelled at him," Hailee said. "I'm sorry if I hurt you, but we're not teaching you to chaperone at kids' parties!"

"I think we can call it a night," I said. "Go get showered and changed, then we can debrief over dinner. Marty and Chloe will be showing up soon and they will be spending the night here with you guys."

I turned as the sound of motorcycle engines rumbling into life cut through the Safehouse. Kick-Ass and Hit Girl were just about to leave for a night out on the town!

That night

We left the Safehouse on our motorcycles.

"You think they'll survive?" Kick-Ass asked.

"Yeah – they're both tough kids."

"I suppose so, as long as Petra remembers that they are kids and that they can break!"

I laughed at that!

..._...

"Coffee?" I asked seeing a vigilante friendly diner close by us, an hour later.

"Why not."

As I often did, I entered the diner without fanfare and was handed a fresh coffee. The diner rarely had trouble, as I was a frequent, but irregular caller.

It had been a long day and I was not paying too much attention. There were about a dozen people in the diner – more than usual, but I just thought it was a busy night. I left the place with my coffee and when I was a few yards down the street, I took a sip and almost baulked. There was one or two tonnes of sugar in the cup and it was gross! I turned and saw a 'closed' sign appear on the door. It was nowhere near closing time; I smelt a rat.

"Kick-Ass! We have trouble at the diner – I'm going for a Dirty Harry!"

"Sounds cool!" Kick-Ass replied from further down the street and I saw him shaking his head.

As I re-entered the diner by the back way, I moved to the door that came out behind the counter. I saw four men; three armed with shotguns, the other was armed with a large pistol. It took a moment for that man, who seemed to be the leader, to see me. He turned to stare.

"What are you doing here, bitch?"

"Most nights for the past year, I've been coming in here and Loretta gives me a white coffee, no sugar – tonight there's a tonne of the shit!" I growled. "I came back to complain. Now you boys put those guns down."

"Say what?" The leader asked, incredulously. All four weapons were pointed directly at me.

"We're not gonna just let you walk outta here!" I commented calmly.

"Who's we?"

"That would be Kick-Ass and me!"

Two shotgun blasts exploded into the diner and I felt the pellets hit my armour. Before the other two men could fire, I span, kicking the pistol out of the leader's hand and then kicked him down to the ground. One man pulled open the door and fled, but a few seconds later, he came back into the diner, although this time it was via the window and I saw Kick-Ass lowering his fist. The other two men raised their hands. Kick-Ass came in through the door and pushed them to their knees.

The leader had scrambled up from the floor; he seized Loretta and grabbed another pistol from the waistband of his trousers. I stared at the man, raising the pistol that I had just pulled from a holster.

"Go ahead, make my night!" I growled.

The man hesitated as sirens could be heard approaching, he glanced at the ominous form of Kick-Ass and then at the gaping muzzle of the Glock 22. He then carefully lowered his pistol. I seized it from him and kicked him to the floor.

"You okay, Loretta?" I asked gently.

"Hell, yeah!" The woman replied with a smile.

Safehouse F

We returned to the Safehouse an hour later.

After parking the motorcycles, we headed up to the kitchen for a proper coffee. I could hear laughter and saw Marty and Chloe seated across from Bruce and Cat. I heard the end of what Marty was saying.

"... I actually fell off my chair when Shadow replied, 'Yeah! My left boob will be totally bruised though!'"

All four of them collapsed in laughter, even Chloe. I remembered that it had been Shadow's first patrol around what was then Safehouse A.

"Fuck me; that was a long time ago, almost nineteen months!" I commented as I sat down and Marty jumped up to get me a coffee. "Chloe was only thirteen back then..."

"It was the most exhilarating night of my life and thanks to these guys; I survived it with only a bruised boob!" Chloe said, with a nod at Dave and me.

"You had fun tonight?" Marty asked with a grin.

"You weren't monitoring us?" I replied innocently.

"It was an eye opener!" Selina commented. "You watch too many old movies!"

Chapter 188*: Weapons Training

Tuesday

Safehouse F

The second day dawned.

I grinned as I saw Bruce and Selina eating their breakfast. They looked tired, even after only one day.

"Sleep well?" I asked.

"Yes, thanks, Chloe."

"I'd like to say that it's only going to get easier; but then I'd be lying!" I grinned.

"Thanks, Chloe – I really mean that; thanks!" Selina said with a scowl.

Hailee breezed into the kitchen.

"You two are gonna need these, this morning."

Two large black objects were thrown down onto the table.

"What?" Bruce asked the grinning Hailee.

"Wear them under your Gi."

Bruce looked at Selina, who just grimaced.

Body armour!

That could not be good. What could they have planned for us today?

Selina looked at me and grimaced.

Once on the mat, Hailee explained all – well nearly all!

..._...

"Eventually, you will both be wearing combat suits. What was your first thought when we dressed you in Hit Girl's combat suit?" Hailee asked Selina.

"It was heavy!"

"Exactly – armour has weight, so does your weapons, ammunition, communications... The list goes on. You need to start getting used to fighting and moving while lugging your life with you. By 'life', I mean everything that you require to survive out there, in the real world," Hailee finished.

Hailee and Erika ensured that the armour was properly secured and then we got to work.

"Weapons!"

I stood behind a large workbench in the armoury.

"As a vigilante you may be called upon to use any weapon, at any time. You will have your own personal weapon, but you may need to use any weapon that your team is using. You may also need to make use of an enemy's weapons," I lectured. "A vigilante needs to be familiar with as many weapons as possible. Today is firearms."

I saw Bruce flinch slightly. I knew that Bruce hated guns, which was understandable considering that his parents had both been murdered with a pistol.

"Here we have an eclectic collection of weapons – ooh, 'eclectic', I like that word!"

Bruce, Selina and Erika laughed. I picked up two large books and passed them to Bruce and Selina. They looked confused.

"Easy morning for you. There are eighteen weapons on the bench. I want chapter and verse in two hours! There will be a punishment for every mistake – so take your time and get it right..."

..._...

Erika and I sat on the mat outside the armoury and listened in.

"I've seen that one before – it's an E11 blaster – Stormtroopers use it!" Bruce said first, after a couple of minutes.

"What!" Selina answered, scorn in her voice.

"Star Wars!"

"Get a fucking grip, Bruce! I've seen them used in Gotham; it's a Sterling sub-machine gun – Star Wars, I ask you!"

Erika was trying not to laugh and so was I, unsuccessfully though!

Two hours later

"You guys done?"

"Yeah, Hailee – we are," I answered, smiling at Bruce.

It had not been easy, but we had managed it.

"Leave your notes there and come out onto the mat," Hailee advised. I did not really notice it then, but Hailee ran her eyes over our upper bodies before smirking.

I detected trouble once Bruce and I had cleared the armoury and the door was slammed shut by Erika. Then Erika and Hailee suddenly dived away, rolling into cover. I span around as I heard a loud bang and I saw Bruce fly backwards onto the mat. I turned in time to see Mindy holding a pistol and aiming it at me. There was a flash, followed by a bang. I had no time to scream before I felt something strike my chest, very hard and I flew backwards onto the mat. I stood back up, facing away from Mindy, rather painfully and then I was shoved forwards as I heard another bang and something hit me in the back, just as hard. I saw Bruce get up, but following another bang, he fell back to the mat, too.

I just lay there letting the pain subside and trying to get my breath back. My ears were ringing from the gunshots. I rolled onto my back and saw a hand reaching down to me; it was Mindy. I grabbed the hand and allowed Mindy to haul me to my feet; she was very strong for her size. Once I was back to my feet, Mindy cleared the pistol, ejecting the magazine and the chambered round.

Bruce was being helped up by Erika and Hailee.

The kitchen

"Sorry about that, but you both needed to learn what it feels like to be shot," Mindy explained.

"It's happened to us all, at one time or another. You need to be able to continue the fight, ignoring the bullets that hit your combat suit. Every strike will hurt, but you have to continue, no matter what." Hailee explained.

"In a major fight there are bullets flying everywhere. Our combat suits protect us against all small to medium calibre weapons. Only Kick-Ass and Jackal carry the heavier armour that can stop high-powered assault rifles such as the AK-74 series. As Hailee explained to you, armour is heavy and we all wish we could carry the heavy stuff that can stop a heavy machine gun, but that is never gonna happen!" Mindy added.

"It stings!" Selina moaned.

"You could have warned us!" I complained.

"Where's the fun in that, Bruce?" Mindy laughed.

"Funny! Really funny!"

"I don't like guns..."

"I know, Bruce, but they are an important part of what you want to become. I rarely use them myself, preferring my blades, however sometimes you need to go in full force," Mindy explained.

"I'll try, I promise."

"Now watch as I strip this Glock 17 Gen 4. It is a very easy pistol to strip down." I began. "First you remove the magazine. The Glock 17 has no safety, so there is no need to set that. Pull back the slide and visually check that there is nothing in the chamber, release the slide and ease the spring by pulling the trigger with the pistol aimed in a safe direction. Weapon safety is paramount in our business. Shooting yourself is embarrassing!"

"You talking from experience, Mindy?" Selina asked.

Mindy blushed slightly.

"Yes and no, I'm not telling you anything!" Mindy growled, blushing a little more.

"Mindy..."

Mindy looked like she was about to explode, but turned to Bruce and smiled.

"I'll make you a deal. Get a score of forty on the range by Saturday morning and I'll tell you one of Hit Girl's most humiliating stories!" Mindy offered.

"You've got it!" Bruce said with a huge grin.

"I want to hear this, so I'll make damn sure you get that score!" Hailee added.

"Fuck!" Mindy growled before continuing her lecture. "Always assume that your weapon, any weapon is loaded and dangerous, until you can confirm otherwise, understand?"

"Yes, Mindy."

"Yes, Mindy."

"The slide is taken out by holding the pistol like so and pull back the slide about a quarter-inch. Pull down the slide lock with your thumb and finger, like so. Release the slide forward, carefully. Remove the slide and turn it upside down. Remove the recoil spring assembly out and then remove the barrel. The pistol is now 'field stripped'.

"For now we are not going to strip the pistol any further, but in this state you can clean and inspect the weapon. The two main sections, ignoring the spring and barrel, are called the upper and the receiver. We will show you how to strip each section, but not now as it is complex and it is easy to miss components during the reassembly.

"Chloe managed to reassemble a Glock forgetting to replace the locking block pin in the right order which meant that her pistol locked back each time she fired it! She was more than a little embarrassed by that incident, which could have been disastrous if she had taken that pistol out and into action."

I was very nervous as I stood on the range and stared down at my target, twenty feet away.

I held the Glock 19 in both hands. It was smaller than the Glock 17 which we had been handling earlier, but fitted my hands better. I had just inserted a magazine that contained five nine-millimetre round and I was very much aware that I was holding a lethal weapon that could kill somebody if I was not careful.

Beside me, I could see Selina, in the same stance as myself with a Glock 19 in her hands. She looked very beautiful from where I was looking. I focussed back on my target. Hailee was beside me, ready to help as necessary. Erika was with Selina. Mindy had gone, as it was almost time to collect the twins from school. I was looking forward to meeting the twins.

"Ready!" Hailee called out so that we could hear her with our ear defenders on.

I nodded and so did Selina.

"Five rounds – begin!"

I sighted on my target and took three breaths, holding the last, as I had been taught. I gently squeezed the trigger and felt the pistol jerk in my hands, but I held it tightly and absorbed the recoil. I sighted back on the target and squeezed the trigger again, and again, and again, and again.

The slide locked back on the empty magazine. Beside me, Selina's pistol was the same and she was grinning.

To my surprise, so was I!

My smile vanished as the target came quickly towards me on the motorized track.

There were only three holes on the target and only one within the larger black circle. I peered over at Bruce's target and my mouth dropped open. The brat had three within the larger circle, with one within the next circle. There were five holes on his entire target. I scowled at the boy.

"Well done Bruce!" I said.

"Thanks, Selina."

"Your forty is in the bag, kid!" Hailee grinned.

That afternoon we were joined by Joshua.

I liked Joshua, he was cute, although I did not dare tell anybody else that or Chloe would rip me apart! He was tall, but thin and I could see the muscles on his arms.

"I have a talent that I learned from my father; he was a British Royal Marines Commando and a member of the Special Boat Service. He taught me many skills before he was murdered by Ralph D'Amico."

Josh swiftly pulled something out of his belt and threw it across the Safehouse. There was a thud and a large knife appeared in a wooden target that was cut to mimic the profile of a grown man. Josh moved again and a second knife joined the first, barely an inch apart.

"Shit!" I breathed, exchanging astonished looks with Bruce.

Josh returned with the two knives that had required a good sharp pull to remove them from the wooden target.

"The Fairbairn-Sykes Commando Knife is the Spitfire of the knife world. It is an all-time combat classic. The knife has taken many lives since its inception during World War II. The knife provides excellent grip in both the dry and the wet. The scabbard is designed for silent drawing of the blade. As you can see, it can also be thrown with devastating effect. I have used them while fighting with Fusion, more than once."

I did not dare say a word, I was so enthralled by what Josh was saying and I loved his accent!

"I am the only person in Fusion who uses this knife. Others use smaller, dedicated, throwing knives. Although Shadow has a small blade that she hides on her person, in a different place each time. Mindy never knew she carried it, until Chloe needed to use it to escape when she was seized last year. It is for stabbing or cutting, not throwing. My knives are for stabbing and cutting throats, or throwing. Hit Girl's blades and those of Splinter, are purely for throwing and they are both very good with them! Chloe and Mindy also habitually use the Balisong or butterfly knife and both have killed with them. Curtis is also proficient with the Balisong. I am going to teach you how to throw the smaller blades first and then we will see how you go..."

I had to admit that I liked blades, I thought that they were – sexy – they killed with a cleanness that firearms could not.

"There are three different kinds of knives that are intended for throwing: blade-heavy, handle-heavy, and balanced knives. Balanced knives are easiest for beginners and they will make switching to the other kinds easier. Remember that you want the weight to be thrown first. If you are throwing a blade-heavy knife, you will want your blade to be thrown first. Hold the knife by the handle to throw it and vice versa; if you are throwing a handle-heavy knife, you will throw it by the blade.

"Okay. Grip the knife with your dominant hand. There are three, gripping methods that you can choose from; a firm but delicate hold is necessary for all gripping styles. Too much grip will hamper your release, whereas too little might cause the knife to fly out of your hand prematurely.

"Hammer Grip: Grip the handle of the knife as you would the handle of a hammer; place the handle across your open palm near your knuckles, wrap your four fingers underneath and around the handle, and place your thumb over the top. This grip is especially useful for throwing a double-edged blade.

"Pinch Grip: For a Single-Edged Blade, hold your palm out in front of you and move your thumb to create a crease between the fleshy pad of your thumb and the rest of your palm. With the handle pointing away from you, place the blunt edge of the knife blade into this crease so that the tip lines up with the bottom of your thumb crease. Place your thumb along one side of the blade and all your fingers except the little finger along the other side, thereby pinching the blade without pressing against the point or the sharpened edge. For a Double-Edged Blade, with the handle pointing away from you, grasp the tip of the knife so that the tip of your thumb is one side of the blade and the tips of all your fingers except the little finger are on the other side, thereby pinching it without pressing against the point or either sharpened edge. This grip does not allow for a powerful throw."

Josh was really, very good at instructing and he demonstrated well.

"Angle the knife. The angle dictates how fast the knife goes through the air and how far. For close range, bend your wrist back toward your forearm. This will allow the knife to turn over in the air more quickly as there is only a short distance to your target. For medium range, only slightly bend your wrist back. This will increase the speed of the knife turning in the air. Finally, long range; keep your wrist unbent. This will keep the knife from turning too much in the air.

"Place your weight on your dominant leg, with your non-dominant leg in front of you, keeping the weight in the back leg. Raise your dominant arm as I previously mentioned. Now, most importantly, keep the knife a distance from your face – unless you want your face cut!"

Bruce laughed and so did I.

"Swing the knife forward and shift your weight to the front leg to create momentum. When the arm is straight out in front of you, release the knife. Keep the movement fluid – it is about finesse, not strength."

We spent the next hour practicing with plastic knives, before Josh was happy that we would not kill ourselves or somebody else! I was annoyed to find that Bruce's coordination skills were very good and as good as my own.

Finally, we were both allowed to throw the real blades. I had thrown blades before, in Gotham, but they never really worked for me. Now I had been taught the correct technique, I was much better and having Joshua helping me to aim had me tingling all over!

Josh threw one of his knives into the target.

"See how close you can get to my knife!" He challenged.

My first blade got nowhere near the target, the next did not penetrate, but the third hit – eight inches from Josh's blade. Bruce was next.

The first blade hit the target, but handle first and fell to the floor.

That was depressing, then a soft hand gripped my own and I heard a calm voice in my ear.

"Take your time, feel the blade and think yourself into it and where you want it to penetrate."

I recognised Chloe's voice – I had no idea she was in the Safehouse. I followed her instructions and took a deep breath before lining up my blade. I swung, following through and heard the thud of the knife on wood.

Chloe whooped with joy. I looked at the target and saw my blade just two inches from Joshua's blade.

"Do it again..." Chloe whispered.

I did and my third knife dug into the target between my previous blade and Joshua's knife. I was overjoyed, but my smile faltered when I saw Selina's expression. However, she smiled and congratulated me.

"Thanks, Chloe," I said with a smile.

"I knew you could do it..."

Chloe produced a Balisong from her pocket, flicked it open and threw it, all in one fluid motion. The blade struck within half an inch of the embedded commando knife.

"Yeah, yeah!" A voice growled from behind us and two more Balisongs flew through the air into the target, knocking Joshua's knife out onto the floor.

"Bitch!" Josh growled at the smirking Mindy.

Chapter 189*: Beware The Wildcat

Wednesday

I had never felt so tired!

Selina was tired too and she was way fitter than I was. I had never sweated so much, either. Mind you, the sight of a hot and sweaty Selina was, err, nice.

I had no idea what the day was going to offer. Abby and Erika had stayed with us the previous night. We had been kept busy learning and practicing on the range and with the knives. We had not managed to get to bed until past eleven.

As we waited on the mat after breakfast, with Dave, our instructor arrived.

"Morning cunts! Ready for an ass-kicking?"

"Bring it on, kitty!" Selina teased when she saw who it was.

Megan laughed.

"I should be in school, but I was allowed to come here to teach you some shit, this morning. A word of warning; the afternoon session will be hell compared to this morning, but I'm gonna go easy on yer both."

The evil smirk seemed to say otherwise, I thought!

"Be warned – just 'cause I'm short does not mean I can't target somebody more than twice my size and weight..." Megan announced jumping up.

She then ran towards Dave and leapt into the air at the last minute, wrapping her leg around Dave's neck and then pulling him off balance and Dave crashed down to the mat. Megan followed through with a punch to his chest.

"If I had been wearing my claws, then Dave would be dead, his heart cut into three pieces..." Megan advised as she regained her feet.

"I know; I've seen you in action, Megan – I know what you can do..." Bruce said in a low voice.

"Thank you, Bruce. I don't have muscles and I don't have the ability to carry heavy armour like Kick-Ass. The same issues applied to Hit Girl when she was my age. We both use speed and agility to make up for our lack of striking power. We favour weapons that can kill instantly; we don't have the muscles to fight hand to hand against big cunts like Dave – sorry, Dave!" Megan lectured.

Dave smirked and shook his head.

"I thought you were going to be in your combat suit today?" Dave asked innocently and I saw Megan blush furiously.

I stepped forwards and opened my mouth to speak.

"Hailee, just one fucking word and I will gut you..."

"Wildcat no longer fits into her combat suit; her hips are too big and so are her tits!" I laughed, ignoring Megan completely.

Bruce and Selina grinned, but did not laugh as Megan glared at them without a hint of humour on her face.

"Stop being a bitch, Hailee; Megan's a big softy at heart!" Curtis laughed.

"Curtis is also short, just like me and although he has heavier armour than me, he still needs to make use of a different set of skills to the bigger kids."

"Megan has been digging into some of Hit Girl's early toys and she has made use of the rope dart, among other things. Wildcat has claws and she uses them to devastating effect. Mist uses her Sais, which are lethal and super for both defensive and offensive work. I favour the Ninja-To, as does Jackal," Curtis lectured.

"Yesterday, you delved into the small blades – now we look at the more lethal instruments," Megan added.

"Just like Megan; beauty and lethality come in all shapes and sizes," Curtis said with a grin and Megan blushed deeply, but smiled nonetheless. "We have the Tanto, which means 'short blade'. Hit Girl carries one."

Curtis pointed to the purple handled sword where it sat on its stand in the armoury.

"Then we have the Katana, of which Hit Girl carries a pair." The twin blades were pointed out to us. "That blade is long and can be difficult to learn to control. It is however, lethal..."

"Between that sword and the Tanto are many other sizes. Kick-Ass uses a pair of Ko-Wakizashi blades. The Wakizashi is a 'companion sword' and is usually carried as a pair with a Katana. The 'Ko' variety is shorter, but just as lethal. Hit Girl also has a pair of Wakizashi as the Katana can be too unwieldy in confined spaces."

"Just because you have a large or powerful weapon, does not mean that it is suitable for all occasions. You will have difficulty using a Katana inside a building, whereas the Wakizashi would be perfect. A knife is always good for close quarters work. Now, let's see how you two fair, using different attack strategies!" Megan said

"Now," Curtis explained. "We can't use real swords, so we will use these training swords, called Bokken. We want the two of you to practice some movements, slowly to get the methodology correct, preferably without killing each other!"

Just as we picked up our Bokken, Megan went over to Curtis and...

For a moment, I was worried as Megan advanced on me, but she smiled – and it was a lovely smile.

Then she grabbed me and placed her lips onto mine and we kissed. Was it good? Actually, it was a bit wet, but it was the idea that felt the best rather than the actual act! Megan was bright red as she moved back from me and she looked shy; Megan was never shy!

"Thanks!" She said simply before turning towards Selina who was grinning.

I looked at Hailee and Erika who both shrugged, but grinned at me.

"Play to your strengths. Bruce, you have strength, even if you don't realise it. Selina, you are very flexible and have the ability to twist your body and use acrobatics. In this game, anything goes when it comes to survival of you and the people that you are protecting," Megan lectured. "Fancy movements can also scare potential adversaries. You only need to distract them long enough to be able to get close and then you can out them down, hard! You need to think on your feet, but always think about what you are doing. I dived into a situation without thinking and almost died; I have the wounds to remind of that and I see them every time I am undressed. I see them when I put on my combat suit and it helps me focus on the task ahead. Finally, before we have some fun, know your limits. I was injured during our time in Gotham and I hated being sidelined, but I would have been a danger to the rest of the team if I had insisted on going out with them."

Megan looked a little uncomfortable.

"I'll tell you a secret. When we attacked Maroni's place, I was hurt during the initial assault. Hit Girl was forced to use Shadow to protect me, which meant one less person available to do their job. Later, I surprised myself when Jackal ordered Shadow to take me away from the fight and I actually complied. Inside I felt wretched letting down my friends, but I knew that I could not go on. I know that Josh was surprised too; he had expected to have to fight to get me to go with Shadow. Maybe I'm growing up, but I'm surprising myself by the decisions I am now making that I would not usually make."

We started slow.

Selina and I needed to learn how to cut, how to strike and how to block. We were both slow to pick this up, but we learnt fast, especially as Megan would exploit every weakness. On the plus side, if there were one, Megan would explain what the weakness was and how to prevent it.

These guys were going all out to help Selina and I. They all wanted to help, even young Megan, who I also saw as a little bitch!

After about twenty minutes, Megan flattened me for the fourth time and then I heard a familiar voice.

"Come on, Master Bruce, she's a pint sized eleven-year-old!" Alfred shouted.

"Who are you calling pint-sized, old man?" Megan grinned.

Alfred strolled across the mat and past Megan, but at the last second he moved fast and Megan was suddenly face down on the mat.

"Manners, young Wildcat!" Alfred said coolly, before helping a shocked Megan back to her feet.

"Thank you, Alfred, my apologies!" Megan grinned.

"How you doing, Bruce?" Alfred asked. "Just got in a few minutes ago. Those bruises don't look good; maybe you need some more training!"

I smirked.

"He is doing very well, Alfred. Bruce is full of surprises, but then so is Selina," I advised Alfred.

"Thank you, err, Hailee isn't it?"

"Yes, I am Hailee, otherwise known as Petra!"

"I am very pleased to meet you, Miss," Alfred said, shaking my hand.

"We're just about to break for lunch," I said. "You joining us?"

Alfred glanced over at the pleading look on Bruce's face and he grinned.

"Why not!"

That afternoon

Bruce had talked almost non-stop through lunch, but had still managed to eat.

He ran Alfred through just about everything that had happened since he and Selina had arrived in Chicago. I could tell that Alfred had missed Bruce and the same was valid the other way too.

"Hope you're teaching the boy some respect, too!" Alfred teased.

"Oh, yes!" Megan laughed. "Ah, here's Tommy – he's taking you two this afternoon..."

"Время, чтобы чувствовать себя некоторую боль, детишек!" Tommy growled. He was wearing a pair of black sweat pants, a black t-shirt and a pair of light black boots.

"Huh!" I asked; Russian was on my list to learn, but I had not understood a word of what Tommy had just said.

"I'll translate," Alfred said with an evil smirk. "Time to feel some pain, kiddies!"

"Да!"

"You speak very good Russian!" Alfred commented approvingly.

"I had two years to learn – I had no choice... No speak Russian; no eat!" Tommy replied darkly.

"I have a history behind me that I wish I had never encountered, but shit happened and I suppose it could have been worse."

We all sat on the mat; even Alfred. Tommy Morgan was eleven and a half years old and having seen him fight, I knew that there was something sinister about him, but Mindy and Dave would never tell me what.

"A little over a year ago, Fusion rescued me from the Russians. I had been with them for a little over two years after being kidnapped off the streets of New York. Bad things happened to me; the upshot of which I learnt to defend myself. Other boys taught me to fight and eventually the Russians taught me to fight for their own entertainment," the boy explained. "I learnt to fight in any way that would get the job done... My style of fighting is different, as those who have fought against me know; I do not use anything from a book. I fight to win; otherwise, what's the point of fighting. Yes, I fight dirty, but it gets the job done."

There was complete silence and attention.

"Just a few hard learnt hints to begin with. If you can avoid a fight, avoid it! Use a pistol and kill the fuckers before they get close, or better yet kill them in their sleep..."

I saw looks of shock appear on faces around me. Even I was a little concerned. Tommy was not kidding about fighting dirty.

"You have limits, all of you – know them! You have to know when it is time to call it quits and work your way out of the fight. Alternatively, you die, simple as that."

I saw Alfred looking very grim.

"Every fight you get involved with; fight like your life depends on it! Even if it does not, somebody else's life might depend on how well you fight. Some of you can continue to fight on the ground, but it is always easier to fight on your feet. Conversely, it is good to put your enemy on the ground as soon as possible. Keep close to your enemy; his punches will be weaker, as he cannot punch properly." Tommy grinned. "Now if you're a little squeamish, you may not want to hear what comes next..."

I thought that things could not get worse, but I was wrong!

"Ears come off, very easily in fact – bite them or use your hands to rip the fuckers off! Not surprisingly, people don't like it when you rip off an ear and sometimes the fight ends right there. Put out their eyes, if they cannot see, they cannot fight. The throat is a good target, too – hurts like fuck and can kill if hit hard enough. Use your elbows and knees; they are strong and Mindy gives us all armoured joints on our combat suits, not just for protection, but also as weapons," Tommy grinned again. "Freaked out yet?"

The kid was fucking warped!

"Break the joints if you can; elbow is painful! Break some bones in the foot or hand; rip their arm back behind them and snap the bones. The collarbone – doesn't take much to snap them. As for men and boys, kick them where it fucking hurts – that applies to anybody, not just the females. Boys, kick the females in the same place; it hurts them too! Go for the ribs, or the nose, the spine is good for a permanent stop.

"Don't be afraid to fight dirty. Use everything around you. Throw dirt in their face, spit liquid in their eyes. Look around – aerosols, rocks, bottles, even a fucking stapler! Take every advantage and keep pounding and pounding till they stay the fuck down."

Alfred was the first to speak up in the total silence after Tommy had stopped talking.

"I hate to say it, but the kid knows some shit! He may be young, but he has experienced fighting that would scare most adults; listen to him, what he says may save your life."

Tommy smiled and nodded at Alfred, who still looked a bit grim at Tommy's revelations. The rest of the afternoon was subdued and was spent with Tommy showing us some vicious movements for incapacitating an opponent.

I thought I had demons in my life, but Tommy's were much, much worse!

Chapter 190*: Labour

Thursday

It was a perfect Thursday morning and the fifteenth day of October.

Only Kim was not enjoying herself, not by a long shot – she was in labour! It had begun at five that morning. Cathy had rushed over to help, with Chloe as her assistant. Kim was desperate to be able to stop lugging around her child; the novelty had worn off after nine months of strange feelings and movements.

We all knew it was happening – Chloe had sent texts to everybody!

Cathy had confirmed that it was the real deal and that the baby would be expected to appear in the next few hours. Once at the hospital, Chloe had sent the details around by text message, not to mention regular updates, such as 'Cervix at 6cm'.

I really did not need the graphic detail, but Chloe seemed to be enjoying herself, even if Kim was not.

That morning

Safehouse D

"Either of you two know how to drive?"

"I do!" Selina answered. "Just not stick."

Bruce shook his head.

"Well, we can have some fun then," I grinned.

We were going to be using the same two Ford Focus POS cars that Chloe and Josh had learnt to drive in. They were still in good condition, so would be perfect for the days instruction.

"Okay, Cat – let's see what you can do..." I said encouragingly pointing at the silver Focus.

Selina ran forward and jumped in, seemingly excited at the prospect. As she had said, she could drive an automatic and took the car in a large figure eight around the pillars before returning to the start.

"Well done!" I said approvingly and Cat blushed. "Bruce?"

I sent Cat with Hailee over to see Alfred who was waiting in the black Focus to show Cat how to drive 'stick'. I climbed into the silver Focus on the passenger side, while Bruce got behind the wheel.

"Okay, Bruce – make sure the car is in 'Park' – that's with the lever fully forward and lined up with the 'P'. Foot on the brake – that's the big pedal on the left; the other one is the accelerator or gas. Turn the key..."

The engine rumbled to life and Bruce smiled, letting the key go.

"Keep your foot on the brake and press the button on the left of the gear lever with your thumb. Okay, pull it back three steps to the 'D', which means 'Drive'. 'R' is 'Reverse' and 'N' is Neutral."

Bruce did as instructed and the car dropped into gear.

"Ease off the brake very slowly – a bit faster than that – gently..."

We started to move forwards just as I heard some gears grinding on the other Focus and grimaced at the sound! The car moved forwards on its own accord, even without a foot on the accelerator. Bruce steered the car at barely five miles per hour, nudging the brakes as he manoeuvred around the pillars.

"Not bad, kid!"

I looked over at the other car and saw Cat grinning and Alfred covering his eyes with his hands.

..._...

At lunch, Cat and Bruce were full of things to talk about. They had both had great fun with the cars – Alfred on the other hand, had not!

"Women drivers!" He moaned.

I laughed.

"Women are good drivers..."

"How many vehicles have you wrecked, young lady, in just a few months? One Panigale Superbike, one Land Rover Discovery, or LR4 as you call them over here, one BMW 7-Series saloon... Should I go on?"

"Point taken!" I replied.

That afternoon

Safehouse D

"Okay, we've shown you how to fight, now you need to be able to escape," Mindy lectured. "You may have the Cops after you, which brings me to another point that I will make now..."

"Both of you look at me so I can see you taking this in. Being a vigilante has rules, a fucking ton of them! Number 1: No innocents get hurt, period. Collateral damage is difficult to avoid, but a vigilante gains respect by protecting the innocent and fighting the criminals. Number 2: No uniforms get hurt. They will chase you, but you cannot use violence against them to escape. The odd bruise is not a problem, but no shooting. Sometimes, though, the Cops are bad; Gotham is a good example of that. Mind you, we have had our own fair share of bent Cops in Chicago and in New York..."

"Remember that you have to act like a Hero, not like a Criminal or you will not get support from the City. Support is critical if you do not want to be hiding every damn second of the night. Darkness is our friend, but sometimes it is a lot easier to act in daylight, but the chances of getting caught are much higher. Vigilantes don't get a free pass..."

"You two had better remember all that, or we'll come knocking on your door!" Dave added seriously. "Or more likely smashing through your bedroom window..."

"We understand," I acknowledged after exchanging a scared look with Bruce.

..._...

"We have constructed here, a possible escape route," Mindy continued pointing at some wood-clad scaffolding that formed two separate platforms, one lower than the other. "Dave – care to explain?"

Dave grinned.

"This is a replica of an escape route used by Hit Girl, the first night that I met her. She had just wiped out some druggies in that building there," Dave said pointing at the taller structure. "I remember the words like yesterday, as I was green as they come..."

"Funny cunt!" Mindy laughed from atop the higher platform.

"As I went to use the front door, Hit Girl said, 'Hey, green asshole, you can't use the front door now'..."

There was a ripple of laughter from those present at my impression of the younger Hit Girl.

"I followed Hit Girl out the window and up the fire escape onto the roof. I asked her, 'Who are you?'"

"Me? I'm Hit Girl – and that is Big Daddy!" Mindy added wistfully. "I said 'Come on!' and ran towards the edge of the roof, like so..."

Mindy ran and jumped off the first platform, leaping over the gap and landing in a roll on the other platform.

"Come on!" Mindy yelled at me, just like all those years ago, and I ran after her, easily completing the leap that I had failed all those years before, rolling and coming up into a crouch beside her.

"Better!" Mindy said with a grin and a kiss.

"Now, while they make out up there, it's your turn!" Hailee said as we both fell to the platform together.

The Hospital

The pain was excruciating, at least I thought so the way Kim was sucking on the gas!

I could feel some the pain too, as Kim squeezed my left hand, but I did not want to say anything; I just grimaced with the pain!

"Marty, if you ever bring your cock anywhere near me again; I'm going to cut it off!" Kim growled as she fought through the next contraction. "Fucking asshole – this water melon is not gonna fit..."

The midwife laughed at my expression.

Over the next couple of hours or so, the contractions sped up and Kim was getting very high on the gas mixture. Her language was not improving though; quite a bit of it was aimed at me!

"Get this goddamn thing out of me..."

"It's on its way, Kim..."

"Not fucking fast enough... Bastard!"

Kim was crying now. I knew she was tired, very tired; she had been at it for hours. She was sweating all over and I was doing my best to keep her face and forehead clear.

"I..." I tried.

"I hate you right now!"

Safehouse D

Selina seemed better at the jumping than Bruce.

Not surprisingly, Bruce froze just as Kick-Ass had on that fateful night...

"I am not jumping down there; it's miles!" Bruce exclaimed.

"You've done it before..." Selina encouraged him.

"He has?" I asked incredulously.

"He jumped over a gap between two buildings, back in Gotham – shocked the hell out of me, I can tell you!" Selina explained as Bruce smiled, remembering.

"Just jump and land as we taught you on the mat; roll with the landing..." Hailee said calmly.

"Okay..." Bruce said, sounding anything but okay, as he turned for the very back of the platform.

Bruce sprinted towards the gap; he placed his left foot on the parapet and leapt into space.

The Hospital

Just ten minutes later, everything changed...

"Oh, fucking hell!" Kim yelled and suddenly she started to shake from a violent contraction that was the largest yet and she pushed for all she was worth.

"Breathe..."

"What the fuck do you think I'm fucking doing, bastard!"

Kim was struggling to breathe as she grabbed me by my t-shirt and held me tight – for a minute, I could not breathe either. There was a sudden rush of liquid from between Kim's legs. The liquid spilled onto the floor; it was like Niagara Falls! Then suddenly there was something there on the bed just behind Kim's legs.

"Fuck me!" I exclaimed as I looked down at my newborn child for the first time.

It was impossible to describe the feeling of seeing a new human being emerge and knowing that it was your own and that you had had a part in creating it...

The midwife rushed over and seized the baby, while a nurse clamped off the cord. Kim was shaking, as she lay herself back on the bed, breathing heavily like there was no tomorrow. Our new baby was placed gently onto her chest; the baby was covered in red goo and other yucky stuff, but it looked like the most beautiful thing I had ever seen – except for the mother of course!

Kim gazed down at our first child, oblivious to the state it was in and gently kissed the baby on the top of the head. Her smile was enormous and despite the fact that she looked knackered, she was radiant and I felt my love growing as I watched them both. The nurse passed me a pair of surgical scissors and I cut the cord. Kim shook once more as the placenta was expelled from within her. She smiled at me and I reached out to touch my child for the very first time. The baby was warm and the skin was very soft.

"Thank you, Marty..." Kim said weakly, before bursting into tears of happiness.

"No, Kim, thank you; the baby is just perfect... Just like you..."

"I love you Marty..."

"I love you so very much and always will..."

Safehouse D

Bruce landed on the other platform, rolling with the landing.

It was not perfect, not by any stretch of the imagination, but it had worked. We all clapped as he stood up shakily, smiling from ear to ear.

Then my cell rang; it was Chloe.

"IT'S A BOY!" She yelled down the phone, almost deafening me.

Chapter 191*: Bundle of Joy

Thursday evening

The Hospital

It was amazing how small the kid was.

His name was Matthew Eisenberg and he weighed eight pounds exactly. He was perfectly healthy and had everything in the right places. Marty could not stop beaming and Kim looked radiant.

"Congratulations pal!" I said as I looked down at the tiny new person.

Matthew was fast asleep in a crib; he looked very happy. Kim, on the other hand, was looking rather tired. She had been able to take a brief shower, but she still looked like hell!

"Dave, Mindy. We want you to be Godparents for Matthew... Also Chloe and Josh, but we haven't asked them yet, so don't say anything to them," Kim said.

"We'd be honoured," I replied receiving an excited nod from Mindy.

"He's lovely, Kim," Mindy said.

"Marty or Matthew?" I quipped.

"Funny!" Mindy laughed.

Mindy and I had agreed on something for Marty and Kim and that moment seemed as good as any; I looked over at Mindy and she nodded.

"We have a gift for you both; call it a long term loan if you want. You have a family now; that shitty apartment is no place to bring up a kid," I said.

"The neighbourhood sucks, too!" Mindy commented as Marty and Kim looked at us a little confused.

"We have no need for West Ridge at the moment, so we want you three to move into it...," I continued.

"You what?" Marty asked incredulously.

"It's just going to sit there empty, or Josh and Chloe are going to use it to fuck in," Mindy stated. "Not to mention the, err, special equipment...!"

"Yeah," I added deadpan. "No other house in Chicago has a self-destruct device and is protected by Claymore mines!"

Marty laughed and Mindy blushed.

"Thank you...," Kim was crying now and Mindy went over to hug her.

"Not bad, considering Mindy tried to kill her last year!" Marty laughed.

"Ignore them, Mindy; they're fucking assholes!" Kim growled with a nasty scowl.

Friday morning

Safehouse F

"You two scared yet?" Chloe growled. "Because if you aren't, then you will be today..."

"Yeah!" Mindy growled.

"On Saturday night, you will be going out into the City...," Dave added.

I looked over at Cat, who grinned back; it sounded fun.

"Oh, almost forgot," grinned Chloe with a glint in her eye. "You'll be on your own!"

We spent the day going over and over everything that we had learnt up to that point.

Chloe, Dave and Mindy impressed on us the importance of remembering everything we had been taught. We also had time to try on our temporary combat suits. They were nothing special, at least that was what Mindy had said, but to us they were awesome!

Both combat suits were black SWAT suits, with black boots; although they were made from a composite material, which we had been told, was bullet and stab proof. I had no intention, of putting that to the test! Fitted onto the suits were additional sections of armour for added protection. For weapons, we would have a pistol, knives and a Jō-staff each. We had both been learning to use the Jō-staff since Monday; I could not believe how much we had learnt in just over four days! To protect our identity, we both wore a plain black, padded mask that covered our faces completely.

I was very scared at the thought of going out on our own. Why, I had no idea; I had been living on the streets for years! However, Chicago was new territory to me and so were the bastards in it.

We practiced fighting in the suits and carrying our weapons and communications equipment. It felt different wearing a mask, not to mention carrying heavy equipment. The two of us practised working as a team, as we would be depending on each other for safety.

I knew that Mindy would not put us into danger, but I also knew that her definition of danger was very different to our own!

That evening

Glenview

Bruce and Selina had been allowed out of the Safehouse for the evening as we had a guest.

Everybody had dressed semi-smartly for the evening. Marcus was there, as were Vicky and Hailee. The twins were being entertained by Megan for the evening, upstairs. The seven of us, Dave, me, Marcus, Vicky, Hailee, Bruce and Selina were being joined by the Chicago Police Department Superintendent himself, Trevor Howards.

As last time, I was sworn to behave. Although we were on my turf! I had briefed Vicky, Hailee, Bruce and Selina on what they could and could not say in front of the Cop. There could be no lapses in concentration, not one!

Alfred opened the door.

"Good evening, sir; nice getup!" Alfred said as he waved the Superintendent in the door and through to the living room.

"Evening, sir!" Marcus said, holding out his hand.

"Evening, Lieutenant!"

"This is Sergeant Vicky Richards, my deputy, and her daughter, Hailee."

"Pleased to meet you, Sergeant and you Hailee."

"You remember Mindy and you haven't met her fiancée, Dave Lizewski."

"Mindy. Good to meet you Dave."

"This is Bruce Wayne and his friend, Selina. They are from..."

"... Gotham!" The Superintendent interrupted with a surprised expression.

We all retreated to the living room and sat down to chat while Alfred finished off preparing the meal; he was an amazing cook from what I could see – and smell!

"I understand your Martial Arts Studio is doing well," The Superintendent said.

"Very well. We've been turning some kids away; we're looking for some larger premises," I replied.

"Very good! I understand that young Hailee teaches there, too."

The man was very well briefed!

"She does; she is very good and has been doing Martial Arts since she was about six or seven."

"Very good!"

Hailee was unhappy being this close to the main enemy, but she was controlling her emotions, as were Vicky and Marcus.

"Dinner is served!" Alfred announced and we moved through to the dining room. I sat at one end, with Dave at the opposite end, by the windows. Superintendent Howards sat in between Marcus and Bruce, facing Vicky, Hailee and Selina, who was beside me. Marcus was on my left.

Alfred served the first course, which was soup.

"So, Master Wayne, how are you enjoying your visit to Chicago? Is it your first?" Superintendent Howards asked.

"Yes, it is my first visit to Chicago and I have enjoyed what I have seen of the City," Bruce replied with a smile.

Selina and Bruce had not seen very much at all having been cooped up in the Safehouse for the entire week!

"What brings you all this way?" The Superintendent persisted.

"To learn how to put down corrupt Cops, like you!" I thought and from Selina's expression, she was thinking the same thing.

"Wayne Enterprises has facilities here, in Chicago and I thought it time to visit them," Bruce replied smoothly.

"I heard that Gotham had a visit from our Number One Criminal, Hit Girl and her team."

"They were in the city, yes and they helped to clean up the corrupt GCPD!" Bruce said forcefully. "My good friend Jim Gordon of the GCPD was very glad of their assistance."

Thankfully, we had a short break in the conversation as the main course was served by Alfred.

"I cannot stand corrupt Cops!" Mindy said as we started eating again.

"Of course not!" The Superintendent replied. "Nobody of your calibre would..."

I sensed a potentially nasty atmosphere building. Marcus was doing his best to control his temper, as were both Vicky and Hailee. The Superintendent seemed oblivious to them and continued talking.

"... However justice must be allowed to function – corrupt Cops deserve a trial..."

"Maybe... But quite often they are in the employ of powerful people, such as the Mayor..." Hailee stated with a slightly forced smile.

The Superintendent did not miss a beat.

"That is the worst case, when powerful people are corrupt..."

The Superintendent continued in the same vein for a while. I could tell that some present at the table were getting very annoyed, knowing what they did about him. He was a typical political asshole who could talk pure bullshit!

I was very glad when dessert was out of the way and the bastard had finished his coffee.

"I think it is time for me to take my leave. Thank you very much as always, Miss Macready."

I did my utmost not to slam the door behind him. I turned around and my fists clenched – I needed to hit something and soon, before I exploded.

"Try this ma'am!" Alfred advised – passing over a large punch pad to Dave who smirked and braced the pad in front of him.

I lashed out, not with my fists, but with my foot, squarely into the pad and sending Dave backwards a short distance.

"Happier?" Marcus asked.

I nodded.

"Thank you Alfred," I laughed. "Well timed as always!"

"I feel like I've just been molested!" Hailee growled.

"That man was – I had no idea he was so horrible," Vicky said. "I knew he was crooked – but damn!"

"Chicago has some dark days ahead of it..." Marcus warned.

"I hate to say it, but with him and the Mayor in charge, I think Gotham could be gaining a sister city," Alfred stated simply.

"Now that is a singularly horrifying thought!" Bruce said.

Now that the bastard had gone, it was time to check up on the three monsters, upstairs.

I could hear music as I approached the bedroom:

*... I'm brushing up on looking down
I'm working on my roar...*

Megan was singing Zazu's lines, while Anne-Marie and Danny were singing those of Simba and Nala; all three were dancing about too!

*Thus far, a rather uninspiring thing!
Oh, I just can't wait to be king
You've rather a long way to go
Young master, if you think...*

*No one saying, "Do this"
Now when I said that, I...
No one saying, "Be there"
What I meant was...*

*No one saying, "Stop that"
Look, what you don't realize...
No one saying, "See here"
Now see here...*

*Free to run around all day
Well, that's definitely out...
Free to do it all my way*

*I think it's time that you and I
Arranged a heart to heart...
Kings don't need advice
From little hornbills for a start...*

I waited until the end, and clapped; Megan blushed and stopped prancing around the bedroom a big grin on her face.

"Having fun?" I asked.

The smiles that I received told me all I needed to know.

Chapter 192*: The Butler Strikes Back

The following night
Saturday

"Have fun Batman, you too, Catwoman!"

I was certain that Kick-Ass was laughing as he dropped us off in South Chicago, beside an alleyway, before speeding off in Iron Hide. It was very, very dark and quite cold, too. We were very much alone and it felt like it. I looked at Bruce – oops; Batman, who just shrugged his shoulders and we ran down the alleyway, trying to make as little noise as possible.

There was something, in the back of my mind, that told me it was all a setup, so I decided to try to hide from Mindy. I had done my research has on the area, so I led the way up a fire escape.

They thought that they were alone, but the reality was far from it.

I was a bitch; my alter ego was even more of a bitch, but I cared about those that I trained. It was 'all hands on deck' that night. Marty and Abby were in the Command Centre along with Cathy and Paige. Kick-Ass and Petra were trailing Bruce and Selina. On the other hand, should I say: 'Batman' and 'Catwoman'?

The rest of us were preparing ourselves for a night of fun and games, plus some serious training of course! We had a lot planned for our newest vigilantes. Their comms were isolated from everybody else, but we could hear everything that they both said in the Control Centre. We could also follow their movements on the large screen.

Currently, they were near the South Branch Chicago River on South Halstead Street and both still together. Their very first test was closing in on them, as I watched a silver dot loiter a few hundred yards away.

It had been half an hour since we had been abandoned.

We were hiding in the shadows of a large building, catching our breath. We had run an erratic route, hoping to throw off any shadows. Suddenly a bright spotlight switched on and I heard an engine revving, then saw some blue flashing lights. It was an unmarked Police SUV, skidding to a halt. The doors opened and two men jumped out.

"Stop, CPD!" A male voice shouted.

We ran!

"That was easy!"

I laughed as Fellowes stared into the camera mounted on the SUV's dashboard, his pistol by his side.

"Keep 'em runnin'!" I replied before turning to the mat.

"Let's roll!"

The four of us mounted our motorcycles and Marty flicked the switch for the large armoured door that led to the vehicle ramp.

"You lead, Shadow – I'll follow the little cunts!" I growled.

"Funny, bitch!" Wildcat laughed as she pressed the starter on her, Ducati Hypermotard motorcycle.

I had bought three machines, identical except for the body shell colour. The frame was silver; the dual-purpose tyres were mounted on black wheels. Wildcat's machine was brown with silver trim and with the licence plate: 'WILD ONE'. Trojan's machine was green, with silver trim and with the licence plate: 'VALIANT'. Splinter's machine was black, with silver trim and with the licence plate: 'DEMON'.

Splinter was already out on the streets, with Mist. We powered up the ramp and out into Chicago.

"I have them!"

"So do I, Splinter!" I replied.

I led the way on my Streetfighter 848, with Splinter to my left and behind. Our HUD showed the fleeing vigilantes. They were on South Canal Street. We closed and then separated, coming back in a pincer movement, our lights off.

I saw Catwoman dive off to one side as she heard our engines. Batman was not far behind as Splinter and I sped past tossing a flash-bang each. They exploded seconds later and I yelled out...

"Fucking bastard!" I had felt a bullet hit my back armour, on my left shoulder blade.

"It was Batman!" Splinter called, sending three bullets back down the street – aimed to miss, of course.

Chloe was checking over Curtis' motorcycle.

We had just changed into our combat suits, just leaving masks, comms and gauntlets until we were ready to leave. Chloe frowned and went over to my motorcycle; she bent down and examined something under the fuel tank before standing up.

"The fucking bitch!"

"What?" I asked.

"Curtis' ECU is not limited – however yours is!"

"The fucking bitch!" I echoed.

I did not trust Wildcat.

Earlier that evening I had caught her and Shadow up to something in the workshop. Both had hid whatever they were working on and tried to look innocent as they both span around to face me. Neither had their masks on, but were suited up. I glared at Wildcat, who just smiled sweetly. Curtis had been there too, but he did look innocent and probably was.

"Not buying it!" I had growled and walked out of the workshop.

I knew that Shadow had helped Wildcat remove her speed-limiter. I knew that she would, or Wildcat would have found a way. The joke was on her though – there was a backup ECU, which was hidden and which was designed to override the primary ECU when necessary.

Was I devious? I was Hit Girl!

Why no control over Trojan? Oh yes, Curtis and his alter ego, Trojan, were very brave and he had a lot of courage, but he was also more cautious and would stop to consider things before diving in headfirst like Megan or Chloe might as their own alter egos, Shadow and Wildcat! I had not limited Splinter's motorcycle either.

I watched the two younger vigilantes like a hawk; their safety was my primary concern, especially as the night was for fun, not for serious action. Training was not a time to risk life and limb. Some may be surprised to hear me say that, but I was changing with the times – Hit Girl was a Mom, after all!

I was also silently crapping myself; there was less than a week to go. Was I ready? I always thought 'cold feet' was a myth, but damn if I was not getting 'cold feet' and not because of Dave, because of me...

"You okay, Nala?" I heard Wildcat ask.

The bitch had been calling me that ever since the previous night; apparently, Dave was Simba!

"That does not mean that Shadow and Jackal are Kiara and Kovu!" I growled back. "Mind you, Wildcat, Trojan and Splinter would make a good, Shenzi, Banzai and Ed!"

There was no response from Wildcat, but there was one from Lynx: "Does that make Rhino, Mufasa?"

"I heard that!" Rhino commented.

"No – I think he's Rafiki!" I quipped with a laugh.

I was getting tired.

Every time that we tried to rest, something happened. First the Cops and then the two assholes on the motorcycles throwing flash bangs! I had a feeling that I should not have shot at them, but what the hell, I was not about to be attacked and not respond. Catwoman was equally annoyed and she was muttering obscene things over the radio. At least it kept our spirits up.

"Young meat!"

I heard the voice close behind me, span around and raised the Jō-staff into a defensive position. That was good as a baseball bat soon came downwards and struck the Jō-staff, almost taking it out of my hands. There were two of them and they were large.

"I'll take the dick on the right!" Catwoman growled.

Neither of us hesitated, but dived in. The two men were good, but either they were not really trying or we had the edge; I was not very certain which! I felt a bat hit me on my left arm, so struck the man hard on his right arm; he yelled out in pain.

"I'll fucking do you for that, vigilante scum!" The man yelled, as he struck harder, and harder with his bat.

I struck back, as hard as I could, including a few kicks, too. I could see Catwoman faring well against her man, who was soon on his knees. Then we heard a siren and an unmarked Police SUV came hurtling down the street.

It was time to leave, so with one more crack of the Jō-staff, we broke off and ran.

"Fucking cunts!" Detective Olinsky growled as he pulled off his mask and rubbed his right arm.

"That was awesome!" Sergeant Voight growled, getting his breath back.

"Fucking pansies!" Sergeant Murphy laughed.

"You try being bait next time, asshole!" Olinsky laughed.

An hour later

"Got him!"

Lieutenant Marcus Williams lowered the Taser and gazed over to his partner, Sergeant Vicky Richards. She was holding another Taser, which was pointed down at the unconscious female vigilante.

"Well that fucking creep wanted us to capture some vigilantes..." Vicky announced with a grin.

"Like taking candy from a baby!" Marcus laughed.

"Is that so, fuck ass?" I called out from part way up a fire escape.

"Huh?"

"You heard me, cunt!" I responded. "Let them go, or face the consequences!"

"Go fuck yourself, crazy purple bitch!" Vicky yelled back with a smirk.

"Who the fuck asked you, tramp?" Petra yelled at Vicky.

'Careful!' I thought.

I jumped off the fire escape somersaulting through the air and landing on my feet a short distance from Marcus. Petra landed beside me. We had to make it look good. We wanted to make it look like Marcus, along with Vicky had caught a pair of vigilantes and then the evil Hit Girl had taken them back!

The Tasered vigilantes were recovering and when they both tried to stand; they were kicked down again by Marcus and Vicky.

"You're gonna fucking regret that..." I growled.

"You'd never hurt a Badge; we know you!" Marcus responded, grinning.

Devious bastard!

"Depends on your definition of 'hurt', doesn't it!" I replied.

"Fuck this!" Marcus growled and flicked open his ASP baton before firing off the other charge of his Taser at me!

"Taser's don't work on our armour!" I said smugly.

"But these do!" Vicky said as she pulled the trigger on her pistol three times.

I fell backwards as the three .40-calibre rounds slammed into my chest and I hit the ground.

"Fuck!" I yelled – that fucking hurt!

Petra engaged my assailant with one of her Tactical Katana Swords. Vicky was ready and deflected it with her own ASP. I jumped up, deflected Marcus' ASP with my right arm before punching him in the right shoulder with my left arm, and followed up with a kick to his stomach.

That had to be the first time that I had ever hit Marcus, let alone used anything 'Hit Girl' on him! He grunted and dropped to the ground, pretending to be hurt. Vicky span and struck Petra across the left thigh with her ASP; I heard a muttered expletive from Petra, who then hit her mother a little too hard in the chest, putting her down to the ground. Jackal pulled Batman on behind him, while Shadow seized hold of Catwoman.

They both accelerated away, followed by Petra and me.

"Bitch!"

We both said the same word at the same time and laughed.

"It was supposed to look real!" Vicki announced with a grin.

"Felt real!" I groaned.

"Get a grip, old man!" I heard a certain young lady call over the comms.

"She's gonna pay – I promise you that!" I promised.

"Not having a good night are you?"

I stuck a single finger up at Jackal as we were abandoned again in another part of Chicago.

"Let's move, Batman..."

We had not gone much more than about forty yards when all hell broke loose.

Two people were waiting for us; it was a fucking set up!

"Batman, on your left!" I yelled out.

Batman lashed out, catching one of the cunts in the side, causing him to grunt in pain. I span around, catching the other assailant around the head, putting them down. Only they did not stay down, they flipped back up again and I was kicked down, hard.

They fell right into Alfred's lap as he blindsided Batman, kicking him to the ground.

Mathilda took down Catwoman without much effort and both vigilantes found themselves bound and facing the two black clad individuals. Both wore voice-changing masks, so that they could interrogate the fallen vigilantes without revealing their identities. It was not going to be pretty.

I watched as both vigilantes were dragged off towards Safehouse K.

"Who the fuck are you?" The man growled.

"You worst fucking nightmare!" I growled as menacingly as I could, looking over at Catwoman.

"Don't look at the bitch!" The man roared and I flinched away. "Look at me!"

Chapter 193*: Graduation

Saturday Night

Safehouse K

I shook with fear.

"I know who you both are – I want Hit Girl – you two know where I can find her..."

"What?"

It could not be real!

"You tell me where she is; even better who she is and I'll let you and your bitch leave with your identities intact..."

"I..."

"Who is Hit Girl?" The woman demanded smacking me around the head.

"Beat me. Kill me; I'll never tell!" I growled. I would take Hit Girl's identity to the grave; at least I hoped I could.

"How about we make your bitch suffer?" The man said in his weird electronic voice.

He grabbed hold of Catwoman by her left arm, hurting her; she screamed out. The man dragged her into the centre of the room.

"How about I fuck her, here and now – would that loosen your tongue?" He demanded.

I saw Catwoman shake her head and heard her whisper in my ear over the comms.

"Let them – they'll get nothing from us!" She whispered.

I yelled out as the woman punched me in the stomach. I saw Catwoman kicked in the side; she fell onto her side. Then I was dragged up and placed against the wall. I heard the unmistakable sound of a pistol being cocked.

I froze.

"No – let's threaten the broad!"

I watched as the man walked over to Catwoman, dragging her roughly to her feet. The pistol was placed against her head.

"We just want a name..."

"Go fuck yourself, bastard!" Catwoman yelled as she threw her head sideways, head butting the man.

He dropped the pistol, it was swept up by Catwoman who then aimed it at the man's head, and she pulled the trigger.

Safehouse K was probably the most secure place in the City at that moment.

Various members of Fusion were patrolling around the perimeter with heavy weapons, just in case anything kicked off. Otherwise all attention was on the first floor where our new protégés were being 'interrogated'.

There would be more intensive training for the pair, but they had done well considering I had thrown them to the sharks that night!

What the fuck?

I pulled the trigger again and then pulled back on the cocking lever. I pulled the trigger again – nothing. I pressed the magazine release button and the magazine dropped into my left hand.

"Huh?" I yelled out as I saw the top of the magazine.

The magazine was empty!

Then the man on the floor started to laugh and so did the woman. I was very confused. I looked over at Batman and saw him slump down the wall to the floor, obvious relief in the way his shoulders sagged. Then I heard clapping from behind me; I turned. Hit Girl appeared, followed by Kick-Ass, Shadow and Wildcat. They had all removed their masks and were clapping their gauntlets together.

"You have got to be fucking kidding!" I exclaimed as the man on the floor pulled off his own mask.

"Alfred!" I exclaimed. "You bastard!"

"I was convincing, wasn't I, Master Bruce!"

I pulled off my mask, astounded at the turn of events. I was angry at being duped, but I was also pleased that I had made it through the night. I looked over at Selina as she removed her mask and smiled at me.

We had survived.

Safehouse F

Bruce and Selina were grinning fit to burst as we all arrived back.

"You are a bunch of fucking bastards!" Bruce announced.

"Well?" Selina asked me, almost bursting to hear my judgment.

"I'll give you both a B+," I laughed. "Congratulations, Batman and Catwoman!"

There were cheers from everybody as Bruce and Selina were led off to get themselves changed. After a shower and some fresh clothes, Dr Bennett would check them both over; there were plenty of visible bruises!

..._...

Alfred was tenderly holding a tissue to his nose; not broken, just a little bruised.

"You pushed it a bit tonight," Cathy said seriously, coming over from the Control Centre.

"We had to – they needed to know what it is really like out there," I replied honestly. "You can't just put on a costume and go running about trying to protect people."

"Talking about me?" Dave asked as he approached.

"Yeah, Kick-Ass 1.0 did not get a lot done, did he?"

"A case in point; she's right, Cathy," Alfred agreed. "I punched Bruce hard; I hurt him. I hated doing that, but I had to. We let those two go out unprepared, then they are dead, simple as that. Mindy may have some outrageous methods, but they do seem to work."

"I know," Cathy admitted. "I trust her with my only daughter and my only nephew."

"They are in the best of hands, Cathy. I mean that," Alfred finished.

I actually felt my face warming up as Cathy smiled at me.

An hour later

"So, how much did you believe was a setup?"

"Honestly, Chloe, I thought a lot of it was, but then I wasn't sure – it all seemed so real..." Selina replied. "I was very scared, more than I care to think about!"

"That was the idea and I won't apologise for it," Mindy said seriously.

"I know what you are doing, Mindy and I thank you for it," Bruce said with a smile before turning to his Butler. "You too, Alfred. I know you didn't like hurting me, but it had to be done, I know that."

"You are very astute, Master Bruce."

"Sorry about the nose, Alfred...," Selina said, colouring up a bit.

"Never apologise, young miss, it's a sign of weakness – besides you did what was right."

"Thank you, Alfred."

"Oh fuck!"

"Huh?" Hailee asked.

"Guess who has just arrived – and they don't look too happy!" Mindy replied with a grimace.

"Two little girls are about to get into trouble...," I laughed.

"Fuck you, Dave!" Hailee laughed, but she looked apprehensive all the same.

Marcus and Vicky climbed the stairs and came into the briefing room. They just stared at Mindy and Hailee for a minute.

"Hi, Marcus!" Mindy said tentatively, biting her lower lip.

"Hi, Mom!" Hailee tried with a weak smile.

"What do you think?" Vicky asked Marcus. "Ground them for a month? Take their guns away from them?"

Marcus thought that through.

"Some very good ideas – only Mindy is not all that good at following instructions when she is grounded!" Marcus growled. "Besides she has guns hidden everywhere!"

"I'm sorry I hit you, Mom, but that ASP hurt!" Hailee whined pulling up the bottom of her shorts.

She was right; there was a very visible, large red welt on her thigh.

"My heart bleeds, daughter, but I think you can take it, eh Petra!" Vicky smirked and Hailee looked astonished at her mother's response.

"Not to mention that you tried to Taser me, and you shot me!" Mindy growled looking at Marcus and then Vicky.

"Is Hit Girl whining?" Marcus asked with an evil smirk.

Mindy looked at Hailee open mouthed and then glared over at me. I was struggling not to laugh and so was Paige as she watched.

"Whining little bitch!" Megan commented as she walked past Mindy.

"We get no fucking respect!" Mindy growled menacingly.

Hailee scowled at her mother and Marcus.

"Tell me about it!"

"We even?" Mindy asked Marcus.

"Not even close...," announced Marcus as he wandered off, looking for some coffee.

"Oh, we have so much fun ahead of us...," Vicky added as she followed her Boss out of the briefing room.

I tried to ignore any further thoughts of Marcus' revenge as Dave and I drove Bruce and Selina to West Ridge, along with Alfred.

They both looked very tired.

"You can both get a good lie in, as we will not be doing anything tomorrow. You have the entire day just to relax," Dave explained.

"We'll come by on Monday morning, about ten," I added. "Hell Week is over; you graduated. Now your training can begin!"

"Looking forward to it!" Cat groaned.

Glenview

It had been a fun night and very successful.

On Monday we would take Bruce and Selina through the events of the night and show them their mistakes and where necessary a better way to go about things.

For now, I was really tired and was desperate for sleep. The twins were already out for the count when I checked in on them.

The following morning Sunday

Nine o'clock found us at The Farm.

"Don't you think they're a little young?"

"Probably!" I replied.

"They'll break their little necks; they are only seven and a half years old!" Dave persisted. "Just because you started young!"

"Dammit Dave, I'm teaching them to ride a quad-bike, not to kill people!"

"Apart from themselves!"

"This conversation is over – go help Anne-Marie!"

..._...

Maybe they were a little young, but I thought it might be fun for them. I had not spent as much time with them both as I would have liked.

For now they were attired in thick leathers – pink for Anne-Marie and light blue for Danny – plus helmets in the same colours. I had considered motorcycles, but then I had been sensible and decided to start them off on quads. Dave did not agree with me, but he'd come around.

I had cheated slightly as the quad-bikes that I had bought were designed for ten-year-olds, but I figured the kids would be fine. Both machines were fitted with a 112-hp engine with Electronic Fuel Injection. They also came with an adjustable speed-limiter, which they would not be removing! The colour of the quad bikes matched each of the twins.

I had to admit that they both looked very cute in their leathers and helmets, but suggested that they removed the helmet till we were ready; Danny refused. Neither of them had ever been on a motorcycle or quad-bike before that morning, so I was looking forward to teaching them how to ride.

After showing each of them around their machines, so they knew where everything was, I showed them the kill-cord and how to attach it to their wrist. I demonstrated how once the cord was yanked from its slot, the quad-bike's engine cut out. I showed them the automatic gears – just forward, neutral and reverse. Most importantly, we covered the brake lever and what it was for!

Dave was in his own leathers, as was I. We had both ridden up on our BMW motorcycles, which the twins had greatly enjoyed. Dave had commented that I was 'starting their training'. I had replied that I was doing nothing of the sort; I was just teaching them some useful skills...

Maybe, subconsciously, I was following in Daddy's footsteps; I would need to be careful!

Chapter 194*: Quads

Sunday

The Farm

We started with the quad-bikes, side by side, a few yards apart at one end of the field.

"Start 'em up!" I ordered and both machines rumbled to life.

"Try to keep a straight course and don't crash into each other, or anything else!" Dave cautioned. "Stop before you go through the fence at the other end of the field..."

Now we were going to find out whom the speed freak was! The machines were limited to a maximum of fifteen-miles-per-hour for the moment.

Which one of them would try to max that out?

What a fucking surprise!

I glared at the smirking Mindy as she clapped Anne-Marie. The young girl took her quad-bike to its top speed. Danny tried, but decided not to push it and slowed down; Anne-Marie, however, almost hit the fence at the far end of the field as she braked heavily and skidded in the mud!

I had to admit, both kids were enjoying themselves; they grinned broadly under their over-size helmets. We then taught the kids how to reverse their machines – especially as Anne-Marie had no choice but to reverse! Danny gave his sister a smug look as he reversed a little and then started driving in large figure eights in the centre of the field.

"Now, girl, keep the speed down and no rapid acceleration," I cautioned as Anne-Marie laughed, ignoring me completely, and sent mud flying as she joined her brother.

I looked over at the smirking Mindy.

"It's your entire fault – as usual!"

Mindy was about to reply, but her cell rang.

"Hi, Hailee!"

"I hate you so much right now!"

"Huh!"

"I've sent you a picture – Marcus thought it might be a 'good idea!'" Hailee responded unhappily. "Mom says she is gonna back date it, too!"

The brief call dropped and I heard a beep as a picture message was received. I stared at the image and laughed. It was a large glass jar, with a simple hand-written label on it. On the label were two simple words, which proved to be very expensive for me!

Asshole!

We stopped for lunch, before anybody was hurt and Jack fed us all.

"You having fun?" Jack asked the kids.

"Yeah!" Both replied, grinning, as they dived into the food.

One thing about the twins; they were always hungry!

Dave vanished half way through the meal and then returned a few minutes later. I gave him a questioning look, but he just shrugged; he was up to something...

I was so excited!

The day was awesome – I loved the idea of speed and as for the pink quad-bike, the pink leathers, the pink boots, the pink helmet...

After lunch, we climbed back onto the quad-bikes and Dave suggested that we go and try some more figure-eight riding. I groaned, but complied. Then I saw the mud by the rear wheels of my bike and decided to cover Mindy in mud – Dave was too far away.

I started the engine and selected the forward gear, then I released the brake and the rear wheels spun and whoa... I was flying through the air, backwards!

I landed on the soft grass, which forced all of the air out of my lungs, and I lay there gasping for air. As I stared upwards, I saw Mindy looking down at me, concern on her face.

"I'm okay!" I said, sitting up painfully.

Mindy looked over at Dave and then back to me.

"You learnt your lesson?" Mindy asked.

I nodded.

"No more rapid acceleration..."

"Dave, please set the lower speed, thanks!" Mindy said, helping me up.

Danny was smirking at me; I just glared back at him. Okay, I had made a fool of myself; it was fun, though!

"Have you learnt your lesson?" I asked Mindy.

"Yeah, sorry..."

"Speed is not always good, Anne-Marie," I cautioned.

"Hit Girl rides fast!" She countered.

"Hit Girl is a speed-crazed nutcase!" I replied, ignoring Mindy's outraged expression. "She's a menace to everybody on the roads!"

Anne-Marie scowled; she hated it when anybody said anything bad about her hero, Hit Girl. As for Mindy, she could not say a thing in case she gave herself away!

It started to rain, but we continued outside for another who or so, until everybody was covered in mud.

Then it was time to put the quad-bikes away in the barn. Neither kid wanted to stop riding, but it was time to go home; it was a long ride to Glenview, especially in the rain.

We thanked Jack for lunch and headed home.

Glenview

We rode straight into the centre garage and parked beside Dave's Audi RS7.

"Leathers and boots off in the laundry room and then straight upstairs for a bath!" I ordered the twins.

I dumped my own leathers and boots, and then ran upstairs to run the bath while Dave helped the twins out of their kit. It was still raining outside and it was getting cold, so I was glad that the heating was keeping the house comfortable.

While the twins splashed away in the bath, Dave went for a shower in our bathroom downstairs, and I went across the passageway to the study and turned on the computer to check my emails. Once Dave was changed, I went for my shower while he battled with getting the twins out of the bath, which was easier said than done!

After my own shower, I found Dave more than a little damp, but the terrors were out of the bath and dressed in their pyjamas. I was going out, so left Dave in charge – I advised the kids to be nice to Dave as I left.

South Cottage Grove
Apartment 202

In a moment of madness, Cathy and I had thought it a good idea to give the teenagers some space and allow them to live together for a trial period.

Dave had thought it a very bad idea! However, they needed their space, as they were growing up and fast. We trusted them to an extent despite them both being only fifteen. I took the XJR, as my ass was sore from riding all day on the bike.

As I climbed the stairs to the second floor, I was dreading what I might find. Considering they knew that, I was coming and when, I was more than a little shocked to find what I did find!

..._...

I knocked on the door to what Chloe jokingly called the 'Shadow Cave'!

"It's open!" Came Chloe's voice, so I pushed the door open, closing it behind me.

I passed through the small entrance hall and pushed open the door to the living room. All seemed normal...

"Hi, Mindy – coffee?" Chloe asked, popping out of the kitchen for a minute before vanishing again.

"Wha- yeah, err yes – please..." I replied hesitantly.

The reason for my hesitancy?

Chloe was stark bollock naked!

It was not that I had not seen her naked before and more besides and technically, it was her home, but she knew that I was coming over. Chloe reappeared with three cups of coffee on a tray, placing the tray down on a coffee table in the living room. She was not fazed for a moment about her state of undress.

"Are you on the phone Chloe," I heard Josh call and then heard feet coming out of the bedroom.

'Oh, fuck!' I thought as I saw Josh.

"Mindy!" Josh exclaimed rapidly grabbing a towel from a pile by the bedroom door.

Chloe grinned her evil grin.

"Sorry, Josh – I forgot Mindy was coming..."

'Yeah, right!' I thought. The bitch!

"I just thought I'd check-up on my apartment..."

"The bed's good!" Josh commented as his face began to return to its normal colour.

Chloe remained naked as she sat on the couch; at least she kept her legs closed!

"One word comes to mind, Chloe: nymphomaniac," I commented dryly.

"That means that..." Josh began.

"Thank you, Joshua, I know what it means!" Chloe responded with a smile.

Josh, noticing my uncomfortable expression, threw her a towel and she reluctantly covered herself up, pretending to sulk. I had to admit though that Josh had a very nice body and other, err, items...

Behave, Mindy, you are getting married in less than a week!

"So, how is the new D-JAK coming?" Josh asked, ignoring Chloe.

The demand for membership at D-JAK had outgrown the current building, so a new building was desired.

I was going for part of a new build, for various reasons. It would allow for some, err, customisations, shall we say during the build! The building had been finished in mid-August, with the help of the same team who had constructed Safehouse A and installed the Safehouses in the building we were currently sitting in. Secrecy was paramount for the extra additions and this had been maintained during the rapid build. The building was in Northern Central Chicago, in a much better neighbourhood. Other businesses would be using the same building and we were taking a large unit on the second-floor that had a private entrance. I knew that Josh and Chloe would love our immediate neighbours: Victoria's Secret!

"Well – err, you two seem to be okay, so I'll leave you to whatever!"

"Come anytime, Mindy – with or without clothes..." Chloe replied.

"Chloe, behave!" Josh warned.

"Or what, you'll spank me?"

"I'm outta here!"

I almost ran back to the car!

Morton Grove

I had promised to check in with Cathy on the way home and report on what I had seen.

Cathy opened the door, saw my expression and grimaced.

"Coffee?"

"Please – make it black!"

"Hi, Mindy!" Curtis called out from the living room.

"Hi, kid!"

"So – what did you see?" Cathy asked as we sat in the kitchen.

"Everything!" I replied.

"Oh..."

"Let's just say it must have been laundry day and leave it at that..."

Cathy laughed.

"Both of them?"

"Yeah..."

I felt myself blushing!

"To be young again..." Cathy mused.

Curtis came into the kitchen.

"Was she naked again?" He asked.

"Yeah, how did you know?" Cathy queried.

"I said 'hello' yesterday on the way back from school and got an eye full of Chloe's butt and other regions!" Curtis complained, going a little pink in the face.

"You've seen her before," I reminded him.

The boy blushed.

"I know, but she's my cousin and it's just a little bit weird!"

"That's Chloe!" I laughed.

"So true!" Cathy added.

Chapter 195*: Debriefing

Safehouse F

We started just before ten that morning.

Selina and Bruce looked very much refreshed after their day off; that would soon change!

"Please be gentle, Mindy; I'm still sore!" Selina moaned.

"It was that sort of day off, was it?" I teased with a look and a smirk.

Selina blushed and Bruce just stammered out denials.

"Ignore the bitch; she's just being an ass!" Dave laughed.

Dave and I left them to settle down in the briefing room and get comfortable. Chloe and Josh were going to debrief them while Dave and I went to do some paper work!

We needed to do some reviewing of Fusion members.

Boring, but necessary, if we were to remain a cutting edge organisation. I decided to start at the top – Kick-Ass! Assets... plenty – oh yes, some very big assets that kept me very happy and – STOP! Get your head out of the Whore House, Mindy. Handsome, muscular, stunning when naked... Get a grip, Mindy, for fuck's sake! Like a battle tank as he forces his way through the enemy, striking them down with punches and his batons – I love it when he forces his way into me and...

Dammit – I was getting very damp down below!

Okay!

Hit Girl. Now where do I start?

What sticks out about Hit Girl? A couple of things pop immediately to mind – well they don't stick out all that far, but what there is, is very, very... I had a one-track mind; Mindy was right about that. Did I care, though – did I hell!

Hit Girl had many appealing attributes, both as a vigilante and as other things...

I sat back down again, with some clean knickers on, and got back to work.

Skipping Kick-Ass for the moment, I moved onto Shadow. Now, Mindy, get serious.

Shadow had been with us the longest, not counting Marty. She had been thirteen and a handful when Dave and I had first met her. Now, though, she was a very striking and beautiful fifteen-year-old – and still a handful! I looked down her 'rap sheet' that Marty had painstakingly maintained.

Her first kill had been in defence of me; she had coped in her own way and now she would not think twice about killing somebody who deserved to die; she could also be vindictive too. Many criminals were almost as scared of her as they were of me; she could intimidate with only a glance. She had been shot, twice. The first time two bullets had nearly cost the life of her boyfriend as he had dived in front of that bastard, Ralph D'Amico's bullets. Her right shoulder still bore the scars of that fight...

Her skills were exceptional, her courage immeasurable. Mind you, we had had our run-ins, together. I had kicked her out of Fusion after one of her ill thought out escapades, but we needed each other, so I let her back in. She was my right hand, especially when Dave was not around. Other than Dave and Marcus, Chloe was one of the most important people in my life; she was a sister to me and there were few secrets between us. Okay, she had ruffled my feathers once or twice; she had crashed two motorcycles among other things, but she was a very good friend and err, sex partner?

Ultimately, to show what she meant to me, I had asked her to be my Maid of Honour for our wedding; the poor girl had almost collapsed in tears when I had asked her and Josh had had to guide her to the couch!

Next, I supposed, was her British partner in crime, Jackal. Joshua was her partner in more ways, than one! She loved the boy more than she loved anything else. I had to admit that I had been unsure of the kid at first, but then he had thrown himself in front of those bullets and almost been killed. Chloe had been distraught when she thought that he had died; but the kid was made from stern stuff and he beat all the odds and survived.

The boy had survived five bullet wounds, including one received while outrunning gunman alone and at night. If all the British had his courage then they were a force to be reckoned with! His father had been murdered on the orders of Ralph D'Amico. He had been in a coma for months – however he had prevailed and he was now a key member of Fusion, second only to Shadow. He was fifteen, too and as I saw the other night – well equipped and very handsome! To me he was a brother and somebody I could talk to about anything.

Next on the list was Hal.

Abby was a complete nutcase and a genius with the computers. She was fifteen, but had the skills and maturity of somebody much older. She had fought well in Gotham, killing for the first time, almost face to face. She had courage; I had to give her that! I trusted the girl with my life and I enjoyed having her funny, geeky humour around. Without her as support, Fusion would not be able to function.

What was more amazing about Abby was that her own mother still had no idea what it was that her daughter did for her extra-curricular activities!

..._...

Hawk!

Well there was not much to say about her, considering that she had been pregnant for the past nine months. Yeah, there was that time I had tried to kill her – and I had almost succeeded before Marty had Tasered me – that still rankled, too!

However, despite that, we were good friends and I was Godmother to her son.

..._...

Medic, a key member of the team – without her many of us would be dead or badly crippled at best!

Despite being Chloe's Mom, she had a different character. However, I had seen her kill with my own eyes; she was cold that woman, very cold. On the other hand, she was very gentle and caring in her capacity as a Doctor. Mind you, her no-nonsense medical check-ups were something to be feared!

She had been a surrogate mother to me and provided me with guidance when I needed it, not to mention plugging a few holes when I got myself shot!

..._...

Trojan – now he was a challenge.

Curtis was still only eleven, but having lost both his parents in a car crash almost a year ago – I was not looking forward to that anniversary – he bore himself like a pro who was years older. As one of the younger members of Fusion, I worried about him a lot and I hated it when he was injured. He was an amazing kid and I respected him for his accomplishments.

As Chloe's cousin, he had picked up many of his skills from watching her both in training and in action. While Chloe had hated her cousin for most of his life, the antagonistic behaviour between them had long passed and they were now more like a brother and sister, than as cousins.

The boy had been shot, three times, but he had survived our time in Gotham. As he got older, his skills would improve steadily and he would be a force to be reckoned with.

..._...

Following on from Trojan, we had to talk about his partner in crime.

Wildcat was a conundrum. I hated it when people called her a 'mini-Mindy', but I had to admit that maybe they were right. Sometimes I did not think that that was a good thing, at all! Megan was very headstrong and she often found herself in trouble, both at school, home and as Wildcat. She insisted that trouble always found her and not the other way around!

The girl is tenacious and very brave. Sometimes, though, her bravery tends to get ahead of her brain and things happen. One bad result was her being stabbed, three times, when disobeying orders. Some treated her as the 'baby' of Fusion, but her skills showed that she was anything but. Many looked at her short stature and laughed; they were usually very sorry when Wildcat had finished with them – if they lived!

Megan was my little sister; well she would be when her mom, Paige, married Marcus. We were very much alike, which as I mentioned earlier, may not have been a good thing and sometimes the thought scared me. I also worried about what she and Curtis got up to behind closed doors... Did we have another Chloe/Josh couple here?

Mist...

Erika, the cause of my sexual deviation from the norm. She used to be Marty's squeeze, but no longer. She was a stunning young woman of twenty-two and... I was feeling hot and aroused again at the thought of her in bed... She was also sexually willing to partner with either sex, as the threesome with Chloe and Josh had proved, while in Gotham.

She was also one of the few in Fusion who had been around that night, in New York and been shocked to the core by the live showing of the death of Big Daddy and my own antics in the D'Amico Warehouse. She was tremendously caring and extremely vindictive when fighting. As one of our newer members, she wielded her chain-whip and Sais with vicious abandon and blood lust.

The girl also had a craving for high-powered motorcycles, not that I could fault her for that!

..._...

Splinter – what can we say about Splinter.

An amazing young twelve-year-old. Tommy was a fascinating person to talk with. His experiences were wide and not to be envied. He had been taken off the streets of New York and made to fight for the gratification of various mobs and mafias. Finding him had been a fluke at best, also leading us into another trap! He was a tremendous asset to Fusion and I enjoyed sparring with him; his fighting skills were a challenge for to, to say the least.

With him had come his Mom and Dad, both vigilantes of sorts that Dave had met in New York at 'Justice Forever'. His Dad, Tony, looked after everything we required when it came to vehicle and weapon maintenance and repair. He was highly skilled and I compensated him accordingly. Tommy's Mom, while a quiet woman, assisted with a lot of the behind the scenes asset management and record keeping.

I saw Tommy, Megan and Curtis making one hell of a team.

..._...

Now we came to our newest member, Petra.

Another young woman with a destroyed youth. Initially, I saw her as a threat, but now she was a good friend to me. Hailee's fighting skills were legendary and we could often spar to a stalemate together. While her skills should have made Hailee my number one Operator, there was no way I was going to dislodge Chloe. There had been a limited amount of animosity between the two girls initially, despite Hailee being three years older than Chloe. I had promised Chloe that Hailee was no threat to her position as my number one in Operator in Fusion.

I respected Hailee's experience as a vigilante as well as her skills. We did not use ranks in Fusion, anybody could lead an operation if their skills were the most suitable. I was happy to take orders from Dave, just as much as I would accept orders from Megan, or Hailee as the circumstances dictated.

Now for the most important member of Fusion, without whom none of it would have ever got off the ground.

I was of course, referring to Battle Guy. It had been Marty, who had pointed Dave towards Chicago. It had been Marty, who had helped Dave track me down. Without Marty, I would most probably have been dead long ago and I would never have found Dave. Without Marty's technical knowledge, we would never have been able to operate as an illegal vigilante organisation.

Damn, I was tearing up at the thought of what Marty meant to me and how without him, things could have been so different. He was a wonderful guy, sometimes a bit too geeky at times, but a great joker and it was to be an honour to have him as Dave's Best Man at the wedding.

..._...

Last, but not least, we had our favourite dick-eating bitch, Eisenhower.

Admittedly, men were not always her biggest fan, but she loved men, in her own uniquely special way and what they had to offer! She was getting older and we had limited her activity as Eisenhower. As Sophia, she was a loving, if lazy, animal and was loved by all, especially the twins.

..._...

Many other people contributed to Fusion, mostly behind the scenes.

Marcus (Rhino), Paige (Lynx), Vicky, Ryan (Neptune), Mathilda, Fellowes, Murphy and Kyle (Max), to name but a few. They all contributed to helping our organisation flourish in the face of adversity; Dave and I owed them everything.

Chapter 196*: Something Stirring

That same day
Monday

St Louis
Missouri

I watched as the young girl began her morning exercises before breakfast.

It was always the same, running on the treadmill, while manipulating hand weights in her small hands. She was average height for her age, about four foot five in her bare feet and thin as the proverbial rake. She was definitely a morning person, always quick to jump out of her bed with a smile and start her exercises each morning, as per her indoctrinated training. As a nine-year-old, she was typically full of energy and always active. For me though, as I approached twenty-seven, I hated mornings and I was usually a lot slower to start my morning exercises. Though not as flexible as Stephanie was, I was still over a foot taller and I could hold my own.

I took a moment to glance around at our meagre accommodation and grimaced; the place sucked bigtime. However, on both a limited income and while relying on stashed funds, you had to be careful. That was also important when you wanted to keep a low, low profile, as we did. It had been six months since we had both awoken from our drug-induced haze that had made the two of us compliant and allowed us both to be trained in unspeakable acts. For most of the time since then, neither of us had been able to sleep in different rooms and it had only been in the past month that Stephanie had finally started sleeping in her own bed.

The nightmares were so very real and we both regularly awoke at night screaming and in floods of tears. It was heart-breaking seeing the look of horror on the young girl's face. The drugs had prevented the nightmares; indeed the drugs had prevented any form of conscience or knowledge of right and wrong. The girl was only nine, but she had already killed twelve people during her three years in captivity. Me, I had only been in captivity for a little over a year but I had my own kill-count... I had already had some skills before I had been taken, not many, but some and I was an adult. Stephanie had been trained in firearms and the use of knives, but any more-advanced training, except for the most basic Martial Arts stuff had been put off until her body grew further.

We had escaped from what had been our base of operations in Southern Chicago and headed southwest, to St Louis. There I had accessed some cash, hidden away for just such an occasion. They may have trained us to be compliant and to follow orders, but they had also trained us to think for ourselves. Therefore, we were distrustful (paranoid?) of our controllers and set up what you might call 'insurance policies' and in my case, a Safehouse that was totally off the grid.

The only problem?

We were still figuring out whom we were.

"Steph, you ready for breakfast?" I asked an hour later.

"Let me grab a shower first, Miranda, then I'll be right there." Stephanie suggested; which was a good idea as the girl was soaked in sweat.

Mind you, so was I; I headed for the other bathroom and grabbed my own shower. As I entered the kitchen, tying up my still damp dark ginger hair, I found Stephanie pouring hot water into a pair of mugs on the kitchen side, a coffee for me and a tea for her. It was the same routine every morning; nothing had changed over the previous six months. Stephanie's light blonde hair was up in a ponytail, still dripping from the shower as usual.

To look at the girl, nobody would ever guess that she was both a hardened killer and a crack pistol shot. She was also a mini-ninja who could creep up behind you and jam a blade into your side. There was something else different about the girl; she had British accent, which had given me cause to wonder from where she had been abducted.

Our life was full of never ending questions

When we had awoken one morning, six months previously, we had been unaware of where we were, or indeed, why.

We had even struggled with who we were. We instinctively knew that we were Miranda and Stephanie, but that had really been it. We both knew each other; our minds told us that, but not very much more... The confusion was also very scary. We had found ourselves in a large apartment on the fourth floor of a large but otherwise anonymous apartment block and we seemed to be the only ones in the place.

We were also more than a little concerned about certain other things, such as our clothing, which just did not seem right, neither for me, nor for a nine-year-old girl; it was too utilitarian, rather than comfortable. Stephanie had soon appeared from her bedroom dressed and holding two items in her small hands. One was a slim gun holster and the other a pistol! She held the gun by the frame around the trigger; something told me it was the trigger-guard, as if it was a dead rat.

Something in my churning sub-conscious told me that we should get out of the place as soon as possible. We quickly stuffed clothes, limited personal effects and equipment into packs, including some guns; something told me to take the guns. We also took some files and documentation that appeared to be about us; at least they had our photos on them. On the side in the kitchen were some car keys.

We walked around the garage beneath the apartments, pressing the remote, until the lights on a late model Jeep SUV flashed. We threw in our kit and I drove out of the garage with Stephanie strapped into the seat beside me.

As I drove, my mind seemed to kick into overdrive. My senses were heightened and I was observing everything, without even trying. I was watching everywhere at once, in the mirrors, ahead, to the side, behind. It was automatic, I scanned, I drove, I scanned, and I drove. Then I saw something that set my senses on fire and I instinctively floored the accelerator.

"What?" Stephanie asked, instantly on alert.

"We're being followed..."

Stephanie spun in her seat to look out the rear window. Three cars behind a dark coloured sedan was accelerating to keep up with us and pulling into the next lane.

"We need to ditch this car!" I said urgently. "They're tracking us..."

"Then what?"

I saw Stephanie's expression changing; one moment it was fearful and then the next it was hardening.

"I'll let you know when I've figured that out..."

What was happening to me?

For a moment, I was crapping myself at the thought of being chased, but then suddenly my fear seemed to evaporate. I started to look around me, taking everything in, processing potential threats and avenues of escape. I had no idea why I was doing it; my sub-conscious just said 'do it', so I did!

"Brace!" Miranda suddenly called out and I leant back in my seat and brought my feet up onto the dashboard in front of me.

I saw Miranda stare into the rear-view mirror and then stamp both feet on the brake pedal, slamming on the brakes, hard!

The Jeep slowed rapidly and then there was a sharp jolt as another vehicle slammed into the Jeep's back end; the rear window shattered. I looked behind and saw the dark-coloured sedan with its bonnet crushed back onto the windscreen. There were two men inside, struggling to escape their deflating airbags.

Miranda floored the accelerator and turned right at the next set of traffic lights.

We dumped the SUV after driving northwest for another twenty miles in complete silence. We then took a cab back into central Chicago, and then found ourselves on the 'L', followed by an Amtrak to St Louis.

We detected no further tails.

That escapade was not the first time that we started to 'do things' without knowing why.

We noticed things changing within a week of arriving in St Louis. After arriving at the station, I instinctively took three different cabs and never the first one that pulled up either. Stephanie was giving me strange looks, too, her mind grappling with what I was doing. Finally, we stopped outside a rundown apartment block and climbed up to the third floor with our equipment.

On the way to the apartment block, I had been able to obtain a large amount of cash and the key to the apartment from a secret location. Who stashed it? Why and how I knew to go there to find the money and key, I had no fucking idea!

The first surprise had been Stephanie herself on the third day in St Louis.

I was bored and curiosity got the better of me, so for some reason I reached into the backpack that had the guns in it.

I brought out the pistol that I had found in my bedroom, in Chicago. My mind said meaningless things to me as I examined the pistol in my hands and then a name popped into my head.

"Heckler and Koch P30SK..."

"Huh?" Miranda asked.

My hands started doing things of their own accord and step-by-step instructions flew through my mind faster and faster.

Clear the weapon and carry out a safety check

With the magazine removed, pull the slide all the way back and hold it there

Push the slide release upwards to lock the slide back

Hold the pistol so that your thumb covers the rear of the frame and your fingers rest on the top of the frame

Pull slide back and move it to the front as far as the disassembly position

Using your free hand, press the slide release axle in from right to left

Pull slide release to the left until it reaches the locking position, pull slide forward off the pistol's frame

Turn the slide upside down and carefully push the recoil spring forward and out to either the left or right hand side, separating the recoil spring from the barrel and slide

Pivot the barrel slightly forward and press downward on the barrel-locking block through the ejection port, separating the barrel from the slide.

I executed each step exactly, resulting in the pistol successfully 'taken down'! It had taken me little more than a minute, too.

"How did you do that?" Miranda asked incredulously.

"I have no damned idea...!"

What concerned me more was that I had been able to reverse the process, without having seen what Stephanie had done; as far as I knew, I had never even touched a gun before that day.

Stephanie looked pensive for a minute before she reached down and pulled out another pistol from the backpack; she held it up to me.

"Glock 17 Gen 4..."

I clamped a hand over my mouth. Where the hell, had those words come from? It was my turn; I pulled out a larger weapon from the backpack and held it up for Stephanie.

"Heckler & Koch MP5K... With Navy trigger group..."

Now it was Stephanie's turn to look shocked! She also looked a little scared.

What were we?

We both spent most days trying to remember who we were and how we had arrived at where we were.

There were fleeting flashes in our minds at night. We had no idea if they were dreams, nightmares or awakening memories. We compared notes on our 'visions' each morning and some of the notes were disturbing to say the least. More than once, I would wake up in a cold sweat with tears streaming down my face after witnessing something horrific. I would then find myself waking up the following morning in the same bed as Miranda. Several times, I had witnessed her struggling through her own nightmares.

I would lay awake at night, trying not to sleep; I knew that when I slept, they came – the nightmares came. The nightmares portrayed me as some kind of monster. Sometimes I would be viewing the 'action' from the first person, other times from the third person, as an observer. I would see through the eyes of a nine-year-old, as if it was somebody else. Alternatively, I would see myself...

I had difficulty saying the word and difficulty admitting it to myself. However, the fact that I knew how to use a gun, which scared me in itself, also made me think that the nightmares were just my memories returning. If they were, then I did not want those memories to return; if they were accurate, then I was a bad person, a very bad person. In some nightmares, I was teamed up with Miranda and both of us were...

There was that word again...

... Killing!

Chapter 197*: Not A Night To Be Bad

Tuesday

*Chicago
Glenview*

I was tired when I awoke.

The night had been long and I had not slept well. I seriously wanted to stay in bed, but no, I had kids to get ready for school and I had to prepare for that evening's activities.

Dave was already up and it seemed, so were the kids.

"Morning, Mindy!" They both chorused as I stumbled into the kitchen.

"Morning..."

Dave was grinning. All three of them seemed too damn happy for seven-thirty in the damned morning!

St Louis

Our first venture into actually hurting people had occurred in the third week.

We had been out shopping – it was a useful pastime and allowed us to get some fresh air, and we did need to buy food from time to time. It also stopped us sitting in the grungy apartment and worrying about ourselves.

As was normal, there were always some unsavoury types walking the streets that thought with their dicks. In our case the idiot could not take 'no' for an answer! The man seized my wrist; normally I would have screamed and pissed myself, but for some reason I was not scared. I seemed to go into automatic and found myself cool, calm and collected.

I smirked at the man, who seemed to ease off my wrist, just for a second and then I twisted his wrist and at the same time twisted my body around; I heard bones in his wrist snapping. The man screamed; I punched him hard in the neck as he bent over to grasp the damaged wrist. He fell to the ground.

The other man came towards me; I seized the incoming fist and used the man's momentum to twist him forwards. He hit the ground beside his unfortunate friend and I smashed my boot into his face, breaking his nose.

I ignored his screams; grabbed Stephanie's hand and ran.

"How the bloody-hell did you do that?"

"I wish I knew, Steph, I wish I knew..."

I looked up at Miranda with some concern. I was worried about what I might find myself doing without any control. Mind you, I was still only nine, so there was not all that much I could do! If only that were so...

A week later, it was my turn; I had been alone and walking back from the store. It was after dark, not that the dark worried me. A young girl of about fourteen was being annoyed by some older boys – I fully intended just to walk on by, but then something inside me snapped.

"Leave her alone, you fucking bullies!" I growled.

The four boys turned in my direction.

"That accent ain't from around here, limey!"

I rolled my eyes – not very original.

"That the best you've got – fucking wanker!" I retorted.

"Shouldn't little girls, like you, be in bed?" Another laughed.

The girl tried to use my distraction to escape, but one of the boys grabbed her and slapped her across the face.

"Stay!" He warned.

I do not know what happened or why, but I ran forwards and jumped at the first boy, grabbing him around the neck and pulling him down to the pavement. I drove my elbow into the side of his head; he stayed down. As he fell, I jumped to the next boy, then the next, and the next. Within two minutes, all four boys were groaning on the ground.

"Bloody hell; I've got blood on my jeans!" I growled and left the girl standing there in astonishment.

I was a dozen yards away before I stopped and gazed behind me.

"Holy shit!" I thought and ran back to the apartment.

"Trouble?" Miranda asked as I slammed the front door behind me.

"I just put four wankers out cold..."

"You?"

"Thanks for the vote of confidence, Miranda!"

Despite her size, Stephanie could move and hit hard.

I had witnessed the punishment the punch bag took; we had repaired it twice! I had also learnt not to annoy her, as she would often resort to using her fists when she was agitated, or things got too much for her.

Stephanie's temper tantrums were something to behold – mind you that applied to most nine-year-old girls. She had a fair set of lungs and a varied and admittedly foul, vocabulary. I had learnt many new British swear words, most of which I had had to look up on Google!

Chicago

Safehouse F

I pulled a pair of Glock 19 pistols from the rack and checked them both on the table before inserting them into my holsters.

Beside me, two new vigilantes readied their own weapons.

"You two ready to do it again?"

"Hit Girl, we were born ready!" Batman replied.

"The City awaits!" I laughed.

This time Batman and Catwoman were being supported by the full might of Fusion.

It was a night to put the fear of God into criminals everywhere. That night we had twelve vigilantes and a dog on the streets and two more on duty at the Safehouse. All of Fusion's available resources were deployed.

Hal and Battle Guy were in the Command Centre. Iron Hide was being driven by Medic. With her were Batman and Catwoman, along with Eisenhower for support. On two wheels that night, we had Kick-Ass, Hit Girl, Shadow, Jackal, Mist, Petra, Splinter, Trojan and Wildcat.

It was an amazing sight, nine motorcycles roaring up South Archer Avenue, with Iron Hide behind. We rode in two parallel lines of four, with Kick-Ass out in front. Then we broke off into three teams. Iron Hide, along with Mist, headed up South Pulaski Road. Kick-Ass, Shadow, Wildcat and Splinter headed up South Central Avenue. The final team, Hit Girl, Jackal, Trojan and Petra headed up South Cicero Avenue.

St Louis

"Hey look at this!"

"What's that Steph?"

Stephanie just pointed at the TV. I could see a news broadcast; it was coming live from Chicago. I could see a large SUV trailing a line of motorcycles up a broad street. It was dark, but I instantly knew who was on display. It was those vigilantes, now why did that start to mean something to me?

I started to get flashes of images in my head. A mad sex session in the toilet cubicle of a men's room. Flashes of green and yellow. A man with a dog on his balls; now that was freaky! Standing on a rooftop. A name: Dave. I would need to work on those memories.

Chicago

"You two have fun, now!"

"Thanks, Medic!" I called back as Catwoman and I dismounted from Iron Hide.

"Catwoman and Batman are dismounting and on foot!" Catwoman called.

"I copy Catwoman and Batman on foot!" Hal replied from the Safehouse.

"Let's go Kick-Ass!" I growled.

A mile across town

"You sure about this, boss – those bastards are out, tonight – I don't feel safe."

"They're miles away from here, besides we go in, we come out, we go fence the crap, we go home – simples!"

"If you say so, boss!"

The man began to attack the window in preparation for entering the residential apartment. Within a few seconds, he slid the window up. He stuck a long leg through and climbed into the apartment.

Inside the apartment

I heard a noise; it came from the living room.

How many times had I told that kid to stay in bed and stay away from the TV! I swung my feet out of bed and headed from the living room. I turned on the main light.

"You are bust..." I began before I screamed.

A strange man was standing with his back to the window, he had knife in his gloved right hand, a ski mask on his head covering his face. Then suddenly the man seemed to vanish as he was dragged kicking and screaming back through the window. I heard a thud and then there was silence.

I dug deep for some courage and stepped slowly towards the window. I screamed again as a head suddenly appeared at the window.

"Sorry to scare you – those two won't be hurting anybody else; the Cops are on their way – goodnight!"

"Err, goodnight, err Kick-Ass!"

Safehouse F

"That's two for Kick-Ass!"

In a box on the large screen were the names of all the vigilantes out on the streets that night. Below Kick-Ass a glowing number two appeared – everybody else was at zero.

"Thanks Abby, coffee?"

"Yeah, thanks, Marty."

South Pulaski Road

"Come to me, you little bastards!"

"Batman, Mist – two coming your way, laden with the contents of a drug store..."

"Batman copies – we're ready!"

South Central Avenue

I hated this damn suit; it was too damn tight.

I had no choice, though, if I wanted to go out and fight. I had not realised how big my tits were getting until I had to squeeze them into the top of my suit! Trojan had offered to help, but I had declined his kind offer; there was a time and a place for everything! Now, though, I wanted to get myself on the scoreboard...

Kick-Ass had two down already, which sucked. I crept through the darkness with Shadow behind me. Then I heard a noise and raised my fist signalling Shadow to stop.

South Cicero Avenue

We were the alternative dream team.

Petra and Hit Girl. We cruised side by side up the avenue before pulling over beside a dark and forbidding alleyway. Jackal and Trojan had made their way to the opposite end of the complex alleyway system.

We were gonna score big – you go Hit Girl!

South Pulaski Road

"What the fuck are you?"

"I'm Batman!" I growled as I drove a fist into the man's face – God that felt good.

"What are we going to do with you?" Catwoman asked quietly of the man she had pinned to the alley wall.

"Stop playing with your food, Catwoman!"

"Spoilsport!" Catwoman replied, smacking the man across the head with her gauntlet.

The man slithered down the wall and was still.

"Oh, for fuck's sake!"

The cell rang again with more pickup instructions.

"Don't they think we have anything better to do than go around picking up their castoffs?" Murphy moaned.

"I think we're gonna need backup, tonight – call Voight?" Fellowes responded as he pushed a bound criminal into the back of his SUV.

"At this rate we're gonna spend every day till Christmas doing the paperwork!"

"Life's a bitch – get used to it..."

South Central Avenue

"Hey, not fucking fair!"

I watched as Splinter span around and drove his armoured knee into a man's face, sending him sprawling.

"You snooze, you lose, Kitty-Cat!" Splinter laughed.

I sensed something and span to my right catching another cunt around the head and putting him down.

"Oh, yeah – I've still got it!"

"Children – behave..." Shadow growled as she surveyed the scene. She cocked her head to one side and then turned towards a doorway.

"Kick-Ass – we need a door opened..." She added.

Safehouse F

The scoreboard was ticking up.

Kick-Ass was still on top, but we were still in the first quarter, with the whole game stretching ahead of us.

"Popcorn?" I asked Abby.

"Caramel?"

"Of course!"

South Harding Avenue

The two men grabbed the cash from the startled man behind the counter and ran towards the door of the store.

They got maybe eight feet before coming to a full stop. There in front of them was a sight, to behold. The woman was clad in white body-armour and had a slim, but mature figure. In her hands, she held a large, wicked-looking, UTAS UTS-15 bullpup pump-action shotgun. Beside her, snarling fit to burst was an enormous animal, clad in its own body armour. Behind them both, stood the instantly recognisable bulk of Iron Hide. The woman racked back the pump-action to get their full attention.

Both men raised their pistols up.

"You boys gonna come quietly?" An electronically distorted voice growled.

"Two against one, bitch!"

"You two know German?"

"Huh?"

"Well my dog does – Schwanz!"

The men's eyes went wide as the dog bolted forwards and sank its jaws into the one of the two available groins.

"Fuck, fuck, fuck!" The man screamed as he fell to the ground, wrestling with the dog and dropping his pistol.

The owner of the store came to the door to see what was happening. He was just in time to witness the second man placing his pistol on the ground.

"Please take what belongs to you, sir!" The white apparition growled.

The owner grabbed hold of the cash bag and nodding his thanks, retreated into his store.

A crowd was gathering as Medic secured the hands of the man without a dog on his balls. She secured him to a metal eye on the outside of the store normally reserved for dogs.

"Eisenhower, tot!" She growled and Eisenhower instantly withdrew, glaring and licking her jaws.

The second man joined his unfortunate companion, grimacing with pain. Medic handed the broken down pistols to the storeowner for safekeeping until the Cops arrived.

South Cicero Avenue

"At the end of the first quarter, we have a tie for the lead – Kick-Ass and Medic with Eisenhower!" Battle Guy reported over the comms.

"Medic?" I growled.

That bitch was not gonna beat me; nobody beat Hit-Girl! I ran forwards into the darkness, followed by Petra. We both saw the man at the same time...

"He's mine!" I yelled.

"Fuck that, bitch – he's mine!" Petra challenged.

The unfortunate target must have shit himself as he saw two armoured vigilantes running towards him full tilt. We both kicked out at the same time sending the man flying a good distance.

"Got him!" Petra announced happily.

"Like fuck, you did!"

"My point!" Petra retorted.

"You gonna challenge me, cunt?"

"You're not much of a challenge..."

"Girls!" Jackal growled. "While I like a good chick fight as much as the next man – we have a job to do. Behave or I'll bang both your heads together!"

We both watched as Jackal dumped two unconscious men beside our own.

"Battle Guy; that would be two up for Jackal and half each for the two little bitches!"

South Central Avenue

"The two little bitches – err, Hit Girl and Petra are now on the board and Jackal is up there with Kick-Ass and Medic!"

The call came in just as the door exploded to the weight of Kick-Ass smashing through. I rushed past him, determined to beat Jackal or I would never hear the end of it! As I had suspected, we had found a drug den. The men were playing cards and there was a ton of money on the table.

"Now this can go easy, or it can go hard..." I began.

"Fuck easy!" Wildcat announced as she cannoned into the men, kicking and punching.

"I like her style!" Kick-Ass growled diving into the maelstrom.

"Fuck!" I yelled out as I glared at Splinter and we both entered the fray.

South Cicero Avenue

"Please, I made a mistake..."

"Yes, you did – any other night and maybe I might have let you walk; only tonight is not good for me...!"

I punched the man into silence and dragged him into the growing pile.

"You're getting there, Hit Girl!" Trojan laughed.

I scowled and swore violently.

Chicago Police Department District 21

"Fuck off, you two – this is beyond a fucking joke now!" Sergeant Trudy Platt announced from behind her desk.

"Sorry – it's not a night to be bad!" Fellowes grinned.

"Oh, before I forget, Voight's on his way in with eight..." Murphy laughed.

"I'll get you for this, you won't escape my wrath!" Platt retorted a smile on her face before turning to the Officers behind her. "More coming in, you sorry excuses for Cops, so get to work!"

South Pulaski Road

They never knew what hit them as we both attacked without warning.

The burning fire in the barrel highlighted our shadows, but nothing more. I kicked and I punched, sending one man towards Catwoman who swung him against the brickwork of the alleyway. I was running on the intense high of the adrenalin rush.

Catwoman had a spring in her step as she used her liveness to great advantage, sidestepping anyone who attacked her and following up with a powerful punch to somewhere delicate.

By the time we had finished there were four more for the slammer.

Safehouse F

Everybody returned very tired, but pleased with the night's work.

I had to see what the total was. I pushed into the Control Centre and groaned. We had put forty-six criminals behind bars, but I was low down on the scoreboard. Shadow had been beaten, by everybody but Wildcat, Splinter, Batman and Catwoman who had all tied with three each. Even my own Mother and Eisenhower had beaten me, with four! I was pleased to see that Hit Girl and Petra looked pissed off too, as they had drawn with Kick-Ass, Medic and Trojan.

The winner with six was the very smug looking Mist!

Chapter 198*: And They Assemble

Author's Note: As a reminder: Cameron and Natasha are brother and sister who first appeared in Chapter 89 of Forsaken, before starring in their own offshoot: Hit Girl Hits Britain. Brooke first appeared in Chapter 169 of Forsaken and yes; she is the same Brooke who appears in KA2.

The following morning
Wednesday

West Ridge

"Well done, both of you!"

"As Mindy said; well done. You have now both graduated from the Fusion Boot Camp!" I said as seriously as possible.

"Thanks, Dave," Selina said, giving me a big hug.

"It's been fun, but more than a little painful!" Bruce added hugging Mindy.

"We'll arrange to be with you, the first time you go out in Gotham. Fox should have your combat suits ready in a few more weeks – then Batman and Catwoman can wreak havoc!" Mindy said.

"I am very proud, Master Bruce and I do believe your father and mother would be, too," Alfred commented.

"Thank you, Alfred," Bruce replied.

"Now, you can both rest and do what you want until Saturday – but don't miss the parties on Thursday night – they should prove interesting!"

"Girl's behaving badly?" Selina asked innocently.

"Oh yes!" Mindy replied.

"What about us?" Bruce enquired.

"It will be an education, Bruce!" I warned.

Thursday

Glenview

They were starting to arrive from across the globe, literally.

First, to arrive were our friends from the United Kingdom, Cameron and Natasha King.

We hugged tightly almost the moment they set foot in the house. They were very good friends and we had missed them.

"Oh my God, they are so cute and adorable!" Natasha exclaimed when she saw the twins.

"Believe me; they are not!" Dave laughed.

"You told me that you had kids, but wow!" Cameron added.

Both kids looked very pleased with the praise; they just ignored Dave's comments.

"You two have funny accents – you both sound like Josh!" Anne-Marie commented, always quick to point things out.

"We come from across the North Atlantic, just like Josh," Cameron explained.

"Where?" Danny asked curiously.

'Where' was one of Danny's favourite words, along with 'who', 'when' and 'why'! I quickly taught him how to use Google!

We all went upstairs to Danny's room where there was a huge map of the world on the wall.

"Okay," Cameron mused, examining the map. "You live here – in Chicago."

He pointed Chicago out on the map, in North America. Then he ran his finger in an easterly direction and then north.

"The United Kingdom. We live about two thirds up – in Scotland, in the middle there," He finished.

"Wow!" Danny exclaimed.

"Over three-thousand miles away!"

"Awesome!" Anne-Marie added, examining the map closely. "Can we go to Scotland?"

"Maybe – if you're good, we'll go back there next year..." Dave suggested.

"Is it safe?" Cameron asked meaningfully.

"I think so," I replied.

"Do they know?" Natasha asked quietly, indicating the kids.

"No, they do not."

Next, to arrive was our newest friend from New York.

"Hi, Brooke, good flight?"

"I've had worse. Good to see you Mindy and you Dave..."

"Am I missing something here?" Brooke asked, indicating the twins who stood patiently waiting to be introduced.

"Long story – please meet Anne-Marie and Danny – our kids..."

"Wow – you two don't hang about!" Brooke quipped. "They are so sweet!"

"Wait till you get to know them!" Dave laughed and received a scowl from Anne-Marie.

We had also received a lot of cards and packages over the preceding couple of weeks.

*'Good luck to you both and Congratulations
From all at the GCPD
Jim Gordon'*

*'Congratulations from GCHQ
Lt Craig Lawrence RN'*

*'Best Wishes to you both
Damon would have been proud
Sergeant Mackenzie, NYPD'*

I had no idea how GCHQ had found out, but then I figured that was what they did! It was also good to hear from Jim Gordon and Mackenzie.

We had put the King's and Brooke up in a hotel in town; we did not really have the space for many people to stay.

That evening

Lawndale

There was a knock on the door.

Marty was busy with Matty, so I got up to answer the door. I grinned after looking through the spy hole and pulling the door open.

"You have a warrant?"

"I do; a warrant to see a beautiful baby boy!"

"Come on in then; what a wonderful surprise...!" I exclaimed. "Marty; it's Hank and Trudy!"

"We had to come and see you guys; took a while – we've had a lot of activity at the District!" Trudy explained dryly.

I tried to look innocent, but Voight just smiled at me with his knowing smile. It was next to impossible to hide anything from Voight! I led them through into the living room.

"You guys moving?" Voight asked eyeing up the piles of cardboard cartons.

"Yeah; up to West Ridge – we need space for the little guy to grow..."

"Damn good idea – well here's something from all at the District," Trudy said, handing over a large bag and an envelope.

"Thank you," I said, hugging them both.

"Extortion – SPECTRE had nothing on Trudy!" Voight laughed as Trudy blushed slightly. "After the second round the District was empty for almost two days as everybody hit the streets to avoid the front desk!"

"I remember what that was like – every time somebody had a kid the District was suddenly very empty!"

"Oh my God; he's so sweet!" Trudy squeaked as she saw Matthew Todd Eisenburg for the first time.

The boy was only a week old, but he gazed up at the visitors. Marty passed my son to Trudy; I was amazed at the transformation from fire-breathing dragon to gentle, caring person. I knew that Trudy had a heart, but she kept it well hidden!

"You getting much sleep?" Voight asked with a grin.

"Since Matty appeared?" I laughed. "Not a chance!"

"You're looking good, Kim," Voight commented. "Going back out as Hawk once he's grown a bit?"

There it was; straight out, no beating about the bush!

"You know what my response is to that, Hank..." I cautioned.

"Yeah, I know; I'm damn proud of you. You too, Marty."

"I second that sentiment!" Trudy agreed, while gently rocking little Matty. "He has his mother's eyes, but the looks of his father; he'll be a knockout when he's older – fending all the girls off!"

"He getting a sister?" Voight asked innocently.

"Anything's possible!" I replied with a smirk and a blush.

South Cottage Grove Apartment 202

Living with my favourite boy has rather opened my eyes a bit; notice I used the word 'rather' – he is growing on me and changing how I speak!

I was noticing things about him that I had never really noticed when we were not living together. There were a few noticeable things really. Number one and the biggest one, was toast! He will eat the damn stuff twenty-four-seven, if I let him. Me, I might have the odd slice at breakfast, but very rarely – I see nothing special about the damn stuff.

Josh has three, thick slices every morning covered in thick, very tangy, orange marmalade – I hate orange marmalade, but I tolerate him eating it. Mind you, we can come back from school and he will promptly make himself a stack of toast and a mug of tea, and then plonk his ass, sorry arse, onto the couch in front of the TV to watch reruns of Stargate: Atlantis. He loves his toast; he says it makes him feel comfortable and he sees the toast as a bit of a treat – toast as a treat, in the middle of the afternoon?

What could be worse than that, you might ask?

Marmite!

It stinks!

I hate it!

It is vile!

He likes to smother it on toast and then bring it to bed of all places! The smell almost makes me throw up and then there is the 'toast crumbs in the bed' problem. Okay, I know that I have some bad habits that annoy Josh, but Marmite on toast...!

..._...

I will tolerate the gallons of tea that he drinks, as I drink the odd cup here and there; despite the fact, he refuses to touch 'American Tea'. He will only drink 'English Breakfast Tea', or that foul stuff: 'Earl Grey Tea'. Nevertheless, he also has to have certain 'comfort' foods that he says 'remind him of home'.

HP sauce – what, the hell, is in that stuff?

I admit it has an interesting taste, but I generally avoid it, although Josh loves to smother his 'chips' in the vile looking substance and by 'chips', I mean fries. Just do not get me started on his terminology for things – he refuses to use our words, as in American words, which just causes confusion for me as I try to translate things in my head!

We have met halfway on that. I cook 'chips' instead of 'fries' now and eat 'crisps' instead of 'chips'. However, he now goes to the 'bathroom' for a pee, instead of going to the 'loo', 'bog' or 'head'; it just sounds better and less crude!

One thing, though, that I have found myself in the habit of, is eating stuff on toast. Yeah, I slammed him for eating toast, but he loves emptying a tin of something over some toast, especially baked beans – quick and easy, can sometimes be messy, but very tasty.

My, err disturbed mind also got curious when he came home one evening with a couple of small tins of 'Heinz Spotted Dick' – spotted dick! That just sounded so dirty and I was supposed to eat it smothered in custard... I just had to try it – I ended up making Josh buy more that weekend. However, I drew the line at suet pudding – when I saw what suet was, I almost threw up at the thought of eating it. The British have some weird eating habits! Mind you, you should have seen Mindy's face when I told her that I had had custard with some of Josh's spotted dick for dinner and that she should try some...

..._...

Do not get me wrong, moving in with Joshua has been wonderful and it is working out great, I just seem to have picked up his British habit of complaining constantly! Josh says he is determined to make me speak properly and for me to learn to use a knife and fork properly. I am even getting in trouble at school for misspelling things now; I am putting extra 'L's in and 'U's. Josh can get away with that, I cannot!

I will readily admit that we spend an inordinate amount of time naked; well I did anyway. Josh was a little more reluctant initially, or maybe the word should be reserved.

I was a nymphomaniac and proud of it!

The next morning
Thursday

North Park Elementary School

"You two behave now and remember that you are being picked up by Paige and staying with them tonight, okay?"

"Will Megan be there?" Anne-Marie asked.

I knew that Anne-Marie adored Megan and the feeling was mutual. I just hoped that Megan was not teaching them anything bad!

"No, she will be at the party, tonight; I told you earlier."

"Oh yeah, you did – never mind!"

"Will we see you in the morning, before school?"

"Not sure, Danny, but we will pick you up after school, okay?"

"Okay – see ya..."

Tonight, we were all going to have some fun!

I wondered what we would be like, on Friday morning and I was a little worried about what I might be letting myself in for – I had a distinct feeling that if Erika and Chloe had anything to do with it, I would be spending most of the night naked!

Oh, well, it was not every day that you got married, so I figured that letting my hair down, figuratively speaking, was okay. I grinned to myself as I remembered the last time that I 'let my hair down'; I ended up naked and in a threesome with Chloe and Erika!

I had no idea what the 'men' would be doing; I just hoped that they would behave. Admittedly, they were all a little more reserved than Chloe!

Mind you, the thought of them all naked... Behave Mindy; you are getting married in less than seventy-two hours.

God I was nervous!

Marty was in charge of the entertainment for the men.

I had no idea what it was going to be, but I had an idea. You just have to try to have fun, otherwise what's the point... I also had an inkling what the girls might be getting up to as well!

Us, we were much more mature and reserved...

Chapter 199*: Batchelorette

Please be warned that this chapter includes smut and behaviour that should be seen as indecent and salacious, including words or insinuations of a very dubious, unseemly or otherwise downright dirty nature.

A fun chapter before the good stuff begins.

As the Colonel said: 'Try to have fun, otherwise what's the point!'

That night

Glenview

It had started out as a bachelorette night, only wow, the night went off like a freakin' hand grenade!

The twins were with Marcus and Paige for the night. Dave was at West Ridge with Marty, Cameron, Josh, Tommy, Curtis, Kyle and Bruce. Glenview was full of women: Abby, Brooke, Erika, Chloe, Hailee, Mathilda, Megan, Natasha, Selina and myself. Oh, Sophia was there, too!

The best bit about the night was that we could all be ourselves; everybody present knew about Fusion, although I was not sure if everybody knew about Chloe sexual tendencies...

"You girls ready for a night of Hit Girl debauchery?" Chloe demanded loudly.

"I'll take anything I can get!" Natasha announced.

"Your accent is so cute!" Brooke commented with a grin.

"Remember – I'm only eleven!" Megan reminded everybody uneasily.

"We'll get you a blindfold then, sweetie!" Mathilda teased with a grin.

Megan scowled and blushed a little.

Chloe and Brooke started exchanging stories about me – Chloe was curious about what I was like at school. I left them to it, not wanting to hear about my time at school; those memories still haunted me. I hoped that Brooke would be honest and come clean about her part in my time at school.

..._...

A short while later, with loud music pounding, I was chatting, actually giggling, with Hailee and Erika when Brooke came over to us.

"I want to see more...!" Brooke said, dropping a certain magazine onto the table.

Chloe froze. Erika smirked. The other girls screamed out their agreement.

"Well, Chloe – up for another display?" Erika asked seductively.

Chloe blushed madly but I could see her thinking about it. I also knew that she would not say no.

"You did use the word, 'debauchery', earlier." Hailee pointed out.

"Yeah – my mouth gets me in a lot of trouble..." Chloe growled.

"That may be, but apparently Mindy, your mouth is to die for, not to mention that tongue...!" Selina mentioned casually.

I went bright red and tried to stammer denials.

"The whole damn Manor heard you licking out Chloe, Mindy!" Selina laughed. "What was it that Chloe yelled?"

Megan spoke up.

"You are so much better than Josh!" She screamed in a very good impression of Chloe screaming.

Everybody laughed.

"Chloe; any problems with watching the DVD?" I asked the mortified teenager.

"We already gave the boys permission," Chloe replied with a glance at Megan who blushed. "Not really – Megan can watch it with permission, this time!"

..._...

Now, you may wonder why Megan was at the party; she was only eleven, but earlier that week I had offered her the chance.

"If I let you come to the party, you have to be very grown up and mature. You will be with adults and older teenagers. I am only letting you come, as you are a member of Fusion. Do not do anything to show me, or Fusion up, understand Wildcat?"

"Yes, Ma'am!" Megan replied.

"And whatever you do, you tell nobody about what you witness; especially not Dave," I growled. "I still get the piss taken out of me for sharing a bath with Chloe in New York!"

Wow!

Watching yourself on a 65-inch television in full HD was a new experience, especially when you were naked. Every scream was so humiliating and as for the heavy breathing...!

Erika seemed comfortable with watching herself; nevertheless it was yours truly who was blushing. Mind you, everybody was captivated and nobody turned to look at me. Mindy was the first to say something when it ended.

"Wow! It's different this time round – glad this couch is leather; it'll wipe down!"

"Hands up who has dry knickers...," Selina asked, while blushing.

"Technically mine are dry; I'm not wearing any!" Erika admitted.

No hands went up; even Megan kept hers down, but she blushed quite a bit.

"That was awesome!" Natasha admitted with a grin.

I had reluctantly allowed alcohol and I had told Megan that she could have one drink, only.

Chloe had already started and so had most of the others – mostly Vodka. Megan had taken one sip and then spat it out, to lots of derisive laughter. She tried a glass of white wine, which Mathilda and Erika were drinking and she said it was okay.

It was not long before everybody was in the pool, only there were no swimsuits in evidence!

What a visitor might have thought, seeing ten females running about naked...? The evening was about fun, so who gave a fuck – not us at any rate! Initially, I felt a little self-conscious as some present had way bigger tits than I had, but some had smaller, so I was not complaining. I was also surprised that Abby did not bat an eyelid about stripping naked, either and neither did Megan who, other than Selina, was the youngest there, by quite a large margin.

Megan looked at me. "So... Who's showing who up and what happened to being 'grown up and mature'?" She asked with a smirk.

"Well, I forgot to invite anybody who was 'grown up and mature!'" I growled back as Erika grabbed me around the waist and pulled me screaming into deeper water.

The place was chaos, but a good chaos!

There was a lot of giggling and laughing – the alcohol was taking affect, which was not a surprise. I was amazed at the friends that Mindy had. They were remarkably caring, which in itself was a surprise considering what these people did as their alternative selves.

Most of them were killers. I had figured out who most of them were, although I was not sure what to make of Selina or Megan; they both seemed very young. Chloe was nice, just a little bit nuts. I was shocked to find that she, and Erika, had allowed themselves to be filmed infiltrating an 'L' bar!

Natasha lay on her back, on the steps on one side of the pool.

Chloe was busy administering to her needs down below, while Hailee looked after the top half. Both girls were very naked. Megan just stood there and watched, open-mouthed, as Abby and Selina ran their hands over each other's body. Erika appeared from under the water and spoke to Megan.

"Go easy, Megan – rub gently or you'll get sore!" She cautioned before swimming away with a grin.

Megan went very red, but continued whatever she was doing under the water. Mindy was chatting away with Mathilda as they swam. Considering that the last time I had seen Mindy in a sexual situation, she had been cold as anything, but now – holy fuck! I looked back over the years and deeply regretted what I had done to Mindy – the date-ditch especially. We could have been good friends, but... Anyway, I was glad we could be friends now and knowing her secret, that was awesome.

That was when the pizza delivery arrived.

Mathilda and Natasha actually answered the door, dripping wet and stark naked. Something told me that delivery driver enjoyed his shift considering the eyeful he had gotten!

West Ridge

There was total silence.

"That was so much better second time around!" Josh admitted.

"Hell, yeah!" I agreed.

Tommy, Curtis and Bruce were red faced and totally speechless.

"Bit much for you guys, eh!" Kyle laughed. "I need the bathroom."

"Me, too!" Cameron admitted.

"You have one hot girlfriend, Josh!" Marty chipped in.

"Steaks are ready!" Alfred called and we headed out to the deck.

Alfred had cooked a massive pile of equally massive steaks. There was salad and masses of fries to go with the steaks. Marty, Cameron, Josh, Kyle and I helped ourselves to beer to wash down the steaks. I allowed Tommy, Curtis and Bruce to have a beer each, but only the one. Curtis was not overly amused with his beer, but drank it anyway.

Tommy, it seemed, was familiar with drinking from his time in captivity, so he already had a taste for alcohol. Bruce had never touched a drink before, but he enjoyed the beer nonetheless. After the steaks, we helped ourselves to some ice cream and settled down to a movie.

I wondered how the girls were getting on – we would find out in the morning over breakfast.

Glenview

I could not remember when I had last eaten so much.

All the pizza was gone and they had been large pizzas, too! After adding copious amounts of ice cream, we all collapsed on the couches to watch a movie. I was knackered and felt like sleeping; it had been a very energetic evening.

Nevertheless, it had been fun.

As I started to doze off, I wondered how Dave was doing.

The following morning
Friday

Glenview

"Oh wow!"

"You may be right there, Curtis!" Josh exclaimed as he examined the interesting scene before us.

"Megan has err, expanded a bit..."

"If by that you mean she has tits and curves; then yes, she has," Josh agreed.

"You think they forgot that we were coming over for breakfast?" I asked with a grin.

There was movement amongst the girls on the various couches. A head stuck up; it was Megan.

"What's the racket?" She asked tiredly and then she focussed on Curtis. "Fuck, fuck, FUCK!"

She rapidly grabbed a cushion and covered herself. Another face appeared; it was Selina – she sat up and noticed Bruce.

"Oh, hi, Bruce..."

"Err, hi Cat – nice err, cat..." Bruce replied staring at a very naked Selina who then looked down at herself.

"Oh, shit!" She shouted, her eyes going wide and seizing two more cushions and furiously prodding the nearest girl.

It was Mindy.

"What the fuck? I'm too fucking tired for more sex..."

"Oh wow!" Curtis repeated.

Curtis' voice seemed to wake Mindy up and she looked around before her face turned bright red.

"Oh for fuck's sake!" She growled staring up at me. "Hi, Dave!"

Mathilda and Erika stood up, oblivious to us watching and neither made a move to cover up. Mathilda glared at the other girls, all of whom were now awake. Brooke was attempting to cover up her admittedly appealing chest, while Hailee was blushing red and fumbling with the cushions. Natasha did not seem overly bothered by her display and was ignoring the scowl that her brother was giving her. Kyle was happily grinning at Chloe as she hid behind Brooke with Abby.

"Come on, bitches!" Mathilda called out. "You've all got beautiful bodies; what are you afraid of? I bet every dick over there is hard as a post! You've all got bits to be proud of, even Megan..."

"I'm not worried; we're all friends and I have nothing to hide..." Erika added.

Chloe grimaced and then stood up.

"She has a point!" Chloe admitted, coming out from behind Brooke.

Mindy smirked at Brooke.

"It's biology, bitch," She proclaimed. "Don't fight it!"

Brooke's mouth dropped open and she shrugged. I threw down a large pile of towels I had just grabbed from beside the pool.

"I think you girls need a swim or a shower and then we'll have breakfast!" I suggested.

Megan jumped up and grabbed a towel, but she took her time wrapping herself in it. She looked over at Curtis.

"You like what you see...?"

"I'm not complaining..."

"Is that all you can say?"

"Don't take offense, Megan..." Brooke said as she wrapped herself in a towel, much to Cameron and Tommy's annoyance. "If he can't think that means his brain is starved of blood; so where else might the blood be...?"

"Oh!" Megan exclaimed, catching on. "Come on..."

Megan took hold of Curtis' hand and dragged him towards the stairs down to the basement. Kyle, ever the ladies' man, helped Hailee with her towel and they both headed for the pool.

"What are we going to do with you?" Josh asked Chloe with more than a little exasperation, who was holding her towel and making no effort to cover up.

She whispered something in Chloe's ear and Josh blushed. Then they both vanished up the stairs together. Abby and Brooke went to get dressed, while Natasha and Selina remained wrapped in a towel each. I noticed that Bruce and Selina were exchanging many unspoken words and Selina was not complaining.

It was time to start cooking.

By the time breakfast was cooked, everybody was dressed.

There seemed to be a lot of chatter, and everybody was very hungry – not surprisingly! Once cooked, I left all the food on large plates on the counter and everybody helped themselves to bacon, eggs, sausages and pancakes. Sophia had a large bowl of bacon and sausages, too.

There were still more than a few blushes from the girls, but nobody was overly bothered.

That afternoon

North Park Elementary School

I looked around and then my heart leapt as I recognised the Jaguar.

"Mindy!" Danny yelled and I turned to see Dave and Mindy.

I was ecstatic to see them; we had only been apart for one night, but I found myself missing them both.

"Told you we'd pick you both up from school..." Mindy said as I hugged her tightly.

"Let's go get something to eat; then we are all having early nights as we have a very big day tomorrow," Dave added.

I was really looking forward to tomorrow; I had an awesome dress to wear. I had no idea what Mindy would be wearing, but I was certain that she would look beautiful in whatever she was wearing.

Danny would be wearing a suit. I had seen him in it and he looked cool. I could not believe that it had only been three weeks since Daddy had died; it felt like much longer and we had both been made to feel loved and wanted, every minute since then.

I was determined to do everything that I could to make Dave and Mindy's special day, very, very, special.

Chapter 200*: Purple, Green and Yellow

Well, this is it – Dave and Mindy are getting married!

*This momentous event is split over two chapters. Chapters 200 and 201.

The good stuff; the wedding night, is in Chapter 201 and needs plenty of space and I hope it will not for the faint hearted, or for those who get embarrassed when somebody says 'boob'!

Friday night

Glenview

Dave was already asleep, but the impending events of the following day were keeping me awake as I ran everything through my confused mind.

I was not scared, but I was a little apprehensive about what was about to occur. For me it meant a stable future; I knew that I was doing the right thing, but I also had doubts and I had no idea why.

Finally, after what seemed like hours, I dozed off and drifted into a fitful sleep.

...+...

I found myself in a room, an empty room with white walls, and matching floor and ceiling. I was alone. At least I thought I was...

"You look pensive, baby doll."

"I am, Daddy," I replied automatically, then turned to see my father leaning against the wall a few feet away from me.

"Talk to me, child."

"I – I don't think I'm going to be good enough for Dave..."

Daddy surprised me with his answer.

"Are you fucking nuts?"

"Huh!"

"Dammit! I brought you up to be intelligent, Mindy!"

I was more than a little confused by my father's outburst, but I pushed on nonetheless; I was never one to back down.

"He does so much for me – I don't know if I deserve..."

Daddy looked at me as if I were six-years-old.

"Listen, child – I can't believe I'm actually saying this, but Dave is the perfect companion for you. He cares – he really does and I know that he would die for you. You really can't ask more of a guy than that, Mindy, you really can't!"

"I know he loves me; I don't doubt that, and I love him – but..."

"But, what?"

I could tell that Daddy was starting to get a little testy!

"He could find somebody better than me; I'd only be holding him back. I know I owe him, but..."

Daddy laughed and gave me a very patronising look indeed.

"Oh, yeah, child – you owe the kid! He has saved your life more than once, twice before he even knew you properly... He drove a thousand miles and searched non-stop, for weeks, just to find you! Then when he found you, what happened?"

Now I felt ashamed as I thought back and heard my own words: 'What the fuck do you want? I don't need your fucking help, cunt!' I then heard more of my own words, echoing in my head: 'Are you fucking deaf, or just an idiot? Did you not hear me, the other fucking night? I don't need your fucking help, cunt!' Damn, I could be a real bitch sometimes!

"Not pretty, huh?" Daddy asked rhetorically.

"Not my finest hour!"

"But you've had better since, all thanks to the help and support that one young Dave Lizewski has given you. I would never have believed that 'Ass-Kick' would turn out as he has and that is because of you, child! You taught him everything, Mindy, and I am damn proud of you for that. However, you did not stop there – you built an amazing organisation, with a catchy name: Fusion. I really could not be any more proud of you, baby doll – your Mother is really proud of you, too."

I smiled and felt myself blushing.

"That boy, no that young man, he will stay with you and he will protect you and I know that you will do the same for him. Tomorrow, you will publicly make that vow to each other, as your mother and I did to each other, years ago. I am damn proud of you, honeybun and we both severely wish that we could be there with you, for your special day. I really, really, hate saying this, but Dave is perfect for you and he is the best thing that could have ever happened to you, Mindy. You are a special girl that needs a special person to be with her. I've been watching you – ever since Dave killed that bastard, Frank D'Amico."

That sounded so worrying on so many levels!

"You've seen everything?" I queried tentatively.

"Unfortunately – yes!" Daddy replied, closing his eyes and shaking his head. "Don't worry; I closed my eyes when you posed naked for Dave, before you two made out for the first time and... The less said about what happened in Gotham... The better!"

Oh, crap! I felt myself blushing madly.

"And as for the night you two got engaged...!"

"Daddy!" My face was getting very hot.

"Enough said. You will always be my little girl, whether you are eleven or nearly eighteen. I am so very, very proud of you and I miss you more than anything."

"I miss you too, Daddy."

"So, no more talk about being wrong for Dave, young lady!"

I rolled my eyes.

"Okay, Daddy, I trust you as always."

"Good call, baby doll!"

"Sleep tight, Daddy!"

I found myself in a room, an empty room with white walls, and matching floor and ceiling. I was alone. At least I thought I was...

"You ready for this, sport?"

"Definitely, Dad," I replied automatically, and then turned to see my father standing a few feet away from me.

"I'm real proud of you, pal. Okay, okay, at first I thought you were wasting your life, but then I saw what you have made of your life since and... Wow! Thanks to Damon, I even got to see what occurred when you first met that girl."

"Damon?"

"Mindy's Dad..."

"You know Damon...? Hang on... You know who Mindy is?"

"Mindy is the girl that crept into your bedroom one night and sat crying on your bed..."

"You knew about that?"

"Yeah, I did... I was glad to see you with a girl in your bedroom – sort of!"

"Stop embarrassing the boy, James!"

Mom was now standing beside Dad. Alice Lizewski studied her son for a moment before speaking again. There were tears in her eyes.

"I am so proud of you, Dave – words just can't say how much."

The walls seemed to melt away and then...

"Dave?"

"Mindy?"

Mindy was standing two feet away from me, and leaning against another doorframe was a man that I assumed was Damon Macready, having never seen him without his Big Daddy mask, but he looked very similar to the photo of him that hung in the Safehouse.

"Damon."

Damon nodded with a smile, which was a surprise.

"Hi, James, Alice," he said, cheerfully.

"You know my parents?" I asked.

"We've been spending a lot of time together since you and Mindy, err started living together," Damon growled. "I'm glad you at least waited until she was sixteen!"

"Daddy!" Mindy exclaimed, blushing.

I reached out and took her hand in mine, reassuring her.

"Damon, behave!"

I immediately recognised Mindy's mother Kathleen. The eyes were identical, as was the shape of the face.

"Hello, Mrs Macready," I said.

"Hello, Dave – it's good to meet my daughter's partner – Damon had some, err, interesting things to say about you."

"I bet he did..." I replied sardonically.

"He means well... Thankfully Mindy got my brains..."

"And your looks, lucky for her!" James laughed.

Everything started to fade; I took one more look at Mindy.

"Weird, huh?"

"Yeah!" Mindy agreed.

...+...

"You okay?"

"What – oh, yes!"

We were awake again.

"Daddy gave us his blessing, last night."

"Been knocked on the head, had he?" Dave quipped.

I laughed.

"Or worse! Did that actually happen?"

"Your Mom is very beautiful and she has passed all her beauty onto you..."

I was blushing with pride.

"I love you Dave..."

The following morning

Chicago

We were up early and we all headed for a major five-star hotel in the centre of Chicago.

There we met up with the others and I reluctantly separated from Dave as we headed for different suites to get ourselves ready. I was seized by my over excited bridesmaids, which with Chloe as Maid of Honour included Abby, Erika, Hailee and Megan. Once in our suite on the forty-sixth-floor, I took a long shower and then with the help of the girls, I got myself cleaned up and dressed.

I needed help as I was trembling with fright – a novelty for me I can tell you! I could not even shave my own damn legs for fuck's sake, but I was being waited on, hand and foot. Chloe fussed over me like a mother hen, ordering around my bridesmaids to ensure that nothing was missed. I had chosen some very seductive lingerie to wear beneath my dress, which I hoped would make Dave explode, and Chloe ensured that I was wearing the correct set.

The makeup took the longest, which was also a novelty; I never usually bothered with any makeup but Chloe was determined that I should look right for my big day. For somebody who normally does everything herself, being waited on and not being allowed to do anything for my self was a little trying!

Once I was as ready as I could be, I sat and stared out of the window while the others showered and prepared themselves for the day. I had never felt so nervous and it took all my concentration just to remain sitting still. All around me there was chaos as the five girls dashed around and sorted themselves out.

In the middle of it all Marcus appeared with Anne-Marie, so she could get ready.

..._...

"Hi, Marcus – bit busy – see ya!" Megan called out as she ran past Marcus and Anne-Marie wearing nothing but her bra and knickers.

Marcus just stood there a little stunned.

"Marcus!" Chloe exclaimed – she was wearing even less with only a towel to maintain her dignity – assuming she had any left after the party! She seized Anne-Marie's hand and dragged her off towards the bedroom, telling her to strip.

I grinned at the man who had raised me for the first five years of my life and then taken me in again for some of the most difficult years of my life. He paused as I stood up and his mouth just flapped for almost a full minute.

"You look – beautiful, Mindy..."

He was speechless and I blushed badly!

"Thank you," I said quietly, feeling tears of happiness welling up as I gave Marcus a kiss on the cheek.

"I never thought that I would ever see you dressed so beautifully – it just never seemed to be your thing!"

"I never thought I would either – with this dress, I feel like a different woman – I feel like Mindy Macready today and only Mindy Macready..." I felt the tears in my eyes and gripped my hands together to stop them from shaking.

Marcus had a momentary thought. "You packing?" He asked quietly.

"Do I really need to answer that?" I replied with an embarrassed grin as I pulled up a side of my dress, turning away from where Anne-Marie stood as she came out of the bathroom wrapped in a fluffy white towel.

There on my right thigh, secured in a white thigh holster, was a custom Glock 26 Gen 4 with a white frame and a purple slide!

"Specially commissioned for today!" I grinned sheepishly. "You never know..."

"With you? No, we never know... Tasteful, though," Marcus quipped dryly. "Matches the dress!"

"That was awesome!" Josh commented, gazing at my bare leg as he came in the door.

I quickly dropped the dress and scowled at Joshua.

"You can check me out, if you wish," Chloe suggested, pulling up one side of her own dress to reveal a single, long leg.

"Almost as good," Josh quipped.

"Asshole!" Chloe growled with a grin.

Once all the girls were dressed and ready, we headed downstairs to the venue. At least we tried to; my legs would not move I was so nervous. Chloe enlisted Hailee and Erika to assist me to the elevator.

The time had come... It was happening.

I was nervous as hell.

Standing there with my Best Man, Marty, I was shaking from head to toe. I had only felt this nervous once before and that was when I had been strapping on a jetpack that had Gatling guns attached! Even that had seemed easier than standing there waiting for Mindy.

To ease my nervousness, I glanced around the venue. The place was very full. Everybody that we had invited was present. I could see all our friends: Isaac Swanson, Jack Bay, Bruce Wayne, Selina Kyle, Alfred Pennyworth, Cameron and Natasha King, a crying Paige, and Cathy Bennett with Ryan. Tony and Shannon Morgan were there too, along with Kim and baby Matty. Also present were Brooke, Vicky Richards, Sam Fellowes and Paul Murphy along with their own families.

I felt a slight pang in my stomach as I wished that Dad and Mom could have been in those seats, along with Damon and Kathleen, but it was not to be.

My thoughts were interrupted by the Wedding March beginning.

..._...

I turned and saw Marcus appear in the doorway.

Behind him came Josh, Kyle, Tommy and Curtis. All wore Lingfield grey morning suits with ivory waistcoats and wing collars with purple cravats, as did Marty and I. Each morning tailcoat had a jade green pocket square. The suit seemed to crush me and I was having trouble breathing, but I knew that was just the nervousness.

Next came Anne-Marie and Danny. Anne-Marie was our flower girl and wore a pure white dress with a purple sash that tied in a broad bow at the back. She wore a purple flower in her hair that had been curled and tied back; she looked very beautiful. Danny wore a smaller version of the same suit that I wore and he was our pageboy.

Marcus guided the youngsters to the aisle between the chairs and they were followed by Tommy and Curtis, then Kyle and Josh. Then came the Bridesmaids, all of whom wore floor length, purple, off the shoulder dresses, they all looked stunning, and most of them were blushing. It struck me as strange that these same young women while looking so beautiful and normal were also quite lethal when out fighting Chicago's worst criminals.

The Bridesmaids formed up behind the groomsmen with Megan and Abby in front, with Erika and Hailee behind. It had to be the first time that I had ever seen Hailee in a dress; she looked stunning and she was blushing madly. In pride of place, behind the bridesmaids came Chloe in her position as Maid of Honour. She was blushing madly too and she looked simply amazing.

Marcus stood still behind them all, his left arm out ready to receive his daughter's hand.

I was sweating badly and the suspense was killing me.

..._...

Finally, Mindy appeared and she took Marcus' hand.

I was astounded by what I saw.

Mindy's sleeveless dress was floor-length and of white satin, with a V-neckline and an empire waist. The dress was finished off with a purple sash and a white and purple court train. Mindy's natural blonde hair fell past her shoulder, and was draped loosely down her left side. She wore diamond earrings and a diamond necklace.

She was smiling, as I had never seen her smile before. She was more beautiful than I had ever seen her and I was speechless. Right at that moment, you could have knocked me down with a feather! She was gripping onto Marcus' arm rather tightly I noticed; she must have been very nervous.

The processional began and with a nudge from Josh, the twins began their walk towards me, Anne-Marie blushing sweetly. It seemed to take an age for them to come level with me, but finally they arrived. Josh smiled encouragingly as he turned and stood beside Marty with Kyle, Curtis and Tommy. The girls lined up on the other side of the aisle, all still blushing and enjoying the attention that they were receiving.

"Damn you look hot, Megan!" Curtis said which made the colour of Megan's face almost match her dress.

He was right. Now that Megan was developing a more feminine figure, the dress did match and accentuate her developing curves very well.

As Marcus handed Mindy over to Dave, he glared at his future son-in-law.

"You take good care of her, you hear me!"

Mindy scowled and Marcus grinned at his adopted daughter.

"She's your problem now, Dave!" Marcus added and then he took a deep breath. "Thank God for that – freedom!"

There was a ripple of laughter from the assembled guests.

"Hey – you've still got me, remember!" Megan called out.

"Don't remind me!" Marcus replied, grimacing.

The Ceremony

"The ceremony of marriage in which you come to be united is one of the first and oldest ceremonies in the world. Marriage is the clasping of hands, the blending of two hearts and the union of two lives into one. Your marriage must stand, not by the authority of the State, nor by the seal on your wedding certificate but by the strength and power of the faith and love that you have for one another."

Somebody was crying – I could hear sobbing; how dare they cry, it was supposed to be a happy event!

"We are gathered here today to witness the coming together of two people whose hearts and spirits are entwined as one. You are adding to your life not only the affection of each other, but also the companionship and blessing of a deep trust as well. You are agreeing to share strength, responsibilities and love."

I peeked to the side – Chloe, Abby, Erika, Hailee and Megan were all tearing up; I was tempted to tell them all to get a fucking grip!

"Love is cultivating flexibility, patience, understanding and a sense of humour. Love is having the capacity to forgive and forget. Love is giving each other an atmosphere in which each can grow. Love is not only marrying the right partner, it is being the right partner."

"Here we go!" I quipped and heard polite laughter.

"Dave and Mindy will now exchange vows."

"I, Dave Lizewski, take you, Mindy Macready, to be my wife, my partner in life and my one true love. I will cherish our union and love you more each day than I did the day before. I will trust you and respect you, laugh with you and cry with you, loving you faithfully through good times and bad, regardless of the obstacles we may face together. I give you my hand, my heart, and my love, from this day forward for as long as we both shall live."

"You may now place the ring on her finger."

Dave delicately pushed the ring he had been holding onto my hand. The ring stopped against my engagement ring. Oh, fuck! I was crying – God, I hoped they were tears of joy!

"I, Mindy Macready...", I faltered for a moment; the emotion was getting too much. "...Take you, Dave Lizewski, to be my husband, my partner in life and my one true love. I will cherish our union and love you more each day than I did the day before. I will trust you and respect you, laugh with you and cry with you, loving you faithfully through good times and bad, regardless of the obstacles we may face together. I give you my hand, my heart, and my love, from this day forward for as long as we both shall live."

"You may now place the ring on his finger."

I was shaking – it was ridiculous, I was losing control; my hands shook as I pushed the band of gold onto his finger.

"As you wear these rings, whether you are together or apart for even just a moment, may these rings be a constant reminder of the promises you are making today. You have shown your love and affection by joining hands and have made promises of faith and devotion to each other. You have sealed these promises by the giving and receiving of the vows. You shall no longer walk alone. As your hearts will be your shelter and each other's arms will be your home. From this day forward, may your days be good and beautiful upon this earth... It is my privilege by the authority vested in me to pronounce you husband and wife!"

"Cool!" Megan exclaimed, causing a ripple of laughter.

"You may now kiss the bride!"

Everything around me seemed to dissolve as I gazed into Dave's blue eyes; they sparkled and were hypnotic. I felt his lips on mine; they tingled – and then I fucking melted! I felt the tears as they streamed down my cheeks when I wrapped my arms around my new husband and kissed him like there was no tomorrow.

We were finally interrupted by a discrete round of coughing from Marcus.

I let go of Dave and turned, holding his hand tight, not wanting to let go of him, not even for a second. I was blushing severely and my face was wet with my tears. I had never been happier than at that moment, not just because of my new husband beside me, but also because of all the people who stood in front of us smiling, clapping and cheering. They were there for Dave and for me, and they all meant so much to me.

...+...

I took a moment to think back to the start of everything.

The scared Kick-Ass at Rasul's apartment.

Almost killing Kick-Ass for causing my Daddy to die.

Then Kick-Ass stepping up and saving my life in D'Amico's kitchen.

Again, he stepped up with his immortal words:

"Hey! Why don't you pick on someone your own size?"

Then that damn bazooka – awesome!

...+...

"Daddy, I wish you could have been here," I whispered to myself.

I noticed that Mindy had started crying again.

My hand had hurt where Mindy had been squeezing it, at least until I had squeezed her back just as hard and she had reluctantly loosened her grip. Mindy was happier than I had ever seen her and I loved her more than ever. The day had been so perfect and it was such a great feeling to have all our friends around us for such a special day.

...+...

I took a moment and thought back.

It had been six years and almost six months since I had first seen Hit Girl in Rasul's apartment. I remembered it well, including what she had said to me on the roof in answer to my question:

"Who are you?"

"Me? I'm Hit Girl!"

It had been six years and a month since she had first introduced her true self to me and the first time that I had really seen her for whom she really was without the mask:

"Mindy, Mindy Macready..."

...+...

There was the tinge of sadness again that neither of us had had our parents there to witness the day, but that was life.

"I think that went well, don't you, James?"

"I would have to agree with you there, Damon – they are perfect for each other and Mindy is the image of her mother and very, very beautiful."

"Thank you, James, but flattery will get you nowhere!" Kathleen Macready said with a grin.

"James, stop flirting on your son's wedding day!" Alice Lizewski cautioned.

"I was just stating the obvious – Dave has managed to find himself the prettiest damn girl on the east coast!" James Lizewski persisted.

"I never thought I would ever see our daughter that happy," Damon Macready commented.

"Well your parenting skills were, to say the least, horrendous, Damon!" Kathleen said with a grimace.

"I did my best and yeah, in hindsight it probably wasn't all that successful..."

"Hey! This is supposed to be a happy day, so let's not go there again!" Alice called.

"Damon, remember, stay out of their suite tonight – you may see something that you will regret!" James cautioned with a laugh.

We moved outside, into the hotel gardens and the vixens gathered.

"You bitches, ready?" I called out and I threw my bridal bouquet behind me and instantly turned to see where it fell.

There was a rather violent clamouring of hands from the single females present and then I saw just one girl holding the bouquet triumphantly upwards. I laughed when I saw who it was and smiled at her and she smiled back.

"Oh, fuck!" Joshua exclaimed as he saw Chloe smirking at him and holding up the bouquet with a look of barely concealed lust on her face.

I laughed. They were both too young to marry, but their time would come.

After what seemed like several hours of photos, I was starting to feel hungry; it was time to eat.

The Wedding Lunch

We all sat down for an enormous meal.

It was great to chat with my friends and I was enjoying all the attention, which surprised me; I had been brought up to avoid attention and to keep to the shadows.

After the meal and a good deal of Champagne, Marty stood up to begin the speeches. I cringed at the thought of what the speeches were going to uncover, but I was pleased that we were in public, so certain stories could not be talked about!

..._...

"I've known Dave since first grade and I am so very happy and more than a little jealous, to be here today to see him marry the hottest girl around – err, other than Kim, of course!"

"Nice save, Marty!" Josh called to some laughter.

"I know they both love each other unreservedly and will always support each other till the day that they die. They are a unique couple, with their own, very unique, outlook on life. My time with Mindy has been an education and I love her like a sister. Anyway, I have plenty of embarrassing stories; so please see me after the meal. For now though, please raise your glasses for the Bride; Mindy Lizewski!"

..._...

Once Marty had sat back down, Chloe stood up and she looked absolutely stunning in her dress.

"Meeting Dave and Mindy changed my life, for so many reasons. I see Mindy as my big sister and Dave as my big brother. They have helped to guide me along the right paths as I have grown up over the past few years. There have been times that I have ignored them to my cost, thinking that I knew better, but they have always been there to pick me up when all went wrong and calmly tell me where I went wrong. I love them both to bits and I thank them for allowing me to be here for their special day and for choosing me to be their Maid of Honour. Ladies and gentlemen, the Groom, Dave Lizewski."

Chloe was crying as she sat back down again and I smiled over at her, ignoring my own tears of happiness.

..._...

"Welcome, everybody and thank you for coming to this auspicious event!" Marcus began. "As many of you know, I looked after Mindy from when she was only a few days old, until she was a few days past her fifth birthday. She was the sweetest baby I had ever laid eyes on. As she grew, she had not only the eyes of her mother, but also her looks, not to mention some of her traits.

"It is a tragedy that Kathleen Macready is no longer with us, she was a fabulous woman and she would have been so very proud of her daughter today. To me, Mindy is a very special young person who despite many distractions along the way has grown into the fabulous young woman that she is today.

"When she was eleven, she came back into my care after the death of her father, Damon. Mindy was very different to the five-year-old girl that I had last seen, all those years before; she was taller for a start!"

There was general laughter.

"Mindy had also picked up some new skills along the way; none of which I approved of. There were again plenty of tantrums and problems as she grew up – ask me later, I have plenty of stories! She became involved with a boy; a boy I did not initially approve of but one that persevered and I am glad that he did.

"That boy helped to keep Mindy on the straight and narrow – most of the time at least! While there were a few lapses, he was mainly successful. I owe a lot to that boy, or my daughter may not be here today as the perfect daughter that she is. Thank you, Dave Lizewski for being there for Mindy, every step of the way and every time that she needed you."

I was crying again! I loved Marcus as much as I loved Dave and he knew it, but... I jumped up and hugged Marcus almost to the point where he was struggling to breathe.

"Thank you..." I was unable to say anymore, so I sat back down again.

"It is amazing to see Mindy running a successful business and raising two of the most lovely, well behaved kids that I have known in a long time..."

"That is not exactly how I would describe Anne-Marie and Danny!" I quipped and received scowls from both of my kids. I smiled back as people laughed. "My kids are little monsters!"

"... She may be right!" Marcus continued with a grin. "Again, Mindy has only been successful thanks to the support of her friends and mostly thanks to the encouragement from the man who is now her husband, Dave Lizewski. Ladies and gentlemen, please raise your glasses to the Bride and Groom, Mr and Mrs Lizewski!"

..._...

Dave and I both stood up.

"Before we get flooded out by the women crying, I would like to thank you all for coming today and showing your support for us both; it is very humbling to know that we have so many good friends. For those of you not familiar with Mindy, she is usually a lot stronger than this and she does not usually burst into tears at the drop of a hat!" Dave said, squeezing my hand tightly.

"Thank you, all of you..." I could not say another word; I just hugged Dave as we both raised our glasses to everybody.

Late Afternoon

The Party

After a short rest, it was time to let our hair down and have some fun – just not the sort we had had the previous night!

As was expected, Dave and I had the first dance. To make things easier for me, the train of my dress was removable, which Erika and Hailee took care of for me. I grinned as the music began – somebody was having a laugh!

Okay, I will admit it; Dirty Dancing is one of my favourite films – especially the final dance... I looked Dave in the eyes as he began mouthing the words to me – we both knew them by heart. We both knew the dance movements too...

*Now I've had the time of my life
No I never felt like this before
Yes I swear it's the truth
and I owe it all to you*

Then I was mouthing the words back to Dave...

*'Cause I've had the time of my life
and I owe it all to you*

Whoever picked the song for us knew what they were doing...

*I've been waiting for so long
Now I've finally found someone
To stand by me*

It must have been Chloe...

*We saw the writing on the wall
As we felt this magical fantasy*

I felt so happy singing together with Dave...

*Now with passion in our eyes
There's no way we could disguise it secretly
So we take each other's hand
'Cause we seem to understand the urgency*

Just remember

You're the one thing

I can't get enough of

So I'll tell you something

This could be love because

The chorus was my favourite bit:

*Because... I've had the time of my life
No I never felt this way before
Yes I swear it's the truth
And I owe it all to you
'Cause I've had the time of my life
And I've searched through every open door
'Til I found the truth
And I owe it all to you*

No, we did not do the jumping thing. I mean, I could have done it – but it was just a little too public! It felt good being able to dance with Dave; he felt so soft and warm as I hugged him. I was also feeling a little aroused by the events of the day – no idea why!

..._...

Then the music changed as the DJ selected another suitable track, which upped the tempo and brought Chloe and her bridesmaids out onto the dancefloor with the groomsmen.

*I don't give a damn 'bout my reputation
You're living in the past, it's a new generation
A girl can do what she wants to do and that's what I'm gonna do*

*An' I don't give a damn 'bout my bad reputation
Oh no, not me*

Chloe, Hailee and Megan had jumped up eagerly as the first bars of the tune began – they all loved Joan Jett. While the song played and I hugged Dave, I thought again back over how we had come together. The assault on the D'Amico Penthouse being the start of everything. I remembered the elevator, the corridor and then the kitchen... Being rescued by Dave...

After that second, faster Dance with Dave, I took the opportunity to dance with Joshua, while Chloe danced with Dave.

"Thank you, Chloe; you have been wonderful at organising all the other girls, not to mention Anne-Marie and Danny," Dave said and I felt very embarrassed.

I would do anything for Dave and Mindy, without reservation. I had been overwhelmed when they had asked me to be their Maid of Honour; it was an amazing opportunity and it had showed me how much they loved me.

"I love you two and I am honoured to be able to this for you both..."

"We know," Dave said with smile and a kiss on the cheek. I felt my face warming up to overheat!

Dave laughed and passed me to Marcus, while he danced with Erika.

The day was so beautiful and I was grateful to have been a part of it.

Hearing so many people say such nice things about Dave and Mindy confirmed my feelings that they were good people. I loved the dress that I wore and everybody kept taking photos of me; I was in heaven! They also kept saying how sweet and cute I looked. The attention was fun, but I hated being called 'cute'!

My brother, however, enjoyed the attention he was receiving from the girls; he did not mind being referred to as 'cute' and lapped up all the attention!

My feelings for Dave and Mindy were growing day by day. Danny and I had talked about calling them Mom and Dad, but while Mom may not have been too bad; it had been a while since she had gone.

Dad, though, was still too fresh in our minds.

I finally got a chance to dance with my Maid of Honour.

"Thank you..."

Chloe was crying and I felt myself crying too as we hugged.

"I'd do anything for you, Mindy; today has been unbelievable and I have loved every minute," Chloe said quietly. "Thank you for entrusting this responsibility to me."

"I trust you unreservedly Chloe. You are a sister to me and you have always been there for me; even when I never listened..."

We hugged, holding each other tightly.

"You two going to cry all night?" Megan demanded.

"No," Chloe laughed, smiling down at the young girl. "Your turn, kid."

That evening

Now that the evening was in full swing, it was karaoke time!

Dave went up first.

"You sing something that embarrasses me; I'll fucking gut you!" Mindy growled.

This ought to be good, I thought. The machine kicked into life and I heard the music and saw the song – oh, cool! Mindy glared. The words started and Dave started singing, looking directly at Mindy...

*Every time I look into your loving eyes
I see a love that money just can't buy*

Mindy was actually starting to blush and was averting her eyes. Dave never flinched as he gazed at his new wife...

*One look, from you, I drift, away
Afraid that you, are here, to stay*

Mindy was now very red and Anne-Marie was enjoying every minute of it, dancing to the music...

*Anything you want, you got it
Anything you need, you got it
Anything at all, you got it, baby*

Mindy braced herself, looked up at Dave, and smirked, still an interesting shade of pink...

Every time I hold you, I begin to understand Everything about you tells me I'm your man

I could see tears spilling down Mindy's cheeks and she seemed oblivious to them, or the people watching her...

*I live, my life, to be, with you
No one, can do, the things, you do*

*Anything you want, you got it
Anything you need, you got it
Anything at all, you got it, baby*

*Anything you want, you got it
Anything you need, you got it*

Anything at all

Josh and Marty now joined in...

*Doo doo doo doo doo
Doo doo doo doo doo
Doo doo doo doo, you got it*

They left Dave to finish the song...

*I'm glad to give my love, to you
I know, you feel, the way, I do*

Everybody joined in for the remaining chorus...

*Anything you want, you got it
Anything you need, you got it
Anything at all, you got it, baby*

*Anything you want, you got it
Anything you need, you got it
Anything at all, you got it, baby*

Anything at all, you got it, baby

Then Dave had the final word...

You got it!

Mindy leapt up from her chair and jumped into Dave's arms hugging him tightly. The perfect song from the perfect man, the genius Roy Orbison.

Then it was Joshua's turn.

"Bet you can't match that!" Dave challenged.

"I am dreading this!" Chloe moaned as she sat down, taking off her heels to ease her swollen feet.

"I considered, 'Devil Woman!'" Chloe glared and Josh flinched. "But changed my mind..."

*Does she walk? Does she talk?
Does she come complete?*

*My homeroom homeroom angel
Always pulled me from my seat*

Chloe blushed – it was one of her favourite songs: Centrefold by the J Geils Band.

*She was pure like snowflakes
No one could ever stain
The memory of my angel
Could never cause me pain*

*Years go by I'm lookin' through
A girly magazine
And there's my homeroom angel
On the pages in between*

Chloe was giggling and blushing as Erika whispered something into her ear.

*My blood runs cold
My memory has just been sold
My angel is the centrefold
Angel is the centrefold*

...

*It's okay I understand
This ain't no never never land
I hope that when this issue's gone
I'll see you when your clothes are on*

*Take your car, yes we will
We'll take your car and drive it
We'll take it to a motel room
And take 'em off in private*

As Josh came to the end, Chloe jumped up, gave her boyfriend a big hug and a very deep kiss that seemed to shock Joshua, and caused more than a few wolf whistles.

The night was warming up steadily!

Now it was our turn!

"Okay, bitches – get up here!" I called.

We had prepared the song, just for that night: Abby, Erika, Chloe, Hailee, Megan and myself. Once in position, Hailee hit the music.

*When the going gets tough
The tough get going, tough, tough
When the going gets tough, the tough get ready*

I think the men were enjoying our singing.

Yeah, oh, du da do da

Even Marcus was enjoying the beat, along with Paige. Cathy was dancing with Ryan. I could even see Bruce and Selina dancing too.

*I got something to tell you
I got something to say
I'm gonna put this dream in motion
Never let nothing stand in my way
When the going gets touch
The tough get going*

Anne-Marie was dancing with her brother!

*I'm gonna get myself 'cross the river
That's the price I'm willing to pay
I'm gonna make you stand and deliver
And give me love in the old-fashion way*

Dave, Josh and Marty were now dancing to the music...

*Darlin', I'll climb any mountain
Darlin', I'll do anything
Ooo, can I touch you?

And do the things that lovers do
Ooo, wanna hold you
I gotta get it through to you, oh*

Kyle had attracted the attentions of Brooke – hope he knew what he was in for!

*When the going gets tough
The tough get going
When the going gets rough
The tough get rough
Hey, hey, hey
Oh baby*

Curtis was dancing with Natasha and doing very well, too.

*I'm gonna buy me a one-way ticket
Nothin's gonna hold me back
Your love's like a slow train coming
And I feel it coming down the track

Darlin', I'll climb any mountain
Darlin', I'll swim any sea
Darlin', I'll reach for the heaven
Darlin', with you lovin' me, ooo*

Everybody joined in with the final chorus, which ended with Dave and me kissing. Chloe vanished with Josh into a dark corner – I had a feeling what might be happening!

..._...

The DJ now took over with a request, I think from Erika, for Megan and Curtis who were kissing in one of the darker corners. They jumped up as the DJ called out their names. I laughed as I recognised the song: Absolute Beginners by David Bowie! Megan scowled at Dave and me. I just laughed and smiled back.

You can now go on to Chapter 201!

Chapter 201*: The Wedding Night

Please be warned that this chapter will include smut and behaviour that should be seen as indecent and salacious, including words or insinuations of a very dubious, unseemly or downright dirty nature.

Well, what did you expect for a wedding night?

A quick fumble under the duvet?

Get a grip!

That evening Saturday

I was all bubbly with excitement.

"Congratulations, Mindy; you look radiant," Bruce said, blushing slightly.

"Thank you all for coming!" I said as I hugged Selina and gave Bruce a kiss on the cheek while Dave shook Alfred's hand.

"We would not have missed any of it!" Selina said happily.

"You two make one hell of a couple!" Alfred commented. "Congratulations, Dave!"

"Thank you, Alfred. It has been one hell of a journey to this point, but I do not regret a thing. Well, maybe the odd thing here and there!"

I scowled.

"We'll see you in a few weeks then," Alfred said.

"Definitely!"

It was wonderful to see all these people and knowing that they were here for Dave and me. Everybody was really having fun, which was great and the whole idea of course.

Cameron and Natasha were next.

"You two having fun?" I asked.

"Thank you for inviting us, Mindy; we would not have missed it for the world," Natasha said, giving me a kiss. "May I?"

I nodded and Natasha gave Dave a big kiss that made Natasha blush.

"Good luck, Dave – have fun tonight!" Cameron said with a wink and a grin.

"I will; Mindy won't be able to stand by the morning!" Dave promised and I felt myself blushing furiously, but I did not care.

Cathy came by and gave me a kiss, before handing me something surreptitiously. Once she was gone, I looked down at my hand and saw a large packet of purple condoms. I stuffed them into Dave's pocket, with the others; Marcus had slipped me some green ones earlier that evening! I had to laugh; it was funny.

As I looked around the room, I could see Brooke talking to Anne-Marie and my daughter was laughing happily in response to whatever Brooke was saying. I could see Megan and some hands, which I assumed was Curtis – I grinned and left them to it!

Marcus and Paige were still dancing together which made me feel all happy inside. It was rare that they were able to enjoy themselves, just the two of them.

Where was Danny?

I continued looking around. I could see Hailee, Kyle and Erika chatting together. I continued looking around and... There! The boy was sitting in between Josh and Chloe and the three of them were laughing about something. I was pleased to see the twins happily integrating with my friends. They both needed a family and Fusion was their family, even if they never knew who was watching their backs.

An hour later

I took a moment to say goodnight to the twins.

"Please be good for Marcus and Paige, okay?"

"We will; we're both perfect little angels for them," Anne-Marie tried and I laughed.

"You both did so well today and you look beautiful, Anne-Marie, and you look very handsome, Danny," I said and both kids blushed. "We're very proud of both of you and thank you so very much for helping to make our day so special."

After a kiss and a cuddle, they both ran off to play. I would miss them; but it was only until the following morning.

Dave whisked me upstairs and swept me off my feet as he carried me through the open door, then he booted it closed with his foot. He dumped me unceremoniously into the large L-shaped couch.

As I stared up at my husband, I felt like the happiest woman on earth, if not in the universe.

That night

The Bridal Suite

We were finally alone.

I was so full of energy and surging emotions, it was unbelievable and Dave could sense it.

"So, how is my new wife feeling? Do I sense a nuclear explosion, or two, in the night's action?"

"Oh, hell, yeah! There's gonna be fucking chain reactions; they'll think world war fucking three has broken out!"

My underwear was soaked; Dave had been winding me up all afternoon. There was gentle, soothing music playing in the background and I felt so aroused it was ridiculous considering that Dave had not actually touched anything to that point!

Dave pulled off his jacket, throwing it into a corner. He knelt down beside me and kissed me, his tongue pushed into my mouth and I pushed back with my own. For some reason Dave tasted better than he ever had before. I was getting desperate for skin on skin contact. I ran my right hand down Dave's front and then smiled, even though we were still kissing – Dave was as turned on as I was!

Despite the champagne at dinner, I was still fully in control of myself and I felt Dave's hand move up my right leg and stop at my thigh. I felt his fingers move across my thigh and then he held up his hand.

"Don't want something to go off accidentally, do we?" Dave smirked as he held up the pistol and placed it onto the small side table.

I giggled; I had forgotten all about the pistol.

"This can go too!" Dave placed the throwing knife down beside the pistol. "Anything else to declare?"

"You'll have to search me – inside and out..."

Dave smirked and he moved down the couch and gently removed my shoes, which was a blessing as my feet and ankles hurt. His hands on my skin, even if it was just my feet, was unbelievable. I felt his hands move up my legs and stop, just below my knees.

Damn, the fucker was teasing me!

I loved to tease Mindy.

Not many people could, without suffering a lot of pain afterwards. She was breathing heavily and I had felt the wetness on her inner thighs. I pulled Mindy to her feet, went behind her, and gently unzipped the dress. Mindy shrugged her shoulders, the dress slipped noiselessly to the floor, and I moaned at the sight of her smooth, pale skin. Mindy giggled and blushed; she was radiant.

She was wearing a bra and skimpy knickers, both purple. There was a garter on her left thigh, which was also purple. On her right thigh was the white holster for her pistol. She wore nothing else but the two rings on her left hand.

Damn, if I got any harder something was going to explode.

As I stood there in practically nothing, I bit my lip as Dave ran his eyes from my feet to my eyes, pausing occasionally.

I grinned as he paused at the pistol holster! I stared at the bulge in his trousers and felt my knickers getting wetter, if that was actually possible. I screamed as Dave suddenly picked me up and then dropped me roughly onto the floor. It hurt, only a little, but it turned me on even more.

Dave then knelt down, spreading my legs apart and he started to kiss my feet, then my ankles. I felt tingling sensations running up and down my legs. The sensations paused at my crotch before rocketing via my nipples to my brain. I clenched my fists, fighting against the sensations, prolonging the inevitable for as long as possible.

I moved up Mindy's legs, touching, kissing, and caressing the soft skin on the inside of her muscular thighs.

I felt my wife shuddering as my lips and fingers ran across her sweet smelling skin. I touched her purple knickers, which were sodden. I gently eased them down and off, chucking them behind me. I ran my fingers through the moist, dark pubic hair that covered her vulva. She shuddered much more that time. I moved upwards, inch by inch and ran my hands over the firm stomach and visible abs.

I smirked and moved my hands to Mindy's sides, just above her hips and she started to giggle and laugh. She was very ticklish just there; not many people knew that and I was sworn to secrecy on penalty of a violent death! Next, I found myself level with her breasts; they were now a cute 32B. I pushed the bra upwards so her breasts came out and rested on her chest. Mindy pulled the garment over her head and threw it away across the room.

Mindy was in a state of barely concealed excitement. Her heartrate had increased along with her breathing. Her breasts had enlarged too as she became aroused.

She closed her eyes as I ran my tongue around the surface of her breasts, staying clear of the erect, pink nipples and sensitive surrounding skin. I could hear Mindy moaning and groaning – partly because of what I was avoiding!

Just the thought of making love to one of the most dangerous women in the world was intoxicating. Even better, she was my wife and we were the keystones of the most feared anti-crime organisation in Chicago.

I slowly moved back downwards, kissing her and enjoying the shudders and squeals as I went. I paused at her pelvis. Mindy began to moan and her hips were moving gently from side to side in eager anticipation. I kissed her at the top of her vulva and gently ran my hand over her soft and moist pubic hair before pushing a finger in between her outer labia and then through the swollen inner labia that had darkened as they were engorged with blood.

I stayed well away from the top of her labia where she was most sensitive as she became more and more aroused. I looked up Mindy's body, which was slightly flushed with her arousal, and she had never looked so beautiful. Her eyes were tight shut as she struggled to control the emotions, which tore through her slender body. I was sure she was purring – that was new!

Mindy's legs spread open further allowing me to get closer to her. I ran my tongue from the top of her opening to the bottom, tasting her as I had done many times before. Her hips were moving steadily now and the purring had been replaced by a steady moaning. I pushed my tongue in as far as it would go and moved upwards seeking out that most sensitive of places and when I found it, Mindy screamed!

Her fists beat down on the floor and she started to writhe around. I paused for a second to catch my breath...

"Don't you fucking dare stop – OH, MY GOD!" Mindy called out, her back arching upwards.

I was not stopping – not for anything!

All I could hear was my heart pounding at an immensely high rate.

Blood was pounding in my ears and the sensations that Dave was sending through my body were indescribable, but both intense and unbearable at the same time. My nipples tingled and I was struggling to sort out what I was feeling down below as Dave's tongue moved inside me. The emotions and stimulations all seemed to arrive at my brain together and I could not tell what I enjoyed more; it was all fucking heaven to me. It was better than anything I had ever experienced...

I tensed up and my back arched upwards. I pounded the floor with my fists and I lost control of my hips as they moved of their own accord. I took a deep breath, pushing Dave's head out of the way, as I screamed and brought my legs up to my stomach. I rolled onto my side.

I could not breathe; it had to be the biggest orgasm that I had ever experienced. I could not feel my limbs, or for that matter anything. I felt like I was floating as the sensations rocketed from one part of me to another.

Then suddenly it was over and I was able to lie back. I looked upwards into the eyes of my husband as he grinned down at me.

Now that was a Hit Girl orgasm!

Mindy was covered in a fine perspiration from head to toe and she was breathing heavily. She had held her breath for what must have been over two minutes as she fought through the sensations that I had caused her.

Finally, she was able to sit up and I hugged her; she smelt so gorgeous. Needless, to say, the carpet was very wet where she had been lying!

The phone rang and Mindy reached up, hitting the speakerphone button.

"Hello? This is the Hotel Manager; we heard screaming, is everything okay?"

"Hell yeah!" Mindy yelled. "We need some Red Bull and, err, strawberries – I'm going again!"

Then she giggled as she hit the speakerphone button again before the mortified Hotel Manager could say another word.

The Hotel Lounge

"Something's going on..."

"Marcus, stop being so damned suspicious all the time!"

"Sorry, Paige, but..."

Then I heard it. They were whispering about the Bridal Suite and the... Oh God... The screaming! Paige was laughing as she saw my expression of pure disgust.

"Dave must be good..."

I scowled!

The Bridal Suite

The kid that delivered the Red Bull – twelve cans – and the strawberries was eagerly looking around as he entered the Suite. Dave was sitting nonchalantly on the couch while I lay next to him, only Dave's hands protecting my modesty. The kid's eyes went wide when he saw me and almost dropped the tray!

"C – Compliments of the Hotel Manager – he thought you might need several cans..." The embarrassed kid stammered before he fled.

"You are awful, Mindy Lizewski!" Dave laughed as he gently rubbed my pubic mound with his right hand.

Those two words sounded so good together and I loved them. Dave was now mine forever and ever, nothing could ever separate us. For now though, I wanted to be as intertwined as it was possible to get. I finished off the last strawberry and my second twenty-fluid-ounce can of Red Bull. I was revitalised...

I seized Dave and threw him onto the floor – it was his turn!

Damn!

Being thrown to the floor by a naked woman was – indescribable! She looked so gorgeous and irresistible as she gazed down at me from her hypnotic green eyes, her soft blonde hair hanging down.

"I'm all yours, beautiful..."

Mindy giggled and started to unbutton my shirt, and then she removed my cravat and pulled my shirt open. Her fingers moved across my chest and gently teased my nipples before she ran her hands across my very firm stomach. I lay back and closed my eyes. The hands moved further down and then my new wife began to attack my trousers – and I mean 'attack'!

My belt sailed across the room and I am sure the zipper ripped open. Mindy squealed with barely concealed glee and pleasure as she saw her target under just one more layer of clothing. My shoes thudded to the floor a few feet away; they were soon joined by my socks. My shorts and trousers vanished a few seconds later and I opened my eyes to see Mindy bite her bottom lip as she started to breathe heavily and she gazed down at my rock hard cock.

She gently ran her middle finger up me and I shuddered at the touch. I was in a very advanced state of arousal and I was like a bomb with a hair trigger!

"I need some sauce to go with my strawberries!" Mindy said with a small laugh.

She continued to play with me and I was struggling to contain myself as her other hand massaged what hung beneath and then she lay down on top of me and kissed me. I desperately wanted to be inside her, but knew that now was not the time. Mindy pulled back and grinned, then she sank down my body and I took a deep breath as she took me in her mouth and I felt her tongue caressing me.

I could not hold on much longer. Now it was my fists pounding the floor and I started to massage Mindy's back with my hands, which in hindsight must have been rather painful! Mindy's tongue was exquisite as it moved purposefully around and she gently teased me as she ran her tongue up and down my shaft and then licking my balls.

"Mindy!" I called out.

I saw my wife peer up at me, and then she grinned fiendishly and began to move faster and faster. Then it came – I came! Mindy seemed unsure whether to remain on me or to move out of the way. She was caught just inches from me as I exploded in her face. She screamed, but started laughing. There was a gooey substance all over her face and in her hair. It ran down her chest and over her breasts down onto her stomach. Some even reached her pubic hair.

"Damn! You were storing that lot up!" She giggled.

I reached up, wiped my hand across her face, and then wiped the cum on her thighs. I pushed her backwards and lay down on top of her. Mindy screamed as she felt the gooey substance squashed between our bodies. I took her mouth in mine and kissed her for all I was worth.

"I love you more than words can say, Wife."

"I am happier now than I have ever been, Husband, and I love you so, so much..."

After another can of Red Bull and some more strawberries, courtesy of room service, we took a shower – together!

The bathroom had a shower without partitions. It was a 'drench' shower and we enjoyed the hot water as it washed away the cum that was all over our bodies. Then I think Dave wanted more as he started to massage my nipples before taking my left nipple into his mouth and...

Dave sunk down and started to kiss my stomach and then down into my pubic hair and then I moved my legs apart allowing Dave to use his tongue on places that had me moaning and groaning within seconds. I put one hand out to brace myself against the tiled wall of the shower. Just moments before I was overcome by another orgasm, Dave stopped.

I lost the power to think as my legs went all weak, I allowed Dave to lower me to the tile floor, and he protected me from the shower spray as he started to kiss me on the mouth and then moved back to my nipples. I felt my legs spreading of their own accord and I moaned audibly. Dave was grinning and my love for him was more than I had ever known in my life.

I felt him gently pass inside me and I felt so very, very fulfilled. I finally had my husband inside me where he belonged... I barely felt the hard tile floor under me; Dave was so gently, but firm at the same time. I was building up to another crescendo of enjoyment and I loved every second of it. I never wanted the night to end.

I braced myself as the sensations became almost too much for me to handle as they ran into each other; I screamed, forcing myself to accept more and more, but then I broke. I screamed much more loudly. Dave braced up as he came again and I felt the warm sensation inside of me as he exploded for the second time that night. Dave collapsed on top of me. Neither of us could move; we were spent.

Dave reached up and hit the button to cut the shower before we drowned.

The bed was a waterbed!

I had never slept on one of those before.

"Hope you've not got any more blades secreted on your body, or we're gonna get very wet and maybe drown!" Dave quipped.

"Well you've checked every inch of me, so you're safe from drowning!" Mindy replied with a grin.

We were both still naked as we climbed into bed, I cuddled into Dave, and he wrapped his arms around me.

"You think your Dad is watching?" Dave asked.

"God, I hope not!" I replied feeling a little mortified at the thought.

We were both exhausted and it did not take long for us to fall asleep entwined in each other.

The next morning Sunday

The Bridal Suite

When I awoke, Dave was still wrapped around me.

I felt so happy, I really did not want to move, however I had an urge – an urge for Dave! I wanted more of what I had received the night before; it had been so perfect. Dave began to move and then I felt his hands moving across my still naked body. He touched first one erect nipple and then the other one and I stifled a moan. There was something poking me in the back and that was turning me on fast.

Dave began kissing my neck and it tickled. I started to giggle as he moved around and began to kiss down my backbone, which was one of my unpublicised weaknesses! He stopped and I moaned out loud in annoyance. Dave moved out from behind me and I fell back onto the bed. My husband gazed down at me and then ducked in for a passionate kiss that had me screaming inside.

After ten minutes of it, I could feel dampness spreading between my legs. I kicked back the duvet and felt around until I found something that was both hard and soft, while being very warm at the same time; he was mine! Dave groaned at my touch and began to suck my left nipple.

It was the previous night again, I did not want it to end and I willed myself to stay calm to keep going as long as possible before I was ripped apart by yet another orgasm. Dave's hands were wandering across my body, I could feel my breathing increasing, and I felt my love for Dave spreading throughout my body. Dave reached down and dived inside me, gently running his finger across my clit, which made me jump and I squealed then giggled as Dave sucked harder and moved his finger around inside me, touching every point that he knew would have me moaning and groaning.

I was in heaven.

My wife was purring again.

What had changed to have her purring since we had married, I had no idea, not that I was complaining – no complaints, not a one! She was writhing around on the bed as I stimulated her to orgasm, which did not take long as Mindy was on a very short fuse after the previous night.

She screamed as the orgasm overtook her and I jumped back, allowing my wife to bring her knees up and work her way through the sensations that tore through her body. It was several minutes before Mindy could start to control her breathing again. She stretched out her thin frame and gazed up at me; her body covered in a fine sheen of sweat. She had never looked more beautiful.

"I need a shower..."

I followed Mindy into the bathroom and joined Mindy as she hit the button for the shower. I grabbed the shower gel and squirted it across Mindy's body, front and back. She took a sharp intake of breath; the gel was cold!

My legs were like jelly as I stood in the shower.

The previous night and the morning had taken their toll on me; I was exhausted and I could remember Dave's boast the previous evening: '... Mindy won't be able to stand by the morning!' Well, he had not been wrong – I was struggling.

Now Dave was hosing me down with shower gel – cold shower gel, and I knew what was coming – pun intended! I felt my husband's hands as he gently rubbed the shower gel into my skin. He was standing behind me as he began with the back of my neck. His touch was more than sensual; it made my skin tingle at his touch. Then the hands made their way around the front of my neck and under my jaw. As he did, he bent his head down and started to nuzzle my left ear – I moaned at his touch feeling the sensation shooting through my body.

His hands moved down my front across my collarbones, which tickled. He did not stop there as he massaged in the shower gel, taking in my breasts and making me squeal gently as he caressed my overly sensitive nipples. My breathing was hitching and I was melting into Dave's chest as he continued down my body, his hands passing over my abs and then across my stomach which was dancing at the thrill of where his hands were going next...

I closed my eyes as I felt the strong hands move over my crotch and then over my thighs.

Mindy's thighs were strong and voluptuous.

Nothing new there, but they I loved running my hands over them and then around to her tight buttocks. Mindy was like putty in my hand, rubbing against me as I rubbed against her. I knelt down in front of my wife and ran my hands down, first one leg and then the other, caressing the powerful thigh muscles and those of her calves.

I gazed upwards and examined the body of my new wife; I knew and loved every inch of her five-foot five-inch body. I stood up and hit the button for the drench shower sending a torrent of hot water over Mindy's lithe body, washing away the soap.

She opened her eyes and smiled up at me.

"My turn!" She growled seductively as she grabbed the shower gel.

Chapter 202*: Back To Work

*Three weeks later
Saturday night*

Southern Chicago

The man saw nothing in the darkness and thought he was alone.

However, his 'sixth sense' told him that something was wrong. Then he caught a movement in his peripheral vision and tried to duck but saw the thick tread of a boot, only inches from his face. The boot struck his left cheek sending him backwards.

The owner of the foot that was encased in the boot rolled as they hit the ground coming back to their feet and turning to face the man as he struggled back to his feet. The eyes glowed a dull green as the creature stared at him from a few feet away.

"You gonna come quietly, cunt?" The creature's electronically enhanced voice asked casually.

The man reached into his belt and pulled out his Smith & Wesson pistol, taking aim at the green-eyed apparition. He was not fast enough as the creature bolted towards him and kicked the pistol out of his hand, and then he found himself back on the ground only this time in the dull glow of a street light he saw the green eyes barely a foot from his own.

However, it was not the eyes, which had his full attention, it was the three, razor sharp claws that extended from the creature's left gauntlet. The murderous looking points were a mere inch from his face. It was then that he felt something touching his groin. All the fight went out of him at the mere thought of where the other set of claws might be...

"Please..."

"You deserve to die..."

The man began to sob in terror...

"Wildcat!"

The sharp comment came out of the darkness – another electronically enhanced voice. Something purple came close and the man saw the claws vanish from sight as they retracted into the green-eyed monster's gauntlet and the pressure on his groin vanished.

The man heard the roar of powerful motorcycle engines and then listened to the engine noise fade, only to be replaced by a siren and then then he was bathed in blue flashing lights as a marked Chicago Police Department unit pulled up with a screech of tyres.

The man gave up without a fight and allowed himself to be cuffed and pulled to his feet.

"Ah shit!" One uniformed Cop exclaimed.

"Huh?" His colleague asked.

"The idiot has gone and pissed himself!" The first Cop grinned.

"They – they were inhuman..." The man tried to say as if in explanation.

The Cops both grinned as they exchanged looks.

"That, my damp friend, would be Fusion!" The second Cop laughed.

Three miles to the east two motorcycles rode side-by-side.

One was a purple Ducati Superbike 1199 Panigale R sporting the licence plate, 'HIT N RUN'. The other machine was smaller and was a brown and silver, Ducati Hypermotard SP with the licence plate, 'WILD ONE'.

"You're a nasty bitch," The purple, armour-clad, rider of the Panigale announced. "You know that, don't you?"

The other rider, clad in a similarly armoured, mottled-effect of three browns, turned her head towards her fellow vigilante.

"I learnt from the biggest, nastiest, bitch of them all!" She declared without hesitation.

"I have to agree with that statement...," A voice interrupted inside the helmets of both riders.

"What have you got for us, Battle Guy?" Hit Girl asked.

"Your last target was picked up, only the Cops were not happy!" Battle Guy explained. "Seems he managed to piss himself..."

"Fucking cool!" Wildcat announced. "I've still got it..."

"You mean the suit scared the piss outta him," Hit Girl interrupted.

"Okay, I will admit the combat suit is awesome and I love my new appendages," Wildcat allowed. "Yours is pretty cool, too bitch!"

"Your next target is ready for you, six point six miles – route is coming up on your HUDs now..."

"Awesome!" Hit Girl exclaimed as a route was projected onto the inside of the darkened visor of her motorcycle helmet.

Both riders twisted the throttles and accelerated taking the next turning on the right.

Safehouse F, Command Centre

Marty Eisenburg, otherwise known as Battle Guy leant back in his comfortable high-backed leather command chair and studied the wall ahead of him.

The wall was dominated by a horizontal array of three, ninety-inch flat panels. The right hand panel displayed a satellite image of Chicago with streets overlaid. There were four dots on the screen, in pairs; two were purple and brown, another pair were green and black. Both pairs were moving towards their own spinning red circle with a crosshair over it. Each spinning circle had an estimated time of arrival, or ETA, beside it.

Marty's command chair was raised up about a foot from the ground, giving good visibility of the screens. Beside him was a pair of computer keyboards and a pair of trackballs.

On the left hand panel was a breakdown of the two teams currently out on patrol. Detailed below each vigilante name were various statistics that included fuel remaining, current speed and course and status of equipment.

The central panel was currently split into four and showed four full colour, high definition camera views. The cameras were mounted on the motorcycles of the four vigilantes and the information was transmitted back to the Safehouse. Superimposed on each image was speed, course and location and the name of the vigilante.

"Abby?"

"Yeah, Marty," Abigail 'Abby' Hunt replied.

"Remind me to check Hit Girl's speed sensor – I think it's malfunctioning..."

"Why do you think that?" Abby replied, trying not to laugh.

"She seems to be obeying the speed limits..."

"Funny bastards – I heard that!" Hit Girl growled over the open comms.

"Maybe marriage agrees with her!" Abby suggested.

"How are the boys doing?" A voice asked.

Marty span his chair around to face Chloe Bennett, otherwise known as Shadow. Behind her stood Hailee Richards, otherwise known as Petra. Both wore their combat suits, but without their identity concealing masks. The two girls were awaiting the call to provide assistance if required.

"They are having a peaceful night, so far – they are about mid-way through their patrol – no activity for them so far tonight," Marty reported.

"The girls?" Hailee asked.

"Well... Wildcat made one guy piss himself with those new toys of hers!"

Chloe grimaced, well remembering her first meeting with those 'new toys'.

Southern Chicago

We were a few minutes from our next target, so I began thinking back over the past three weeks.

After all the excitement of the wedding, it had felt a little strange being back home and getting back to a normal life. Dave and I had decided not to head off on a Honeymoon; I did not want to leave the twins, not yet. Nonetheless, we both got ourselves stuck back into things. We had taken a few days off from Fusion, though, but we had a City to protect so we needed to get ourselves back into fighting shape.

...+...

Talking of shape, I had had to acquire Megan a new combat suit – she had grown somewhat around the chest and hips, quite a bit actually, over the previous month or so and now had a much fuller and more feminine figure as well as having grown about three inches upwards!

Curtis had seemed to enjoy the changes, as did the other boys both at school and at DJAK. Despite Megan having enjoyed a brief period of allowing boys to touch her, she had now gone shy about the more visible physical changes to her body. She also seemed to have gone back to being quite moody, and Curtis had seemed to suffer the brunt of this! Curtis, as usual, was actually quite sweet about it, despite his being a little embarrassed by it all.

There was one slight problem, though. I was aware that for a while, Curtis and Megan had been quite intimate with each other; indeed, how far they had gone down that road, I had no idea and I had not wanted to pry. Now though, when Megan and Curtis were sparring, Curtis was often too scared to put his hands or fists anywhere near her chest, which usually meant that Megan flattened him without hesitation!

"Curtis – they're breasts; they won't bite!" I told him.

"They won't; but she will, if I touch them!" Curtis replied and I laughed in response.

"For fuck's sake Curtis, they are a part of me – I don't mind if you touch them," Megan said, then added quickly with a deep blush. "Accidentally, of course!"

"It just doesn't feel right!" Curtis moaned.

Then Megan surprised me enormously by grabbing Curtis's right hand and placing it on her left breast!

"Does that feel right?" Megan teased.

Curtis yanked his hand back as if he had just been burnt and blushed bright red and I thought, 'you brazen little bitch!'

After that little episode, Curtis ignored Megan's breasts when sparring, much to Megan's displeasure when Curtis accidentally hit them!

...+...

Wildcat's new suit was one of quite a few that I had ordered, but it had been the first to be delivered and it was also the first to come out of Lucius Fox's funhouse in Gotham and it was the first of a very new, cutting-edge, design.

"It feels awesome!" Megan had exclaimed as she first appeared from the armoury where she had changed.

The combat suit was in the same, three brown, mottled effect colour scheme as previously, but there the similarities stopped. The black undersuit weighed less than the one that she had previously worn and allowed the skin to breathe better during extreme activities; it was also stab and bullet resistant to Type IIA standards. The modular contoured armour, in the same mottled brown, clipped onto the undersuit and joined to the other sections of armour to form a semi-rigid Type IIIA armour that covered the important parts of the body. The armour was ultra-flexible which suited Wildcat's fighting style perfectly.

To test this, she performed some complex somersaults and movements that proved her agility in the new armour. The updated full-face mask was fitted with the same anti-lift feature as my own and was slimmer while still being fitted with the voice changing technology as before and, of course, the ears. One other small difference were the eyes – they glowed! For intimidation purposes, the eyes of the mask glowed a dull green and the eyes were shaped like those of a cat. I had to admit that they were quite ominous in the dark.

Fox had designed a new utility belt, which was both slimmer, lighter. The belt was fitted with a more compact, integrated encrypted communications system. Wildcat's SIG Sauer P250 fitted securely into a holster that was mounted on her right thigh, with three spare magazines mounted on her belt. Fox had thoughtfully provided a removable mounting on her back armour, for Wildcat's Wakizashi sword.

Next, were the gauntlets, and her claws; it seemed that Fox was a fan of the Wolverine...

The claws had been embedded into the back of her new, slimmer, gauntlets and they were extended and locked in place at the press of a button, mechanically – Fox said he was working on an electromagnetic version. Once secured in place the three claws on each gauntlet were a natural extension of Wildcat's hands.

"So, you like it?" I asked after watching the young girl test out her suit for a few minutes.

Wildcat pulled off her mask and she was grinning fit to burst.

For a bit of fun, we had agreed not to let on about the claws to anybody else.

..._...

A few days later, it had been Shadow's turn to model her new combat suit.

There was the same undersuit as Wildcat wore, in black, and on top of this were the dark blue and slate grey contoured armour panels attached to form the semi-rigid Type IIIA armour. Her new gauntlets were just as slim as before, but lighter, while retaining the extra layer of slate grey armour on the back that would allow Shadow to deflect blows from swords, or other melee weapons. The gauntlets extended up her lower arms to the elbows, with extended sections to protect the elbow joints. These connected with armour that extended down from each shoulder, protecting the shoulder joints with Type IIIA armour and extending down over the upper arms. The gauntlets were Navy blue, but the shoulder and upper arm armour sections were slate grey. Additional armour extended up from her chest panels to protect the collarbones and neck.

The new armour was able to withstand more punishment in combat, but overall the combat suit was much lighter. Again, like Wildcat, she wore the new utility belt with the enhanced, integrated communications.

Shadow's mask now included integrated voice changing technology, as well as the anti-lift feature, which would become standard for all members of Fusion.

...+...

The two girls had faced off against each other across the mat at the Safehouse.

Shadow moved in first, striking Wildcat in the chest and nodded with approval as she tried to strike again, but Wildcat seized her fist with her right gauntlet and twisted it, before Shadow then got the shock of her young life. Wildcat raised her left gauntlet and brought it up towards Shadow's face, and then suddenly Shadow screamed and froze as three, fatally sharp, titanium blades suddenly appeared just inches from her face.

Before Shadow knew what was happening she was on her back with the triumphant Wildcat, kneeling on her chest, one set of claws at her neck and the other hovering over her heart. There was applause from the balcony above.

"Fucking hell!" Shadow yelled out angrily recovering from her shock. "Get the fuck off me, Wildcat; you're heavy!"

I saw the claws retract in an instant and Wildcat stepped back, away from Shadow so that the fallen vigilante could regain her feet. Both girls pulled off their facemasks and Megan was grinning. Needless to say; Chloe was annoyed.

"What the fuck were those?" She growled angrily.

"These little things?" Megan asked raising her left gauntlet and triggering her claws, which shot out and locked into place.

"Yeah, those!" Chloe replied with combined admiration, annoyance and curiosity as she moved in closer to examine the claws. "Retract them..."

Megan did as requested and the claws vanished.

"Neat!" Chloe said approvingly, smiling at Megan.

She had then turned to me, understanding the little stunt.

"Funny, Mindy – very funny!"

Megan and I just started laughing and Chloe just scowled.

...+...

That had all been the weekend after wedding.

A couple of days later, though, was one of the most eagerly anticipated days of my life!

I was legally an adult...

It had been my eighteenth birthday and I had felt like a kid on Christmas morning. Now, we did not have sex eighteen times, although Dave and I had tried our best! It felt different being an adult, officially at least – I had been an 'adult' according to my fake id for the past three years!

As for my birthday presents – more about them later...

Northern Chicago

The two motorcycles pulled over into the darkness of a badly lit alleyway.

The largest machine was a monster Ducati Diavel Carbon in black, green and yellow, with the licence plate: 'KICK'. The other machine was not a Ducati, but was a Kawasaki Ninja ZX-10R in tan, with the licence plate: 'JACKAL'.

The formidable green and yellow, armoured form of Kick-Ass rose from the Diavel. He was shortly joined by Jackal and they both headed down the street waving at the pleasant greetings that they both received from ordinary Chicagoans.

The night had been peaceful for the two veteran vigilantes, who were enjoying the peaceful stroll. They were on a regular patrol route, which probably explained why there was no trouble; both vigilantes commanded instant respect. As always, they stopped to chat and exchange pleasantries with the Russian Mafia Kryshas who stood guard at the edge of Mafia territory.

The Fusion/Russian Mafia truce was still in effect. We both kept out of each other's territory and we maintained friendly relations between former enemies. You could see it as a Cold War in Chicago, but it worked and had kept the peace for several months.

Suddenly the night began to warm up as the two vigilantes headed north.

"You hear that, Jackal, my boy?"

"I did – breaking glass!"

I ran towards the sound with Jackal close behind. As we approached the local Mom and Pop store, we heard the noise again. It was Arnold and Marie's store; they often gave us a coffee to keep us both going at night; they loved seeing Hit Girl and Shadow.

"I'm going around back..." Jackal announced darting down a dark alley.

A dozen yards down the street I noticed three Range Rover SUVs parked up – something was happening, something that required backup.

I brought up my left gauntlet and pressed a button on the five-inch touch screen visible there.

Safehouse F

The green dot on the flat panel changed to a spinning green circle and an alarm sounded.

"Kick-Ass just called for backup!" Marty called out. "Shadow and Petra, roll out!"

Shadow and Petra pulled on their masks before they ran for their transport. Petra dived onto her graphite black, Honda Fireblade ABS CBR1000RR motorcycle, hitting the starter and adjusting her equipment.

Beside her Shadow mounted her Ducati Superbike 899 Panigale in navy blue and black with the licence plate: 'SHADOW'. Shadow smirked as Petra accelerated out of the opening vehicular-access door ahead of her, her licence plate read: 'BITE ME', which Shadow always thought was amusing. Shadow followed a few yards behind, racing up the tight spiral of the concrete ramp.

Both motorcycles burst out of a darkened alleyway before accelerating towards Kick-Ass and Jackal. They followed the navigation directions, which were projected onto the inside of their darkened visors.

North Chicago

The moment I entered the store, all hell broke loose.

Firstly, a bottle of something smashed into my back armour, followed by something more solid. I studied the scene before me and saw four armed men smashing up the store while the storeowners, Arnold and Marie were held at gunpoint by another man. My anger rose past boiling point and headed for critical mass.

"Stand down!" I yelled out and all five men turned in my direction.

There seemed to be a consensus between the five men and they all replied in the same manner. I ignored the bullets as they collided with my heavy chest armour. They wanted to play, well I was in a mood to play; nobody fucked with our friends...

I reached the first man and seized hold of a large jar of pickles, smashing it into the side of the man's head. Blood exploded into the air and the man dropped to the ground. The next man struggled to reload his pistol as I advanced on him, smiling as I grabbed a tin of 'Heinz Spotted Dick' before smashing it into the man's face.

Two down!

That was when Jackal made his appearance as one man ran towards the back entrance and promptly returned to the shop unconscious as Jackal shrugged off bullets and made for the fourth man. The fifth man was mine; I rubbed my gauntlets together in eager anticipation and my target seemed to blanch as I advanced towards him.

Jackal's man hit the counter at the front of the store and he slid down to the floor, not moving before he went to cover the main door. The last man was still pointing his pistol at Arnold and Marie.

"Do I need to say anything?" I growled menacingly.

The man was obviously trying to figure a way out of his predicament and was constantly looking towards the main door of the store. The man had reinforcements who might arrive at any moment. I was certain that the Range Rovers up the street contained those reinforcements.

"Kick-Ass, this is Shadow – one minute..."

"Three black Range Rovers – watch out!" I warned.

"I see 'em!" Petra reported.

Shadow and I pulled over in the darkness of a broken streetlight.

The black Range Rovers were visible a couple dozen yards ahead. I removed my helmet and pulled out a G-36C from the back of my motorcycle. Shadow was doing the same with her P90.

"What do you want to bet that those are as armoured up as Beast?" Shadow asked.

"No bet – I can see the extra weight from here!" I replied.

"Now what would armoured SUVs be doing here?" Shadow asked reasonably.

"Notice a lack of tags?" I commented.

"I did – no way to know why they are – thoughtful of them..."

"Plan?" I asked.

"We wait..."

It took only a few minutes as a door opened and two men climbed out of the centre of the three vehicles. Each man was armed with a SCAR-L Mk 16 PDW, a nasty weapon that fired 5.56-millimetre rounds.

The good news was that our armour would protect us, but the rounds would hurt nonetheless!

Chapter 203*: All The Superintendents Men

Northern Chicago

The two men looked around, checking for any problems.

They seemed oblivious to our presence; we were hidden in the shadows. We just needed to find out who or what they were. I had an idea...

"Jackal, Shadow – could you step out onto the sidewalk for a moment...?" I asked, knowing that I would get hell for it later on.

I watched as the unsuspecting Jackal appeared out of the store. The two men responded after a brief moment spent checking to see who had appeared out of the store. They sent a dozen rounds towards Jackal.

Jackal dived back into the store.

"Three comments. One; the natives are restless. Two; those bullets hurt. Three; Shadow you are dead meat!" Jackal announced.

I grinned inside my mask and looked over at Petra who was shaking her head. I watched as she pulled out a flash-bang grenade and threw it towards the two men where it exploded less than a foot away. Both fell to the ground, hands around their heads in agony. We both jumped up and ran forward.

The rear door of the centre Range Rover was still open so I threw in another flash-bang, incapacitating the driver and anybody else in the vehicle. The front vehicle started its engine and began to move, the rear Range Rover was empty. I ran forward and fired my P90 point-blank into the passenger side window, which crazed and started to give way under the onslaught of almost fifty rounds, but the vehicle accelerated away and escaped around a corner.

I instantly swapped out the magazine and advanced on the two men who were starting to regain consciousness. I seized their hands and secured them with plastic ties. Neither had any form of identification on them and neither did the driver. We kept watch in case anybody else turned up to cause trouble and to guard the evidence until Voight arrived.

..._...

Over the comms, I heard Kick-Ass updating Battle Guy.

The store was secure; the owners were safe and uninjured. It looked to have been a protection racket job gone wrong. Only these men were not Russian Mafia, or Sicilian Mafia; it was the wrong part of the City for either.

It all became clear when Voight arrived with his team. I nodded at Detective Erin Lindsay; I liked her. Olinsky looked pissed as he recognised one of the men.

"That bastard works for the Superintendent!" He growled.

"What?" I exclaimed.

"That, young Shadow, is one of the Superintendent's picked men; they are dirty and in this case, they are shaking down these people – that bastard should fucking hang!" Voight confirmed.

St Louis

It was time to return to Chicago.

I needed Dave's help; we could not find out what had happened to us alone – St Louis was getting too dangerous and our skills were now coming to the fore and those skills scared the hell out of both of us. I was also scared for Stephanie and I did not see that I would be able to give her the care that a girl her age needed.

There was still the problem that I was unsure who Dave was and where to find him, but my subconscious told me to go to Chicago, which would be dangerous as hell. My memories, the ones I needed, were still slow to return.

I had no choice – Chicago was it...

Chicago
Safehouse F

"You causing shit again?"

"As always, my love..."

I kissed my husband.

"Get a room; jeez!" Megan moaned as she headed for the armoury.

"She needs a release..." Jackal announced.

"Yeah – she needs Curtis!" Chloe grinned.

"Dirty fuckers!" Megan growled.

I studied my husband.

It was the first new combat suit that Kick-Ass had had in a while.

I had put extra work into it, with Fox. The suit was built up from a brand new form of composite armour, which could take heavy punishment and still be lightweight. It was also modular to allow it to be customised for different missions as operations dictated.

The basic combat suit was a two-piece: pants and a top. The colouring was a very dark grey that was almost, but not quite, black. The suit went from the top of Dave's neck, down to his ankles and wrists. The lower ten-inches of suit, beneath his knees were of a thinner material to allow for his boots, which were armoured and which locked together around his calves. They looked heavy but were remarkably light. The boots were the same dark grey, but with subdued green and yellow highlights running vertically upwards from the ankle on the outside of each boot.

The same thinner material existed on his lower arms, where conformal gauntlets pulled on like normal gloves, but were then secured around his lower arms with their embedded armour. Both gauntlets had integrated full HD, five-inch screens mounted beneath transparent armour on the back of each wrist. The screens were touch sensitive, but only to Kick-Ass' gauntlets and they were linked back to the Control Centre where images and data could be uploaded as required. The screens were impossible to see in their normal mode, unless Kick-Ass was wearing his face-mask/helmet.

The combat suit provided integrated armour for his knees, thighs, groin and chest, on the front. The rear of the suit provided heavier armour for the upper back, spine and pelvic areas. There was also protection for the elbows, shoulders and collarbones. The back armour had integrated mountings for Kick-Ass' batons and swords. On the thigh-plates were mount points for holsters and any other required equipment. The new communications equipment was integrated with the pelvic armour that ran around his waist and joined up with the groin armour. Additional equipment and ammunition pouches could be attached as required.

The overall look was dark grey, but the armour sections all had subdued green and yellow flashes to show his identity. There was one final piece to add to the basic combat suit, the face-mask/helmet.

It was more helmet than facemask.

It was full-face, but retained a removable lower section around the mouth. The lenses of the helmet were dark and they had a built in HUD that was connected to the wrist screens. The helmet was pulled on over the head and then secured around the neck. The anti-lift technology was included and would be standard for all new Fusion combat suits. On the sides of the helmet, above the ear-grills, were mounted two powerful multi-function LED lamps that could light up the area in front of Kick-Ass. The lamps were very slim-line and almost invisible.

If required, additional armour could be fitted to cover the chest and stomach, wrapping around the sides and enhancing the back armour. Extra armour sections could be clipped around the thighs, lower legs and upper arms as required. There were also additional mountings available to allow Kick-Ass to carry extra ammunition or other equipment should the need arise.

I had watched as Kick-Ass had tried out some moves in the new suit. His movements had not been restricted in any way.

"Very light – no heavier than what I wore before!" He had commented.

Then it was my turn!

The new combat suit used the same design as Wildcat's, although mine was predominantly dark grey with subdued purple flashes and highlights. I had selected two different masks; one was my standard design that came down to the bridge of my nose while the other one was full-face. I also had additional armour that could be attached to the suit if we were going to be doing any heavier than normal fighting.

I was physically bigger and stronger than Wildcat, so I would be able to handle the additional weight. Not that it weighed all that much, to be honest. I could carry all the usual equipment and weapons, in all the usual places, however I had a new toy – two actually!

In the knuckles of each gauntlet were a pair of electrodes. If desired, I could ram my fist into an assailant and trigger off a Taser blast. Each gauntlet was good for six stuns each before I would need to switch out the power cells. I would carry two spare power cells on my belt.

I retained the wig on my open mask, but not on the full-face one. The full-face mask was for serious combat where the mask and indeed the cape, would not be desired.

Did I also tell you about the trouble at home?

Grief has finally caught up to the twins. Danny? He was coping in his own way and he allowed Dave and me to talk to him about his feelings. As for Anne-Marie – she spent one Monday afternoon trashing her bedroom... She would ignore anything we said and was nasty to almost everybody; even the school was complaining about her behaviour.

I had no idea what to do. I knew what she was going through; however, I had been older, much older. She would not talk to Dave or me. I knew that she had to talk to somebody. After a week of major problems, I had one more card to play: Megan.

...+...

Megan had come home with us after school while Danny had gone to stay with Marcus and Paige for the night. Marcus had commented on it being an unfair exchange as we had ended up with Megan! However, Megan was a friend to the twins and Anne-Marie might open up to her, not to mention that Megan had her own way of manipulating people.

"Where is my brother?" Anne-Marie demanded.

"With Marcus and Paige," I replied.

"Why?"

"We need to talk, young lady –"

"No we don't and you are not my mother so I don't have to listen to you!" Anne-Marie retorted.

"No, I am not your mother, but..."

"So get off my damn back, Mindy!"

With that, the girl stormed off upstairs. I made to follow but Megan seized my wrist. Megan had fire in her eyes.

"Leave her to me," she growled.

I ran up the stairs and saw Anne-Marie vanishing into her bedroom.

I followed her, catching the door as it was slammed in my face.

"That was not nice!" I growled.

"What do you want?"

"I want to talk with you; we're friends, are we not?" I asked Anne-Marie.

"Yes, we are, but I need space to deal with this, err, stuff..." She replied slightly less malevolently.

"You need to talk, Anne-Marie, and we are all here to help you."

"I don't need any of you, least of all them!"

"You mean, Dave and Mindy."

"Yes, them – they, they – they are not our parents..."

"They are the closest thing you have to parents..."

"No – they can never replace my parents; they don't love us, they..."

"Don't you dare, say anything against Dave and Mindy. For your information, they do love you both and would do anything for you. Although right now I can't see any reason for anybody to love you! Okay, your Dad is dead; so is mine, so is Mindy's, so is Dave's, so is Josh's – get over it, talk about it – we are all here to help you, despite you causing so much crap!"

"I..."

"You ever upset Dave and Mindy, I will personally sort you out and I don't care how old you are! I owe Dave and Mindy everything – I will not see some stuck up seven-year-old fuck with my friends... Dave and Mindy have gone out of their way to give you and Danny a damn nice home. They even had you at their wedding – right there out front where everybody could see you. They were both real proud of you for what you both did for them. So why fuck them off?"

"I'm sorry..."

"It's not me that you need to apologise to – I couldn't give a fuck about what you think of me – even if it does hurt me inside."

"I miss Daddy; I miss him so much..."

Anne-Marie crumpled onto the bed and started sobbing. I had been the same as her when my Dad had died. I had made things so hard for my Mom, when she just needed me to be there for her, just as she was always there for me. I missed my Dad and always would; I still cried at night when I thought about him. Now, though, I had Marcus and I could move on with my life.

I hoped that Anne-Marie and Danny would be able to do the same.

...+...

I had had no idea what had gone on upstairs, but I had heard raised voices, although not what had been said. Nevertheless, an hour later a very apologetic Anne-Marie had appeared downstairs. Megan seemed to vanish, along with Sophia.

Anne-Marie, Dave and I had a long talk for almost two hours. Many tears were spilled, but finally we were back as a family. Anne-Marie had been grounded for a week for destroying her bedroom and she had had to help Dave repaint one of the walls as part of her punishment. Seeing her brother playing in the pool while she was stuck doing her homework or other chores sucked, and her behaviour changed for the good in short order.

I decided that we should have a change of scene and as the weather was still reasonable, we went to spend a day offshore.

Burnham Harbor Marina

"You own a boat!"

Anne-Marie and Danny were astounded at the sight of my pride and joy.

"What's a 'salty swallow'?" Danny asked innocently, looking at Dave.

Dave looked at me.

"Yes, Mindy – what does it mean?" Dave prompted grinning.

I felt myself going very red and decided that Marcus had been right about my choice of name!

"I forget – come back when you're both fifteen!" I said lamely.

"It's a bird that likes to fly out over the sea," Dave said with a big grin on his face.

"This place is awesome!" Danny exclaimed as he entered the main salon his eyes wide.

"It's enormous – Mindy, it's amazing."

Anne-Marie had changed completely and she was being civil and nice to everybody. I could see the guilt in her eyes – and the sorrow.

"Come on, girl, we need to get the lines while Dave and Danny start the engines."

The Salty Swallow

Two hours later, we were ten miles offshore.

Anne-Marie had lost both her dignity and her breakfast! Danny was fine with the motion and was having fun at his sister's expense.

"I'm okay – I think..." The pale looking girl said as she came back from the bathroom.

"Get up on deck and focus on the horizon; you'll be fine," Dave advised. "You'll get your sea-legs soon."

The afternoon was fun and we were all able to enjoy ourselves playing games. Anne-Marie was ravenous by the evening and was able to eat a large meal and keep it down, too. By the time we returned to the Marina, it was dark, so we decided to spend the night aboard.

"You decided to stop being so nasty?"

"Yes, Danny – I made a mistake okay."

"I'm glad you're back, though. They both care about us, you know that."

"I do, but I forgot for a moment. Losing Dad was bad and it took a while to sink in – but yes, I know we're both safe and we always will be as long as we are with Dave and Mindy."

"Finally something useful comes out of your mouth," Danny laughed. "Other than your breakfast!"

His sister glared at him.

"Come on you two – sleep!" Dave's voice called from outside the door.

"Night, Dave. Night, Mindy."

Back to the present Sunday morning

Glenview

"That fucker is going down, Marcus. When I see evil I have to stop it..."

"I know, Mindy – I know!" Marcus replied.

"He's a senior Cop; we need to tread carefully – very carefully!" Jack warned.

"He needs to die – I won't stand for him in Chicago..." Hailee added vehemently.

"You can't kill him..." Vicky responded. "It would set a precedent and turn everybody against you."

"I know, dammit!" Mindy growled.

"Dave, can you keep these two under control?" Marcus asked, indicating Mindy and Hailee.

"I'll try!" I acceded.

"Sorry, I spoke out of turn," Hailee apologised. "We'll do this by the book."

"Yeah, I really don't want to have to move again!" Mindy added.

Chapter 204*: Ambush At The Rail Yard

Sunday evening

*South Cottage Grove
Apartment 202*

"I keep telling you, I am really sorry!"

"Don't believe a word of it!"

"Joshua!"

"Chloe – I hurt in more places than I care to mention – all thanks to your little prank..."

"I knew your armour would protect you... Probably..."

"You try my patience, girl – you really do, but unfortunately I love you and these..."

Josh ran his hands over my bare chest – I knew he would not be able to resist my naked body!

*Two days later
Tuesday night*

Eastern Chicago

It was a warzone.

Bullets were flying everywhere. Shadow and Hit Girl were pinned down behind a container in the capacious rail yard off West Ogden Avenue. Sixteen members of Fusion were now involved, fourteen of whom were now under fire at the rail yard, although at the beginning it had only been three. We had been fighting for over an hour – two hundred yards away the CPD were involved in their own firefight.

We were fighting the Sicilians while the CPD were fighting the Russians – somewhere in the midst of everything were the Superintendents Cunts orchestrating the whole, damn thing. As far as I could tell, we had been setup to be caught in between the Sicilians and the Russians, only the CPD had unwittingly intercepted the Russians.

It had been Jackal, Kick-Ass and Battle Guy who had been caught up in the opening fight – yes, Battle Guy! Battle Guy had been road testing one of our new vehicles – an armoured, dark grey GMC Yukon Denali. Kick-Ass and Jackal were providing escort on their motorcycles. Luckily, Battle Guy had been fully kitted out and so had the Yukon. That particular Yukon, one of two identical vehicles, which we had recently received, was called 'Sentinel', the other was 'Hound'.

It had been an ambush, which had forced the three of them into the rail yard. Jackal received several heavy rounds into his side and he was hurt, unable to ride. Thankfully, the rail yard was a little over four miles away from Safehouse D and F. The alert had gone out and everybody at the Safehouse, which was most of Fusion, had scrambled.

Some yards away, I could see Kick-Ass and Mist returning fire from behind Sentinel – the new vehicle was a mess, its armour having taken a pasting. The wounded Jackal was inside Sentinel with Battle Guy who was looking after him until Medic arrived. She was on her way in Titan, along with Splinter, Lynx and Eisenhower. Hal was in the Safehouse co-ordinating everything with the help of Hawk and Max. It was also the first outing for Lynx as an operator and she was nervous.

Hawk had been in the Safehouse with Matty and Hawk had been training, getting herself ready to go back out. I was alongside Trojan and Wildcat as we kept up a steady stream of fire towards the well-armed Sicilians. The final piece was Leon (the code name for Mathilda); she was currently on the top of one of the tall container loading cranes with her sniper rifle. She would take shots every minute or two when somebody came into her sights. She also provided and overhead view for us.

Down the road, with the CPD, Voight's team, along with Marcus's team and Mom were engaging the Russians. There were wounded on both sides and the fight was continuing in the semi-darkness. The rail yard was floodlit, but not all that well and there were plenty of shadows.

We needed to end the fight soon, before we ran out of ammunition.

Titan

We had to fight our way through the Russians to get to the rail yard and then through the Sicilians to get to the wounded Jackal.

I was driving with Lynx beside me; she looked nervous, but she also looked formidable in her full body armour with an MP7A2 on her right hip. Behind us sat Splinter, with Eisenhower beside him.

I floored the accelerator as I approached the CPD roadblock and leant on the air horns, which had the Police officers scurrying to clear a gap for Titan. We blazed through with inches to spare! I drove directly at the Russians who ran at the sight of the enormous vehicle, although I may have 'accidentally' clipped one or three shooters on the way through...

Behind a shipping container

On a whim, I had selected my full-face mask.

I was glad I had as the bullets were kicking up quite a bit of shrapnel, which peppered my head. Shadow had received several strikes to her armour, as had I. Our new armour was proving very good, but we were still pinned. I was down to my last pair of G36 magazines while Shadow had one more magazine left for her P90.

I could see Petra with the dynamic duo as they were trying to move towards us. Every now and then, there was a thud, as a heavy bullet from Leon's sniper rifle hit the ground, dissuading the Sicilian's advances.

Petra picked her moment and then ran forwards while Trojan and Wildcat provided covering fire with their P90s. Petra was part of the way to us when I saw a Sicilian pop-up and I saw him aiming a 40-millimetre grenade launcher. Petra was facing away from him as she ran towards us.

"Petra – grenade launcher – get down!" I yelled over the comms.

Either she did not hear me, or she ignored my warning. Either way, the grenade struck the ground and exploded just feet from Petra and her body flew through the air landing twenty feet or so away from where we were pinned.

"Petra is down – repeat – Petra is down!" I yelled in horror.

To add to my horror, I saw Wildcat and Trojan leap up and run towards Petra.

"Get back!" I yelled. "Wildcat, Trojan get the fuck back!"

"Like hell we will!" Wildcat yelled back.

"Grenade!" Trojan called, diving to the ground.

Wildcat was a little slow and the girl was just diving down as the grenade landed. The explosive force caught Wildcat and flipped her over several times, but after she hit the ground she just shook her head a few times and crawled over to Petra with Trojan beside her.

The rail yard

Petra was lying on her side.

With her full-face mask, it was not easy to see if she was breathing. I yanked off a gauntlet, shoved my hand under the mask to her neck, and was able to feel a pulse; it was strong and steady. Petra was just unconscious. After replacing my gauntlet, I ran them both over her combat suit and found several gouges, but I was unable to tell if any shrapnel had penetrated the armour.

"Petra's alive!" I called and then looked over to Wildcat.

"I'm okay, Trojan..." Wildcat said, breathing heavily.

I would have to trust her. I provided covering fire as Wildcat held onto Petra. Then I heard the blast of an air horn and the roar of a large turbo-diesel engine as the bright lights of Titan roared across the rails towards us. Twenty seconds later, it skidded to a halt, blocking us from the Sicilians.

The rear door flew open. Lynx and Splinter dived out to help drag the unconscious Petra into Titan. Once we were all in, the rear door was clammed shut and Medic drove over towards Shadow and Hit Girl. Wildcat and I continued firing out of the ports on the side and rear of Titan.

Titan stopped and we both jumped up just as a heavy bullet hit Shadow on her heavy chest armour.

The impact sent her flying backwards into the container. She hit the steel hard and fell to the ground; I seized her and dragged her towards Titan where several pairs of hands hauled her inside and I followed, heaving the door shut behind me.

The injured Fusion members were piling up fast!

Medic headed over towards Sentinel and the others. I jumped out with Splinter, Wildcat and Trojan on the way and we ran over towards the hidden Iron Hide. There I restocked my ammunition and we both headed towards a flanking position on the Sicilian's right.

Medic dived out of Titan, with Lynx covering her, sending out short bursts from her MP7.

Battle Guy dived inside and took over the driving. I helped the wounded Jackal inside and started kitting myself out for action. With help from Lynx, I clipped on additional armour to the front, rear and thighs of my suit. The extra armour added to the weight I was already lugging, but it would be needed if we were to finish that night alive.

I left Titan, with Mist, Lynx and Eisenhower. In my hands, I had my H&K 121, a 200-round belt loaded and ready. We ran towards the Sicilian's left flank.

"Hit Girl, Kick-Ass – moving to the opposite flank!" I called.

We had no idea how many of the Sicilians were left.

We were going in blind.

Altogether a crap tactical situation.

"Hit Girl; you have three targets behind the next container..." Leon called.

I nodded at Wildcat who pushed her P90 behind her, brought up her gauntlets – and she deployed both sets of claws from her knuckles. Wildcat moved around the container with Splinter following as backup. I kept my G36C raised and kept an eye open for trouble.

Wildcat was three feet in front of me as we came around the final corner of the container.

I moved wide to keep her insight, my Ninja-To in hand. There was a shout: "Dietro di te!"

One of the Sicilians span around as Wildcat somersaulted into the air and landed on a set of shoulders, burying the claws of her left gauntlet into the man's throat. Blood shot out as the claws were withdrawn and Wildcat jumped, kicking away an assault rifle that was being pointed at her. She landed on another set of shoulders, repeating the movement with her claws.

"Two more heading towards you, Splinter!" Leon reported.

I ran forward and drove my Tanto into the third man, just as another two men ran out of the darkness. They fired their assault rifles, catching me in the chest, but I span around, two knives embedding themselves in one man's throat. Wildcat plunged her claws into the other man's chest after she had flipped through the air avoiding the bullets from the assault rifle.

Wildcat landed heavily and rolled on the ground. Something was not right about her movements, but she regained her feet and retracted her claws, pulling around her P90.

"All clear!" Leon called.

Farther over to the east, we heard the loud report of a large calibre machine gun on automatic.

I pushed forwards the H&K 121 to my shoulder dropping Sicilians left and right.

Bullets were striking my armour, but thanks to the heavier composite panels, I was unhurt. Behind me came Lynx and Mist, both with their MP7s at the shoulder and firing short bursts, dropping more men.

As a distraction, Lynx would yell, "Schwanz!"

Eisenhower would dart in amongst the Sicilians and cause them to drop their weapons to defend themselves. Once a man was down, wrestling with the animal that was gripping his manhood, Mist would put a bullet in the man's head then call: "Tot!" and Eisenhower would move onto the next unlucky victim.

Periodically a man would fall with a large hole in his chest or head as Leon built up her body count.

Fifteen minutes later

The main road

I fired several more rounds from my Colt M4A1 Carbine before I ducked down beside the SUV.

"Still hot up there?" Voight asked as he changed the magazine in his own M4A1.

"Fuck, yeah!"

The Russians were playing hardball and several Officers were down. It was not all one-sided though, several Russians had been dropped too. I knew that Dave and Mindy were fighting the Sicilians a few hundred yards away, but apart from lots of weapons fire, I had heard nothing and I prayed that nobody was hurt.

I had seen Titan blaze through CPD lines, heading for the action. I hoped it was bringing in reinforcements.

Then over the sound of gunfire, I heard engines and beyond the Russians, I saw three large vehicles appearing. In front was Titan, followed by Iron Hide and another armoured SUV that I did not know that name of yet. They roared out of the rail yard and stopped a few yards behind the Russians. From the three vehicles, Fusion deployed.

I saw Hit Girl jump out of Iron Hide with Wildcat beside her. Kick-Ass was in the flatbed of Iron Hide and he was sending out bursts of fire from his machine gun. Then I was shocked to the core as I recognised Lynx firing a weapon, with Trojan and Mist alongside her.

What the hell, was she doing out there; the woman was almost three months pregnant! I saw my fiancée killing Russians with the rest of Fusion. The killing did not last long as the Russians soon figured out that they had been outflanked and they soon have up, throwing down their weapons.

I pushed through the mass of Cops, trying to reach Lynx, but Fusion rapidly mounted up and seemed to vanish amongst the chaos.

Safehouse F

I knew that I was in trouble, big trouble.

I had seen Marcus and it was obvious that he had seen me...

"What were you doing out there, Mom?" A very angry Megan yelled as she pulled off her mask.

"Doing what I needed to do, Megan – so keep a civil tongue in your head!" I responded.

"She has a point, Paige; you are pregnant and you were not supposed to leave Titan!" Medic exclaimed as she helped Jackal out of Iron Hide. "But arguments can wait; we need to get Hailee down to the Medical Centre."

As soon as I was back in the Safehouse, I pulled off my mask, dropping it with my weapons at the stop of the steel steps down to the lower level.

I ran down and went straight into the Medical Centre.

Hailee was lying on the table there and she was still unconscious. Her mask was off. Paige and Erika were helping Cathy to remove her armour. Sitting on a bed, in the corner was Josh with Kim winding a bandage tightly around his abdomen. Chloe was on a chair holding an ice pack to the side of her head. I could see no sign of Megan and knew that she had been hurt, too.

Fuck; what a fuck up the night had been!

I now had to call Vicki and let her know that her daughter was badly hurt. Marcus was also going to freak once he found out Paige had gone into action.

I was seething with anger.

The elevator down to the Safehouse seemed to take forever.

"Take it easy, Marcus – you don't know the circumstances..." Vicki said.

After an interminable amount of time, we exited the elevator and walked down the corridor, through another door and then through the kill zone into the Safehouse.

The place was busy, people moving purposefully around, removing combat suits, reloading and cleaning weapons. I saw Megan with Curtis and Tommy. Abby was with Marty in the Command Centre, but there was no sign of Paige or the other women.

Then I saw Mindy coming up from the lower level; she still wore her combat suit. Dave came out of the armoury having removed his own armour. Mindy saw us and headed over. Her expression told me that something was wrong.

"Don't say anything Marcus, not yet," Mindy said before turning to Vicky. "Hailee is downstairs, a grenade went off close to her – she's in a bad way..."

For a moment, I did not register what Mindy was saying, then it hit me, my daughter was hurt and she needed me.

The three of us ran down the steps to the lower level. When I entered the Medical Centre, I saw my daughter; she was out of her combat suit and just wearing shorts and her sports bra. I could see angry welts on her skin and several bloody injuries. Cathy was working with some surgical instruments, removing shrapnel from the wounds.

Cathy looked around and saw me.

"She'll be fine, Vicki; Hailee is young and she will heal."

I squeezed my daughter's hand and left the room with Marcus and Paige.

"What were you thinking?"

Marcus was mad.

"I got carried away in the moment and had to help; they were short-handed..."

"It's my fault, Marcus – I put her in danger – don't blame Paige..." Mindy cut in, coming out of the Medical Centre.

Marcus was torn between what he should do.

"God damn vigilantes!" Marcus growled and hugged his fiancée and daughter.

There was yelling coming from

The four of us ran up to the main level.

"You were hurt; I know it – get downstairs and let yourself get checked out!"

Curtis was yelling at Megan who was ignoring him.

"You were hurt! I saw you flipped through the air..." Curtis persisted.

"I'm fine..."

Tommy then poked Megan hard in the side and she screamed in pain.

"Point made!" Tommy added without any sympathy.

"I thought you had stopped hiding injuries, Megan?" I asked.

"I had – it's just a bruise..."

"Show me!" Paige ordered.

Megan hesitated, but pulled off the top of her combat suit. She was in pain just doing that, I noticed. She then lifted the bottom of her sweat-soaked t-shirt.

"Holy shit!" Marcus exclaimed.

Megan's stomach and side were badly bruised.

"Anywhere else?" I demanded.

"Mindy, I haven't looked yet..."

"Why did you disobey me, again? You and I are going to talk later, but for now – upstairs so I can check you over – move!" I was angry.

The following day

Monday

Early morning

Safehouse F

Things had settled down some.

Most had gone home. Once she had removed her combat suit, I had found that Megan was covered in bruises; her new suit had protected her from anything worse. I would talk to her later about her disobedience. Hailee was out of danger, but still unconscious. Josh and Chloe were at their apartment. Josh had bruised two ribs and he was in a lot of pain. Chloe had banged her head and had some blurred vision. Both would heal though.

Hailee was out of danger and she was resting in the Medical Centre overnight. Marcus and Vicki had left, along with Paige. Marcus was still very annoyed with Paige, but I hoped that they would be able to sort things out between them; I would hate it to be my fault that they had split up.

We had a lot of work ahead of us.

Central Chicago

"So, what happened?"

"The Sicilians and the Russians took a major hit and they ran..."

"Those fucking vigilantes?"

"All survived as far as we know..."

"We have stirred up a fucking hornet's nest – Hit Girl and Kick-Ass, along with the other members of Fusion need to die and soon!"

Chapter 205*: Psyche

That morning
Monday

Safehouse F

As soon as I had dropped the twins off at school, I headed down to the Safehouse to check on Hailee.

Cathy was already there and checking on the patient.

"Hi, how you feeling?" I asked.

"I hurt everywhere – my first grenade!" Hailee grimaced.

"The girl is doing well," Cathy said. "If she behaves she can go home this afternoon."

"Oh, well, she'll be here till Christmas then!" I quipped.

"Thanks, Mindy!"

"Well maybe next time I say, 'get down', you will, 'get down!'"

"Yeah, I'm sorry!"

Cathy left the room and I got serious, throwing some photos onto the bed in front of Hailee. She stared down at the photos and started to bite her bottom lip.

"What the fuck were you thinking?"

"I wanted to help you, I..."

"Not fucking good enough – you fucked up and you almost got Megan fucked up! Fucking up has consequences, Hailee and you should damn well know better. I expect Megan to disobey me; she is only eleven, but you are almost eighteen and an experienced vigilante, Petra."

I was just building up steam.

"Look at those photos – Sentinel was beaten to shit by the Sicilians and you could have been just as fucked up!"

"Mindy, look..."

"Hailee, I've fucked up too many times so I know how easy it is to ignore shit in the heat of the moment – I DO NOT want to lose anybody and I fucking hate it when anybody gets hurt. I feel like shit lecturing you, but I had to say something..."

"Mindy, I'm so sorry – I'm not used to operating in a team. It's not an excuse; I know better, but I had to say something."

"Let that be an end to it – time to move on!"

"I can live with that."

"Get better, so I can kick your fucking ass!"

That afternoon

D-JAK

I picked up the twins, Megan and Curtis from school.

We headed to D-JAK for the late afternoon session. Megan could not train, due to her bruises, but that was not going to stop me tearing her apart!

"Curtis, get Danny and Anne-Marie changed and start them off on some movements," I instructed and Curtis grimaced knowing what was about to happen.

"Nice knowing you, Megan!" He whispered.

Megan looked a little apprehensive as I led her into the back office, nodding to Paige as we passed, and closed the door – she was next!

"You know why you are here," I began. "You disobeyed me again and now you're bruised to fuck!"

"I got caught up in the moment and I should not have spoken to you like that – I wanted to help Hailee..."

"You're grounded from all Fusion activities for the next week."

"You can't do that!"

"I make the rules, bitch – you break 'em, I enforce 'em!"

"Okay – I'm sorry I let you down again, Mindy..."

"I know why you do it, Megan and I can't blame you for it – I just want to keep you alive; you're my little sister. You never let me down though; I am proud of you for what you did, you're a very brave girl."

"Mindy – now Mom is running around killing cunts, when do ya think Marcus will become a vigilante?"

I laughed.

"Somewhere in between the United States becoming British and hell freezing over!"

..._...

"Hi Paige – how did Marcus take it?"

"It wasn't easy but I think I turned him around," Paige replied and then she smiled. "A set of handcuffs helped..."

"Oh I did not just hear that!"

I left Paige rather quickly...

As I headed over towards the twins, I stopped to say hello to Lauren and Lizzie who were practicing their movements on the mat with Kyle.

"How you doing, girls?"

"Brilliant, thanks Mindy!"

..._...

"Okay, you two," I said to the twins in a corner of D-JAK beside a pair of hanging punch bags. "If you get annoyed, if you feel emotions building up inside you, emotions of fear, grief, anger, pain and a whole host of those other emotions – you use those emotions. Turn them around and turn them into energy and put that energy behind your punches."

They both punched the bags – just not hard enough for me.

"Think of something that really makes you mad..."

Anne-Marie punched the bag hard and her face was full of concentration.

"Put your grief, everything bad into that punch, focus and punch..."

While Danny was doing well, Anne-Marie was doing better – she obviously had quite a lot of pent up emotions!

"So, Anne-Marie, what emotion did you use?" I asked.

"You grounding me!" She replied with a smug grin.

I laughed.

That evening

I was walking Sophia along with Anne-Marie.

We would walk in a large square, each evening and we knew the route by heart. We often met our neighbours, one of whom was Bill Wright and his wife Beth who, besides thinking that Anne-Marie was cute as a button, also had a very handsome German Shepherd, called Rex, who had a thing for Sophia!

Usually, they just played and chased each other, only this time they both vanished into the bushes followed by Anne-Marie. There was a scream and Anne-Marie came running back out again, her face very red.

"What's up?" I asked.

"Rex is banging Sophia!"

"Okay – why would you think that?"

"Mindy – I may be seven, but I'm not stupid, besides Megan showed me a YouTube video of two dogs 'at it'..."

The girl actually used her fingers to accentuate 'at it'!

"Okay, I need to have a word with Megan about what is appropriate for you two to watch...!"

Just then, the two dogs reappeared and they both looked very pleased with themselves...

The following night Tuesday

North Central Chicago

I was fucking pissed.

It had to have been the Superintendent; he had set up the attack – it had to have been him. That bastard almost cost us our lives – he had almost caused the death of Josh, Hailee and Megan... I also knew why – the bastard wanted us to target him and then the whole CPD and the City would be gunning for us.

We had other ideas though to take down that bastard – Marty and Abby were busy with round one.

Dave and I had taken great joy earlier that evening watching as the Superintendent's credit card was destroyed before his very eyes. Marty had hacked into the Superintendent's schedule, and he had found out where the bastard was having dinner that night, with his wife and he had booked us a table... his wife was both humiliated and pissed!

Oh yes, they did the, err 'personal ads' bit, too!

Remember what Abby had wanted to call herself when she first joined us during The Week of Hell? 'Zero Cool' or 'Acid Burn'. She was a big fan of 'Hackers' and so was Marty – I will admit that I had watched the movie once or twice, too...

'MESS WITH THE BEST – DIE LIKE THE REST!'

..._...

While Marty and Abby were having fun with the Superintendent, they were also identifying the Superintendent's men and gathering key evidence against the Superintendent. The most important thing was for his men to be taken down by the CPD – Voight had that task along with Marcus.

Not that we did not intimidate them – we started to follow them around the City, stopping the various nefarious schemes that they were involved with; we must have hurt the Superintendent's cash flow more than a little!

Some of his men were freaked out by seeing a masked vigilante almost everywhere that they went; we made ourselves known so they had no choice but to behave.

We did however have a brush with the Sicilians again!

The bullet came out of nowhere and collided with Kick-Ass' back armour.

"What the fuck?" He demanded as he span around.

"We have some unfinished business!" A man shouted with a strong Italian accent.

There were eight men, all sporting firearms.

"Do you really want to do this?" Kick-Ass went on.

"We do."

"Your funeral!"

Bullets flew as I crouched down behind Kick-Ass, taking advantage of his heavier armour. As silence descended, I span from behind Kick-Ass and emptied both pistols into the men. The first few rounds shoved them back, but did not put them down; they were wearing body-armour – nobody said they were stupid!

I altered my aim, but not before the men began to fan out and I was only able to drop three. Kick-Ass had turned and drawn his own Glock pistols. He caught one man in the thigh as he dove for cover before advancing on the remaining four men as they took cover behind their SUVs.

I decided enough was enough and after checking that there were no innocents around I pulled the rings from two grenades, rolling them under the SUVs.

"Violent bitch!" Kick-Ass growled as he casually walked away from the SUVs.

I looked back just as the grenades exploded and I was suddenly awe-struck with the most amazing image of Kick-Ass in his new combat suit casually walking towards me as the two SUVs seemed to take off vertically behind him in a violent orange cloud of flame and destruction.

I was fangirling!

It was rare, but that night we had collateral damage, despite our best efforts.

As I went to re-join Hit Girl in Hound, I noticed something in the shadows. It was easy to miss and I almost ignored it, but something made me investigate.

"Hit Girl, hold up – I may have something here!" I called.

"Whattaya got big guy?" Mrs Kick-Ass asked.

What I had, was a young girl, lying on her side against a wall. She was unconscious and possibly a victim of the fight. Something told me that this was not just an ordinary young girl and an image of a certain apartment and a certain other young girl came unbidden into my mind.

The girl was dressed in black jeans, a black t-shirt, black boots and a black leather jacket that was unzipped. I placed my gauntlet onto her chest and could feel the rise and fall of her breathing; however, my gauntlet came away wet.

"She's hurt!"

I briefly checked her over and found a gash in her t-shirt from a knife, and what might be a close shave from a bullet. I also found something else that surprised me, and which proved that the girl was not just some innocent bystander. The young girl, and she was very young – younger than Mindy was when I had first met her, was wearing a shoulder harness and under her left arm was a small pistol, hanging in a holster. Under her right arm were two spare magazines. I also found a knife, mounted vertically, on the back of the harness as I picked her up.

I gently placed her onto the back seat of Hound and we headed back to Safehouse F.

Safehouse F

As soon as Hit Girl slammed on the brakes, I dived out and carried the girl down to the Medical Centre.

Cathy was on her way in, but she was still ten minutes out. Marty had the Medical Centre up and running ready for us. I placed the girl on the table and pulled off my mask and gauntlets, Mindy came through the door and started to wash her hands; I joined her. We both pulled on some rubber gloves and I removed the girl's jacket and shoulder harness. Marty took the shoulder harness and weapons to the armoury for safekeeping.

The girl was short and slim, under four and half feet and she had long blonde hair, which was currently in a ponytail. I pulled off her boots while Mindy started to cut away her t-shirt to get a better look at the girl's wounds.

The t-shirt was soaked in blood and her pale skin was awash with it. The slash across her stomach was oozing fresh blood and there was a bullet wound, which appeared to be just a flesh wound on her left side. Initially Mindy and I just covered the wounds to keep them clean and stop too much blood loss. There was bruising and some cuts to her face, but nothing a few days rest would not fix.

That was when Cathy and Chloe arrived. Cathy immediately took over treating the wounds with Chloe's help, while Mindy and I both headed upstairs to change and shower.

I awoke with a start.

I struggled to open my eyes; I felt weak.

Everything was dark, I tried to move and then I felt a searing pain coming from my stomach and left side, which had me gasping for air as tears fell down my face. My face felt bruised too. What was happening to me? Where was I? I reached down to my stomach, fearful of what I might find. I felt bare skin and then a soft material that was wrapped tightly around my stomach – a bandage.

As my eyes started to focus, I could see a dim light being emitted by a fitting on the wall. I was in a room that looked and smelled like a hospital – yes, I had been wounded before. I listened, but I could hear no ambient sounds, just the hum of the air conditioning. If I was still in the City, then I must be underground, which also fitted in with the fact that there were no windows in evidence.

I gently pushed back the sheet covering me and swung my feet over the side of the bed. I was at least wearing my knickers, but nothing else. I looked around the room and saw my clothes neatly hanging on a chair.

Ignoring the sharp jolt of pain, I slid off the bed and looked for my weapons. Not surprisingly, they were missing; however, my jeans, boots, socks and leather jacket were on the chair. My t-shirt was missing and so was the knife that normally lived in my right boot – bastards!

It took an age to pull on my clothes. Without a t-shirt, I zipped up my jacket to cover my chest – not that there was anything to cover. Once I was dressed, I hesitantly reached for the door handle and turned it, fully expecting the door to be locked.

To my surprise, the door opened as I pulled it towards me.

..._...

I was in a passageway.

There was only one way to go – to the right. At the end of the corridor was another door, again it was unlocked. I found myself in a kind of vestibule.

The door I had just passed through had a sign: 'Medical Center', which seemed logical. To my left was another door that read: 'Power/Generator/Pyro Store'. That door also had the usual 'DANGER – ELECTRIC SHOCK WARNING' type signs, plus a palm scanner for access. To my right was another door that had large bolts on the outside of it; the sign read: 'Interrogation & Holding'.

Ominous!

The other doors seemed to lead to couple of storerooms and all had palm scanners beside them. The final wall, farther to my right, was mostly glass and through the glass, I could see a Martial Arts training centre. Even more important, I could see Jō-staffs and other potentially lethal weapons in a rack off to one side. However, the glass door was locked with a palm scanner too!

All that was left were some steel stairs that led upwards.

..._...

I crept up the stairs, slowly and quietly.

Once I could see the next floor, I stopped and looked around. There was limited lighting, as according to the clock in the Medical Centre, it was shortly after three in the morning. As I emerged into what appeared to be a large cavern, I stopped dead.

I was roughly mid-way down the cavern. Behind me was there was a large vehicle-sized steel door and some large vehicles. I instantly recognised Iron Hide, not to mention the pair of Ducati Panigale motorcycles, one in blue and the other a purple colour and a larger motorcycle in black, yellow and green. They were parked behind an eight-foot tall armoured glass shield that ran across the available width of the forty-foot wide cavern and had a large six-foot tall figure '1' on it. The top of the shield was angled over at forty-five degrees away from me, to prevent anybody climbing the structure from the far side. The floor of the 'cavern' was ribbed steel and concrete.

Beside me was a large training mat and in front of me, at the end of the cavern and over to the left was a glass-enclosed room that housed computer equipment and large flat screens. It was obviously a Command Centre. Immediately beside the Command Centre was an external steel staircase leading up.

The staircase provided access to a walkway, which ran around the central section of the cavern and provided access to a number of rooms on the second level. There was another steel staircase, which came down behind me. The walkway was about ten feet off the ground and ringed with a steel and glass barrier that rose to a level of three and a half feet and the walkway itself was made of steel, but appeared to have a foam rubber covering. There were various doors, visible, that led off the walkway into rooms, with unknown purposes. The ceiling and some of the walls had foam rubber sections that I presumed were designed to reduce the echo in the cavernous room.

..._...

"So, you're awake!"

It was a statement more than a question.

I looked up to see a masked person looking down at me from the walkway that ran over the training mat. I kept my eyes on the person as they walked around the walkway and then down the stairs, behind me.

"Hi, I'm Shadow."

I said nothing, I just glared – I knew exactly who she was in her armoured combat suit.

"You're injured; you should be in the Medical Centre – in bed!"

I rolled my eyes and Shadow laughed.

"What do we call you?"

"They call me Psyche..." I offered, looking around and playing for time as I got to grips with the facility.

Shadow was watching my eyes.

"We're here to help you, Psyche."

"I want out of here..."

"Look, I know you're scared; I've been in your position, waking up somewhere strange and not knowing what the hell is going on..."

"I am not bloody scared!"

"Have it your way, then..." Shadow replied. "You're British, aren't you?"

"What of it?"

"Nothing – I have only good things to say about the Brits – honest!"

I had had enough gossiping – I flew for Shadow. I kicked out, catching Shadow in the chest and sending her backwards. She regained her posture, but did not attack.

"Come on, you muppet, do something useful!" I growled.

"I don't want to hurt you..." Shadow began.

"Your loss, tosser!" I called out as I span, kicking Shadow in the side of her head.

Shadow fell to her side, still not attacking.

"Pillock!"

Then I paused as a searing pain burst out in my stomach and I was forced to wrap both arms around myself. The pain was immense as I fell to my knees and then I fell onto my side. I heard voices.

A woman's voice: "Quick, get her back downstairs..."

I felt hands rolling me onto my back and then my jacket was unzipped. I was in too much pain to resist.

A man's voice: "She's bleeding again – her bandages are soaked!"

Shadow's voice: "Take it easy with her – she's hurting..."

Then I heard nothing more as I sank into blackness.

Chapter 206*: Aurora

Tuesday night

Safehouse F

I must have fainted with the pain, because all I could remember was the sudden explosion of pain in my stomach and then collapsing on the mat in the large cavern, and then – nothing...

Now though, I was aware of my senses returning and I could hear voices. However, I could not make out what they were saying; nevertheless, I did get the impression that they were talking about yours truly. Keeping my eyes closed, I instinctively relaxed all my muscles, feigning continued unconsciousness as I tried to determine where I was, other than in a bed in the Medical Centre!

I could hear at least three voices speaking. Two were some distance away. Male and female sounding, older than myself, but younger than Miranda. The third was practically right next to me, to my right. It too, was female, but much younger sounding and closer to my own age. I was, just as I had been earlier, naked but for my knickers and covered with a thin sheet.

"Do you think she's a mini you?" The male voice asked. "When I saw her, all my senses were reminding me of you when I first met you."

"Ass! Possibly," the distant female voice stated. "She was armed like I used to arm myself, at that age – when I wasn't wearing my costume. Nevertheless, she undoubtedly knows how to use that gun and knife; they were in perfect condition – used condition I might add. She had a good go at Shadow, but then Shadow refused to respond. I think she might be able to take somebody closer to her size, in hand-to-hand – like Wildcat maybe. It is obvious that she trains; you can see the muscle she has built up – that is not a normal nine-year-old and I should know! It feels strange seeing a girl like that – I suppose you felt similar when you saw me as me. Up until now it's just been the hormonal bitch, over there..."

"Step back Wildcat," the male voice suggested. "Give the girl some space – oh never mind – just don't say I didn't warn you!"

"Relax, Kick-Ass. The little bitch is out cold," the voice that I decided was Wildcat stated. She poked me in the chest, to demonstrate.

Enough was enough – I hated being poked! I tensed up immediately, and opening my eyes, I thrust out with my right arm and grabbed the gauntleted hand as it reached out to poke me again. Then I almost crapped myself...

"Oh, fuck!" I yelled and I froze as three very long claw-like blades appeared just inches from my chest...

"Okay, okay!" I called out in a sudden panic.

Wildcat retracted her claws and I gingerly sat up in the bed. The fight had gone out of me; I was in too much pain and more humiliatingly, I needed the loo.

"I'm sorry," Wildcat apologised, retracting her claws.

"I need the loo – I promise I'll behave..." I said urgently.

"Wildcat will help you – as Shadow said earlier; we're not here to hurt you – if we wanted to..."

"Yes, I know, I'd be dead as the proverbial dodo!" I growled with a weak smile, looking over at the purple form of Hit Girl.

Next to her, stood the immense and very intimidating, armoured form of Kick-Ass and I suddenly felt very small in his presence. Something at the back of my mind told me that I was in the presence of royalty – vigilante royalty.

I noticed that Hit Girl and Kick-Ass both turned away as Wildcat helped me off the bed and over to the attached bathroom. I felt humiliated and embarrassed considering my limited clothing; I could feel myself blushing too.

"That bed sucks; I've spent more than a few nights in it myself," Wildcat said conversationally with her back to me as I pissed my life away.

Once finished with my ablutions, I was helped back into bed.

"Well this is a turn up for the books!"

"Why?" I asked.

"Two raging, murderous kiddies; what did I do to deserve this?" Kick-Ass moaned.

I laughed; I myself was surprised – potentially having somebody that I might actually be able to relate to – somebody who had had similar experiences in their presumably non-existent childhood. I just hoped the girl in the bed did not have a freakin' nutcase for a father – sorry Daddy!

"Psyche, I – I think I know some of what you might be going through. I began my life as Hit Girl when I was six and it has never stopped."

The girl was staring down at the sheet, as she had been since returning from the bathroom.

"You know we can't let you go – not like you are; you're injured..." Wildcat added conversationally.

"I know – I wouldn't last five minutes... Thanks – for saving my life..." The girl muttered.

"You're welcome," Kick-Ass replied.

"Is there anybody we can contact?" I asked with genuine concern.

"She's called Aurora – she's all I got..."

Was that a quiver in her voice? I knew what was about to happen – I had been there...

"I think you need some sleep – we'll check on you later – okay?" I said somewhat hurriedly.

I quickly ushered Kick-Ass and Wildcat out of the room.

"Thank you..."

Just as I closed the door, I heard the tears falling.

"She's hurting badly – she's psychotic most likely or there is some other underlying issue."

I looked over at Cathy.

"You mean that young girl is a fucking disturbed nutcase like me!" I growled rhetorically.

"No – well, yes."

"It's okay to say I'm nuts; I am, but how could somebody do such a thing to such a girl – I always hoped I was the only one; hoped that nobody else had to suffer like I had..."

I was steaming and I ignored the tears spilling down my cheeks as I vented.

"When I find whoever turned that little girl into a cold killer – I'll..."

Dave hugged me as I muttered obscenities and cried. I looked up at a screen in the Command Centre and I saw the girl, Psyche, crying her heart out into the pillow on the floor below us.

This was going to end – no more kids were going to be turned into killers – those people were now at the top of my shit list and that was a privileged place to be. Once it had been Frank D'Amico, then it was Chris D'Amico and then finally it was Ralph D'Amico!

Notice a theme?

Those at the top of my shit list died – eventually...

Late that night
Southern Chicago

Where was the little bitch?

She knew I hated it when she went out alone and she was late. I had tried her cell, but it was dead; I could not get a GPS position off it either.

The girl had been restless and she had said that she wanted to check out the area – I could not stop her; that girl listened to no one but herself! We had been together, as far as we could remember, for six months and we were all each other had; I missed her.

Early the following morning

I was beside myself with worry.

Stephanie should have been back hours ago; she was fully armed, of course, and now that a lot of her training had returned, she was a mobile menace. I missed seeing her on the couch, with her feet up reading a gun magazine – she had recently found that she liked to read them. She would also be listening to some rubbish, like her favourite group: One Direction, on her smartphone with headphones.

I had but one option; I had to find him.

That was not so difficult; I knew where he lived but I just could not bring myself to face him. I also had a nasty idea who else I might find living with him. Yes, I knew he was Kick-Ass and I knew that he was active with Hit Girl – I also knew that he was married to Mindy Macready – the age was about right; she had to be Hit Girl. She would and could tear me a new asshole, even if Dave did not!

My training then kicked in, unbidden – I could control certain parts of it and I chose to use what I needed. For the moment, I needed to be cold and collected.

I needed Dave's help – I hoped he would help me.

Later that morning
Glenview

As per my training, I scoped out the entire area around their house before I chose the right moment to make my way to the gates.

I pressed the buzzer. I could have opened the gates myself, but then they might not have trusted me.

"Hello?" Came the response.

Even over the intercom, I recognised his voice – so many emotions grew and subsided all at once.

"Dave – it's Miranda..."

There was a pause – a long pause.

Then the gates started to move.

"Somebody at the gate? Dave – you look like you've seen a ghost!"

"Heard one actually... Get the kids into the bedroom – we have company..."

I saw Mindy go pale and then she ran towards the living room.

"Anne-Marie, Danny – into Anne-Marie's bedroom now!" She yelled.

That room had armoured doors and deadbolts – it was a panic room with steel shutters for the windows, only I did not trigger them yet. A minute later Mindy was at my side, a mini-Uzi in her right hand and passing a Glock 17 to me. I had just called Marty and as I lowered the cell, I had heard the klaxon sounding in the Safehouse.

I opened the front door with the Glock behind my back.

Earlier that morning Safehouse F

It had been a weird morning.

I had awoken feeling a little better and I was met by a smiling face, instead of a mask.

"I'm Cathy – you hungry?"

"Yes, I am thank you."

"A very polite young lady; I'm not used to that! First I'll check you over and then I'll leave you to get washed and dressed – there's some clean clothes on the chair for you..."

With that, the woman checked the bandage around my stomach and then she checked the bruising and cuts on my face; she seemed happy and then she was gone.

I eased myself out of bed. As the woman had said, there were clean clothes on the chair – they were not just clean, they were brand new! I made use of the bathroom, where I found soap, a towel and a toothbrush plus some toothpaste – my mouth tasted of crap – not that I knew what crap tasted like, but you get the idea.

Once I had pulled on new knickers and socks, a white t-shirt and blue jeans, I tied the laces on the new trainers and checked myself out in the mirror. I was very uncomfortable with the bandage, but not as bad as the previous night. I looked like crap; my face was bruised and my hair sucked, but I tied it back as best I could.

I headed out the door, following the same route that I had taken the previous night.

I was met at the top of the steel steps by a tall teenaged girl.

"Hi, I'm Chloe – I'll take you to the galley."

I was a little overwhelmed by the welcome considering that I had attacked them only the previous night.

"You're Shadow?" I asked, not expecting an answer.

"Bright little spark aren't you!" The girl, Chloe, replied.

I actually felt myself blushing.

"Stephanie..."

"What?" Chloe asked turning.

"My name – it's Stephanie, but please call me Steph."

"Hello Steph, I'm pleased to meet you."

I could smell food and I was ravenous. One thing I had picked up in America was the enjoyment of large breakfasts! As I followed Chloe into the galley, I suddenly felt a little shy; there were several people sitting at the tables there – and they were all looking at me.

Chloe guided me into a chair between a young girl who was maybe a couple of years older than I was and a tall teenaged boy.

..._...

Chloe introduced everybody.

"Over there is Marty, beside him is Cathy and to your left, is Megan and finally, to your right, is Josh. Everybody, please meet Steph."

There were plenty of 'hellos', but one registered more than the others. It was the teenaged boy, Josh; his accent – it was most definitely not, American!

"A voice from home...," he said with a smile.

"I've not heard a proper accent in years – I miss it."

"You've got a very nice accent, Steph..."

I blushed again.

"Hey! Joshua – she's way too young for you!" Chloe cautioned with a laugh.

Cathy put a plate down in front of me – it was overflowing with food!

"Sorry about the claws last night – you triggered them accidentally!" Megan said with a grin.

"They were very cool – if a bit scary...," I admitted.

It felt good to be able to talk with other kids; yes, they were older than I was, but we all had something in common – unfortunately, that something was nothing good, but I recognised killers when I saw them.

Just as breakfast was finishing, Marty took a phone call and I saw his face turn serious. He jumped up and hit a red button on the wall. A klaxon sounded and he ran down the stairs with a single word shouted behind him.

"Nightingales!"

Glenview

"Miranda..."

It was definitely her – only she seemed different somehow.

"Dave... I need help..."

"You'd better come in, then..."

As soon as Miranda was in the door, I slammed it shut and Mindy stood covering Miranda with the mini-Uzi; I stood well out of the line of fire.

"What are you carrying?" Mindy growled ominously.

"Two pistols and a knife..."

"Table..." Mindy indicated with her head.

I had no choice, but I trusted Dave; I had to trust them both.

The pistols and the knife went on the table, then Dave frisked me – I did not enjoy it as much as I thought I might. Nevertheless, I got straight to the point.

"Dave, I am no longer that woman – 'Night'. That was not me; I still have her memories and some of her skills, but I now have my conscience back. I did wrong – a lot of wrong and I am so sorry... But – She's missing – she was part of the same corrupt program; she's only nine..."

"Who is only nine?" Dave asked.

"Stephanie – she has the same training and..."

I saw Dave and the woman exchange a glance.

"Aurora?" The woman asked; I assumed she was Mindy.

There was no way that they could have known my codename – unless...

"You've seen her?" I was full of hope...

"Psyche?"

Safehouse F

"Stand down!"

It was Marty's voice. I cursed as I started removing what body armour I had already pulled on. As I came out of the armoury, pulling my blouse back on, I saw Steph looking around anxiously; she looked lost, which was a surprise.

"What's happening, Chloe?" She asked.

"No idea!" I replied.

"We have friendlies inbound; twenty minutes..." Marty yelled.

Twenty minutes later...

I watched as the orange lights began to rotate and flash as the vehicle access door opened.

Into the Safehouse came Dave's RS7. He climbed out and I watched as the passenger door opened and I was surprised to see a woman step out; she had dark ginger hair and she was tall, but thin. They made their way through the armoured screen and the moment Steph saw the woman, she ran forwards and jumped into her arms.

I heard tears – tears of joy.

Dave was smiling, but I noticed that something was troubling him. I walked over, but he waved me away.

"Not now, Megan – I'll tell you about it some other time."

I was so happy when I saw Stephanie.

She ran towards me with an enormous grin on her face and jumped into my arms. She cried and so did I. She was also grimacing.

"What is it?" I asked when she finally let me go and I dropped her gently to the ground.

Stephanie gently pulled up her t-shirt and I saw a large bandage.

"Oh, my God!"

"She was in a fight; she was shot and cut with a knife," Dave explained. "You can see the bruising."

It was only then that I noticed the bruising on Stephanie's face.

"You pleased to see Miranda?" Dave asked Stephanie.

"Absobloodylootely!" She replied happily, which I assumed meant 'yes'.

The following morning Wednesday

Morton Grove

Here we go again!

I wrote the title on the top sheet of paper of my pad: 'STEPHANIE WALKER: INTERVIEW #2'. I then glanced up at the girl sitting across from me; she looked self-conscious, shy and a little unsure of herself – all a surprise after the experience of only two hours previously!

"Are we more in control of our emotions?"

"Yes, ma'am... I am very sorry about earlier... It won't happen again..."

I saw the girl glance over at the hole in my study wall. She went slightly pink in the face. I had to admit, she was trying – she had just got herself a bit agitated and punched the wall before storming out. Now, though, she had cleaned herself up and her hair was neatly up in a ponytail. She was still wearing the new clothes I had bought and not the black getup.

I had picked her up from the Safehouse early that morning to have a discreet and private chat with her. Miranda remained at the Safehouse – she was very tired and needed rest.

"Don't worry; you err, have a lot of anger to work out and I will admit I learnt some new words today!"

Stephanie went a deeper shade of pink. I casually peered down into my purse, where the yellow handle of a Taser was visible and easily grabbed if necessary. I was not alone; Paige was in another room, just in case – with another Taser. We trusted Stephanie, but I knew that she was unstable, as Mindy had once been.

"Let us take things slowly..."

Safehouse F

"Let's start wading through some of the crap Miranda brought us!"

Marty was not happy. Something was off about him; I knew that he had known Miranda from years ago and her turning on everybody as a Nightingale had hurt him.

"On it!" I replied as I began typing. "What the hell is Treadstone?"

Six thousand miles to the east

Tbilisi, Georgia

There was a chime as a new message appeared in the email application.

The well-built man got out of his comfortable chair and wandered over to the laptop. He glanced at the email and grimaced.

"Fuck!"

"What is it?" The blonde woman asked, coming into the room.

"Somebody has just opened a ten-year-old can of worms..."

"Why can't they leave the damn thing closed? It's been eleven years, actually, but who's counting!" The woman replied rhetorically. "Where?"

"Chicago."

Chapter 207*: Nightmares

*Later that afternoon
Wednesday*

*South Cottage Grove
Apartment 202*

I knocked on the door.

"It's open!" Came Chloe's voice, so I pushed the door open, closing it behind me.

"Keep your fingers crossed, Steph!" I warned.

"Why?"

"You really don't wanna know!"

"Hi, Steph!" Chloe called out as we entered the living room. "Hi, Mindy!"

"You're wearing clothes – that's a change!" I grimaced.

"Ignore her, Steph – Josh is in the kitchen."

..._...

Once Stephanie had gone through to the kitchen, I sat down with Chloe.

"How is she?" Chloe asked with genuine concern.

"Struggling, but under the circumstances I think she's doing well. She asked to see Josh – I think the British connection helps," I explained.

"What are you going to do with her?"

"We don't know – she has no home; she only has Miranda and I'm not sure about Miranda either."

"You trust Miranda?"

"Not really – especially after past experiences; but we have no choice. We need to find out what happened to Stephanie, so we can try to help her."

"Where will she stay?"

"Funny story – well, your Mother seems to think that as Stephanie and I share similar, err mental instabilities, she err thinks Stephanie should stay with me, at least at first," Mindy replied. "Plus I have the skills to physically control her if necessary. She is, we hope, bonding with Josh so he can help with her mental side a bit."

"I really feel for her – she is such a sweet girl when she isn't being, well, you..."

"I know..."

I stopped talking as I heard a little scream from the kitchen.

"Oh Josh, that is so good; I need more, give it to me..."

"I'm coming, I'm coming!"

I looked at Mindy and her mouth fell open.

"They couldn't be..." Mindy began.

We jumped up and peered into the kitchen.

Stephanie was sitting at the kitchen counter, stuffing something into her mouth.

"It's so good!" She squealed with her mouth full.

She turned as we entered, swallowing.

"He's got Marmite; I love Marmite – it's been years!" She said happily.

"The ultimate comfort food," Josh explained smugly. "Marmite on toast – she's on her fifth piece!"

"She eats that shit? Kinda explains things!" Chloe muttered.

"I love it – you've got to try it, Mindy, Chloe – it's heaven!" Stephanie replied grinning broadly for the first time.

"I admit I've never tried it..." I admitted.

"Don't Mindy; it's like eating gun grease!" Chloe warned.

"I like the taste of gun grease; I'll have you know..."

"What a surprise!" Chloe growled. "Don't blame me if you puke..."

Stephanie passed over a small piece of toast with butter and some black tar-like stuff on it. I tentatively licked it. Not so bad... The smell was intriguing... Strange taste – salty, interesting, sharp...

"Not bad!" I said, finally.

"Always knew you were fucking strange!" Chloe growled with a laugh.

That night

Glenview

"Nice place, Mindy!"

"Thanks... Before we go in, I need to talk to you. My kids have no knowledge of who Dave and I, or the others for that matter, really are. You let out our little secret and I – will – rip – you – apart, nine-years-old, or not..."

"I believe you."

"I can see that you do – so I want you to be on your best behaviour, understand – I know it won't be easy for you, but I will be there for you whenever you need me; the same with Dave."

"Thank you, Mindy."

We climbed out of the XJR and headed inside.

"Hi, Paige and thanks for looking after the little terrors!"

"They've been angels as always..."

"Mindy!" Both kids yelled, running over for a hug.

"Kids, I'd like you to meet Steph. Steph is going to be staying with us for a while. Please make her feel welcome. She'll be sleeping in your room, Anne-Marie, okay?"

"Cool! Hi, Steph – I'm Anne-Marie and this is my brother, Danny. Come on, I'll show you my room."

"You going to be okay, Mindy?"

"Yeah, thanks, Paige."

"Come on!"

I dragged Steph up to my room. She seemed a little surprised when she saw my bedroom.

"It's enormous!"

I was a little taken aback by the different accent, but I was used to Josh, so it was no big deal and I did not comment on it.

"It is, isn't it?" I replied feeling a little embarrassed. "You'll sleep on the pull-out bed over there. My brother sleeps in the room through the bathroom. I love sleepovers – not had one in a while though. How old are you?"

"Nine."

"Danny and I are seven and a half, eight in March. You got some pyjamas?"

"Actually, no!"

"Yes, you do..." Mindy said as she came in the door and threw a large white t-shirt at Steph.

I saw Steph's eyes go wide when she saw what the t-shirt had on the front – it was the younger Hit Girl in her best pose – she was standing sideways, but facing the camera, with a pistol held out, aimed at the camera! Mindy calls it her 'SOMF' t-shirt; I understood Dave bought it for her, one birthday. Mindy won't tell me what 'SOMF' stands for, though...

"Should be long enough to keep you decent, Steph. I'll take you shopping in the morning."

I was humbled by the way that I was being treated.

I was a killer, a bad person and I had attacked them, but they treated me like a friend. That alone said a lot about what Fusion stood for. As I lay there in the darkness, I looked over at the bed across the room. Even that young girl at seven-years-old was happy to let me into her life and allow me, a complete stranger, to sleep in her room. Mind you, Anne-Marie and Danny saw me as an ordinary nine-year-old girl. Dave and Mindy knew different, but they still treated me the same. Mindy had shown me where her bedroom was and she had told me to wake her if I had any problems.

Problems? Like what? A desire to kill people?

It was going to be very different not having Miranda nearby, but she was sleeping back at our apartment. Anne-Marie had been curious about my bandage when I had undressed before bed. I explained that I had been hurt in an accident and Mindy had backed me up, telling Anne-Marie to stop being so nosy!

Despite my being hurt, I was pleased to have found myself in with Fusion – Miranda was not so happy and she refused to tell me why. I could tell that there was a history between her and Dave, but I had not wanted to pry.

For the first time in months, I felt safe and I actually felt happy.

"She gonna kill us in our sleep?"

"Funny, cunt – as much as I would!"

"I'll never see the morning!"

"Seriously, I trust her and I think she trusts me – but just in case..."

Mindy brought a Glock 26 out from under the pillow – it was fitted with a suppressor.

"Better safe than sorry..." Mindy added with a sheepish grin.

Later that night

It was past two in the morning when I decided to check on the girls.

As I approached the open door to Anne-Marie's room I could hear somebody talking and it was not my daughter. I was about to go into the room when I heard movement and saw Anne-Marie getting out of bed.

She went over to Steph who was obviously having a nightmare – I was about to intervene, knowing how I might react if I were awoken from a nightmare of the sort Steph was probably having. Anne-Marie shook Steph's shoulder and the girl awoke instantly. In the dull illumination of a night light, I could see that the girl was covered in sweat and breathing heavily; she was shaking too.

"I'm sorry, did I wake you?" Steph asked.

"You were having a nightmare..."

"I get them a lot; I'm sorry..."

"I get them too – you look a mess. Why don't you come and sleep in my bed; then you won't be alone."

Steph hesitated, but Anne-Marie had grabbed Steph's wrist and was dragging her across the room. Anne-Marie could be very pushy at times! Once the girls were in bed, I could hear them talking together.

"I get nightmares a lot – ever since our Dad was brutally murdered in Gotham; the first week was the worst and I was a wreck, but Mindy helped me through it. She can help you, too; Mindy is one in a million and I love her – Dave too... Are you crying?"

"I'm sorry – I'm just not used to having people care about me like this. You've only known me for a few hours, yet you are happy to share your thoughts with me and help me..."

"Get a grip Steph – Mindy asked us to make you feel welcome, so that is what I'm gonna do!"

"Thank you – you're a credit to your Mum and Dad you know..."

"I suppose I am..."

I waited until they both fell asleep and then headed back downstairs to bed.

The following morning Thursday

Glenview

I was up early and found Anne-Marie and Danny already up, washed and dressed.

Steph was still in bed, but awake.

"You two sleep okay?" I asked the girls.

"Steph had a nightmare but we sorted it."

"Come on, breakfast!"

Steph groaned, but threw back the duvet and rolled out of bed.

..._...

After breakfast, Dave took the twins to school while I helped Steph remove her bandage so she could shower. I didn't mention anything about what I had witnessed the previous night, but Steph was smiling which was good.

Our first stop of the day was a clothes store where we picked up the essentials that Steph would need. We also stopped off to see Miranda and pickup Steph's kit.

"You look a lot better, this morning," Miranda said to Steph.

"I feel better, thanks. What about you?"

"Knowing that we are both in good hands, I slept remarkably well."

"Will I see you later?"

"Dave is picking me up this afternoon, so yes."

Safehouse F

"What's this?"

"A test!"

Arranged on the table in the armoury were various gun parts – quite a lot of them and they were all mixed up!

"Reassemble what you can..." Mindy prompted as she left the room.

I emptied my mind and focussed on the contents of the table. I felt my mind taking over and my hands started to reach for the various components, arranging them into groups. I smirked as I identified a wildcard – Mindy was trying to be clever! It did not take me long to reassemble the weapons and lay them neatly on the table.

When I was finished, I looked around the armoury. I saw my own weapons, over on another table. I took in the massive array of firearms, knives and other equally lethal weapons. I also took in the racks of ammunition. There were steel containers, cardboard boxes and loaded magazines. A part of my mind was telling me to seize a weapon and escape, but I forced that order back down – I wanted to stay where I was; I was not about to jeopardise my relationship with Mindy.

Mindy reappeared and looked approvingly at my results.

"Well done! For a bonus point – what is the extra component and where does it belong?"

I stood up and walked over to the array of pistols, selecting one from the rack.

"Browning Hi-Power – the slide stop – is that the best you've got, Hit Girl!"

Mindy laughed.

"Cocky bitch!"

I grinned.

The Galley

We were alone, which was ominous, although I was certain there was somebody else in the Safehouse; I could hear other activity.

Mindy passed me a mug of tea and sat down with a mug of coffee.

"Tell me about the other night – what happened?"

I was still piecing together the events that had put me in the Medical Centre, but I owed Mindy, so...

Tuesday night

I was bored, so I wanted to check out the area – just to be safe, of course.

Miranda tried to dissuade me, but I forced the issue, pulling on my weapons and jacket, before heading out the door. I knew Chicago was dangerous – I vividly remembered the events of that first day of our new life. I kept to the shadows, only there were already some other men using those same shadows.

I tried to sneak past, but they saw me and as I turned to run, another one took hold of me by the arms. I tried to fight only to receive a punch to my face, which damn well hurt! I fought back but then one of them shouted an order.

"They're here; stop playing with the bitch and kill her!"

A knife appeared, which I deflected, but it slashed my stomach, which really hurt and I screamed out. Then came the gun and after the gunshot, I heard and saw nothing until I awoke in the Safehouse Medical Centre.

Thursday

Safehouse F

"Sounds like you had fun!"

"Thanks, Mindy!"

Mindy looked at me and I realised that she could read my expressions and she looked worried.

"Mindy, I hate what I am – I don't want to be me; I want to be normal – a normal nine-year-old... A normal girl."

"I know how you feel, I really do; I've been there."

I had a nasty thought.

"Will I ever be normal?"

Mindy hesitated before she replied.

"To be honest, no..."

I did not like the sound of that, not one bit...

"Stephanie, you will never be normal again. Believe me, I know – I wished so many times, but it never happened. Like you, I was brain washed into doing unspeakable things without any hint of conscience. Daddy made it a game and I indulged in it; I loved the purple suit and the pink utility belt was to die for – I always wore it, even when doing my homework!"

"Then Dave came into my life and I kinda developed a crush – an eleven year-old crushing on a dick in a wetsuit! Then after a night of hell, my reason for being was removed – Kick-Ass killed Frank D'Amico. It was over; there was no need for Hit Girl... I went back to what I thought would be a normal life."

"If you can call an eleven-year-old putting down two fifteen year-old bullies on her first day of school, normal!"

"Hi Dave!" Mindy laughed.

"Did she really do that?" I asked.

"They spent a week in hospital!" Dave replied with a grin. "Mindy tried her best to be normal, but she struggled – it took a few years before she finally found out what she was – who she was."

"I was fifteen and despite trying to be a good daughter to my Step-Dad, I wasn't comfortable being Mindy Macready. Then Dave's Dad was murdered and the funeral was attacked – then I fucked things up, but I discovered that I had but one identity; I was Hit Girl!"

"But..." I began.

"It's complicated," Dave said. "Stay with me; it will all become clear, Stephanie."

"I was forced to leave New York and things started well, but then one tiny mistake – I killed a cunt who tried to steal my motorcycle – and I almost died as I led a feral existence controlled by Hit Girl. Dave searched for months and finally found me here, in Chicago – I treated him badly and I still feel bad about that."

"Mindy basically told me to go fuck myself!"

"She always was a bitch!" Chloe said sitting down beside Mindy.

"Then I got myself shot and Dave saved my life – only I was an ungrateful bitch and I told him where to go even though he had just bandaged my side up!"

"I'd figured Mindy out; I was probably the first to do that, but not the last, though. All of us, even nutcase Chloe here, have two identities. We switch by taking off our costume and going back to our normal lives. Mindy cannot do that – by the time her Daddy had finished with her, Mindy Macready and Hit Girl were so intertwined that they could never be separated – I was the first to work that out."

"I am damaged, Stephanie – I cannot exist on my own. There are two people, in my life, who are able to control me and keep me as a person with a conscience and a human being. Without them, I would not be able to be Mindy Macready. I owe everything to these two – Chloe and Dave are what keep me, me."

"I hate to say it, but you are me – you will never be Stephanie Walker nor Psyche. You can only be Stephanie 'Psyche' Walker, as I am Mindy 'Hit Girl' Macready. The way you described your thoughts and behaviour to Cathy – I am sorry, but the damage is done."

I did not know what to say. I got up and went for a walk around the walkways to think through what I had been told.

"Got a minute Steph?" Chloe asked a while later.

"Of course..."

"I want you to watch something."

It was a video – YouTube.

"Hello boys and girls..."

"Is that...?"

"Just watch – but yes, that is Mindy's father, Big Daddy and over there – Dave..." Chloe said quietly.

Oh, crap! It was a fucking snuff movie!

I was horrified... Nevertheless, I could not take my eyes away...

"Even with my metal plates and my fucked up nerve-endings, I gotta tell yer; that hurt!"

I turned to see Dave standing behind me. He smiled and I turned back to the video.

'... This for all you cavemen out there... Is fire... Fire... Fire is good... Fire is our friend... Gentlemen... Time to die...'

"Holy shit!" I exclaimed as the first man went down and things went black.

"I was scared, but my training took over and I killed every last one of the murdering bastards..."

This time it was Mindy and she looked pained.

We watched as the much younger Mindy went into action. I took in the anguished yell when she saw her father burning, the strobe light, and the men dying – all the way to the end.

'... Show's over motherfuckers!'

I was stunned.

I turned to see Dave hugging Mindy tightly.

"Well?" Chloe asked pointedly.

I was speechless.

"So – what do I do?"

"You have choices to make, Stephanie. You can never be a normal girl, not without help. You can never exist as Psyche – you'd be dead before you were twelve. You have a gift, just as I have. It took me a long time to understand that. I am a bad person, but I channel my hate and use it for good. My Daddy taught me morality and it was a key part of my being Hit Girl. If you want, I am willing to teach you to control Psyche and turn her to your advantage. I can teach you what you need to know to have a life."

"You mean I can join you?"

"I thought I was crazy allowing two ten-year-olds to join up, but you have skills – exactly what they are I don't know yet. You would be an asset to us and I think you would get a lot out of it. It will take time and a lot of hard work. You would need to go to school; you would need to live a double life."

"My Mom is willing to take you in and help with your mental stability – she can be very strict and she does not take any shit!" Chloe offered.

"None of this is charity, Steph. You will be expected to work hard and earn your keep," Mindy stated before her expression turned hard and cold. "I also want to take down those that made you what you are..."

"I..."

I had no idea what to say or do.

"Think about it – don't rush; take your time."

"Why?" I asked feeling tears welling up inside of me.

"I look at you and I see me. I was lucky, I found Dave. You have nobody – Miranda is damaged too. I never thought I would ever find somebody who was as badly damaged as I was. You are not alone and you never will be – if that is what you want."

That afternoon

Glenview

Anne-Marie had me in tears.

Nothing bad! I had just taken her washing back to her room and dumped it on the end of her bed for her to put away; she was on her tablet sitting cross-legged on the bed.

Then she suddenly jumped up and hugged me.

"Thanks, Mom!"

She then jumped back onto the bed and went back to her tablet. I was shell-shocked. Then I felt tears building up and I ran downstairs and into our bedroom. I just sat down and cried. It was stupid, but just that one three-letter word meant so much to me.

Not to mention the hug.

"What?" Dave asked as he came in and saw me crying.

I smiled.

"She called me 'Mom'..."

Dave grinned; he knew what it meant to me.

That evening

"Dave, they'll tear me apart..."

"You scared, little Mindy?"

"Damn right I am!"

"You are unbelievable..."

"They are real Mom's, I'm just..."

"Get a fucking grip, girl – it's a damn get together for Moms!"

"But, what if..."

"Do I need to slap you? I'll get Megan over; she'll slap you!"

"Once upon a time you would quake in your boots when I glared at you... Where did I go wrong?"

"I found your soft side!"

"You are not helping..."

Four hours later

"You kill anybody?"

"No I did not!" Mindy retorted. "It was a piece of cake..."

"Did they torture you?"

"No."

"Did they make you feel less of a Mom?"

"No."

"Did they threaten you in any way?"

"No!"

"So what was the big panic about?"

"I overreacted, okay?"

"Any juicy gossip?"

"That would be between me and the other Moms!"

Chapter 208*: All Change At The Chicago PD

Two days later
Saturday morning

Glenview

Two very tired girls made their way into the kitchen that morning, still in their pyjamas.

I grinned at Dave who just shook his head, but smiled back. Danny was digging into a bowl of cereal at the counter already.

"Stephanie, we have a tradition here, where when tired people drift into the kitchen, we wake them up..."

Anne-Marie suddenly braced up at my comment and tried to run.

"No..." She almost screamed as I scooped her up and headed for the pool.

Dave followed suit with Stephanie who had absolutely no idea what was going on or what was about to happen to her. Danny followed with a big smile on his face. There were two violent splashes and lots of high-pitched screaming!

A now wide-awake Stephanie glared up at me, with an equally evil glare from Anne-Marie.

"That was not nice!" Stephanie exclaimed with a smirk as she swam to the side of the pool.

"Sorry, Steph, I forgot to ask if you could swim..." I commented as I helped the young girl out of the pool and passed her a towel, with another one for Anne-Marie.

That evening Central Chicago

The warehouse was large, covering almost six-acres.

It was cold out and very dark. Outside there were no signs of activity. Inside, though, was another story as large packing cases were inventoried and moved around. Six large eighteen-wheelers were lined up and being either loaded or unloaded by forklift trucks.

The warehouse was bustling with activity, everybody going about their business in a professional manner. In the security office, there were three men on duty gazing intently at the array of security monitors, which were connected to a large array of security cameras that covered both the internal and the external areas of the warehouse.

One of the monitors went from showing a picture of a large vehicular access door at the east side of the warehouse to white snow. Next, another monitor, this one covering the main gate into the facility, turned to snow.

"Main Gate, this is Central, check in..."

The radio hissed with static.

"Main Gate, this is Central, check in..."

Only more static was heard.

"Patrol Two, we have a camera out above Door 3 and we have lost coverage of the Main Gate – investigate, over..."

"What the fuck?" The watch supervisor exclaimed, checking his equipment when he again heard nothing.

"All stations check in!" He ordered over the radios.

Suddenly the radio speaker jumped to life, but not with a voice. Instead, a high-pitched squealing sound hurt the men's ears. One of the men switched frequency, but within two seconds, the high-pitched squealing was heard again. He switched frequency again, and again... Next, he picked up the wired telephone. He raised the handset to his ear and then turned to his supervisor looking worried.

"It's dead..."

"I'd better call the Boss..." The supervisor began as he pulled out his cell.

..._...

The night was torn apart as two large simultaneous explosions ripped Door 3 off its track and severed a large section, which then dropped to the ground with a resounding crash. There followed several cracks as cylindrical objects flew into the warehouse, exploding on impact with bright flashes and thundering bangs. Men were rolling on the concrete floor of the warehouse hands over their ruptured eardrums.

Then with a roar, a huge, dark grey vehicle smashed through the remains of the roller-shutter and skidded to a stop several metres inside the warehouse. The rear door of the vehicle burst open and several people, all clad in body armour, dived out firing weapons.

The fires of hell began to envelop the warehouse.

Fusion Command Van 'Mirage'

"Jamming is still active – all communications and monitoring is down. Team 1 is inside the warehouse. Team 2 is joining up."

Battle Guy looked closely at the images being relayed from Titan as Mist, Shadow and Kick-Ass engaged the warehouse's security forces with Trojan and Splinter. A minute later, a purple motorcycle skidded to a halt behind Titan with two onboard.

"Hit Girl and Wildcat arriving!" Hit Girl reported.

"Copy Hit Girl and Wildcat joining the fight!" Battle Guy replied.

The warehouse

I dived off the back of Hit-Girl's purple Panigale, with my SIG Sauer P250 Compact raised and sending death into the warehouse.

I covered Hit Girl's back as she headed towards the big-rigs; we had to make sure that none left the warehouse. If our information was correct, those trucks were loaded with contraband that belonged to the Superintendent's organisation. With that evidence, we could take him down with no chance of parole.

The warehouse was flooded with security personnel and many of the workers were armed too. I dropped two men in rapid succession. Hit Girl had both of her Glock 19 pistols out, pouring more death across the warehouse.

A short distance away, I could see Kick-Ass carving his way through the men with his AA-10 shotgun. He was wearing his additional armour, which made him look even more badass than usual! Hit Girl had her full-face mask on which made her look even more evil than normal – if that were possible.

A man appeared to my left and I deployed my claws into his neck for his trouble, kicking his body down to the ground. A bullet hit my left thigh, sending a shot of pain through my body – not all of me was healed from earlier in the week...

I staggered, but kept on my feet, pushing the pain down deep and jumping onto a packing crate. There I swapped out my pistol magazine before holstering the pistol and pulling around my MP7.

I was able to take aimed shots from my raised position as I crouched on the crate.

I moved forwards with Splinter beside me.

We both had MP7s to our shoulders, sending bursts of fire into the security personnel. They were responding with a mix of weapons from H&K G36s to AKS-74s. There were also shotguns in evidence, not to mention the pistols.

I paused to swap out a magazine, but I was jumped from the side. A large man shoved me to the floor and I dropped the MP7. Splinter moved to shoot the man, only he was kicked down by another man. I jumped to my feet, drawing my Sais.

I attacked.

Splinter was up, his Ninja-To in his hand, laying into his attacker and he was not holding back. Neither was I...

I enjoyed fighting beside my cousin.

I covered her back while she advanced, shooting anything in sight with her P90. My MP7 was to my shoulder and I sent three-round bursts into anything that moved. Then I saw something land on the concrete floor, bouncing towards us...

"Grenade!"

I shoved Shadow hard in the back, sending her sprawling behind a packing crate and I dived on top of her.

I heard the shout from Trojan, but before I could react, I was shoved hard in my back.

I fell to the floor behind a large wooden crate and the next thing I knew something heavy landed on top of me knocking the breath out of my lungs. Then there was a massive explosion and a section of the packing crate fell on top of both of us.

I looked upwards and saw my masked cousin looking down at me.

"Thank you, but you can get up now; I'm perfectly fine..."

"Glad to hear it, Shadow!"

I pushed off the broken wood and packing material and took a moment to gaze at the neatly stacked firearms in the destroyed crate – all brand new Chinese QBZ-95 assault rifles. There was some serious shit going down in that warehouse.

I got to my feet, with the help of Trojan, and we moved back into the action.

I had finally made it to the security office.

Two rounds from the AA-10 quickly shattered the hinges on the wooden door, which then just needed a firm kick to come crashing down. The three men inside immediately opened fire with pistols. I shrugged off the rounds, my extra armour reducing the strikes to nothing more than minor irritations.

I drove my armoured fist into the face of the first man, the butt of the AA-10 into the second and smashed the third man's face, into the brick wall.

"Security office is secure!" I called as the last man fell to the floor.

I moved out towards the eighteen-wheelers at the loading dock.

Safehouse F

"This fucking sucks!"

"Hailee, I have work to do – if you're just gonna bitch, go do it elsewhere!" Abby responded with an annoyed tone.

"Sorry, I just hate seeing everybody else fighting while I'm stuck on the sidelines."

"I'm here too, remember," Josh announced. "It sucks being hurt, but life goes on, Hailee – deal with it!"

The Warehouse

Hit Girl and I were pinned down.

The majority of the security seemed to have concentrated around the trucks, which told us that they were still at least partially loaded. Hit Girl was engaging the security personnel with her G36C and ducking the return fire. I ensured that nobody crept up on us before backup arrived. The warehouse was enormous and Fusion was spread out across the building.

I saw Kick-Ass heading towards us, firing off shotgun rounds in different directions. He came down to one knee beside me and looked down.

"How you doing, kid?"

"I'm having the time of my life, Kick-Ass!" I replied as I blew a man's head apart.

"Well let's get going, freaky little beast!"

"Good of you to join us!"

"You seemed to be having all the fun, so I thought I'd wander over..."

"Funny, Ass-Kick!"

Two of the big-rigs started their engines, followed by a third and then a fourth. The large doors in front of them were opening. Time was running out if we were going to stop them.

"Tyres!" I yelled adjusting my aim for the truck tyres instead of the men.

Wildcat followed suit, as did Kick-Ass. The three of us blasted away at the nearest eighteen-wheeler's tyres, shredding them, both on the tractor and the trailer. The driver dived out of the cab and rolled underneath the trailer to escape the gunfire.

Then it happened; two of the trucks pulled forward out of the warehouse.

"Let's move!" I yelled, running for my motorcycle.

Several minutes later

We had disengaged from the fighting and quickly climbed aboard Titan.

Medic was driving – she had remained inside Titan during the fighting to guard the vehicle. We were moving at sixty miles-per-hour, in pursuit of the two trucks that had driven away. Hit Girl was ahead trying to shoot out the truck tyres, but she spent most of her time preventing herself from being squashed by the enormous trucks as they swerved from side to side.

Anyway, we needed the trucks intact, if possible, as evidence. As we left the warehouse, Voight and Marcus were descending on it with their teams to gather crucial evidence.

I had to admit that Mom was one hell of a driver! She threw the almost nine-tonne truck all over the road as she attempted to come parallel with the first truck, having already overtaken the trailing one.

Kick-Ass reached up and pushed the roof hatch open before hauling himself out and then reaching down for me. I was hauled through the hatch as if I weighed nothing! I took hold of one of the steel handles attached to Titan's roof and braced myself against the windblast, most of which was being blocked by Kick-Ass.

The massive truck was just a few feet away as Titan drove alongside. We were on a two-lane highway and Titan was constantly swerving onto the shoulder as the truck tried to force us off the road. The trailer's side and roof was aluminium and I would need to use the blades on my lower arm to grab hold. The blades were a new feature of my current combat suit and I had not used them to that point.

"You ready?" Kick-Ass called and I nodded my ascent.

He physically grabbed hold of me and threw me over the gap towards the trailer. One miscalculation and I would be hamburger under the racing wheels below me! I hit the side of the trailer with my arms on the roof. I dug in my blades, which sank into the aluminium, and I used all my strength to pull myself onto the roof. That was when bullets started to punch holes in the aluminium roof of the trailer.

..._...

I rolled from side to side to avoid the bullets, but then a bullet grazed the inside of my thigh and another above and to the left of my groin. I knew that neither bullet had penetrated the suit, but they still fucking hurt! I grimaced with the pain but dove for the driver's cab as Kick-Ass raked the trailer with gunfire from his G36K, his bullets punching through the thin side of the trailer.

I reached the gap between the trailer and the tractor. The driver was on the left-hand side, so I jumped over and then after a brief glance, I swung down with both feet smashing the passenger window and landing on the passenger seat beside the startled driver who fumbled with a large .45-calibre automatic.

"Brake, now!" I yelled at the driver, my FN Five-seveN out and pointed directly at the man's face.

I braced my feet against the dash as he braked heavily, bringing his rig to a halt fifty or more yards later. The other truck was skidding to a halt too and its trailer was jack-knifing. I watched in the side mirror as Hit Girl swerved out of the way of the trailer and accelerated to safety.

"Get the fuck out!" I yelled kicking the man in the side, forcing him out his door.

The other truck was assaulted by Hit Girl who hauled the driver out and threw him down to the blacktop. We approached the rear of each truck, a team for each one. The doors were hauled open and the surviving guards, overpowered, hauled out, and secured with plastic cuffs.

Before the Police arrived, we left the scene ensuring that the trucks were immobilised and the men were secure.

We were heading back to the Safehouse, ten minutes later, when Marcus reported in.

"You need to go now and apprehend the Superintendent – he'll most likely bug out when he finds out we've seized his haul and the warehouse. The Mayor is in the clear; blackmail. We have no idea who we can trust, right now, so it's up to you..."

"We're on it, Rhino!" I responded as I performed a rapid, and smoky, one-eighty on the road and winced as I saw Medic throw Titan into a wide one-eighty, the massive tyres screeching in protest on the blacktop.

Battle Guy informed us that the Superintendent and the Mayor were in a meeting with other senior members of the CPD, plus the City Treasurer and the City Clerk. On the way, I veered off to rendezvous with Battle Guy in Mirage. He was rapidly printing out the evidence that we needed to indict the Superintendent and his men.

Later that night

North LaSalle Street, Chicago City Hall and Office of the Mayor

There were plenty of surprised looks as Titan roared up the dark street, coming to a halt outside City Hall with Hit Girl on her purple Panigale.

Fusion immediately deployed to protect the main entrance to City Hall. Certain trusted Police Officers from the 21st District were guarding the other exits from City Hall and included Officer Roman and Sergeant Platt.

Kick-Ass and Hit Girl made their way into City Hall with their weapons holstered and they demanded to be taken to see the Mayor.

We made our way up the stairs to the fourth floor.

There we barged through the twin glass doors into the Office of the Mayor. The Security Officer on duty just raised his hands and stood back. He used his head to indicate which door the Mayor was behind and we headed for the indicated door, which had a sign: Conference Room.

As we had agreed, Kick-Ass would do all the talking, allowing me to keep watch, as we were very much in the lion's den and risking our freedom.

"What is the meaning of this?"

It was the Mayor himself, who spoke as we entered the Conference Room amid general unrest from the others present.

"Mr Mayor, I am Kick-Ass and this is Hit Girl," I began, rather unnecessarily.

"Forgive me, but that's pretty obvious!" The Mayor replied with a smile. "You must have a damn good reason for being here, I assume."

"We have incontrovertible evidence against the Superintendent over there," I explained. "Part of our mandate in this City is to uncover the corrupt elements of the Government..."

"I can't believe that we are listening to these criminals!" The Superintendent blurted out in anger.

"Something to hide?" I growled, fixing my gaze on him as I dumped the several-inch thick dossier in front of the Mayor.

The Mayor spent a couple of minutes flipping through the printouts, passing some to the Police Commander to his right.

"I trust you both, despite what you represent," The Mayor said finally, with a nod of agreement from the Commander. "There is, as you say, incontrovertible evidence for the Superintendent to be arrested."

That was when the Superintendent jumped up and pulled out a pistol.

"I am taking these two into custody; they are criminals!" He blustered.

"And if we refuse to come quietly?" Kick-Ass asked conversationally.

"I'll..."

"Shoot us?" I enquired, indicating our armour.

..._...

"Kick-Ass, take him down!" The Mayor ordered, coming to a decision.

I looked at the Mayor.

"I cannot; I am sworn to protect this City and I will not act against an Officer of the CPD..."

The Mayor was smart; I had to give him that. He hesitated for little more than a second, before he looked directly at the Superintendent.

"Trevor, you're fired!"

"Thank you..." I replied and stepped forward ignoring the bullets from the ex-Superintendent's pistol as I advanced on him before driving him into the drywall and then throwing him across the room.

The man landed in a heap on the floor just as several uniformed Police Officers burst into the room. They looked unsure, not knowing what to do, taking in the scene before them. Specifically, the sight of their boss on the floor unconscious and Hit Girl standing over him.

The Mayor again took control.

"The Superintendent has been fired – take the corrupt bastard away!" He ordered before continuing. "Kick-Ass, Hit Girl and Fusion are not to be impeded in any way..."

Once the unconscious former-cop was dragged away, by many willing hands I might add, the Mayor turned to me.

"We owe you a lot, Kick-Ass and you too Hit Girl, as well as the rest of Fusion. While I cannot condone what you do; you have all done the City a great service and removed the corrupt scum from the top levels of Government."

"Thank you; we serve the City and its people."

"I am disbanding Lieutenant William's organisation for the time being. I will not have you hunted; I think we can agree to disagree on what you do and how you do it. For now the City needs Fusion."

"Isn't that a little unfair..." I began, but then I saw the sly smile on the Mayor's face.

"I have a lot of people to reward – as well as fire, please bear with me..."

Two days later
Monday morning

Glenview

Marcus was speechless, as were the other four people who stood around him.

The Chicago PD was changing.

Commander Jack Bay was refused early retirement by the Mayor and he was instead offered the position of Superintendent in place of the shamed Trevor Howards. Of course, he had accepted.

Amongst the string of firings and promotions were Marcus and Vicky. Marcus was now a Captain and the Executive Officer of District 21, under Commander Ron Fischer. Vicky had been promoted to Lieutenant and she was now in command of the 'Organised Crime Taskforce' or OCT. However, Fusion were no longer on the Taskforce's radar!

Hank Voight had been promoted too; his 'Intelligence Unit' was being upgraded and as such, it required a Detective Lieutenant to run it. Alvin Olinsky had been promoted to Detective Sergeant as Voight's Executive Officer.

The City of Chicago was now protected by people who would put the City first.

Chapter 209*: Cleaning House

Monday night

Safehouse F

By the time that Kick-Ass and I had returned to the Safehouse, everybody was waiting.

"Job done! The bastard is no more..." Dave commented as he pulled off his mask.

There was lots of applause and cheering from those present in the Safehouse. We had accomplished something big and something so important to the City that we were sworn to protect. I was pleased, very pleased.

We spent the next hour catching up on the events of the night. I was impressed with Curtis – he had saved his cousin from a grenade, which might have killed her. I was pleased to see that the event had pushed the two cousins closer than they had ever been, but concerned that the event had taken place at all.

Chloe was also bruised from the attack on the big-rig. I had to admit that it was funny, even though Chloe threatened enormous pain on anybody who laughed. Apparently, she was badly bruised in places that meant she and Josh would not be having carnal relations for a while!

Even Megan had admitted to receiving more bruises, which was a step in the right direction for the girl.

We had accomplished a lot out of such a small piece of intelligence.

Three days earlier

Friday evening

Chicago Police Department

District 21

"I'm saying nothing without my lawyer and Department Rep..."

"I don't think you understand your position..." Sergeant Voight continued. "You speak to me, or you speak to my friend..."

"Who...?"

The man looked beyond the cage in which he was being held and out into the large open space. The far door opened and the soon-to-be-ex-Police Officer went white, moving as far back in the cage as he could at the sight of what walked in the door.

"It's me or the vigilante..." Voight elaborated with an evil grin.

"You know who I am?" The electronically enhanced voice growled without preamble.

"Of – of course..."

The man was in a state of barely controlled panic as the vigilante, clad from head to toe in dark grey body armour with purple highlights, leant casually against the wall. In her right hand, Hit Girl expertly flicked a razor sharp Balisong knife.

"I hope I'm not intimidating you..." She growled.

"No – yes – I'm fine."

He very obviously was not!

"You know things – now I want to know things," Voight said calmly. "I think you know who we're talking about."

"I talk – I die..."

"You don't talk – you die – eventually!" Hit Girl interrupted.

Voight opened the door to the cage and she walked straight in, ignoring the panicked screams.

...forty-two seconds later...

"He has a warehouse; it's the central hub of his shipping network... You have to believe me..."

"I don't – but I will... However, if you are lying to me..."

Five days after the Superintendent's downfall
Thursday morning

Safehouse F (lower level)

I watched from the bottom of the steel steps.

The two girls, each with their blonde hair tied back, were exercising together. Their movements were both coordinated and precise. They had been at it for almost an hour and sweat patches were visible on their clothes.

I pushed open the glass door and entered the room, walking around to face the two girls. Mindy looked as hot as ever in nothing but a sports bra and skin-tight shorts. She was dripping with sweat, which to me, only made her look so much more attractive. Beside her was Stephanie, in a t-shirt and shorts, and she too was dripping with sweat.

I was concerned that Mindy was pushing Steph a bit fast, but the young girl looked to be handling herself well. Mindy was putting Steph through her paces, so that we could work out what the girl could do, what she was capable of doing and what she was not capable of doing.

"So – what can Psyche do?" I asked with a friendly smile for the nine-year-old.

Mindy grabbed a cold bottle of water from the fridge, passing another to Stephanie.

"The bitch ain't bad – she has some basic skills which we can build on. I want her at D-JAK, at least three times a week. Right now, she can put somebody down, but not effectively and she will struggle with anybody bigger than Megan is. Not her fault; we just need to complete her training."

"I'd take that as a compliment, Steph – it's the best you're gonna get!" I explained.

"Thanks, Mindy."

"I am impressed, Steph; you did well for a nine-year-old. You need to rest – I will not have you doing too much until you are properly healed. Get upstairs, take a shower and get yourself cleaned up."

The girl ran off and I grinned at Mindy.

"What?"

"You're having fun, ain't ya?"

"Just a bit – she's a great girl and she'll do well..."

"But..." I could tell from Mindy's expression that there was a 'but'.

"She has a lot of demons inside her – she has to come to terms with who she is before she can move on and that won't be easy. I don't know what it is, but there is something really big bugging that girl."

"Hopefully Doc Bennett will find it."

Safehouse F (upper level)

As I dressed after my shower, I felt pleased with how the morning had gone.

I had been able to keep up with Mindy, kind of, but it had been painful. I was pleased that Mindy thought I had done well.

"You did well, I understand," Miranda commented as she came into the bedroom.

"It was good, if tiring. How are you doing?"

"Not bad, I've just got back from seeing Dr Bennett. I've brought over the rest of your kit – but you'll need to sort it out before you take it to Mindy's as there is a lot of shit in there that she won't want her kids seeing."

"Thanks, Miranda."

Central Intelligence Agency Langley, Virginia

The operator at the computer terminal looked up as his terminal beeped, indicating an incoming message.

The operator opened the message, read it and after checking for the messages ultimate destination in an online directory, he forwarded it on. He then made a note in another file called: 'TREADSTONE', acknowledging receipt of the message and the message's originator: 'ECHELON'.

The operator had no idea what sort of trouble and consternation that single message was about to cause as it triggered another beep on another terminal several floors above him.

Safehouse F

It was just the three of us girls.

Megan and Stephanie sat across from me in the briefing room. There was nobody else at the Safehouse.

"Megan, as we discussed earlier, you are the closest in age to Stephanie, I want you to help and guide Stephanie through her Fusion training. You two will become a team; you will train together, spar together and operate together.

"Stephanie. I want you to see Megan as your partner and as an equal. Trust her, confide in her and listen to her. She may only be eleven and a scrawny, gobby little bitch, but she has learnt the hard way about being a young vigilante and you could learn something from her. Anything you say to her will be kept between the two of you, unless Megan deems it prejudicial to safety or secrecy, in which case she will talk to Dave or me.

"Anything that comes from her, about you, will also be kept in the strictest confidence by me and Dave, with the same caveat. We will both respect your privacy as an individual, but we will both be here to help you. Megan has been around the block, and she knows the 'lay of the land' in Fusion. She knows my rules, too and what happens when she breaks them! Megan will train you at D-JAK and bring you up to speed, reporting back to me, your progress."

Stephanie sat there for a few minutes taking in all that I had said and processing it.

"Thank you, Mindy, and you Megan. I trust you both and I am happy for anything that I say to be made known between you two and Dave, unless I say otherwise."

"Megan is not allowed to discipline you; that is for myself and Dave, only – and we will come down on you hard if we need to. However, if you are putting yourself, or somebody else for that matter, in danger then and only then, will she be allowed to act against you – okay?"

"That's fair," Stephanie admitted, smiling at Megan.

Two days later Saturday

D-JAK

Stephanie's wounds were healed enough for her to start training properly.

I had warned Megan to take it easy; however, we were talking about Megan! I watched as Stephanie was kicked to the floor for the fourth time. Megan was smirking and Stephanie was in pain, but the young girl never lifted a finger to protect herself. I ran over before Megan could put Stephanie down again.

"What are you playing at, Megan?"

"I can handle her, Mindy!" Stephanie said, despite breathing heavily.

I could see tears in the girl's eyes. What was she doing? Then just as Megan was about to attack Stephanie again, it clicked. I turned and yelled out a warning to Megan, but not fast enough, as Stephanie caught Megan's ankle as it came towards her face and she viciously twisted Megan over and sent her crashing onto the mat.

Megan screamed and then looked up in surprise. I grinned.

"You were trying to control your emotions and prevent yourself from reacting...?"

"Yes..."

Stephanie sank to the floor as Megan jumped up and came over, her face full of concern.

"I am so, so sorry Steph – I got carried away!" Megan exclaimed.

"No pain, no gain," Steph replied.

"Don't push yourself too hard or you'll never heal," I warned.

"Message received!"

The following morning Sunday

The Farm

I was doing everything that I could to distract Stephanie from her former life and to inject some fun into her new life.

Often there was giggling well into the night between Stephanie and Anne-Marie. I had also noticed the same between Stephanie and Megan, which was also good. Cathy had commented on Stephanie's emotional state, which seemed to have changed – for the better. The contact with other kids, be it Anne-Marie, Megan or Josh, had had an effect upon her – a good effect.

"Here!" I announced passing the girl a helmet.

"I see – that explains giving me back my boots, black jeans and leather jacket."

"Until I get you some proper motorcycle leathers..."

I wanted to see what the girl could do on two wheels. I had questioned her and Stephanie had hinted that she could ride a motorcycle. Therefore, while the twins were roaring around the field on the quadbikes under the watchful eyes of Dave and Superintendent Bay, I would concentrate on Stephanie.

Chloe had wanted to come up too. However, Sunday was also the anniversary of Curtis becoming an orphan. I remembered that day well and I hated it. Chloe and Cathy were spending the day with Curtis to help him get through the day.

I watched as Stephanie pulled on the helmet and then followed her movements as she checked out the motorcycle before climbing on and starting the engine. I was impressed! The girl knew her way around a motorcycle. I jumped onto my BMW and followed Stephanie out of the barn and towards the field.

..._...

Not surprisingly, Anne-Marie's quadbike was on its side. It looked like she had taken the corner too fast – again! However, she was on her feet while Dave righted the quadbike before picking up and dumping the girl on the saddle – none too gently either.

"Little bitch!" I heard over the comms as Dave saw us approaching.

Stephanie kept her speed down as she turned into the field keeping the motorcycle under control. She managed to, avoiding Danny with a quick skid, which she controlled nicely. She knew what she was doing... I rode up beside her and waved her to a stop.

"Let's go for a ride," I suggested.

Dave waved at us as we rode out of the field and behind the farm, following the same track where Dave and I had taken Chloe and Josh, months before. We paralleled the river for a while, heading south before we found ourselves at the County Forest Preserve. I stopped almost exactly, where Josh had made his last stand, that night when Jack and Natalie had been shot.

"Joshua almost died, in that ditch. He fought off almost a dozen men, single handed and was shot himself. I was unable to get to him, but he used his training and survived."

I knelt down and stood back up with an empty P90 cartridge case in my hand. Not all of them had been recovered. I passed it to Stephanie.

"P90 or Five-seveN – 5.7-millimetre," she offered.

"P90..."

"They all mean a lot to you, I can see that. Thank you for helping me, Mindy – I know you care."

"That's part of my problem. I never used to care..."

"Like me. I was trained to think about me – and me only. The mission came first, second and third!" Stephanie said quietly.

"It sucks to be us..." I agreed.

That night

Morton Grove

"Since when do you knock?"

"Just trying to be polite, Doc!"

"No problem, Megan."

I laughed and led Megan through the living room where Chloe and Curtis sat.

"I see!" Chloe said with an evil grin. "Curtis – time for you to have some fun..."

"Excuse me!" Megan scowled.

"I know why you are here," Chloe continued. "Mom, I think Curtis and Megan should go upstairs for a while – you know, get some alone time!"

I rolled my eyes and grinned.

"Curtis..." Megan suggested.

The boy blushed and grinned, but followed Megan upstairs.

"What are you doing here?"

"Dumb question, Curtis!"

"Dumb or not, it still stands."

"I'm here to offer you a distraction..."

"Like what?"

"Like this..." I growled, pulling off my jacket, shirt, shoes, pants and socks.

Curtis' eyes almost bugged out.

I pushed him backwards onto the bed and started to undo his pants – he did not interfere or try to stop me. I left his shorts on, to spare him any blushes. It was all just a bit of innocent fun; while I had hit puberty, as far as I could tell, Curtis had not – so nothing was going to happen, even if I had wanted it to... Despite his shortcomings, he was definitely distracted from his other problems, I noticed, looking at his shorts where something was moving...

Okay, I was a tease – but as far as I was concerned, I was Curtis' for as long as he wanted me and he could do what he wanted - it wasn't like he had never seen me naked before... I allowed Curtis to fiddle with my bra, eventually releasing the catch and it fell to the bed. I slid off my remaining article of clothing and surprisingly, he did the same.

I lay down beside him and gave him a kiss.

An hour later

"They're very quiet - unlike you!"

"Thanks, Mom, I really needed to hear that!"

I felt myself blushing.

"You and Dad aren't much better... Ewww, I can't believe I said that."

I could hear movement upstairs and then footsteps on the stairs. Megan was wrapped in a towel while Curtis was wearing a t-shirt and shorts. I raised an eyebrow as I looked at Curtis. My cousin blushed but smiled back at me. Megan as usual was looking as innocent as ever.

"Had fun, Megan?" Mom asked.

"Yes, thank you, I was well satisfied."

"Well done, Curtis!" I commented with a grin which made my cousin blush even redder.

Three days later Wednesday Night

Paige lay in a pool of blood, her dress soaked.

Marcus lowered his pistol, gun smoke still swirling from the end of the barrel. He looked at me as I lowered my borrowed weapon, conscious of the two dead bodies a dozen yards away. Behind us were more injured people. I ripped the bottom off my expensive cocktail dress and used it to stem the flow of blood in Paige's chest.

I could hear sirens as Paramedics approached. Superintendent Bay arrived at my side, resting his hand on my shoulder, his own weapon in evidence at his side. I looked up at Jack and we exchanged glances. Somebody was going to die – at my hand.

Dave reached me just as I started to shake with shock and anger. Why did things have to happen to my family, the people that I loved?

Chapter 210*: The Wait

Later that Wednesday night

Glen View

Marcus had gone to the hospital with Paige.

Dave had driven us home. It would be my job to break the news to Megan... As I entered the house from the garage, I was welcomed by the four kids who suddenly screeched to a halt when they saw the blood on our clothes and my torn dress. Behind them stood Erika who had been keeping an eye on the miscreants.

Then came the crunch.

"Megan, I..."

I saw the young girl go white as all colour drained from her face and then she put out a hand to steady herself against the wall.

"Mom..."

A single whispered word and then she sank to the floor of the kitchen, sobbing. Anne-Marie, Stephanie, and Danny all looked up at me in abject horror.

"Paige has been shot, but she's alive and Marcus is with her," I said quietly, sitting down on the floor and hugging the sobbing Megan to me.

Early Thursday morning

I was awoken about two the following morning.

Not that I had really slept at all. In the bed, between Dave and I, was Megan and she had struggled to get to sleep. I grabbed the cell, vaguely recognising that it was Marcus' number calling. There was no pre-amble.

"She's out of danger and the baby is safe..."

I paused for a moment before replying.

"Thank God."

"I'm staying with Paige until the morning. Are you okay looking after Megan?"

"Of course – we'll look after her for as long as you need."

"Thank you, Mindy..."

As I replaced the cell on the table beside the bed, I felt Megan move and her eyes opened.

"Mom?"

"That was Marcus; your Mom is out of danger and the baby is safe. Go back to sleep."

I saw the tears beginning again and I hugged Megan until she fell asleep.

Twenty hours earlier Wednesday morning

Glenview

It was a normal morning, part of a normal day.

I awoke at six, as usual – dragging Anne-Marie and Danny out of bed. I ignored the sleeping Stephanie – for the moment. Dave got the kids showered and dressed while I made them some breakfast.

Over breakfast, I explained to the twins that Dave and I would be late back and that Erika would be keeping an eye on the three of them and Megan.

"Why, where will you be?"

"At some big hotel in the centre of the city. It's a 'hello' for the newly promoted Police Officers," I explained briefly.

I did not say that they had tried to invite Kick-Ass and Hit Girl – but they would be there, anyway!

For a change, I was dreaming pleasant dream, which was nice.

No – my dream was private and somewhat embarrassing for a nine-year-old young girl, so I am saying nothing else...!

I was dragged from the dream by the world's biggest bitch.

"Come on!" Mindy yelled as she pulled the duvet off me. "Wake up!"

"If you weren't Hit Girl, I'd kill you where you stand!" I growled, opening one tired eye.

"Enjoyed your dream? That smile on your face was something!"

"Anybody told you that you're a bloody bitch?"

"Daily!"

I gave up and swung my legs onto the floor.

"Why so ruddy early?"

"It's time for a certain young lady to start school – your books are on the table in the dining room. You have thirty minutes to wash, dress and eat some breakfast."

"You're shittin' me?"

"No shit, I assure you – move your butt!"

"I'll move my arse, when I'm good and ready..."

"Do not challenge me..." Mindy warned with a dangerous look and I caved.

..._...

After breakfast, I walked into the dining room and studied the pile of books on the table.

"What is this crap?"

"Fourth grade text books – Math..."

"Can't you talk properly – it's Mathsss – there's an 's' on the end!"

Mindy ignored me.

"...Science, Literacy and Grammar..."

"If you think I'm going to start talking like a damn Yank, you're several rounds short of a full magazine!"

"...And Social Studies." Mindy finished.

I picked up the 'Math' book and flicked through it – it seemed easy...

"Where do I start?"

"Try chapter one..." Mindy laughed as she headed for the kitchen.

"... And no fighting with the other kids!" Dave added, having just returned from taking the twins to school.

I looked around the empty dining room.

"You trying to be funny?"

"My bad!" Dave laughed and heading after Mindy.

I opened the book at 'Chapter 1: Place Value of Whole Numbers'...

My life sucked!

That afternoon

"What's Steph doing?"

"Her homework – just as you should be, young lady..."

"Can we sit with her?"

"Yes, just no giggling and no talking – you all have work to do."

"Yes, Mom! Come on Danny."

An hour later

I looked up from my completed homework and my mouth fell open as Mindy walked into the dining room.

The off the shoulder dress was floor length and emerald in colour. There were diamonds hanging from each ear and a diamond necklace around her neck. Her hair was tied up in a bun on the back of her head.

"Wow, Mom – you look awesome!"

"Bugger me!" Steph announced, her eyes popping out of her head.

"Wow – if I were a man, I'd be rock hard!" Erika commented as she walked in the door with Megan.

"Tell me about it!" Dave added with a grin. "May I kiss the beautiful, sexy lady?"

"Of course..."

"Ewww!" Steph and I said together as they kissed. "Yuk!"

"Double yuk!" Danny added, pretending to throw up.

"Not bad for a thousand bucks!" Mom announced, ignoring us and giving us all a twirl.

"Behave tonight!" Megan laughed.

I had to let Dave drive the Jag as the dress prevented me from doing very much.

The looks I had received from both Dave and Erika had made me blush. I was pleased that the kids were impressed too.

"You packing?" Dave asked.

"Not necessary; it's a Cop Party – what could go wrong?"

In a few hours, I would regret not packing a fucking Gatling!

West Columbia

It was the first time that I had seen Marcus in his new Captain's uniform.

"Congratulations, old man!"

"Feels strange..."

"But he looks good enough to eat..." Paige added.

"I did not just hear that!" I squeaked.

"You look beautiful, Mindy, as you always do," Marcus said.

I blushed wildly at the compliment – Paige looked stunning too.

Trump International Hotel and Tower Chicago

Dave pulled up outside the main entrance of the hotel.

There were uniformed Police Officers everywhere, as they gathered for the night's fun. We passed through the glass doors into the double height hotel lobby. We were then escorted to the sixteenth floor and The Terrace. All heads turned in my direction and most of the chatter ceased as I entered on Dave's arm, behind Marcus and Paige.

I immediately headed for a group of Police Officers over in one corner.

"Damn, Mindy!"

"You're looking very nice, this evening, Lieutenant Voight," I replied, blushing again. "You too, Sergeant Olinsky."

Sergeant Alvin Olinsky just grinned.

"He cleans up pretty good, don't you AI?" Detective Erin Lindsay announced with a smirk.

"Love the dress, Erin – awesome."

"Yours, too – are those diamonds real?"

"Oh yeah!"

"Well, well, Captain – you look dashing!" Lieutenant Vicky Richards grinned as she strode over.

Behind her was a stunningly attired Hailee who was blushing at the attention she was receiving from the younger Police Officers.

"You're showing a lot of leg there, Hailee!" I commented.

"I like to show my legs," Hailee replied. "I don't normally get the chance."

"You look very good out of your purple shell," Voight whispered into my ear and I blushed enormously.

Hank Voight could be very charming when he wanted to be!

"Good evening, all!" Superintendent Jack Bay announced as he joined us.

"Hi Jack – the uniform suits you," I commented as I received a kiss and gave one in return.

"It is not very often that I see such a beautiful young woman in such a beautiful dress. You look perfect, Mindy – as always. The image of your mother."

"Thank you, Jack."

..._...

We passed back through the wine bottle lined foyer and towards the Grand Ballroom. We all sat down to dinner and speeches from the Major and the City of Chicago's new Police Superintendent.

The night was fun and I enjoyed being able to talk with Marcus, Paige, Vicky and Hailee. Just as we were moving on from the main course, I felt a chill – something was wrong. I tried to ignore the sensation, but my Hit Girl sixth sense was tingling. I nudged Dave, beside me and he looked into my eyes. I saw him nod in understanding. Next, I looked over at Marcus and then Hailee. They both reacted to the look in my eyes. I saw Hailee looking around the room casually, but purposefully.

Marcus reached down to his ankle and came back up with a napkin in his hand. He passed the napkin over to me – under the napkin was Marcus' backup piece – a Glock 26 sub-compact pistol. I noticed Vicky passing over a similar package to Hailee.

"I came equipped!" Dave commented, indicating the Glock 19 in a holster around his right ankle.

Our table was over by a window, just feet from a door to the passageway. Hailee spoke first.

"Far corner, eleven o'clock. Other corner, two o'clock."

"I got 'em," I growled.

However, before we could do anything, a host of waiters and waitresses appeared to clear away the empty plates. I lost sight of the two men and then there was gunfire.

After the gunfire, came the screaming and then came the panic.

"Everybody shut the fuck up!" A man yelled as he pointed his compact submachine gun, which I recognised as a Kriss Vector Gen II, upwards, sending two rounds into the ceiling.

His shouts were ignored as the undisciplined screams continued from those non-Police present. The gunmen's plans did not seem to be going well! They seemed to be reacting though and altering their plans accordingly. They closed in on what was obviously their target – the Mayor. It seemed more like an assassination rather than a kidnapping.

Jack had the Mayor down behind the table and he fired off several rounds at the gunmen. Dave flipped our table over as a shield, other tables followed suit and I could see Voight throwing a look in my direction, a pistol in his hands. Almost everybody was behind cover as a gunfight began sixteen stories in the air. There were six gunmen, with automatic weapons and they concentrated on moving towards the Mayor, while the innocent civilians were led out under covering fire from over a dozen Police Officers.

When it was Paige's turn, she refused to go, despite Marcus shouting at her to go to safety. Paige was a stubborn bitch, which explained where Megan got her attitude! We all had limited ammunition, considering we were attending a dinner and not a war, so there was no way that we could out-shoot the gunmen. We just had to persuade them to leave.

I grabbed hold of Paige and shoved her none too gently towards the doorway with Hailee providing covering fire as we went. We found ourselves in the Grand Foyer just outside the Grand Ballroom. Just then, another door burst open further along the corridor and a gunman appeared. I threw Paige down and sent three bullets towards the man. I switched out the magazine and dived down as several shots came in our direction from another gunman as he came through the door. I heard a scream behind me, but ignored it as I concentrated on the gunman.

Marcus came up behind me, we both fired our last rounds off towards the gunman, and he fell down in a pool of blood. I began to hear shouts of 'clear' indicating that all the gunmen were down. That was when I turned in relief and saw Hailee staring at the floor.

I followed her gaze and saw Paige, a pool of her blood spreading across the thick carpet and soaking her dress.

Thursday morning

Glenview

Breakfast was a very quiet and subdued affair that morning.

Megan was in a bad way – which was understandable and everybody was trying to be close to her and to give her the space she needed – which was not easy. Dave said he would look after the twins and get them to school while I took Megan and Stephanie with me down to Safehouse F.

Megan needed a distraction.

Safehouse F

Megan had not said a word on the drive down.

Neither Stephanie, nor I, wanted to break the silence. When we arrived, I suggested to Stephanie that she take Megan upstairs to get themselves changed, ready for some exercise. I also wanted to get an update on the situation.

I found Marty in the Command Centre pounding away on his keyboard.

"What do we know?"

"The six dead gunmen were mercenaries. The CPD is still tracing back the money to see who hired them. Jack has ensured that we get a copy of any evidence and I'm doing my own searches. We have seven injured, with bullet wounds, but thankfully, nobody other than the gunmen were killed. How's Paige?"

"I've heard nothing since the early hours, but she and the baby were stable."

"Megan?"

"Only time will tell."

..._...

I headed downstairs to where I was expecting to find the girls. Only they were not training. Stephanie was sitting with her back against the wall and hugging Megan who was crying. As I entered, Stephanie smiled weakly.

I sat down on the other side of Megan and gently touched her arm. She turned to look at me and I had never seen her so miserable.

"Come on, let's get to work," I said, getting to my feet and pulling Megan with me.

"I can't focus..." Megan began.

Stephanie pulled Megan onto the mat and stopped dead centre. She smirked at me before she then turned to face Megan from a couple of feet away.

"Hit me!" Stephanie ordered.

"I told you I..."

Whack! Stephanie slapped Megan hard around the face.

"You..."

Whack!

"Act like a whiny bitch, get slapped like a whiny bitch!" Stephanie explained with a smile.

"Fuck you!" Megan growled back and I saw her expression change.

There followed a rapid thirty seconds of violent movements as both girls attacked each other before pausing to catch a breath.

"You're weak..." Stephanie growled at Megan.

There followed another brief assault on Stephanie, which she fought off reasonably well.

"Time to get your head in the game, Wildcat, so stop acting like a little pussy!" Stephanie laughed as she planted a kick on Megan's thigh before flipping the older girl on to her back.

Stephanie placed her foot on Megan's throat, pinning her to the mat.

"This nine-year-old girl just owned your ass!" She growled. "Your Mum's in hospital and she's hurt – but she's alive, so get with the programme and let's avenge her – got it?"

Megan looked a little surprised, but nodded as Stephanie removed her foot from her neck.

"I guess I deserved that – nice moves by the way!" Megan said as she got back to her feet.

"We're partners, you and I..." Stephanie reminded Megan.

Megan gave Stephanie a hug as Dave appeared.

"Can I interrupt this lesbian love fest for a moment?"

"Just getting Megan's mind focussed," I laughed as the two girls sprang apart and both glared at Dave. "You have obviously been telling Stephanie some of my tricks!"

Dave laughed. "Just a few!"

"What?" Megan asked pointedly getting the conversation back on track.

"You want to go see your Mom?" Dave asked. "Marcus rang – you can go to the hospital if you want."

"I'll be changed in thirty seconds!" Megan announced sprinting for the steps.

Chapter 211*: The Wildcat Avenger

The next morning
Friday

Glenview

"Morning, Marcus!"

"Well hello, my wayward daughters!"

"Problem?" Megan asked innocently.

"Innocence is not your strong suit, Megan, nor yours, Mindy..."

"We've been good girls!" I insisted.

"Mindy – do I look like I just fell out of a monkey's butt?"

Megan smiled and opened her mouth to reply, so I rapidly put my hand over her mouth and replied for her.

"Of course not, Marcus."

"So the cat-like injuries that several living criminals had when they were arrested last night came from...?" Marcus prompted.

"...A stray cat?" Megan suggested deadpan.

Marcus did his best not to laugh.

"Where were you two between eight and midnight? A certain warehouse was found filled with the mutilated remains of many others. The ME used several words to describe the injuries: blast, emasculation, evisceration and decapitation."

"We'd like to plead the fifth on that question!" I replied with a good attempt at an innocent smile.

"Not buying it," Marcus growled.

"I was behind on my biology homework...?" Megan suggested.

Marcus did laugh that time.

"Please control your blood lust – we have enough problems as it is without you two literally carving your way through the city."

I had to admit, it was good to see a smile on Megan's face for a change.

It was obvious what Mindy had done the previous night. She had done it with Joshua when Jack and Natalie had been shot. As soon as I had heard about the rash of cat-like injuries, I knew it was Megan with her damn claws!

Paige was safe and out of danger. Seeing her bleeding out had scared me half to death. She was not alone though. Another six were still in hospital with one Officer already released. The CPD was in an ugly mood and every Officer had a short fuse after such a blatant display at the hotel.

Jack was working hard to find out who and what was behind the outrage. It was going to be a major test of his leadership to keep the CPD together.

The previous evening

Safehouse F

"Stephanie, I want you to watch and learn as we deploy into the City, tonight. Marty will take you through how we operate and show you what goes on at his end of the operation."

"No problem, Mindy," Stephanie replied.

"Hit Girl and Wildcat are two up and ready to roll!" I called as Stephanie headed towards the Control Room.

"Have fun!" Battle Guy replied as I dropped the purple Ducati Multistrada into gear and accelerated up the ramp.

The roar of the powerful one hundred and sixty horsepower, 1200cc engine was intoxicating and it was great to be on two wheels again. Wildcat needed an outlet for her anger and I knew exactly where to go. A mile or so north-west of the Midway Airport was an industrial area and in a certain building was a drug-den that we were fully aware of, but had not had the time to do much about, until that night.

..._...

I pulled up in the shadow of an adjacent building and hid the motorcycle.

"Battle Guy, Hit Girl and Wildcat are moving in!"

"Battle Guy copies – put those claws to good use, Wildcat!"

"Oh, I will, Battle Guy, I will!" Wildcat replied.

I looked down at the younger vigilante.

"Let's move, Wildcat – no risks and don't get hurt..."

"Hey, it's me!"

"That is what I'm afraid of..." I growled as we ran towards the target building.

I was angry.

Some fucking bastard had put my Mom in hospital. There was nothing, I could do about that – for now. The people who did it, were dead, but whoever had ordered the hit on the Mayor had caused the collateral damage that had put eight, including Mom, in the hospital.

I was annoyed that it had taken Stephanie to get my head sorted out, but as she had said, we were partners. She was doing what she could to help me. Being put down by a skinny, British, nine-year-old was a little embarrassing, but that was my life!

I knew why Hit Girl had brought me out; it was to allow me to vent my anger through killing. My mind was in turmoil and normally I hated killing unnecessarily, but I needed to hurt somebody and those bastards that dealt drugs only had themselves to blame.

Hit Girl was ahead of me as we ran through the darkness and I forced myself to focus on the task ahead, channelling the pain and worry in my heart, into energy that I could use to fight.

There was a man patrolling outside a side door.

"Take him!" I growled.

Wildcat approached from behind and then ran at the man, deploying her claws as she ran. She leapt into the air and landed on the man's shoulder. She drove the claws of her right gauntlet into the man's neck. As the corpse fell to the concrete Wildcat rolled off and then back onto her feet.

"Done!" She replied.

I approached the door.

"Code is: seven – nine – eight – nine – nine..." Battle Guy advised and I punched in the numbers.

The door opened silently allowing us access to the facility. In the distance, I could hear aircraft taking off from the airport and more importantly the roar of a powerful motorcycle. The inside of the warehouse was brightly lit, not that we were worried.

"Howdy, cunts!" I growled as we both stepped into the light.

"Holy fuck – its Hit Girl..."

Any other yells of horror were drowned out as a guard opened fire with his pistol. We both braced for the impacts of the bullets. He was a crap shot.

"Not a nice way to treat two ladies!" I growled, flicking a knife into the man's forehead.

More men appeared and more guns with more bullets. I drew both pistols and opened fire on the guards while Wildcat flew at the other men like a demented Angry Bird. The four-foot eight-inch vigilante dug her claws into bodies as she went, leaving a bloody trail behind her. There was screaming and yelling; I loved it!

I ignored the stings of bullets as they collided with my combat suit. I span around, my twin Glock 19 pistols spitting fire in every direction. For the occasion, I had fitted 33-round high-capacity magazines into my pistols allowing me plenty of firepower. As I dumped the empty magazines, I inserted another pair of 33-round magazines and ran after Wildcat. I followed the bloody trail and found her, SIG Sauer pistol in hand.

There were several spent casings beside her and three dead bodies before her. As I watched I saw each bullet count – Wildcat was an expert shot. Her combat suit had blood on it, but her movements told me that it was not her own blood. We worked our way forward, Wildcat deploying her beloved claws and slashing anything that came close.

I was purely along for the ride; it was Wildcat's night.

I had never felt so free.

Normally, Hit Girl kept me under control, but she was letting me run wild. The blood flew and landed on my combat suit; my claws and gauntlets were covered in blood. I smoothly switched from claws to pistol and back to claws again. I was on automatic, savouring the one-sided fight as I made my way towards the offices located above the main floor.

I wanted the cunt that ran the organisation and they had an appointment with my Wakizashi.

There were six men guarding the bottom of the stairs that led up to the office.

"You are in our way..." Wildcat announced as she shot the first man dead.

The remaining five fell to our swords – we wanted some good old-fashioned fun! Wildcat had drawn her Wakizashi and advanced on two of the men, ignoring the bullets and severing a leg and then dumping the second man's steaming entrails on the floor before him. The remaining three? One lost his head in all the excitement while the other two would be an interestingly challenging jumble for the medical examiner to rearrange.

..._...

We left bloody footprints as we climbed the steel staircase. At the top was a steel door.

"Open the fucking door!" I yelled.

"Fuck you!"

Not very original! I studied the door, the surrounding wall and the mountings. Time for a lesson – I reached into the small pack on my lower back.

"Wildcat, this is called Detonating Cord. It is a plastic tube filled with pentaerythritol tetranitrate, rolls off the tongue that! Or just call it PETN for short..."

I took a moment to shoot the man who charged up the stairs, rudely interrupting my lesson.

"... PETN explodes at a rate of, near enough, four miles per second or as far as we are concerned, instantaneously. I prefer Primacord with a PETN core, but there are other versions..."

Another two men fell as I turned back to Wildcat, holstering my Glock.

"... Before I was so rudely interrupted... Oh for fuck's sake – I'm trying to teach here!" I growled and pulled the pin from a grenade, throwing it down into the warehouse towards where some bullets were originating.

I ignored the explosion as I continued.

"We need a good blast to remove that door – those stupid cunts fitted a steel door into a standard wooden wall. So instead of removing the door, we..."

"... Remove the frame, with the door!" Wildcat finished.

I nodded.

"We bunch up the cord, taping it in long coils with insulating tape – called double stranding. Then we fix it to the walls with duct-tape – like so – all around the door. Now a remote detonator and..."

I dragged Wildcat to one side before pressing the button on the remote trigger. There was a sharp crack and a yell from inside the office. For a moment nothing more than a cloud of dust and wood splinters erupted. The door was still standing.

"Huh?" Wildcat queried.

"Knock! Knock!" I yelled out and gave the door a firm prod with a single finger.

The entire door and frame crashed backwards into the office. I walked in, my swords crossed in front of me.

"Mind if we come in?" I growled.

I had enjoyed the impromptu explosives lesson.

Hit Girl definitely had a flair for the dramatic! Before us stood four men, all with fear etched on their faces.

"Who's first?" I growled, moving towards the nearest man.

The man was not very brave; he threw down his MAC-10 and moved backwards against the far wall. I moved fast, twisting my Wakizashi and myself in several smooth motions. At first, the man just stood there, but then his eyes rolled back into his head and his body began to collapse. The pile of severed body parts dropped to the carpet and the other three men all looked on in horror.

"Clothes off, now!" I ordered.

I saw Hit Girl glance in my direction; I knew she would be frowning under her mask.

Within a minute, the three men were standing there, naked as the day they were born. I was no stranger to a naked male body; I had seen my first, months before, in Gotham. I felt uncomfortable at the sight, but I continued with Hit Girl watching my every move.

I took a step towards the first man. I placed the point of my Wakizashi under his dick and gently lifted it. The man closed his eyes and grimaced, as his dick visibly shrivelled. I removed the blade gently without causing any damage. I almost laughed as the man let out the breath of relief, he had been holding.

I moved onto the next man and repeated my teasing and then again on the third man.

"Wildcat, we do not have all night – stop playing!" Hit Girl warned.

As the third man's dick sat on my blade, I flicked the sword up and watched as the severed member flew through the air and then heard a scream as both of the man's hands flew to his groin and he fell to the floor. My blade came down in one smooth movement, severing the man's head. Copious amounts of blood erupted across the floor and both of the other men pissed themselves out of fear.

I kicked the next man against the wall and then emasculated him with the tip of my blade quickly followed by cutting his throat from ear to ear. A torrent of scarlet blood flowed down his bare chest and soaking the carpet beneath our feet.

The final man was on his knees and begging for his life. I had had an idea! I dragged the naked man to his feet and threw him down the steel stairs. He screamed as he landed and he kept screaming. He was still alive, good!

I duct-taped the man's legs and arms together, with the man lying on his back, before turning to Hit Girl who had followed me down the stairs.

"Grenade, a foot of Primacord and a remote detonator..."

Hit Girl complied without hesitation. I wrapped the Primacord around the grenade, securing it with duct-tape and I connected the detonator. I rammed the IED between the man's legs at his crotch, pulling the pin from the grenade.

"Night, night!" I growled and we both headed towards the exit.

..._...

As we exited, I was surprised to see Kick-Ass astride his Ducati Diavel motorcycle, with Shadow beside him on her Panigale.

"Hit Girl – hit it!" I growled.

Hit Girl pressed the button on the remote trigger and I heard a large explosion, which rattled the entire building.

"Can't leave you two alone for a minute, can I?" Kick-Ass growled.

"The girl's in pain; I let her have a little fun!" I replied.

"With explosives?" He queried.

"Hey, she's growing up!" I responded with a laugh.

"Move it, Hit Girl – we still have work to do!" Wildcat called as she strode towards the building where we had hidden our motorcycle.

I shrugged and followed the young vigilante into the darkness.

Friday morning

Now Kim and Marty were living at West Ridge, Kim was making a lot of use of the exercise and training facilities.

"I need to get back in shape and get Hawk back out on the streets!" She had told me.

It would be good to have Hawk back with us. We were short of healthy operatives. Josh was still healing, although he was much better. Hailee was hurting from her wounds and the other evening had stressed her wounds a little. I was also a little worried that Megan was going to come unstuck.

The girl had worried me at the warehouse on Thursday night. Maybe I had let her be carried away with her adrenalin rush! However, it seemed that Megan was a lot happier and coping with her Mom's near-death experience. She spent a lot of time talking with Stephanie, which was good for both girls.

Cathy had insisted on talking to Megan to see how she was really feeling. Cathy's report had not been good. Megan was developing some nasty psychotic problems and I had only myself to blame. I just hoped I could control her and stop her going the same way as me.

Lake View High School

I could not resist it; the shot was perfect.

The tenth grade boy and girl were kissing – as usual. The boy was skinny, but muscular and handsome. He had the most adorable British accent, too. Everybody in school knew that Chloe Bennett and Joshua Williams were a couple and a girl went near Williams, only if she had a death wish; Bennett could get very violent!

I aimed and focussed on my targets from less than a dozen yards away, ignoring the other kids as they wandered the corridors. My moment to strike came as I saw Williams' hand move up Bennett's chest.

I pressed the trigger.

I turned at the sound.

"Damn you, Lauren – put that camera away!" I growled, and then I paused. "Any chance of a copy?"

"I'll bring a copy to D-JAK tonight," the girl agreed before running off.

"You want a copy?" Josh asked.

"I've never seen us making out..."

"You are so strange!"

Chapter 212*: Psychology

The following morning
Saturday

North Avenue, Chicago

"Where are we going?"

"Where are we going?" I repeated, in answer to Stephanie's question and smirked at Megan in the seat beside me. "You are about to enter another dimension, a dimension not only of sight and sound but of mind. A journey into a wondrous land of imagination. Next stop, the Twilight Zone!"

"Very funny, Mindy!" Stephanie laughed.

We parked on the rooftop parking lot and then headed towards the elevator.

The second floor

As we exited the lift, Mindy turned left and we joined a mass of people before we passed by 'Express' and 'J. Crew', before we reached 'Victoria's Secret' and I had to pull Megan away from the entrance. That shop was just wrong in oh so many ways!

"Chloe gets stuff from there, mail order," Mindy commented.

"Dirty bitch!" Both Megan and I said together.

We continued around the corner until Mindy stopped outside some double glass doors, beyond was darkness. She unlocked the locks top and bottom with some keys before pushing the door open. A loud beeping sounded – the alarm. Mindy walked over to a glass panel set into the wall to the right and placed her hand against a designated area that looked squishy. Within a second, the beeping stopped and a green message appeared on the glass: 'ALARM DISARMED – ACTIVATING SYSTEMS'.

"That panel will take a handprint, but not leave one – so nobody can dust and lift – cool huh!"

"Awesome – where are we?" Megan demanded.

"Welcome to D-JAK..."

Lights set into the ceiling and along the walls began to snap on, illuminating the room. To the left was a large area dedicated to changing rooms, toilets, showers and lockers. To the right was a large reception desk with three large, wall-mounted TV screens mounted one above the other behind it. Beyond the desk was a large open-plan area. In the central area was a large training mat and located between the reception desk and the central mat, were two smaller mats for separate classes. Behind and to the left of the reception desk was a private area with an office and a room equipped with soft chairs and couches. There was also a small kitchen.

At the far end of the space there was an area dedicated to exercise machines, punch bags and some other, similar, equipment. At the far right, was a staircase, which led to the lower entrance of D-JAK. Mindy led us both into the room with the couches, we all sat down, and Mindy turned serious.

..._...

"Megan," she began. "I want to talk to you about the other night. I will get personal, so if you want Stephanie to go and play – then she will leave us."

"No, Mindy. Stephanie is my friend and my partner, she has also stayed by my side since Mom was shot and she has helped me through this. She stays."

Mindy then turned to me.

"No interrupting, Steph. Just listen, okay?"

Stephanie nodded.

..._...

"You got a little carried away the other night, Megan – then again, I did let you. You did surprise me, though."

"I had a lot of issues to work out of my system."

"Why'd you want those men naked?" I asked.

Megan blushed slightly.

"After Gotham, I thought it would be a good way to show that I was in charge. Clothes denote power; I take the power away..."

"Interesting logic... It surprised me that you were comfortable with seeing naked men."

"I was not comfortable with it – by no stretch of the imagination... The sight was disgusting and I was revolted, but it had to be done."

I looked over at Stephanie.

"What about you?"

"I've seen a naked adult man before – I can't say that I liked what I saw, but the human body can't be avoided; it is what it is. Men have a weakness – their 'family jewels', so why not exploit that!" She responded.

"I like you Stephanie!"

That night Central Chicago

The man had not deserved to die, but no matter, he had still been eviscerated by the triple claws of Wildcat.

"What did you do that for?" Shadow demanded.

"I felt like it, I suppose..."

Shadow paused, as if she were about to say something, but then seemed to think better of it and just walked away from the younger vigilante.

"She's going too fucking far!" Battle Guy complained as he looked down at the dead body.

"Tell me about it," Kick-Ass added sourly. "But she's not the only one..."

"I know," Battle Guy replied as he looked over at Trojan.

Shadow chased the two younger vigilantes across the roof, catching up with them as they stopped to talk.

"This has to stop, you two!"

"Well it's not going to, so get the fuck used to it Shadow," Trojan growled before heading off into the darkness.

"Listen to me! Hit Girl is not going to stand for this. A bit of advice from somebody who cares? Calm the fuck down and follow the rules."

"Fuck you!" Wildcat retorted. "Or you will get these..."

Wildcat deployed and swung her claws. Shadow took a step back to avoid the lethal claws as Wildcat stalked off into the darkness without another look, following Trojan. Shadow found herself on the edge of the building and try as she might, she could not regain her balance and fell backwards into the void.

The Edwards Apartment

Lizzie Edwards gazed out at the night, looking past the fire escape outside of their bedroom.

"Nothing ever happens here..."

"What?" Lizzie's big sister, Lauren, asked sleepily.

"This place is so boring!"

"Go back to sleep, Lizzie..."

Lizzie continued to gaze out into the night.

"I want something to happen..."

Suddenly something big and heavy dropped out of the night and landed on the fire escape with a crash.

Lizzie jumped back with a start and Lauren sat bolt upright in bed.

"Lauren – there's something on the fire escape..."

"God, you so annoy me!" Lauren responded as she reluctantly scrambled out of her warm bed.

Lauren looked out onto the fire escape.

"There's nothing... Oh my God; it's a vigilante!" Lauren breathed.

Lizzie slid the window open and leant out. Prodding the armoured form.

"Lizzie – don't touch!"

Lizzie ignored her sister and touched the edge of the vigilante's mask. There was a flash and a crack. Lizzie screamed as she jerked her hand away.

"That hurt!"

There were a dozen bright flashes as Lauren snapped a dozen high-definition photos of the seemingly unconscious vigilante. The vigilante's head turned toward us.

"Am I gonna get a copy of those?" Shadow growled, rubbing her head with her right hand.

"Sorry – don't hurt me... Shadow."

"I won't... You recognise me?"

"You helped rescue me from the basement of some hellhole when I was kidnapped a few months ago," the older girl replied.

"Now I need your help... err..."

"Lauren and this is my little sister, Lizzie."

I froze for a second. I thought I had recognised the voices; I taught both girls at D-JAK!

Shadow made to sit up.

"Oh, wow, my head hurts and so does my back..."

The words came out a little slurred, but I understood what she was saying, then she continued talking, but not to us.

"Fusion, this is Shadow – I need an extraction... I'm a little woozy, but I can walk, I hope... Copy that; I'm on my way down..."

Shadow turned to face me.

"Goodnight Lauren, it's time for me to go."

I watched as Shadow slowly got to her feet; she looked awesome as she steadied herself before starting down the fire escape and I lost sight of her as she vanished into the darkness below.

The following morning
Sunday

Glenview

"You doing okay, Chloe?"

"Yeah, thanks, Mindy – I'm just a little bruised on my back and my ass, but I'll heal!"

"Bit of a coincidence landing on that fire escape, huh?"

"Just a bit!"

As I put the cell down, I started to consider the reasons behind Shadow dropping off that building.

The next day
Monday

Lake View High School

I was a little fragile, but I was still able to attend school.

The first period was peaceful and I had Josh to fuss over me. Due to the painkillers that Mom had given me, I was a little hazy, which was not much use when I was walking down a corridor between lessons. As I turned a corner, I saw a crowd of kids gathered by a noticeboard

"Chloe, you gotta look at this!"

It was a very overexcited Avery, who ran over and pulled me through the crowd. There beside the noticeboard was Lauren and on the noticeboard were some A3 size pictures. My eyes went wide at the high-resolution images of a certain blue-clad superhero.

"She's awesome; isn't she?" Riley exclaimed and Avery looked like she would explode.

I had always known that my friends thought Shadow was awesome and most of the boys in the school who had reached puberty fancied the pants off her! I froze, my drug fogged mind unable to figure out a response that would not reveal my secret.

"I am... I mean she is..." I mumbled receiving a strange look from Lauren and Riley.

"Where did you get them from?" Riley asked Lauren.

"It was awesome – she landed on the fire escape outside my bedroom and she allowed me to take some pictures."

I had no memory of ever giving my permission, but there I was in vivid colour, weapons and all.

"Can we get copies?" Some of the boys asked.

"I could do that," Lauren replied.

"I want some of those!"

I turned to find Josh grinning down at me. I glared back.

"You fancy Shadow over me, do you?" I demanded facetiously.

"Now you mention it..."

I glared at my boyfriend.

"Shadow has a very different figure to you, Chloe – she's much more curvaceous and her tits are bigger too."

I actually had no response to that so I just shrugged.

That evening

Glenview

The four kids were in the pool.

While Paige was still in hospital, Megan was staying with us. I had no problem with that as it also allowed me to keep an eye on the girl. At that moment, watching the kids playing, you would have never known that two of them were cold killers. I was supposed to be worrying about Stephanie and her mental stability, but instead I was worrying about the mental stability of Megan and Curtis.

I was alone with the kids, apart from the very pregnant Sophia. Yes, Sophia was pregnant – three weeks! After her episode with Rex, we had taken her to the vet for a routine check-up and... Therefore, somewhere around the middle of January, next year, there should be some puppies – anywhere up to ten or so apparently!

Dave and Erika were out on the streets – Shannon and Tony had been having some trouble down at the bar they ran on North Ashland Avenue and West Bryn Mawr Avenue.

The bar was called the Edgewater Lounge.

The Edgewater Lounge

The normal clientele were behaving remarkably well that evening.

Usually they were a bit rowdy, but never out of control. However, for the past couple of weeks there had been some trouble, so Shannon had reached out for a friend or two to visit.

"Holy shit!" Harry growled at the sight of who was sitting, chatting away to each other, at one end of the central bar.

"Evening, Harry – just some friends who have decided to make this their regular watering hole," Tony offered nonchalantly.

"Okay – bourbon, neat!"

..._...

The trouble arrived, as usual, a few minutes before nine that evening.

"My favourite bar..." The man drawled to his three companions. "Move along – I want those seats!"

Four men seated on stools at the bar, ignored the man.

"Hey, fuckers, I..."

"I think it is time for you and your compatriots to leave!" Shannon announced strongly.

"You gonna make me?"

"No..."

"But we will!"

The man turned to find himself face to face with two armour-clad vigilantes. The green and yellow armour of Kick-Ass towered above the other vigilante who was clad in light blue and was known as Mist.

"You go easy, or you go hard..." Mist drawled in her electronically enhanced voice, staring at the man.

The man glared around the bar.

"There's better fucking places than this fucking dump – let's go!"

The men stormed out of the bar.

"Hey, asshole – get outta my face!"

"Did you just threaten me?"

"Yes, I fucking did, you black bastard!"

There was a pause, followed by a scuffle. Kick-Ass led a small crowd out of the bar and to the sidewalk outside.

"Captain Williams!" Kick-Ass growled.

"Just tidying up the streets – nothing to see here people!" Marcus grinned as the four men were cuffed and pushed into a pair of waiting Police cars. "Goodnight!"

Chapter 213*: Clash of The Titans

Two days later
Wednesday night

Hit Girl flew across the room, cannoning into the brick wall.

Jackal ran forwards but he was kicked in the stomach for his trouble. The teenaged vigilante fell to the floor, but quickly rolled back to his feet. Hit Girl tried to regain her feet but the enormous figure strode over and kicked the veteran vigilante in the thigh, eliciting a scream of pain.

Hit Girl rolled with the kick, before kicking out herself. Her armoured heel striking the equally armoured leg closest to her. The owner of the leg barely registered the strike.

Hit Girl was getting seriously annoyed.

I turned as Kick-Ass thundered forwards, moving fast towards Hit Girl and her attacker. I was still sore from dropping onto fire escapes days previously, but I struggled up from the floor where the armoured assailant had thrown me.

"Hey!" Kick-Ass yelled. "Why don't you pick on someone your own size?"

The man turned to meet his next attacker.

..._...

Size wise, the unknown attacker was six inches taller than Kick-Ass, wider too. His armour looked to be as cutting edge as our own and it had protected the man from our weapons, including our bullets. He had single-handedly taken down Hit Girl, Jackal and me with barely a scratch.

Now it was the turn of Kick-Ass.

Earlier that day
Wednesday afternoon

Glenview

"Why do you both look so unhappy?"

"Mom cooked," Anne-Marie replied simply and Danny pretended to vomit.

I laughed and then tried to stop as Mindy came out of the kitchen.

"They've only been with us a few weeks and they already know that your cooking sucks!"

"They were hungry!" Mindy replied defensively.

"Isn't that classified as 'cruel and unusual punishment'?"

Mindy's mouth dropped open in shock.

"You bast..."

"Mindy!"

Mindy scowled and the kids laughed at her discomfort.

"I'm still learning, okay!"

"You keep learning, Mom," Danny advised. "Just, please practice on somebody else!"

"Not funny!" Mindy grimaced.

Later that afternoon

Megan was late back from school.

Apparently, she had been in detention and she was in a foul mood. As I understood it, Marcus had had a go at her, too. We tried to be nice, but Megan was being bitchy – super bitchy! Then it all came to a head and I was glad Dave had gone out immediately after dumping Megan.

"Megan – cut that language out and be nice – grow up!" Mindy said sharply.

"Fuck you; you're not my fucking mother!" Mindy retorted angrily.

I saw Mindy's eyes flash.

'Oh, shit!' I thought and unbidden I grabbed the hand of each twin. I dragged them both upstairs out of the line of fire. The last I saw of Megan was when Mindy seized hold of the back of her blouse and her feet left the ground.

Mindy hauled Megan away towards the basement.

"Get the fuck off of me!"

I threw Megan onto the mat where she landed in a heap.

"You gonna kill me now?" She growled as she stood up.

"Your arrogance just keeps getting you into shit, doesn't it? You don't know when to quit."

"Come on; hit me, you fucking pussy!"

"Unlike you, Megan, I have self-control. You deserve to be hit and hard, but I won't do that – not to you."

"Why?"

"Because I care about you – Curtis too. I know that you've both been going through a lot. I should have been there to help you both before things went too far."

"There is nothing fucking wrong with us – you think we're going psychotic, like you?"

"Not like me, no – that takes a long time and worse crap than you've been exposed to. A lot has happened over the past year or so, Megan. You lost your Dad. Your Mom lost her job. You were forced to live in that shithole where we found you."

Megan was calming down – slowly, too slowly.

"Fucking hit me!" She growled furiously.

"Look, if you want to be a bitch, I'm sure Sophia will lend you one of her collars..."

"What!" Megan exclaimed.

"You want to be a real bitch, then we can fucking well treat you like one!"

Megan glared at me for a moment.

"You wouldn't..."

Megan did not sound too confident.

"You think I wouldn't put a collar on you and make you sleep in a dog bed? I would make you eat out of a bowl on the floor, with your butt in the air, too – and remember dogs don't wear clothes, either!"

Megan looked decidedly unhappy with that threat.

"You wouldn't fucking dare..."

"Try me, bitch!" I growled back with an evil smirk. "Strip – clothes off now – all of them... I'll go get that collar."

Megan glared, but then tears started to show themselves.

"Go sit on the couch," I said quietly.

I followed the young girl to the couch and sat down beside her.

"Megan – you've suffered a lot. You've been stabbed and badly hurt during some nasty fighting. You've got nothing to prove to me or anybody. You are one of my top operators and I am damn proud of you. Now your Mom's in hospital and that has tipped you over the edge – yes?"

Megan nodded hesitantly.

"We're all here to help you. Both of you – Curtis is talking to Chloe and Cathy, right now."

"How can you be so nice to me, considering what I've done... The way I've been treating everybody, especially you?"

"We all fuck up, once or twice," I replied. "Ask Dave and Chloe – I've fucked up more times than I care to think about!"

Megan paused for a minute before speaking again. She looked at me directly as she spoke.

"I need a rest, don't I?"

"Do you?"

"I can't bear the thought of not being Wildcat, even for a minute, but if I don't rest then I may never be allowed to be Wildcat again, right?"

"You got it, kid!"

"So, I'm grounded?"

"That's up to Marcus, but I'm standing you down from Fusion, as of right now. Get upstairs and you apologise to Anne-Marie, Danny and Stephanie. Then you spend some time being an eleven-year-old girl, okay."

Megan hesitated and then she nodded.

"Thank you, Mindy and I am really sorry for swearing at you. I mean that, I really do."

"I know."

Megan paused at the bottom of the stairs from the basement and she turned to me.

"Would you really have made me strip naked and put a collar on me?"

I laughed and then put on my evil face.

"We'll never know, will we, Megan!" I growled. "Unless, of course, you start behaving like a bitch again..."

Megan fled up the stairs.

That evening

"Hey, Mindy!"

"Hailee! You ready to look after these, err kids?"

"I can take it – I've faced worse..."

"Don't bet on it!"

"Hi, Hailee," Danny called out. "Guess what?"

"What?" Hailee replied.

"Megan owes the 'swear jar' about fifty-thousand bucks!"

Hailee laughed, which earned her a scowl from Megan.

"That bad, huh?"

"It was bad!" Anne-Marie confirmed with a grin, sticking her tongue out at Megan who did the same in return.

Hailee laughed.

"You have any trouble with Megan – just wave this at her," I said, placing a dog collar on the kitchen side.

Megan froze. She smiled sweetly and then suggested that they all go and watch a movie.

"Megan's learning to be a kid again," I whispered into Hailee's ear. "See you later – tonight should be a breeze!"

Three hours later

South Wells Street and West Van Buren Street

We had received a call from Voight.

The CPD had met up with something that they could not handle. Voight had reported it as somebody in an armoured suit – somebody big! There were only four of us on patrol that evening.

I was on my Multistrada while Kick-Ass was driving Iron Hide with Jackal and Shadow making out in the back! We came up West Jackson Boulevard and turned right onto South Wells Street driving beneath the 'L'. We stopped as we reached the southeast corner of The Loop.

It looked like the entire Chicago PD was out, including SWAT. We were met by Matthews who detailed four cops to watch our vehicles.

"He's in there," Matthews motioned towards a door with '404' displayed above it. "Second floor. Everything we fire at him seems to bounce off – he makes Kick-Ass seem rather small."

Kick-Ass growled.

"Down boy!" I quipped. "Leave it to us..."

Hit Girl and Shadow ran into the main door, pistols up in front of them.

Jackal jumped upwards pulling down the ladder to the fire escape. He rapidly climbed up to the second floor while I followed. A cop held the ladder in position. As we both reached the second floor, we heard radio chatter.

"Contact!" It was Hit Girl's voice.

I heard several shots, mostly the booms of Hit Girl's .40-calibre Glock 22 pistols, but interspersed with the sharper cracks of Shadow's 5.7-millimetre FN Five-seveN pistol.

"The fucker's bullet proof – at least Level III!" Shadow growled.

"Shadow run!" Hit Girl then growled as I heard heavy booms from .45-calibre gunfire. "The fucker has a fucking .45-calibre Kriss Vector!"

I felt cold inside my suit at that – those rounds would cut through the girls' lighter armour. There was no time for niceties so I drew my own Glock and shot out the glass in the nearest window. Having made my entrance, I ran through the office with Jackal close behind. I peered out of the door into the passageway and caught sight of a dull red shape.

Fuck the guy was huge! I fired off an entire magazine – but my rounds just bounced off the cunt! I did attract his attention though. He sent a few rounds in my direction before his magazine was empty. I took my chance and ran forwards. I seized hold of the Vector sub-machine gun and wrestled it out of the cunts hands as Jackal kicked at the tree trunks that the man used for legs.

Jackal managed to topple the giant as I ripped the Vector from his grip and threw it out of the nearest window. I turned as Jackal came flying past and the cunt ran up the next flight of stairs.

He was pursued by Hit Girl and Shadow, followed by Jackal. I followed along behind.

We were blindsided as we exited the stairs.

I felt myself being picked up and thrown to the floor. I rolled to absorb the impact and crashed against the wall. I looked up to see Hit Girl fly past me and hit the brick wall with an audible thud. She fell to the ground not moving.

"Hit Girl is down!" I called over the comms.

Jackal ran to help Hit Girl, but he was kicked hard in the stomach and he fell to the ground, an arm holding his stomach.

"Bloody wanker!" Jackal grimaced in obvious pain as he drew a pistol and emptied twenty rounds into the giant cunt as he turned back to the still form of Hit Girl.

"Hit Girl, move!" I yelled and I saw her stirring.

The veteran vigilante was not moving fast enough, being kicked in the thigh before she could fully move out of the way of the advancing juggernaut. I heard her scream out in pain, but she rolled and kicked out. The giant barely registered the strike.

As I got to my feet, Kick-Ass appeared from the stairs like a raging bull elephant. His body language told me that he was beyond pissed.

"Hey!" Kick-Ass yelled. "Why don't you pick on someone your own size?"

They clashed, punching and kicking each other as they took over the office with their fighting.

We all very quickly moved out of harm's way before we were trampled. It kinda reminded me of the T-Rex vs I-Rex fight in Jurassic Park! Kick-Ass was putting every ounce of his ample strength behind his punches and 'Red', we had no other name for him, staggered under the onslaught, but then he struck back and hard.

I winced inside my mask as Kick-Ass received two solid blows, one to his chest and another to the side of his head. Kick-Ass almost lost his footing but he then drove in with punch after punch pounding Red in the face, stomach and kidneys. The sound alone of the strikes, armour against armour, was awesome.

We could all hear Kick-Ass as he was on VOX and he was swearing worse than Hit Girl! Red was pushed down onto one knee, fending off the blows, but then he kicked out and swept Kick-Ass' left leg from under him, sending him crashing to the floor. However, Kick-Ass was not done; he drove his fist upwards and struck Red hard in the stomach, almost doubling him over with the power of the punch.

Kick-Ass rolled away and regained his feet, but he looked shaky.

"Kick-Ass – how about we teach this fucker to fly?"

"Sure would beat round fucking two!" Kick-Ass growled.

"We take him on three..." I replied, flexing my muscles – I was going to need every damn one of them.

"Three!" I yelled and we both ran forwards seizing an arm each and bracing our shoulders against Red's chest.

We drove the bastard backwards, increasing our momentum, fighting for purchase on the wood floor. Gunfire erupted as the girls got in on the act and blasted a window open – one that had no fire escape beyond it.

"Battle Guy, Hit Girl – tell Matthews that he has incoming!"

We had less than two feet to go and then the red cunt was airborne. He knew it too and he struggled against our combined strength, but we had the edge. He was fighting harder, knowing that he was going to die, but we just pushed harder knowing that he would kill us if we let him go.

"Stop!" Red yelled.

We did not stop.

"Why?" Kick-Ass roared back.

"Who are you?" I demanded with what little breath I had left.

"My name is of no consequence..."

"Fuck this – two, six, fucking heave!" I growled to Kick-Ass.

One more, hearty shove and the cunt fell backwards. I felt myself grabbed by a pair of hands and was thrown to the floor before I followed Red the quick way back to the street below. Kick-Ass fell off to the side against the window frame and collapsed to the floor. I turned to look up into my girl's hidden eyes.

"Thank you, gorgeous!"

"Fuck, I – am – in – pain!" Kick-Ass declared.

Chapter 214*: The Godfather

Three days later
Saturday

The Sicilians attacked us.

On the other hand, maybe a better word would have been, ambushed. Fusion was off its game and that was worrying me, badly. The call had gone out; there was trouble in a part of the City where the Sicilians had gathered. Our intelligence gathering apparatus had failed us – I would be having personal words with my snouts – which meant that we had no idea of the well-equipped army that awaited us.

We also learnt who was behind all the Sicilian activity: The Godfather, himself.

That night

We departed in full force.

Something in the back of my mind told me that the D'Amico family were involved somehow – I just had that feeling. It was also the first night back out for Petra – she had passed an exhaustive set of checks administered by Cathy. Hailee had complained about the check-ups, but her mother had told her that she would backup Cathy if she was not fit enough to go back out.

I advised Hailee that it was not a good idea to argue with Cathy!

Safehouse F
Control Centre

It was always the part, which I hated: everybody departing for a potentially dangerous operation.

I knew Hal hated it, too. As we both watched, names appeared on the large vertically mounted screen on the right hand side of the main wall of the Control Centre, as Fusion members departed the Safehouses.

'HIT GIRL' appeared in purple as she accelerated up the ramp on her Panigale. Next came 'SHADOW' in blue as she followed on her own Panigale. 'JACKAL' joined the list in black as he followed Shadow on his tan Ninja ZX-10R. Three more names appeared simultaneously as Iron Hide roared out of the Safehouse, 'KICK-ASS' in green, 'SPLINTER' in orange and 'MIST' in grey. Finally, 'PETRA' appeared in pink as she joined the convoy on her own motorcycle.

Four other names were visible on the board as allocated to 'SAFEHOUSE F'. 'BATTLE GUY' in gold, 'HAL' in silver, 'MEDIC' in white, and 'HAWK' in red. Hawk and I were backup and Hound was ready to deploy at a moment's notice.

I watched intently as the variously coloured dots appeared on the large map of Chicago and moved northeast at speed.

Forty minutes later

Northeast Chicago

The ambush had closed around us.

Over twenty armed men, many of whom appeared to be mercenaries of various sorts. We had expected something, but we were still caught with our proverbial pants down! We were inside a large multi-floored structure that used to be a theatre – more precisely the Uptown Theatre on North Broadway. The place was a goddamn nightmare; it was immense and in a bad state of disrepair. There was no way that we were going to back down, so we dove into the fight, seven vs over twenty.

We had faced worse odds!

Uptown Theatre, Mezzanine Level

Bullets flew, striking our armour as Shadow and I dove for cover behind the seats of the mezzanine level.

On entering the theatre, we had split up. Petra and Splinter, along with Kick-Ass and Mist had stayed below, heading onto the main floor of the theatre. Shadow and I had headed up to the mezzanine level, slowly climbing the sweeping staircase that led upwards.

We had almost immediately come under fire from balconies above us. We both opened fire on anything that moved, dumping magazine after magazine – we were going through ammunition too damn fast!

I could hear shooting from down below as the other teams engaged the enemy within the seating and on the stage. The building was going to be a nightmare to clear and we would be under fire the entire time.

Uptown Theatre, Main Level

I had not expected the night to go well, but things sucked!

The gunfire was heavy and bullets pinged off of my heavy chest armour as I engaged targets with my G36K. I grinned as the odd body fell from height and crashed into the seating. Mist yelled out a warning as men appeared from a doorway to our left and she dropped one with her chain whip, almost taking his head off.

Splinter and Petra were fighting hand to hand as more men appeared. Everything was going to shit – we needed ammunition and help, fast!

Uptown Theatre, Main Entrance

Battle Guy had put the call out and SWAT was inbound, but over ten minutes out.

I was on guard outside when I received the call for more ammunition. I cleaned out each transport and slung packs over my back as I accelerated for the main door – my trusty Ninja NX-10R smashing through the glass door. I skidded on the marble floor, but regained my balance and aimed for the right-hand of the two curving staircases.

I came under fire from the balcony to my left and took a moment to send a burst of automatic fire from my P90 that was slung across my chest into the balcony. Two bodies fell to the marble below and did not move. I accelerated up the stairs and onto the mezzanine level.

Uptown Theatre, Mezzanine Level

Damn, Jackal knew how to make fucking entrance!

I heard the roaring engine before he appeared, kicking a cunt off the level, sending him crashing into the seating below. He skidded to a halt beside me and handed me a pack of ammunition and magazines.

"Gotta go!" He growled and span his rear wheel as he turned about and headed back towards the lobby.

"He's fucking nuts!" Shadow growled with a slight chuckle.

Uptown Theatre, Main Level

Normally I would have put riding a motorcycle inside a theatre down to Hit Girl, however...!

I saw Jackal roaring onto the Mezzanine Level above, before accelerating away. He had given Hit Girl and Shadow much needed ammunition. I had no idea where Jackal was heading next, but a minute or two later he appeared on the main stage and started to take shots at cunts with his P90, ignoring the return fire as bullets struck his heavy armour.

Splinter and Petra took the opportunity to make for the stage where they would have better coverage as they took down cunts. Petra fended off a pair of cunts while Jackal reloaded his P90 before accelerating off to clear the private boxes that ringed us on both sides.

Then I heard a scream and looked up to see Hit Girl plummeting towards me; she had fallen off the Mezzanine Level. Hit Girl struck me and we both collapsed to the floor. The bitch was giggling!

"Just thought that I'd drop in!" She growled before running for the nearest stairs that would take her back up to Shadow.

Uptown Theatre, Mezzanine Level

Fuck, I was starting to tire.

Hit Girl was fighting with an enormous cunt, who then threw her over the balustrade into the seating below. Thankfully I heard her voice over the comms as it appeared she had crashed into Kick-Ass! I shot the cunt who threw her, in the head.

Hit Girl reappeared two minutes later, her Tanto in her hand and dripping blood.

"Having fun?" I enquired as I punched another mercenary in the face, busting his nose.

"I've had better days!" Hit Girl replied with a laugh.

I could hear the roar of Jackal's Ninja as he engaged cunts around the theatre – Mindy was going to be mad at him for upstaging her with that stunt!

Finally, the level was clear and we headed up between the seating to clear the rooms behind.

..._...

We found a room being guarded by a dozen men; they covered the corridor, but moved out as we approached and caught us in a crossfire. Bullets flew all around and several struck my armour, which fucking hurt. We were majorly outgunned, but then our saviour arrived!

"Incoming!"

It was Jackal and as he approached on his Ninja, he skidded and put his machine flat on the marble floor where vigilante and motorcycle skidded past us, taking out gunman after gunman and sending them flying. Jackal was firing his FN Five-sevenN pistols as he skidded down the corridor on his back, dropping many more.

I cringed as I saw my man and his machine smack into the wall at the end of the corridor. Hit Girl and I both jumped up and ran after him, killing anybody that moved.

Well, that was fun!

I jumped up and dumped my magazines, inserting fresh ones before I turned, ready for action. There before me, were my two favourite girls running towards me, Hit Girl had her Wakizashi drawn, with a pistol in her other hand. Shadow brandished her bō-staff, itching for action.

"Fusion, Battle Guy; SWAT is onsite and engaging!"

"Copy that – about time, too!" I growled.

We approached the room that they were guarding, unsure about what we might find. The door was now unguarded and I kicked the door in, so Hit Girl and Shadow could dive in.

"Clear!" came the call.

..._...

I entered the room cautiously.

There was a large screen TV, a laptop and a webcam setup on a table in the otherwise empty room.

"Am I the only one who is confused?" I enquired.

The screen came to life and we saw a man sitting in shadow. His face was obscured, but he chuckled appreciatively.

"Well done, Hit Girl – I am impressed, but annoyed, to see you still in one piece, let alone walking about!"

"Sorry to disappoint you, I have a tendency to survive!" Hit Girl growled back, stowing her blade and pistol.

I moved to cover the doorway while Hit Girl's attention was taken by the TV.

"Hit Girl, we are at war..."

"Why?" I enquired.

"You know of the Genovese?" The man continued.

"Should I?" I replied, genuinely at a loss.

"The Godfather, my Grandfather, is Vito Genovese..."

"Look, I have not got time for a Goddamned history lesson, so cut to the fucking chase!" Hit Girl growled impatiently.

"... And he had a daughter, Angie..."

"Oh, fuck!" Kick-Ass growled as he entered the room, catching the end of the sentence, but it took me a few more seconds to join the dots on a certain family tree.

"Angie D'Amico!" I growled. Chris D'Amico's Mother.

"Well done!" The man chuckled.

"The family honour is at stake – we have no choice but to avenge Angie, Frank, Ralph and young Christopher."

"Why, they were all fucking nutcases and they were a cancer on New York and Chicago. Oh, by the way, we never killed Angie."

"That may be, but you were involved, which is enough..."

"Who the fuck are you?"

"I am Anthony Genovese, son of Carlo Genovese, son of Vito Genovese."

Chapter 215*: Miranda Departs

The following morning Sunday

That morning was bad for so many reasons.

We were all in pain, which accounted for many of the reasons, not to mention the disturbing information that had cropped up the previous night. The D'Amico family was still fucking us about and that pissed me off, big time! However, there was another reason. Stephanie had regressed into a feral state. What had caused it?

Miranda.

The scene had not been pretty!

Dave and I had known ahead of time what was about to happen, so we were prepared. We had agreed that Miranda should break the news and we would be there to assist as necessary. Dave was convinced that Stephanie would freak out – in a major way – and he was not wrong!

Maybe Dave was somehow tuning into how nutcases like us worked.

Safehouse F

Miranda was very uncomfortable, twisting her fingers together as she tried to prepare herself for what had to be done.

She was standing alone in the briefing room, at least until Dave and I appeared with a somewhat confused Stephanie. The young girl was perceptive and I noticed her body language changing as she went on guard.

"Miranda? What is it?" Stephanie asked her voice fearful of the response.

"Stephanie, I'm leaving – there are some things that I must do..."

Stephanie frowned and her eyes narrowed.

"No – you are not leaving me!"

"I have to – Dave and Mindy will look after you..."

I could see emotions sweeping across the nine-year-olds face. Fear, panic, apprehension, anger, hurt.

"You promised that we would stay together, always!"

Stephanie was shouting now and I could tell that she was on the verge of losing control.

"Please, Steph, please. I know how hard this will be on you, but these are good people; I've known for a while Dave and he's the best there is..."

"No, no, NO!"

I nodded at Dave and I felt so bad about what I was doing, but I had to go. Dave seized Stephanie in a bear hug from behind, easily lifting the skinny nine-year-old off the ground. She fought, she struggled and she swore – badly!

"You can't leave... You bastard, Dave, get the fuck off me or I swear to God, I will fucking kill you!"

I turned away from Stephanie and tried to block out the screaming that was rapidly turning borderline hysterical. I headed down the stairs towards the exit and the elevator. The screaming rang in my ears as I felt hot tears of sadness and shame, flood down my face.

Even after I had left the Safehouse, I could still hear her betrayed screams in my head.

"You shitty fucking bastards; you are all going to pay for this!" Stephanie screamed, still struggling against Dave's iron grip.

She kept trying to smack the back of her head into Dave's face and she kicked everywhere that she could reach but Dave still held onto her for what seemed like an hour, but was more like ten minutes. Finally, she calmed down, just a bit and sobbed into Dave's shoulder, hugging him tightly.

Half an hour later, Stephanie appeared to have calmed down, at least enough for Dave to let her go.

"I'm sorry," Stephanie said quietly.

"It's okay," I replied gently.

"I need to go clean up."

"Yes, you do. I'll come with you."

"Why do females all go to the bathroom together?" Dave asked.

"It's a woman thing!" I grinned in reply as we headed to the bathroom across the way that was reserved for girls.

..._...

While Stephanie washed her face, I pulled out her hair bobble and brushed her hair; there were always a few hair brushes lying around in the bathroom. Once properly brushed, I put Stephanie's blonde hair back up into a pony tail, ready for the next bit of action that I knew was coming.

"You feeling better?" I asked, knowing the response.

"Like bloody hell I am!"

"Oh?" I enquired innocently.

"I'm bloody pissed to fuck!"

"So do something about it..."

"Like what?"

I pulled the girl out of the bathroom and out onto the walkway, pulling her around to face me.

"Hit me, if you think you can..."

Stephanie bristled at that, but otherwise she did not move.

"Show me what you can do, dig down deep for all that anger, use it. Show me what Stephanie Walker is capable of, show me what Psyche can do."

"I... I can't..."

I slapped the nine-year-old on her left cheek. For a moment I thought that she was about to burst into tears, but no.

As I watched from the other side of the Safehouse, I saw the two girls reappear from the bathroom.

Stephanie looked better, at least her hair was neat and tidy as usual. Then after a brief exchange, Mindy slapped the girl. That surprised me, for all of two seconds, before I remembered who my wife really was!

At first Stephanie just stood still, but then she tensed up and threw a punch at Mindy, which of course missed. That seemed to tip Stephanie over the edge as she launched into a vicious attack, using everything she possessed including some of her newly acquired skills from D-JAK and Megan.

Mindy kept dodging before she ran down the steps to the mat.

"Come on you fucking British bitch – you're a fucking pussy!"

Stephanie was kicking and punching, trying her utmost to catch Mindy. Only Mindy was too good for her, naturally, and dodged everything, goading the young girl without mercy. I could see Stephanie getting more and more enraged by Mindy's treatment of her. Mindy, though, was smiling which was only making it worse.

"You sure about this?" Marty asked as he joined me on the walkway.

"I got it!" I replied with a grin, showing Marty the green and yellow X26P Taser in my hand.

"Who is that for?" Marty asked, showing me a black X2 Taser.

"Which ever bitch gets out of hand first!" I laughed.

Stephanie was able to land a few strikes on Mindy, but nothing that did anything. The young girl was going all-out, but Mindy was barely breathing hard. I decided that it was not fair; it was time to even the odds.

"Marty, watch 'em for a minute..."

I saw Dave vanish below, but ignored the irrelevance.

My opponent was raging and her anger was aimed at me; which was good. I wanted her to throw everything she had at me and to do that she had to be so mad, so pissed. Then I found out where Dave had vanished to – the evil cunt!

He sauntered past the mat and threw a three-foot Bokken towards Stephanie who deftly caught the wooden training weapon and smirked happily as she started to attack me with it – quite successfully too!

I threw Dave a scowl that said, 'I hate you' and 'I'll fuck you up for that', all in one!

"Mindy doesn't seem to like your change!" Marty commented with a chuckle as I re-joined him.

"What's new!" I laughed back.

Stephanie handled the training weapon well, much to Mindy's obvious disgust! My wife moved speedily and nimbly to escape the painful weapon, dodging several good strikes.

"It's not a fucking tampon – start fighting with it, not waving it around like a soggy sausage!" Mindy taunted with a smirk.

"Fuck you, bitch!" Came the enraged reply.

Stephanie deftly stepped inside of Mindy's next dodge and jammed the end of the weapon into Mindy's side eliciting a scream of pain. If Mindy was not pissed before, she was now and she was raging – almost as much as Stephanie. I had to watch out or Mindy might actually kill the nine-year-old!

However, Mindy just took the strike in her stride and lazily kicked Stephanie in the chest, sending her flying backwards onto the mat. Mindy's insults followed as the girl struggled back to her feet.

"Get up, you useless fucking shit!"

"You fight like a bloody used tampon!"

"Dave was better than you when he first started being Kick-Ass – before he got stabbed and knocked down by a car, that is!"

..._...

Marty burst out laughing at that last one...

"Low blow, bitch!" I yelled down, only to receive the middle finger of Mindy's right hand in return.

"Fuck you, fuck you, fuck you!" Stephanie yelled back, her face red with her exertions, but she was not giving up.

She bolted forwards, brandishing the Bokken and laying into Mindy who seemed to have been taken by surprise! Mindy fended off the strikes with her arms, before seizing the Bokken and throwing Stephanie across the mat where she landed hard enough to scream in pain.

"Enough!" Mindy said strongly as Stephanie regained her feet a little shakily.

"No fucking chance!" Stephanie growled and launched herself at Mindy.

Mindy fought off the rabid younger girl. Every time that Mindy put Stephanie down on the mat and then released her, the girl jumped up and struck again, only to be put down, again!

Talk about a bitch in heat!

Mindy was never that bad. Stephanie was out of control; she was going to hurt herself. The only option was to restrain her before something bad happened. I ran down and while Mindy distracted Stephanie with an attack, I seized the wild girl around the waist and then pinning her to the mat on her back.

"Mindy said, enough!" I roared at Stephanie before roughly flipping her over onto her front and securing her wrists with flexi-cuffs behind her back.

Surprisingly, Stephanie never said a word while I secured her. After a minute of being face down on the mat, she spoke.

"I'm sorry. I freaked out a bit. You can take the cuffs off..."

Mindy nodded and I removed the cuffs. Stephanie peered to her right before jabbing out with her right fist and catching Mindy on the side of her jaw. Mindy reacted with a jab to Stephanie's side, causing Stephanie to scream out in agony and I replaced the cuffs before anything else happened.

"Let's talk, shall we?" Mindy suggested with a smile, rubbing her jaw as I helped Stephanie get back to her feet.

That evening

Glenview

"Megan?"

"Yeah, Steph."

"Mindy suggested I should ask you something..."

"What?"

"She said that if I wanted to be a bitch then I should ask you about what the consequences might be?"

I saw Megan's eyes go wide and then a pained expression appeared on her face.

"Believe me when I say: don't be a bitch!"

"Why?"

"It's way too humiliating; trust me, partner..."

Later that evening

I heard laughing and giggling as I walked past Anne-Marie's bedroom.

They were watching a movie and I recognised the tune, but I could not remember the movie and then as I peered around the door, I remembered: Mulan!

"Hi, Mulan – err, Mindy!" Megan laughed.

"You'd make a great warrior, Mom," Anne-Marie said seriously with a big grin on her face and Danny nodded his agreement.

"Thanks, but that's not me," I grinned in response with a wink at a smirking Stephanie.

The following afternoon

Monday

West Columbia

"Mom!" Megan yelled excitedly.

Megan ran to her Mom and hugged her.

"Careful, Megan; I'm still a little sore," Paige warned, having only left the hospital an hour earlier.

"You doing okay?" I asked.

"Yes, Mindy, I am and thanks."

"For what?"

"For looking after that temperamental hand grenade that I have for a daughter!"

Megan blushed.

"I loved looking after her..."

"You're not a good liar, Mindy," Paige laughed. "Marcus told me what you did for Megan, keeping her on the right road. Thanks to you, I still have a daughter..."

"I..."

I had no idea how to respond. Instead Paige gave me a hug and a kiss. I felt my face getting very warm.

"I'm very proud of you, Mindy," Marcus added.

That was it, my face exploded and I suddenly felt very embarrassed – but in a good way. I put an arm around Megan and hugged her close.

"You taking her back, then?" I asked.

"Only if we have to!" Paige replied and Megan's mouth dropped open in shock.

When I awoke, something felt strange, but I could not figure it out.

I stretched and realised with a start that I was not in my own bed and as I looked around me, I found myself in Sophia's dog bed! I sat up quickly and studied my surroundings; I was in the kitchen at Mindy's. Why? I had gone to bed at home. Then I felt something around my neck, it was a dog collar! What the fuck was happening to me... It had to be Mindy!

I tried to take the collar off, but I could not undo the buckle. I stood up and swore under my breath; I was naked! I made a move for the door to find some clothes and a mirror to get a better look at the damn collar, so I could get it off. It had to be Mindy; I would not have put it past her to have taken me from my bed, stripped me and then put the collar around my neck and left me in Sophia's bed!

I had taken maybe three paces and I was in the middle of the kitchen, when I heard voices; I froze. I felt like the proverbial rabbit in the headlights as Mindy appeared in the kitchen; she looked me up and down and grinned. Next came Anne-Marie, Danny and Stephanie; they all stopped dead and stared at the scene before them. Close behind was a grinning Dave and I noticed that he had something in his hand – a dog leash!

..._...

Anne-Marie, Danny and Stephanie started laughing and pointing at me as I stood there completely naked, except for the damn dog collar.

"Time for your walk, Megan," Dave commented with a sly grin as he walked over to me and casually attached the leash to my collar.

"What?" I exclaimed as the reality of my situation finally took hold and my face exploded with intense embarrassment and humiliation. "You can't... I'm naked... How...?"

"No time for questions, walkies!" Mindy said cheerfully as she took the leash and led me towards the front door.

"No!" I screamed, my panic growing as I considered being taken outside, naked, but everybody just laughed. Danny ran ahead to open the door and a minute later I found myself standing outside in the freezing cold, the front door being pulled shut behind me.

..._...

"Shouldn't she be on all-fours?" Anne-Marie asked as she took the leash from Mindy.

"Yes, she should," Mindy agreed before turning to me and saying sharply, "Megan, down!"

For some strange reason, I found myself complying and there I was being pulled towards the grass by Anne-Marie. I was on my hands and knees, still naked, with my ass sticking up in the air and on a leash. I thought that it could not get any worse.

Then it just got worse!

"Now, Megan, time for you to pee!" Anne-Marie chuckled gleefully. "If you need the other end, you'll have to use the flower-bed."

I was blushing fit to burst, but again, I found myself following commands and squatting down on the grass where much to my disgust...

..._...

I awoke with a jolt – I was in my own room, at home; it had all been a fucking dream or should that be a nightmare. Thanks a bunch, Mindy, for putting that fucking shit in my mind and for giving me a goddamn freaky nightmare!

I struggled to get back to sleep.

Chapter 216*: Would You Believe It

The next day
Tuesday evening

Safehouse F

Megan and I made our way down into Safehouse F, and as she always did, she pressed the button and then entered her personal code – nothing happened for a moment, but just as she was about to try again, the doors opened. Megan just shrugged and we stepped into the elevator where she pressed the 'F' button. The doors opened before she could place her hand on the scanner - now that was out of the ordinary and a little strange! Mindy had suggested that I was going to give my own access; I had a swipe card, but it was not fully functional yet. I looked at Megan and she just grinned at me. We walked down the corridor before turning left and as normal Megan pressed her hand against the scanner beside the armoured door, but nothing happened.

"Not funny!" she yelled out, glaring at the camera.

"Sorry, Megan!"

It was Abby's voice. The door lock released and Megan pulled the door open, stepping into the catchment area. The inner door was released as the outer door finished closing, without any intervention - again out of the ordinary. As I watched, Megan stalked over to the Control Centre and placed, more like smacked, her hand on the scanner pad beside the door. Nothing happened – it just flashed red, instead of the usual green.

"Abby!" She yelled angrily and I saw Abby come to the door.

"I can't let you in, Megan – they're waiting in the Galley for you."

"Galley?"

I looked around and I could see nobody. We both headed up the steel staircase on the left.

"I would suggest that you go and wait in the Briefing Room while I sort this shit out!" Megan suggested and I followed her suggestion, but watching her head down the walkway.

As she approached the closed Galley door, it was unlocked remotely and she pushed the door open, letting it close and lock behind her.

There at a table sat Mindy, Marty, Josh and Chloe. None of them smiled at me.

Looking decidedly unhappy was Curtis, sitting in a chair facing them.

"You ready?" Mindy asked with an evil grin.

"Do your worst!" I replied.

I know I should not have been listening, but...

"What's going on – none of the scanners are working for me?" Megan demanded.

"Me too!" Curtis complained.

"You've both been locked out," Marty said simply in answer to my question.

"Should I be worried?" Megan laughed.

..._...

"Yes, you should," I heard Chloe say without any humour.

"Sit!" Mindy ordered, pointing at a chair facing the four of them.

That was when I realised how badly Mindy had fucked up. Seated in front of her, and looking very pissed off, were four of the top five members of Fusion.

"What is this?" Megan pushed.

"Call it an intervention," Chloe stated.

"Or a fucking bollocking!" Josh added.

"Or just your only chance of wearing a combat suit, again, ever..." Mindy finished. "Both of you."

"So," Marty began. "Where do we start? With the malicious wounding, the unnecessary killings, the putting other operatives at risk..."

"... Or maybe the fucking up of Fusion's reputation!" Mindy finished.

Oh, shit! Megan and Curtis were in deep, deep, crap!

..._...

Marty started things off.

"Over the past week or so – things have gone to shit for the both of you. You have both killed when it was not necessary. Fusion is respected for being restrained; we only kill when required. They also need to deserve it. Muggers are worthless shit, but they do not deserve to die – despite what our guts tell us. Curtis – you cut a fucking guy to pieces – Dave counted them; sixteen chunks! I know you like your sword, but that man should have gone to Jail. You gonna explain?"

"I couldn't control myself; it just seemed like the right thing to do. He won't hurt anybody else."

"Where did you both go to when you were supposed to have been guarding Iron Hide?" Josh demanded.

"It was boring – guarding shit sucks!" Megan admitted without a hint of shame.

"Whose idea was that, then?" Chloe asked.

"We talked it over and we both agreed to go hunting," Curtis said.

"Hunting!" Marty exploded.

"Our mandate is to protect the City – not guard SUVs!" Megan pointed out.

"You do what you are told to do!" Mindy said evenly.

I raised an eyebrow, considering Mindy had not sworn, which I had learnt showed how pissed she was.

"What about threatening Shadow on the roof?" Josh continued.

"That was not my fault – she wound me up and I reacted – I never even knew that she had fallen off the damn roof!" Megan exclaimed. "She should have kept her trap shut and not started complaining..."

"I was trying to help you!" Chloe said angrily.

"Like we need your help!"

"We've been around the block – we can look after ourselves. We discuss our ideas and agree between ourselves before acting," Curtis explained. "We are a team!"

"What the...!" Mindy began angrily.

"Who the fuck suggested you use each other as sounding boards?" Marty inquired.

"Stephanie."

Oh crap – busted!

Yes, I had been trying to help, but I never knew...

A few little errors in judgement and they were going to kick Megan and Curtis out! There was movement in the room and then Megan's voice.

"Let me out!"

A second or two later, the door clicked open.

Safehouse F – Level 2

I was looking down at the mat when Megan appeared, followed by Curtis.

Something was definitely wrong. I put an arm around Megan and led her down to the Briefing Room. By the time we had sat down, Megan was sobbing.

"I've lost everything..."

"Me too," Curtis added as he sat down beside Megan.

I never noticed the change, but less than ten minutes later, Megan stopped crying and she stood up, shrugging my arm off her shoulder.

"You thinkin' what I'm thinkin', Curtis?" She asked.

"Could be!" Curtis replied with a smirk.

I did not like their expressions.

"You – stay here," Megan suggested.

"Huh?" I queried.

"I'll call you when we're done."

..._...

I had absolutely no idea what was going on.

Something was off, though.

Their behaviour was concerning and had been for a while; I would admit that. I had considered telling Mindy, but I had not wanted my friends to get into trouble. Instead, I had offered them advice. In hindsight, maybe I should have gone straight to Mindy, probably!

I heard a raised voice, Abby. Then I heard the foul mouth of Megan. There was some scuffling followed by some swearing from Abby and then silence. I peered over the walkway and I could see Abby, she was lying on the floor of the Command Centre, unconscious.

About thirty seconds later, I heard a klaxon.

Safehouse F – Level 2

'Fuck this!' I thought.

I ran along the walkway and tried to open the door to the Galley. It was locked and I could see Mindy inside shaking her head at me. She pointed to her ear and then she mouthed a single word – 'RUN'... With a brief glance at the others in the Galley, I dived down the steel steps and then down again, to the lower level. I rapidly yanked off the cover to an air vent, dived inside and pulled the cover back into position. I took a moment to take stock of the situation.

Megan and Curtis had gone nuts and taken over the Safehouse, imprisoning Mindy, Marty, Chloe and Josh. I was alone and I wanted no part of it. I also had the chance to prove myself to Mindy and to Chloe. I had figured out for myself that Chloe did not fully trust me; I could not blame her really.

Then I thought about Mindy's signal – her ear – then it clicked and I stuck my hand into the pocket of my jeans and removed a small plastic box. Inside was a small headset that fitted neatly into my right ear. I pressed the button on the end and after a brief burst of static, I could hear Mindy, Marty, Chloe and Josh talking.

I listened for a few minutes, without saying anything.

..._...

"... Before one of those urchins, locked out the database. I was also able to copy that user to the backup datacentre next door, before I severed the link. I was able to sever the link just before next door was compromised, so it's safe. Furthermore, I locked out access to all files that pertain to next door."

"You lost me after about the first three words....," Chloe admitted, sounding confused.

"It means that we can use next door to jump start this place once we regain control!" Marty explained excitedly.

"Why the bloody hell, does he keep going on about 'next door'?" Josh asked, sounding just as confused as Chloe.

"This bunker that we call Safehouse F is actually the second bunker on this site. The original, which we call Safehouse E, is located about a couple hundred yards that away!" Mindy explained. "The Navy built this place and then they abandoned the other one."

"If you say so," Josh conceded.

"The entrance is in the back of Tony's engineering store, only the hatch is massive, and it took both Dave and Marty to lug it open the last time," Mindy added with a grimace.

"Err Mindy, do you trust Stephanie?" Marty asked.

"Yeah – well, to an extent – we talked about it last night...," Mindy paused. "Why?"

"Well – the user I had open was Stephanie – she now has all your access rights!" Marty admitted. "I had no choice – hers was the only user open and while it was open it could not be locked out – until they dumped the database!"

"So, Stephanie, assuming that she is not in league with Bonnie and Clyde out there, she could be our only hope," Josh groaned.

"Looks like it," Chloe replied dubiously.

"You guys having fun in there?" I ventured.

Safehouse F – The Command Centre

I had not intended to hurt Abby, but she should not have fought back.

The stupid girl had pulled out a pistol the moment that I had entered the Control Centre. She had seen me swipe the card, that I was not supposed to carrying. Abby had thought the threat of the pistol would be enough, but I had known that she would not shoot me – not sweet Megan Wilson!

Disarming her had been easy, but she had kicked out at Curtis sending him into the glass wall, hurting him. That had made me angry, so I had put her down, hard. We had both then taped her hands and feet with duct tape.

"You will not get away with this – she'll fucking gut you both!"

"Abigail – shut up before we gag you!" I growled. "Curtis, go get our combat suits."

I pressed the keys on the keyboard to release the doors for the armoury and Curtis ran out.

Safehouse F – The Galley

"Finally! Speak of the devil and she shall appear!" Mindy chuckled.

"Sorry – you weren't all that specific with your orders, oh great leader!"

"Cocky bitch!"

"Well – what are we gonna do about Neo and Trinity who seem to be existing in their own virtual world?" I asked.

I laughed at the reference!

"That is where you come in..."

I groaned.

"I feel like I've just been called up!"

"Your mission, should you choose to accept it..."

I think Mindy must have heard my eyes rolling!

"Sorry – you need to take a walk up to my bedroom on Level 2. You will be safe in there; the room is armoured."

"I can do that – I think..."

"You got your swipe card?" I asked.

"It's in my pocket..."

Safehouse F – Level 0

I reluctantly crawled out of the ventilation space and crept towards the steel steps.

There were no sounds; which was ominous. I went up, one-step at a time before peering out onto the next level. I saw nobody, so crept up the steps, but then I froze and ducked down as I saw Curtis appear from the armoury with a combat suit in his arms; he was wearing most of his already. He vanished into the Command Centre, so I jumped up quickly, running towards the other steps that would take me to Level 2.

I heard feet pounding behind me and looked over my shoulder to see Megan running towards me, a yellow Taser in her hand and she triggered it off, but I dived and rolled before running up the steps; the Taser missed. I was able to dive into the bedroom and slam the door before Megan caught up with me – I triggered the deadlock and slid to the floor, out of breath and livid.

I could not believe that my best friend and my fucking partner had just fired on me with a fucking Taser!

Safehouse F – The Galley

"She made it, but Megan is pissed!"

"Don't worry, Megan has no idea about next door, so she will think that Stephanie has trapped herself and she will ignore her; I hope!"

"Okay – our Mini-Brit will need to use the air vents..."

"She should fit; she's skinny and has no tits!" Chloe suggested with a laugh.

"I can still hear you!" I growled.

"Err, I meant that she has a compact body form...", Chloe added quickly.

"You and I are going to explore the famous British self-restraint when we next meet..." I growled to Chloe.

"Get your butt into that air vent, above the bed and think small!" Mindy suggested.

I hoped they all enjoyed my vile swearing that Mindy's comment generated!

Safehouse F – Dave and Mindy's Bedroom

I looked up at the air vent.

It was small and located high up.

"Who the bloody hell do they think I am – Spider Girl?"

"Go spidey!" I heard Mindy laugh.

"If you have nothing better to say Hit Girl then shut the fuck up!"

"Sorry!" A chastened Mindy replied.

Safehouse E/F – Ventilation System

Damn it!

I had had to strip down to my knickers just to fit into the goddamn vent and what that gooey stuff was I just slid over, I had no idea! Great, Stephanie – you are crawling through air ducts, almost naked, dozens of feet underground. Oh well, it could only get better!

"Oh, yeah," Mindy said in my ear. "Almost forgot, you need to watch out for the 'anti-Skinny-Brit traps' in the vents – sorry!"

I paused and glared back in the vague direction of Mindy.

"We are going to have a long talk when I get out of here – just you, me and a very big stick!"

..._...

I crawled further into the ventilation system. I had the access card gripped tightly in my left hand and my mobile in my right, using the torch to see where I was going. The ventilation duct was cold underneath my bare skin, as was the air that ran through the duct; I was starting to shiver. After crawling what felt like miles, I saw something ahead of me and I slowed down. Then I studied the object attached to the side of the duct.

"Fuck you, Mindy!" I yelled.

"You found something, kid?"

I studied the device. There was a box, about six-inches by eight-inches attached to the air duct. Extending from the box were a pair of wires that attached to the opposite side of the duct – trip wires.

"What do I do to get past it?"

"Good question..."

"What?" I exclaimed.

"Marty says there is a keypad, enter the code: four – six – two – nine – seven, and then press the green key..."

I studied the device in vain.

"I don't see no bloody keypad!"

"Oh, that'll be one of the decoy ones!" Mindy exclaimed.

"Thanks a damn bunch, bitch!" I exclaimed with relief, unclipping the trip wires and proceeding onwards.

..._...

There had been two real devices to be disarmed as I had made my steady crawl through the air vents, but they had both had a keypad and I was able to disarm them – I hated explosives.

I was nearing the end when I suddenly stopped as I felt something snagging on my knickers. I reached backwards, but I was unable to sort out the problem. I tried to move backwards, but that just gave me a chronic wedgie, so I reluctantly crawled forwards again allowing them to slide down my legs, leaving them behind in the vent.

Just when I thought my situation could not get any worse!

Chapter 217: Safehouse E

Tuesday evening

Safehouse E
Level 4

"Fucking ouch!"

I dropped to the floor from the air vent.

"You okay?" Mindy called.

"Like you give a bloody shit! I think I scratched my backside."

"Are you in?"

"Yeah, uncaring bitch, I'm in!"

"We'll check your butt later – mission first!"

"Okay, okay!" I grumbled as I took in my surroundings. "You got lights in Hit Girl's fun house?"

"Find a card swipe and swipe your card – Marty says!"

"Great, just fucking great! I'm fumbling my naked backside around a dark and very smelly bunker!"

"Did you say, 'naked'?" Mindy demanded. "I thought you had knickers on?"

Shit!

"They got caught on something in the vent and I had to err, abandon them!"

Fuck me if I was not blushing and the laughter in my ear did not help!

..._...

"Ha!" I yelled as I swiped the access card and lights began to come on all around me.

Thanks to the lights, I now felt very exposed in the long concrete corridor. I also felt very cold all of a sudden, as the heating was most definitely not on!

"It is fucking freezing in here!" I complained.

"I would suggest you head for the armoury and stores then, and get your bare butt dressed," Mindy suggested.

"Unless you enjoy running around butt naked!"

"Funny slapper!"

..._...

I ran down the corridor, my bare feet echoing on the cold concrete. I suddenly skidded to a halt as I saw a sign on a large steel door: STORES. I swiped the access card through the reader and the door lock released.

"Awesome!" I exclaimed – imitating Chloe's accent.

"You should find something close to your size on the right," Mindy advised.

Ten minutes later, I had pulled on a black t-shirt, black joggers and some trainers. I left the stores and made my way further down the corridor before stopping outside a large steel door: ARMOURY. Again, I swiped the card and the door released.

"Fuck me..." The door was fucking heavy!

"No thanks!" Mindy quipped.

"You remember what I said earlier, Yank? Shut it, before I come over there and fucking shut it for you!"

"Bitch with attitude – cool!" Mindy laughed then got serious. "I promise to shut up now."

"Like that's ever gonna happen!" I heard Chloe laugh, followed by a slapping sound and a, "Fucking ouch!"

"You do that, Mindy – 'cause you gonna pay, purple bitch!"

..._...

I entered the armoury. Wow! There must have been a thousand firearms in there.

"Which war is all this for?" I quipped.

Mindy did not reply.

I pulled out the smallest vest I could find and started adding weapons. Once I had loaded myself up, I headed out into the corridor again.

"Where next?" I asked.

Mindy did not reply.

"Mindy, you there?"

I was alone.

Glenview

"Echo?" I queried as I read the display on my cell.

Why was I receiving a call from Safehouse E? Oh yeah – Mindy!

"Dave, its Stephanie and things suck!"

Stephanie sounded a bit stressed and worried.

"What is it Stephanie?" I asked seriously.

"Megan and Curtis have gone rogue and taken over the Safehouse – I escaped and Mindy sent me to a nearby bunker. However, I've lost all communication with Mindy... Please help me."

Stephanie sounded very worried and a little scared.

"Hang in there, Stephanie; I'm on my way."

I hung up the phone and called Cathy, followed by Hailee and Erika.

Safehouse D

Fifty minutes after Stephanie's call, we were gearing up.

No combat suits, just body armour and non-deadly weaponry, such as Tasers. I sent Cathy to the entrance of Safehouse F, while I took Hailee and Erika towards the entrance of Safehouse E.

"Are we about to enter another one of HG's fun palaces?" Hailee asked with a little apprehension.

"Err, yeah!" I replied.

"Any chance we're going to live through this?" Erika added.

"Hey, it's Mindy!"

"Yeah, that's what worries me!" Hailee grimaced.

I laughed and continued towards a building that looked like it was a garage or a workshop. Both Hailee and Erika looked dubious about entering, but I just grabbed them both by the arm and shoved them through the door I had just opened.

It was different!

I looked at Dave and then Erika. We were in a smartly laid out workshop. In the centre of which was a 1982 Pontiac Trans-Am in gloss black. Okay, I was a fan!

"Ignore that – Tony has a fetish with it and Mindy is funding it!" Dave commented as he headed for the pit beneath the car and headed down some concrete steps.

There in the floor was a large steel hatch. Dave pulled open a small steel door in the side of the pit that was almost invisible amongst the oil, grease and grime. Inside, was a keypad – Dave punched in an eight-digit code.

The hatch motored open slowly, revealing a cavernous black opening.

"Here we go!" I growled.

An hour and a half earlier

Safehouse E Level 4

I decided that heading up would be my best option.

The place was still cold, despite my clothes, so I started jogging which wasn't easy with the weapons I had added. I found a door that led to some steel stairs. I swiped the card, releasing the door. The stairs vanished upwards and downwards. I noticed a sign: 'CIC'. It pointed up, so up I went.

On the next level was another corridor, but not as long as that on the level below. I had heard nothing over my ear-piece for quite a while, which worried me. What might Boris and Natasha be up to in the other Safehouse?

Wow, my life was going in some strange directions! I stopped in front of a large steel door and swiped my trusty swipe card...

"Oh, wow!"

I could not help myself; I was in awe at what lay before me. The room was enormous and spanned two levels. I was on the top level and I could see down onto several computer consoles. The equipment was old, in most cases, and there was a lot of dust! The place must have been cool when it was in operation waaaay back before I was born. Over in one corner, something was different, the equipment was newer. I ran down a set of steel steps and over to the corner.

..._...

There were several very modern computers and some large flat-screen displays. Marty had been there. I also found a modern phone – all the others in the facility that I had discovered were old and dead. I tentatively picked up the receiver and held it to my ear...

A dial tone!

I quickly got Dave's mobile number from my own mobile and dialled.

Safehouse D Level 1

"So where is she?"

"I don't know, Erika, but I think the only working phone is in the CIC on Level 3."

"This place stinks!" Hailee moaned, wrinkling her nose.

"Sorry, Petra; I should have cleaned before we came!" I growled back and received a nasty glare in return.

We pressed on, passing several closed doors as we followed the concrete corridors.

"The décor sucks," Hailee commented.

"Are you gonna moan the whole freakin' way?" Erika complained.

"Hey, bitches – you can make out later – let's just find Steph, okay?"

"Not a bad idea..." Erika grinned.

"One track mind her!" Hailee laughed.

A few minutes later I found what we were looking for.

"Here we are, stairs heading down..."

We went down two levels, coming out onto Level 3. After a short corridor we found a steel door. I swiped my access card, but nothing happened. I punched in an override code and the door opened. The lights were on, but otherwise there was no sounds of movement. I brought up my weapon and we all moved forwards in silence.

I caught three flashes off to my right and then felt three painful impacts on my body armour which pushed me backwards.

Then there was movement.

"Whoops!" Stephanie announced as she revealed herself.

The Glock 23 pistol was held in both hands and now pointed at the floor.

"Sorry, Dave – I just reacted!" The embarrassed girl apologised.

"Are you alright?" I asked, ignoring the pain from the bullets. The girl looked very frightened.

"This place gives me the creeps!"

One hundred feet beneath Chicago

We had left the CIC and we had made our way to the entrance of Safehouse F.

There was an enormous steel door, that took all four of us to open. After a short walk and some interesting booby-traps, we found another, identical, door. We edged it open just enough for us all to get through. We came out into the engineering store. We prepared ourselves and then ran out of the store, into the Safehouse.

I was steeled for a fight, however, my mouth just dropped to the floor at the sight before me. Arrayed on the mat beyond the glass shield were quite a few people. Mindy, Marty, Abby, Josh, Chloe, Cathy and the two Fusion 'Most Wanted' were standing out in front!

As I walked through the open gate in the glass shield, everybody started clapping. I turned to see a smiling Dave, with Erika and Hailee on either side; both were clapping and smiling at me.

Then it fucking clicked!

"It was all a fucking put up job!" I exclaimed, my anger rising steadily.

"Some of it," Megan exclaimed. "The grilling was mostly real – we were both in shit and the tears were real too. Mindy forced us to trick you into thinking we had taken over the Safehouse. Which, by the way, we would never do..."

Period!"

"Anyway, you fucking passed, you bitch!" Mindy said with a big smile and my anger faded – slightly.

"Despite being forced to crawl through ventilation ducts and Safehouses naked and dodging bombs, I can see why you put me through that... I'm just glad the bombs were not real!"

Mindy looked a little sheepish.

"Oh, the bombs were very real!"

"What!" I yelled out. "You used real fucking bombs for training? What sort of fucked-up psycho would do that?"

"Yeah..." Mindy began without a hint of shame.

"You get used to it, Steph!" Dave admitted with a grimace.

I just scowled before I then turned to Chloe.

"I still haven't forgotten about us having a little girl to girl chat, Chloe..."

Chloe grinned.

"I'm looking forward to it, immensely, dear Stephanie!" She replied in a good attempt at a British accent.

Then I turned back to Megan and Curtis.

"I'll talk to you two, later and it won't be pretty!"

I turned to the grinning bitch.

"Now, Mindy – if I am not mistaken, you and me have an appointment with a very big stick..."

I grabbed hold of Mindy's blouse and dragged her towards the armoury.

"Dave, you gonna save your wife from mortal danger?" Mindy grinned.

"Nah, you're on your own!" Dave laughed.

"Hit her hard, Steph – she deserves it!" Chloe yelled after Mindy.

The next afternoon

Safehouse F

"Please tell me that this is not another crazy test?"

"No, Steph, you are safe from any of my bombs!" Mindy grinned.

I scowled at Mindy's attempt at humour.

"Steph, we have a surprise for you," Mindy said carefully. "I am entrusting you to Megan; she will sort you out."

Megan grabbed hold of me by the hand and almost dragged me up the steel stairs and into one of the bedrooms.

"Strip!" She ordered the moment she had closed and locked the door.

"Come again?"

"Get your clothes off..."

"Hey, Megan – we may be a team and you're a nice girl; I like you. Okay, you did try to fuck me yesterday, but I am not a bloody lesbian..."

Megan laughed.

"Well, neither am I; I leave the pussy munching to others – so get stripped... Your new combat suit awaits..."

"Oh!" I exclaimed sheepishly and started pulling off my clothes as Megan whipped a sheet off the bed, revealing an array of multi-coloured body armour.

"I would advise you to just wear your knickers and a thin t-shirt under the suit," Megan suggested, then she smirked. "A sports bra too, once you get tits!"

I scowled and considered slapping her, but I decided to let it slide.

..._...

First, I pulled on the padded undersuit which consisted of two parts. The jacket, which zipped up the front, was a dark royal blue in colour and actually very appealing. The trousers were a deep royal red, which I liked too.

"The undersuit is bullet and stab resistant to Type IIA Standards..." Megan monologued as I changed.

Next, I was handed sections of contoured modular body armour. The armour sections were in the same red and blue as the undersuit and clipped onto the undersuit and together to form a semi-rigid Type IIIA armour that protected the important parts of my body. I was surprised at how light it was – it was still heavy, but I would be able to manage it.

"... The armour is like mine and ultra-flexible to allow for maximum agility when in combat..."

Embossed onto the chest plate was a large gold symbol, Ψ , much like a trident. Megan saw me looking down at it, upside down.

"... The Greek letter 'Psi' – it denotes psychology..."

"Nice!" I commented approvingly.

Megan then handed me a pair of red boots that came up my legs and connected with the armour on my thighs. The boots had stab-resistant soles and were amazingly light and comfortable to wear. In the top of each boot was a slot, although I had absolutely no idea what the slot was for.

"Try this..."

I took the gold-coloured utility belt and with Megan's help attached it to the top and bottom halves of the combat suit. On each side was an empty pistol holster and around the back, pouches for other equipment which included a section for the communications equipment. Attached to the belt was a short, deep royal red, skirt which went as far as midway down my thighs.

"Now to cover your face, your very distinctive hair and that cute little Brit accent..."

I scowled at Megan as she grinned back. I was handed what looked like wig, well actually a brunette, shoulder-length wig, only the wig was attached to a mask. Megan took hold of my ponytail and with the help of some hairclips, secured it up and out of the way. I pulled the mask and wig over my head. The inside of the wig was padded and very similar to the mask that Megan wore. I realised that beneath the hair was armour to protect my head. What was visible under the hair, was blue. The mask protected the sides of my face, back of the neck and covered the area around my eyes and down the bridge of my nose. My forehead, and jaw were still visible.

As I was changing, I watched my metamorphosis in a mirror – each step was awesome to watch. Megan took the fingers of my right hand and moved them to my mask and under one side where I could feel three buttons.

"The first, here, enables the comms, the second enables the voice alteration technology and the third activates the anti-lift tech..."

After pressing each button in turn, Megan picked up a handheld radio.

"Psyche, this is Wildcat, over..."

In my mask I could hear Megan's voice quite clearly. She pointed to the left of my chest and I pressed my hand there.

"Receiving, over..." I responded, letting go of the Push-To-Talk button.

I heard my own voice coming out of Megan's radio, but an electronic sounding voice was heard in the room. Megan saw my smile.

"Cool, huh!"

"Awesome!"

Megan showed me how to activate the hands-free or VOX mode on the communications equipment and then she handed me a pair of dark royal red gauntlets which extended up my forearms and joined with the armour a few inches below my elbow.

"Those gauntlets will protect you from knives and other blades. You have built in knuckle-dusters and they are weighted to improve your punch – we can ditch those as you get bigger. Your fist will also be protected when you pound somebody, or something."

The final item, which I thought was bloody awesome, was a plain cape, the same colour as my skirt. The material was strange, but light and fluid.

"Bullet resistant and fire-proof, among other things..." Megan explained as she attached it to my collar.

The cape came down as far as the backs of my knees.

"Okay, Psyche – Armoury!"

..._...

Megan led me out of the bedroom and down to the Armoury where I found Mindy and Josh. I felt shy and I blushed as they checked out my new combat suit.

"Way to go, Psyche!" Josh said approvingly.

"Her face almost matches her cape!" Mindy laughed.

"Funny!" I growled, hearing the same electronic voice again.

"Nice voice, too – very manly!" Josh quipped.

"Can I hit him?" I asked Mindy.

"Later..." Mindy replied as she led me over to the main, central, table. Mindy began indicating items. "Your weapons – a pair of Heckler & Koch P30SK nine-millimetre pistols and six magazines – two for the pistols and two spares for each pistol; ten-rounds per magazine. Suppressor for each, plus combined flashlight and laser sight. Two throwing knives – a combat knife and a pair of custom Sais."

Josh helped me load up: the loaded pistols into the holsters, the spare magazines into their pouches on my utility belt, the knives into slots on the same belt. The Sais latched into the slots in the top of each boot.

I felt a little weighed down, once I was done!

Chapter 218*: Psyche Mk 2

*Tuesday evening
Thirty minutes later*

Safehouse F

"Psyche, put any apprehension behind you and lay into the bitch – she deserves everything that she gets!" Mindy said seriously.

"Gee, thanks, Hit Girl!" Wildcat growled as she paced from side to side, flexing her hands.

"Stop winging Kitty Kat!" Josh laughed from the walkway that ran over the mat.

Wildcat muttered something vile and started to move towards Psyche. Two minutes later, Psyche was on the mat, face down, for the second time. Both put downs had been hard, too, so the girl must have been hurting. I pulled Psyche back to her feet and looked directly into her eyes. I could see pain and worry.

"What's wrong?"

"I don't want to do it, I mean I do, but I can't... She's my partner..."

"Get angry, like you did with me – dig deep for something that makes you angry. Look into your past, seize hold of something or somebody when something bad happened to you. Use the anger from that moment, or the fear. Bring it forwards and then before it consumes you, turn it around and turn it into hate. Use that hate and focus it against your target."

I saw the girl's eyes go dark and focused.

"Go get the bitch!"

Wildcat was not expecting the wild attack which put her down hard enough to make her scream in both surprise and pain. Psyche had turned away from me, her body language had changed and she had grabbed up a four-foot training Jo. With it, she had pounded on Wildcat, and all the older vigilante could do was use her gauntlets to protect her head, which seemed to be Psyche's target. Wildcat managed to deploy her claws and flip the Jo out of Psyche's hands. Psyche was not phased for a moment as she punched Wildcat hard in the chest.

"Fucking bitch!" Wildcat yelled out in pain. "That was my fucking tit!"

"Poor little kitty!" Psyche growled.

The younger girl was not holding back as she laid into Wildcat. She punched and she kicked – using all that she had learned to that point. Wildcat was holding back, just a bit, which was good, but Psyche was not. At one stage she managed to get Wildcat into a headlock. Rather than let Wildcat's neck be broken, I intervened, kicking Psyche off to one side. I was not wearing any protective suit, but I knew that my skills would protect me. I picked up the Jo and faced off against Psyche. She was raging. Wildcat was back on her feet and I waved her off.

Psyche could move well, which impressed me, yet again. She was light on her feet, despite the extra armour and weapons. She used her gauntlets to fend off the Jo. Within two minutes I had beaten the younger girl down. She lay on the mat, breathing heavily. What skin I could see was soaked in sweat. I dropped the Jo, kneeling down beside the girl where I rolled her onto her side and gently eased off her mask.

"Water!" I ordered, clicking my fingers and Josh appeared, an ice cold bottle in his hand.

I gently eased Stephanie to a sitting position and held the bottle to her lips.

"Small sips only..."

Stephanie was soaked and exhausted. After she had taken a couple of sips of water, she lay back on the mat unable to move. I waved and Josh picked up Stephanie and carried her upstairs.

"Megan, get changed – Josh and I'll sort out Stephanie."

Later that night

Glenview

When I awoke, I was in my own bed at home.

I looked around me and I saw a grinning Anne-Marie sitting cross-legged on her bed a few feet away.

"So, you're awake," she said.

"How long have I been here?"

"About four hours – Mindy brought you home with Josh and they put you to bed. They said that you had overdone it at D-JAK – idiot!"

I smiled weakly.

"Something like that, yeah..."

"Plus you stink!"

"Great!" I laughed, noticing that I was all sweaty and clammy. "Thanks Anne-Marie – I love you too!"

I threw back the duvet and climbed out of bed. I felt a little weak as I pulled off my t-shirt and knickers before heading for the shower.

Two days later

Thursday evening

Safehouse F

"Can I have your attention, please!"

Everybody stopped milling about the mat and looked up at me on the walkway.

"Please welcome the newest member of Fusion: Psyche!"

There were cheers and applause as the red and blue clad Psyche came out of the armoury with Wildcat and Trojan on either side of her. The poor girl looked incredibly embarrassed, but everybody gathered around her and took a chance to examine her new combat suit and weapons.

Stephanie was a very popular girl and everybody liked her.

That same evening

Safehouse D

I had given Josh and Chloe a challenge.

They had both needed new motorcycles for their vigilante personas, for winter, as they had both lost theirs in Gotham. I had suggested that they research and pick machines for themselves. Erika also decided that she needed a winter machine too, so I gave her the same challenge.

Once they had purchased their machines, they were to be sent to Gotham and Wayne Enterprises for some updating. I would have no idea what they had bought, however, Fox would give me a thumbs up or a thumbs down when he received the machines. I was annoyed when I received an email from him: 'Three thumbs up!' I was hoping they would flunk, but no – maybe they were learning! Dave just told me to have faith in my protégés.

..._...

The day finally arrived when the five of us arrived at Safehouse D to examine the container that had been delivered from Gotham. After checking the security seals, Dave unlocked and pulled open the doors of the container. He then went in to unstrap the first motorcycle.

"Mist – your ride!" Dave prompted.

Erika moved forwards full of excitement as her Yamaha Super Tenere in black and light blue, with the licence plate 'MIST', was wheeled out of the container.

"Very nice choice, Erika – you have my respect as always," I said with a grin that had Erika blushing.

"Shadow!" Dave called out as he wheeled out another machine.

"Oh, wow!" I exclaimed as my mouth dropped open.

The Suzuki V-Strom 1000 ABS motorcycle was beautiful in its navy blue livery, right down to the licence plate: 'SHADOW'.

"Damn, Chloe, fucking well done!"

"You sound surprised, bitch!" Chloe commented with a grin.

"When you actually use your brain, you do well!" I retorted.

Chloe laughed.

"Jackal, you British rat!" Dave called next.

"Oh, well done – a very nice machine and not a surprise now I think about it!"

The tan coloured motorcycle with the licence plate 'JACKAL' was from the British manufacturer, Triumph. The Tiger 800 ABS was a good strong machine and I was impressed. All three machines were fitted with Continental TKC-80 Twinduro tyres, ready for winter.

The plan had been an outrageous success – but then what would you expect from Hit Girl?

All my plans worked – well most of them...

Friday evening

Glennview

My life was complete, apparently.

It had been ten weeks since Daddy had died and we had left Gotham for the first and the last time. So much had happened to us in less than three months. Danny and I actually sat down to take stock.

"We have a beautiful house," I began.

"With an indoor pool!" Danny added.

"We have our own bedrooms..."

"I don't have to put up with you farting all night!" Danny chuckled.

"What about your snoring?" I replied with a scowl.

"We have a dog..."

"Who's 'up the duff', as Stephanie calls it..." I laughed.

"That's another thing – we have Megan and Stephanie. Both are really good friends, although they are both very strange..."

"I have to agree with you there, Danny."

"Daddy always used to worry about money and buying food, but we have never wanted for anything..."

"We have the most perfect Mom and Dad, now."

"I still miss Daddy..."

"We always will, Danny... But now we have Dave and Mindy and they love us."

"If it weren't for them..."

"I have nightmares that nobody came to rescue us..."

"I do, too. I hate them, but I suppose there's no way to avoid them."

"We've learnt to ride quad-bikes!"

"Yeah, I love them – the speed!"

"The speed... You're always coming off your quad 'cause you ride too fast," Danny chuckled.

"You ride like an old granny!" I replied, sticking my tongue out at my brother.

"Do you ever think that there's something that Dave and Mindy are not telling us?"

"They're adults. Adults have secrets. I trust them both, so if there is something that they are hiding from us, it's for our own good."

"Okay, that's fair."

"What else – oh, yes, I can kick your ass!" I grinned.

"You cannot – I'm better than you!"

"Are not!"

"Am too..."

What the hell was going on upstairs?

I headed up the stairs and heard a scream of pain – it was Anne-Marie...

"Ha – told you I was better!" Danny exclaimed happily.

I peered in the bedroom door just in time to see Anne-Marie kick her brother's feet out from under him.

"What do you two think you are doing?" I bellowed and both seven-year-olds froze.

Neither said a word as they turned to face me. Both knew that they were in big trouble.

"Well? I'm waiting for an answer!"

"She started it..."

"I did not..."

"Did..."

"Did not..."

"Did too..."

"Stop!" I said sharply making both kids jump. "What have you been told about sparring outside D-JAK?"

There was some muttering.

"Speak up!"

"Never spar outside the Dojang," both replied.

"It is one week before Christmas, should I ground you till after Christmas Day?"

"No, please Dad..."

"Those puppy dog eyes are not going to work on me, girl – your Mom's been trying those on me for many years and they never worked for her, either..."

"They did too!"

I turned to see my wife grinning at me, trying on her own puppy dog eyes.

"So adorable – a bit like a rabid Rottweiler that wants to rip somebody's throat out!" I quipped with a chuckle.

"Where did I go wrong with him? I used to be able to scare him half to death with a mere glance!" Mindy muttered quietly.

"You're such a softy!" I teased.

Mindy ignored me and went over to our daughter where she roughly took hold of her head and checked out the bloody nose.

"No permanent damage! Bed both of you – now..."

"But it's only..." Danny began.

One glare from Mindy and he fled to his room. Anne-Marie stamped the floor with her foot and headed over to the bathroom. I grinned at Mindy.

"You used to stamp your foot like that, too – so cute!" I laughed.

Mindy did not reply – she just stalked off downstairs.

I knew that Danny and Anne-Marie were in trouble – again!

Mindy had given me a ton of homework which had taken me two hours to finish. Mindy could be a real bitch! I had to catch up so that I could start at school in January – I hated school and had not attended one for almost two years.

Once I had finished I was exhausted. I was still a little sore from Tuesday, but most of the bruises were fading well. I said goodnight to Dave and Mindy before I headed upstairs. Dave was still winding up Mindy – how he had the temerity to do that, I had no idea! When I got to our bedroom, I found that Anne-Marie was still awake and sulking. I grinned when I saw her scowling face peeping out from under the duvet. She glowered at me as I got undressed for bed.

"If you're gonna break the rules, make sure you don't get caught..."

I saw Anne-Marie's mouth moving, but I never heard the words of her reply!

West Columbia

I was so excited!

It was happening. In the space of a little over a year all my dreams had come true. I was getting a Dad and I was getting a big sister. It had also occurred to me that I was going to be gaining a niece and a nephew, too. Oh wow, that was going to make me an Auntie – at eleven-years-old!

I was getting too giddy for Mom and Marcus, so they had sent me to bed early.

Oh, I was going to so enjoy Saturday morning.

Chapter 219*: Wedding Bells

That weekend
Saturday morning

I was actually getting used to wearing revealing dresses.

That had surprised me, almost as much as it did everybody else! It was a wedding, only this time I was the Maid of Honour. Megan was a bridesmaid, as was Chloe. This was to be very low key, compared to my own affair.

There had been a time when makeup and jewellery had meant nothing to me – except maybe for the odd necklace that could double as a garrotte! Now my tastes seemed to have matured, just as I had.

A far cry from what I used to be, when Dave had first met me.

I was so proud of what Mindy had become.

She had matured into an amazingly beautiful young woman who captured the eyes of men, and some women, everywhere she went. When she was fifteen, the thought of showing any skin willingly was almost abhorrent; now though, she seemed to enjoy wearing beautiful dresses.

Yes, she had worn a short dress for a date, all those years ago, but I had insisted! Normally Mindy was only ever seen in jeans, jogging pants, maybe shorts, or a combat suit! She had a lovely body and I was glad that she now had an opportunity to show it off.

She was the image of her mother, Kathleen. Kathleen had loved showing off her body; that had been what had attracted Damon to her. She liked to tease, but she had the goods and men fell over themselves to please her. Mindy had inherited her Mother's beauty – all of it, right down to the eyes and the long legs.

Mindy even managed to look beautiful in a damned combat suit!

I was very nervous.

This was going to be husband number two. I missed Ray, but he was a part of my old life; I had a new life with my daughter. It had been a little over a year since Megan had brought home Hit Girl to our rancid apartment – end of October; I would never forget it. I was at my wits end trying to support the then ten-year-old girl.

Now I had new friends, yes my Boss turned out to be a vicious, no holds barred, murderous vigilante, but I had met that vigilante's father and... That had been just the previous Christmas when Marcus and I had kind of come together. At that point I had no idea what his daughter did for a living! Then it had all gone public...

We had been kissing in the kitchen when in had come Megan and Mindy.

"Mom!"

"Marcus!"

"What!" Marcus had responded, sounding annoyed, as he had removed his lips from mine.

"I'm in enough fucking pain!" Mindy had growled angrily and stormed out of the kitchen, dragging my appalled daughter with her!

As I stood with Marcus I felt so happy; my life was finally complete and back on track. I was gaining a fabulous eighteen-year-old daughter, who just happened to be one of the world's top assassins. I think it will be Marcus who gets the short end of the deal; he gets Megan! One not so good thought was that I would become a grandmother to two little terrors – a grandmother at thirty-three!

I barely heard the vows.

I was buried in my thoughts. I was overjoyed for Marcus; all I had ever wanted was for him to be happy and now he was. I was also gaining a little sister – a wild girl, not all that different from myself, I had to admit.

I looked down at the eleven-year-old girl; she was struggling to contain her emotions. I took hold of her hand and gently squeezed it, showing her I was there for her. She smiled up at me in a silent thank you.

As the marriage was completed, I also realised with a start that for the first time in my life, I actually had a Mom...

..._...

"Congratulations, Mom!" I grinned, hugging Paige.

"I'm far too young to have a daughter your age..."

"Who cares. I'm just so happy to have gained a Mom and a Sister."

"You serious about the Sister part?" Paige chuckled.

"She's grown on me!" I replied.

"I love you too, sis!" Megan chimed in with her usual shit-eating grin as she tried to hug both me and our Mom.

"Daughters from hell!" Marcus grimaced.

"I suppose congratulations are in order, Dad!" Megan said as she hugged Marcus.

"She does have a cute side – but just like the moon has a dark side; we never actually see it!" Marcus deadpanned.

Megan smiled sweetly.

"Hi, Megan, you look really nice."

"Thanks, Steph, so do you," Megan replied, before looking a little concerned. "I hope I didn't hurt you the other day..."

"Nah, I'm tougher than I look; I was just exhausted and you put up a good fight. I'm sorry for taunting you."

"Hey, I'm a big girl, I can take some abuse – I get it all the time from everybody!"

"We're good then?" I asked tentatively.

"Always, Steph!" Megan replied, giving me a hug.

"Very sweet!" Josh commented with a grin as he walked past.

We both scowled at him.

"Us girls need to stick together!" Megan growled.

"Congratulations, Captain!"

"Thank you, Lieutenant!" Marcus laughed. "Seriously, thanks, Hank..."

"Finally, you've made an honest woman out of Paige!" Trudy Platt said cheerfully.

"An honest woman?" Paige hinted suggestively. "Oh, I hope not!"

"You go girl!" Erin laughed.

"Respect, Marcus!" A grinning Alvin said shaking Marcus' hand.

"Can we call you Grandma now?"

"If you have to!" Grandma Paige replied, a little reluctantly.

I looked at Danny and smiled. We had never had grandparents before. It was yet another new experience that we had discovered since moving to Chicago. I was in another really pretty dress, which I loved – dressing up was fun. Danny did not like dressing up, but he endured it without complaining.

"How're my little granddaughter and grandson doing?" Grandpa Marcus asked with a smile.

"Being perfect little angels!" I replied grinning back.

"Somehow I doubt that!"

"I have to agree with you there, Marcus!" Mom said, sticking her tongue out at me.

I scowled back and stuck my own tongue out in return.

After the ceremony we moved onto a fancy restaurant for an early dinner and then for some fun going into the night.

The meal was fun and enormous. It was good to have time to chat with my friends and just relax. I saw Voight whispering something to Kim and her mouth dropped open in surprise. Kim and Marty were next to get married, only they had yet to confirm a date.

As I looked around the room, everybody was laughing and smiling, enjoying the evening. It was what everybody needed – to let their hair down, figuratively speaking of course, and enjoy themselves. There had been too much pain and trouble in the City. I was so looking forward to a peaceful Christmas and, I hoped, a very happy New Year!

Marcus was so happy; happier than he had been for a long, long time. The man had struggled when Paige had been shot – we all had, but Marcus had been beside himself with worry and I had really felt for him.

Finally, it was time for fun and games...

The 'daughters from hell' began the entertainment.

"Oh God no!" Marcus moaned as we both climbed onto the stage and grabbed a microphone each.

"This is for our Mom and Dad..." I announced.

Megan began with the opening verse:

*I come home in the morning light
My mother says when you gonna live your life right
Oh mother dear we're not the fortunate ones
And girls they want to have fun
Oh girls just want to have fun*

Then it was my turn:

*The phone rings in the middle of the night
My father yells what you gonna do with your life
Oh daddy dear you know you're still number one
But girls they want to have fun
Oh girls just want to have*

And together:

*That's all they really want
Some fun
When the working day is done
Girls – they want to have fun
Oh girls just want to have fun

Some boys take a beautiful girl*

*And hide her away from the rest of the world
I want to be the one to walk in the sun
Oh girls they want to have fun
Oh girls just want to have*

*That's all they really want
Some fun
When the working day is done
Girls – they want to have fun
Oh girls just want to have fun,
They want to have fun,
They want to have fun...*

Everybody was laughing and singing along to the last verse. Marcus just grimaced, though, while Paige loved it! We both stepped down and allowed Chloe and Stephanie to take their turn with a surprise rendition of 'I'm So Excited' by the Pointer Sisters. For a small girl, Stephanie had a fair set of lungs!

Then Paige surprised the hell out of everybody, including Marcus, by climbing up on the stage with Kim. Despite being four and a half months pregnant, Paige was still very able. Together they sang an unexpected tune: 'Man! I feel like a woman' by Shania Twain.

We all took a break and enjoyed each other's company. It was a very special night. Considering the time of year, we also decided to dance to some songs to mark that time of year. That brought everybody out, including our friends from the 21st District.

At the end of the evening Dave and I were joined by Marcus and Paige.

"Dave, Mindy – we have an enormous favour to ask..." Paige said as she stood next to Marcus.

"No problem – what can we do?" I asked enthusiastically.

"Well, we're gonna be out of town for a few days, so we wondered if you could look after our little monster, err, girl," Marcus finished without a hint of shame.

Megan appeared and caught the last few words; she scowled and I smirked down at my, not so little, sister who scowled back.

"I can't believe that I'm being treated like an unwanted pet!" Megan moaned.

"We'll feed her and she can always sleep with Sophia!" Dave commented facetiously.

"I get no goddamn respect around here!" Megan growled heading off to join the others kids.

I laughed as Megan stalked off.

Chapter 220*: The Willis Tower Job - Part I

The following afternoon
Sunday

They are such geeks!

A whole group of us had just returned from watching Episode VII – in 3D. Marty, Josh and Dave had talked non-stop since leaving their seats – Chloe and Stephanie had chipped in, once or twice and so had Hailee – but talk about a goddamn geek fest... How could anybody get themselves so engrossed in a damn movie – even one as good as that one was? Hit Girl was not a geek – damn it!

Oh, who was I kidding – Mindy Lizewski was a major geek for anything sci-fi! I had loved the movie and Dave had been stunned that I had actually managed to sit still for so long... Okay, sitting still was not one of my strong suits; I preferred action and damn did I get it with 'The Force Awakens'. Now, where could I get a cross guard lightsabre from... I could just see myself with one – or maybe a pair with purple blades... I would be unbeatable!

"You fantasising about having a purple lightsabre again?" Dave inquired.

"Huh?" I replied.

"You had that same expression you have every time we watch a Star Wars movie!" Dave laughed. "What a geek!"

"You're one to talk..." I retorted.

"At least, we're proud to be geeks!" Marty teased.

"I have a certain reputation to uphold..." I challenged.

"Fuck that – your reputation went out the window a long time ago!" Chloe laughed.

That night

8:00 P.M.

Safehouse F

"Mindy, please!"

"Okay! I just want you to be safe..."

"You're like an old mother hen!" Stephanie complained.

"Mindy – she's all kitted out and I've checked all her weapons and gear..." Megan insisted.

"It's her first time out – I want it to go well and well, not like Dave's..."

"Gee, just what I wanted to be reminded about!" Dave growled.

"Get over it!" I laughed.

"Come on..." Chloe grinned. "What's the worst that could happen?"

Two and a half hours later

10:30 P.M.

Central Chicago

I looked below me and shook off the beginnings of vertigo as I took stock of our situation.

The nine-year-old vigilante hung ninety stories above the ground.

I was hanging over the edge at a bad angle, so I could not pull her up and the combined weight of my combat suit and weapons were threatening to pull me over the edge too.

Earlier that night

8:26 P.M.

Safehouse F

"Fusion standby!" Hal called over the comms as she made a final check of the surrounding area.

I was astride my Ducati Multistrada, engine running and ready to roll. Beside me was Shadow, she was astride her Suzuki V-Strom, just as ready. Next over, was Jackal on his Tiger 800 XCA. Jackal was two-up. Behind him was an over-excited nine-year-old. Psyche was ready to rock and I knew that she would be safe with her British friend. Finally came Petra, on her trusty Fireblade.

Joining us for the night was 'Sabre' our updated variant of Beast. The 5.0-litre V8 Supercharged and heavily armoured, Range Rover Sentinel was being driven by Kick-Ass, with Wildcat riding shotgun.

"Fusion – area clear..." The steel door slowly opened revealing the curving concrete ramp. "Fusion – move out!"

The engines revved and I led the pack, followed by Jackal and Shadow, with Sabre behind and Petra at the rear.

We headed towards the centre of the City.

Along the way, we received a call from a snout – Worm. I went on with Petra to go talk with him, along with Psyche. We met up with my best informant, snitch, snout in a barely lit alley.

"Who's the little one?"

Apparently, Psyche took exception to being referred to as 'little!' The admittedly short vigilante flew at Worm and placed the point of a Sai in his crotch.

"Who, exactly, is little? Think very carefully before you respond, or I spear your chipolata..."

"I... I... Help me, Hit Girl!"

"You're on your own, pal!" I chuckled – Psyche could look after herself.

"I meant no offence, good lady..."

The man winced as Psyche applied a little pressure to her Sai.

"Just a slip of the tongue..."

"You just control that tongue in future!" Psyche growled. "Now, spill!"

"Yes, ma'am – err, what is she called?" Worm asked, tilting his head towards Psyche.

"I am Psyche and don't you forget it!" Psyche growled back.

I smirked beneath my mask – Psyche was ensuring that the man respected her, despite her diminutive size.

"Psyche told you to spill – so spill!" I growled.

"Yes – I have some information concerning the Genovese; would that be useful?" Worm asked, smirking a little.

The creepy bastard obviously knew that I would be very interested in anything that concerned the Genovese. Worm also knew that I hated to be led along.

"Continue..."

"I have the location of their offices in the Willis Tower..."

I growled.

"The 97th floor – suite 9750. Anthony Genovese is there, right now!"

"My normal terms and conditions apply – if the information is good; I pay. Conversely, if it is bad; you die!"

"You should really get that printed up!" Worm quipped.

"Don't give her any ideas!" Petra growled.

As soon as Worm had left, I informed everybody about what had been said.

We could not pass up the chance to find out more about the Genovese family. However, the Willis Tower would be a tough nut to crack – the security was second to none and there was no ready escape from the place.

I left Battle Guy and Hal to worry about that while we headed towards Chicago's tallest building.

Forty minutes later

Safehouse F

"We have access!" Battle Guy called.

On the large screen before him a three-dimensional rendering of a skyscraper appeared. Hal selected several sections which zoomed in on another screen. The first floor lobby, the 97th floor and the elevator shafts.

"We control the elevators – local access is locked out!" Hal advised.

We left our vehicles down an alley across the street and under the watchful eyes of Jackal. We entered the South Franklin Street lobby and were met by the security guards there.

"Sorry, you need to be on 'the list' to be allowed access – even vigilantes..."

"Check 'the list', pal!" Wildcat growled.

Everybody and everything that arrived at the tower had to be logged into the iVisitor system – and we were – thanks to our resident hackers!

"Okay – please don't make too much of a mess!" The shift supervisor said as he waved us through.

"Well done, guys!" I growled to the two computer geeks back at the Safehouse.

We took one of the 104 elevators in the tower up to the 95th floor at 1,200 feet-per-minute, changing once.

10:08 P.M.

The 97th floor

We exited the elevator and turned to the left, Kick-Ass leading, with Petra to his right and Psyche behind him. Wildcat was beside Psyche – I followed at the rear with Shadow.

I had seen the girl training and I knew that she could fight.

However, I had not yet seen her kill. We had not really talked much about that aspect of her life. Cathy had touched on it in their discussions, but that was all. Stephanie knew how to use her weapons, that was obvious.

From a vigilante point of view, I was keen to see how she reacted to taking a life, which was not an easy thing to do, no matter what the movies depicted.

..._...

At the end of the elevator lobby were a pair of glass doors. There was no visible activity, but then gunfire erupted from behind us as two men opened fire with pistols. The bullets did not penetrate our armour.

Kick-Ass went ahead with Wildcat, Psyche and Petra, while Shadow and I engaged the Sicilian guards. We were definitely in the right place! Shadow dropped both men with four double-taps from her FN Five-seveN pistol. More men appeared from a passageway to the left. We pushed forwards, gunning them down.

Kick-Ass kicked open the locked glass doors, which shattered at his kick.

"Knock, knock!" He bellowed.

The two young girls headed forward, pistols up. There was movement at the far end of the corridor which ran past several glass fronted offices. I kept watch over the entrance, guarding my colleagues rear.

I could hear the gunfire from the other side of the floor – so much for a stealthy attack!

I was having fun, my first attack as a vigilante!

The adrenalin was flowing and it gave me a strange feeling, like I was high on it – I loved it. It must have been the danger ahead of me. I must have been distracted with my thoughts as we moved slowly past empty, glazed offices. We were about to reach the point where the corridor turned to the right when something struck me from the side.

We flew through an archway.

Psyche was struck by a large man.

Another man thrust me against a wall. Two more attacked Kick-Ass. I triggered my claws and made my attacker regret his actions as blood flew across the nearest glass partition – that was actually really cool!

I moved to help Psyche and saw her being thrown towards the windows and she hit with such force that I thought she might actually go straight through and plunge to her death – instead she bounced back and hit the floor.

I kicked the man in the kidney and he went down on one knee, trying to regain his breath.

I ran down the corridor and saw Kick-Ass putting down his last man.

To my left I could see that a man was on his knees. Psyche jumped up from the floor and landed on his back, down on one knee. She drew a Sai from her right boot and flipped it around before bringing it down fast into the nape of the man's neck. The man stopped struggling immediately and dropped like a sack of cement as Psyche rolled off the corpse.

"I think he got the point!" Psyche quipped in her 'cool as a cucumber' British accent which actually sent a chill down my spine.

I looked over at Kick-Ass who just shrugged. I turned back as Psyche wrenched the Sai from the man's neck, cleaning it off. Wildcat shook her head and we all headed back towards the elevators – our part of the suite was clear.

After wading our way through the guards, we found that the cunt had gone.

The guards had been a distraction so that Anthony Genovese could make use of the fire stairs. I kicked open the door and ran down the stairs.

"He's running – he's on the 95th floor!" I called.

I thundered down the stairs, with Shadow close behind. Below us, I heard a door kicked open and I heard a radio call.

"Kick-Ass and girls are on the 89th floor, heading up!"

They had taken a shortcut in the elevator. I heard shooting and knew that Genovese had been cut off.

"He's running onto the 90th floor, towards the rooftop!" Petra called.

I kept heading down and then my heart sank as Hal called us.

"CCTV at the tower shows a helicopter approaching the roof at the 90th floor!"

Shit – he was going to get away. Kind if reminded me of that bastard D'Amico – he had escaped from a tower in a fucking helicopter, too.

I burst through the fire door and found myself in a large open area. I could see various contraptions that I figured had something to do with washing the windows on that side of the tower. Kick-Ass was fighting with three men, Wildcat was removing her claws from another man, while Psyche was kicking Anthony Genovese himself. Petra was struggling with her own cunt near the steel door that opened out onto the 90th floor rooftop.

I could see somebody over by the steel door, near to a control panel.

The door began to open.

As soon as it had raised two feet, Anthony Genovese kicked away from Psyche and rolled under the door. He was closely followed by Psyche, a pistol in her hand. By the time I reached the door I could hear the throbbing sound of a helicopter close by.

Outside it was cold and breezy. I could see the bright flashing lights of a small helicopter and the silhouettes of two people running towards it. The smaller silhouette was obviously Psyche. I could not fire in case I hit the helicopter and sent it plunging to the street, ninety stories below us.

I ran out towards the helicopter and the young vigilante.

Chapter 221*: The Willis Tower Job - Part II

Sunday night

10:28 P.M.

233 South Wacker Drive
Chicago

Psyche was kicked backwards by Anthony Genovese and she rolled towards the edge of the skyscraper.

I shot the final guard in the face and he dropped, before I could run towards the helicopter, I heard a scream and as I turned my heart actually skipped several beats. I saw the girl stumble over the rails for the window-cleaning robots. I saw what was about to happen and dropping my pistol, I dived for her as she fell backwards and I tried in vain to catch one of my legs on the same rails that had tripped Psyche over the edge. I grabbed hold of her utility belt as she fell, but her weight and that of her weapons pulled me over with her.

I started to lose my grip on the rails when I felt an intense pain below my waist as Shadow grabbed hold of both legs, pinning them in place. I looked below me and shook off the beginnings of vertigo. I took stock of our situation.

The nine-year-old vigilante hung ninety stories above the ground.

I was hanging at a bad angle, so I could not pull her up and the combined weight of my combat suit and weapons were threatening to pull me over the edge. Shadow was clinging to my legs and I could hear her frantically scrabbling for a better hold on the roof top.

"Shadow, you drop me and I'll fucking kill you!"

Psyche was on the verge of panic.

As she went over she had screamed in terror which had then given way to yells of desperation and violent struggling.

"Help me... Please help me... Don't drop me..."

I had to calm her down or she would take us both over the edge and to certain death – I wasted no time believing that we might survive the almost twelve-hundred-foot drop to the ground below us.

"Stop struggling, Psyche, I have you..."

She wasn't listening...

"Help... Help... I'm falling... Please..."

Considering that we were hanging in mid-air with nobody anywhere near us, I decided to break the rules.

"Stephanie!" I yelled.

She stopped moving and then I saw her looking up at me. Despite the mask I could see the fear in her eyes.

"Look at me – you are not going to die. You think you are going to die, then you are going to die! You are not going to die, Stephanie... Say it!"

I saw her mouth moving but heard nothing over the comms.

"Stephanie – fucking say it!"

"I... I am not... I am not going to die..."

"Again!"

"I am... I am not going to die..."

"Again!"

"I am not going to die..."

"Keep thinking that while I figure things out, okay?"

"I trust you, Hit Girl. My life is in your hands."

She was bang on too! Both of my hands were wrapped around the girl's utility belt.

"Damn, you had too many pancakes this morning!" I growled and the girl actually giggled.

"Well, well, well! Another fine mess for Hit Girl!" Kick-Ass mused over the comms.

That was all I needed, a wise-ass Kick-Ass; I had to admit, it was a different 'mess' than my usual ones. Three vigilantes trapped hanging off the fucking ninetieth floor of the Willis Tower – I would never live it down!

"We'll be back with you soon, Hit Girl, we won't leave you hanging around for long!" Kick-Ass laughed.

"Fuck you!" I growled back. "This little bitch ain't as skinny as she looks!"

..._...

"Well, kid, at least you're getting a good look at the view!" I commented.

"It's all fucking upside down!" Psyche complained bitterly.

"There's no pleasing you, is there?"

"Sorry!"

"I'm going off comms for a few minutes, but don't be scared, okay?"

There was a short hesitation before she replied.

"Yes..."

"Battle Guy, give you and me a secure channel."

"Go ahead, it's just us..."

"I want you to shut-off Psyche from all, but me. I don't want her hearing the discussions over her rescue. She will only hear my voice and only you and me will hear her voice, understand?"

"I do – anytime you want to talk without Psyche listening, just ask for a secure channel," Battle Guy acknowledged.

"Cut her back in, please."

"Done!"

"Hey, kid – I'm back!"

"I've not gone anywhere!" Psyche replied.

Her voice indicated how she felt and I was worried that was going to start panicking again.

"Help is on its way – you can do this – I am not leaving you."

A few minutes of silence passed.

"Hit Girl?"

"Yeah?"

"I'm really scared..."

"I know you are, but I've got you..."

That was reasonably accurate for that moment. My arms were getting very sore and it took all of my willpower to lock my fingers around the girl's utility belt and keep them there. I worried about cramp; there was no way that I could let go with even one hand for a moment – she would plummet to her death if I tried...

The helicopter was gone by the time I arrived on the rooftop, I ignored the dead body and headed for where I could see Shadow lying prone on the edge of the roof.

As I got closer I could see the black and purple legs of Hit Girl – there was no sign of Psyche, but then there was no sign of Hit Girl's top half either! I yelled for Jackal to bring certain items from Sabre and I sent Wildcat down to guard our vehicles.

..._...

Jackal arrived a few minutes later and first things first, Jackal, Petra and I attached the ends of three lengths of rope to a safety support on the roof top. Next came Shadow.

"Sorry about this, Shadow!" I quipped as I reached between her legs for the carabiner that hung from a mount just below her utility belt. The carabiner was normally hidden under the utility belt.

"Never thought I would ever have Kick-Ass reaching up between my legs!" Shadow said with a chuckle.

"What!" Hit Girl growled.

"Yeah, what she said!" Jackal growled.

"You have a firm touch, Kick-Ass!" Shadow added with a giggle.

"I'll break his fucking fingers!" Jackal muttered.

"Yeah, what he said!" Hit Girl added.

"I'm coming between your legs next, gorgeous..." I said, placing a hand on my wife's left buttock.

"I wish..." Hit Girl moaned!

"Time and a place, people!" Battle Guy cut in.

"That's two secure!" I advised as I secured the second rope to Hit Girl's carabiner. "Jackal, take in the slack on Hit Girl. Petra, take in the slack on Shadow."

"Wow, Hit Girl – you need to lay off the marshmallows, you are heavy!" Jackal exclaimed.

"Would you care to repeat that..." Hit Girl growled.

"Ah, not really..." Jackal replied.

"Good..."

Once the ropes were hauled taut, Shadow let go of Hit Girl's legs and rolled to one side. She sat up and flexed her aching muscles. Her part was not over, though, not by a long shot.

Shadow was safe and Hit Girl was safely secured.

Next, we needed to secure the hanging Psyche.

I had felt the tension grow on my harness and I knew that I was safe – I would not die when I struck South Franklin Street at terminal velocity.

Shadow was gone from my legs, but now came the difficult part. I looked to my right as Shadow appeared, slowly moving down the vertical face of the building.

"Psyche, Shadow is going to clip a rope onto your carabiner and then I am going to let you go. You will swing a bit, but you will be safe..."

"No..." Came the frightened reply. "Don't let me go, please... You said that you would never let me go..."

"I will only let you go once I am certain that you are safe..."

I watched as Shadow carefully reached over and clipped a rope into the carabiner on Psyche's suit.

"Take in the slack, Kick-Ass!" Shadow called.

The slack was hauled in and as the rope went taught I tentatively let go with one hand and then the other. Thank God! Psyche swung a bit as her body sorted out its equilibrium. She screamed at the movement, but Shadow moved down so that she was looking directly into Psyche's eyes.

"Battle Guy! Enable Shadow into Psyche's comms!"

"Psyche, look at me, look at my face and nothing else..." Shadow said gently to the scared vigilante and I saw Psyche move her head and look directly at Shadow. "Keep looking at me, no matter what..."

All three of us were now moving upwards. I was never so happy to feel the rooftop beneath me and I grabbed Psyche the moment that she was over the roof edge and safe.

I hugged her tightly and I was not ashamed to admit that I was crying almost as much as she was.

Safehouse F

Everybody was very sombre as we returned to the Safehouse.

That had been very close, too close. I was very rattled by what had happened, which surprised the hell out of me and Stephanie hadn't stopped shaking since she had been hauled back onto the rooftop. I took the girl upstairs to my bedroom and helped her to remove the combat suit in private. Once the suit was off, Stephanie sat on the bed for a moment taking deep breaths before bolting for the bathroom and vomiting violently into the toilet.

I had expected it, hence the privacy.

It had also been the reason behind restricting the comms. I hadn't wanted her to be embarrassed later by anything that she said while hanging twelve-hundred-feet in the air. When Stephanie had finished retching, she started to sob as she sat down on the bathroom floor, hugging her knees to her chest. Her t-shirt was soaked with sweat and I managed to persuade her to take a shower, but I still had to help her up from the floor and then into the shower.

Dave appeared, having taken his own shower downstairs. He had two mugs of steaming hot chocolate, suitably laced with ample quantities of marshmallows. Dave knew exactly what Stephanie and I needed!

Once Stephanie had reappeared from the shower, wrapped in a towel, Dave sat with her while I went for my own shower.

"Dave?"

"Yeah, Steph."

"I am so sorry for screwing up... I put everybody at risk..."

I stared at the girl.

"Mindy does something to people who whine like a bitch, only I'm not like Mindy. You did nothing wrong – shit happens, live with it. Let me tell you a story... Quite a few years ago, long before I met the ten-year-old Mindy, I decided to try and become a superhero, only it did not quite go the way that I had planned it... Not many people know about Kick-Ass 1.0 – he sucked, big time and well he only lasted like five minutes!"

"What happened?"

"Well, I err, I tried to take on these two guys that were trying to break into a car, but it kinda went to shit and I was stabbed in the stomach," I explained. Stephanie lowered her mug and turned to me, her eyes wide in surprise. "I tried to get away, but then I was hit by a car..."

Stephanie just stared at me and then she burst out laughing. She quickly put the mug of hot chocolate down before she spilt it and burnt herself.

"Yes, it was so fucking funny!" I said sarcastically.

"I'm – sorry – it's just – so funny!" Stephanie admitted, in between fits of laughter.

"I'm glad I've cheered you up, little bitch!"

"Come on... It is rather funny!"

"If you stop laughing for a minute, I'll tell you the rest."

Stephanie forced herself to stop laughing, which seemed to be quite an effort for her. Finally, she stared up at me, but still smiling.

"Well, you see – I err, had to ask the ambulance guy to promise not to say anything and to dispose of the costume, so I was only in my shorts by the time I got to the hospital. Well, that got people talking and they thought that I had, well, that I had been... You know... Raped!"

I could tell that Stephanie was trying desperately, not to laugh!

"After I was fixed up, I spent a few months with people thinking that I was – well... Gay!"

That was way too much for Stephanie and she literally fell over laughing; tears were pouring down her face. After a couple of minutes, the laughter seemed contagious and I started to laugh too! It was funny and I knew that Mindy and Chloe loved the story and I would have laughed, if it had happened to somebody else!

The story, however, had had the desired effect.

When I returned to the bedroom, I found Stephanie sipping her hot chocolate and sitting on the bed with Dave – she was giggling.

"Feeling better?" I asked as I sipped my own hot chocolate.

"A little..." Stephanie admitted.

"I told her the story of Kick-Ass 1.0!" Dave chuckled.

I laughed.

"Dave, I'm staying here tonight, with Step. You get home to the twins; they'll have killed Erika by now – I'll be along in the morning."

"No problem. Chloe, Josh and Hailee are staying too."

The following morning

Stephanie began the night on the upper bunk in one of the bedrooms, with Hailee on the bottom.

However, later that night I found that I had a companion in my bed. I had expected it – the young girl had had a bad nightmare related to her experience and I had been awoken by a distraught Stephanie coming in my room. I hugged her until she fell asleep. Why did I care about the girl so much? Was it because I saw myself in her?

Only a few short years ago, I only cared about me and Daddy. Then it was me and Dave. Then it was many people, from Dave all the way through to the twins that were my children. Now I was caring about a nine-year-old assassin. The girl was all alone in the world – maybe I could do something about that; I would talk to Dave.

I had to do something.

When I awoke I was more than a little startled to find that I was not in the same bed that I had gone to sleep in!

I opened my eyes to find Mindy smiling at me from the other side of the bed. I briefly looked around me and found that I was in Mindy and Dave's room, in their bed; talk about embarrassing! I buried myself under the duvet as I felt my face exploding with the humiliation. I was not a scared five-year-old, so what was I doing in Mindy's bed? Moreover, why was she tolerating it? I was not used to having somebody caring for me, but I liked the feeling that it generated within me.

Since appearing on their doorstep – or rather being scooped up off the pavement by Kick-Ass – I had been accepted into their community. For the first time in quite a while, I had real friends who liked me for who I was. I had been with them for a month now and my wounds were fully healed, yes I had lost my former companion, Miranda, but I was not as alone as I thought I might be.

I had Joshua – I liked him; he was always nice to me and his accent from home, not to mention the Marmite, helped me cope with being in a foreign country and surround by foreigners. Chloe? She did not seem to like me, but she tried not to show it – maybe there were trust issues. Of everybody, apart from Josh, I seemed to feel closest to Dave. He always cared about me, as I knew Mindy did, but I just felt safe around Dave for some reason or other.

Oh, God, I was crying again! The previous night had been very traumatic and I had been scared out of my mind – without Mindy though, I would have lost it completely and fallen to my death. Chloe had been a rock, too. I would have to thank her later. I felt a hand reach over and then I was being hugged by Mindy.

The feeling of somebody comforting me just made me cry even more!

I had an idea of what the young girl was going through.

There had been times when I had felt so alone and I had also endured some very harrowing and traumatic experiences.

I was even more determined to find those people responsible for the way that girl was.

Monday evening

Glenview

"Motherfucker!"

"You bellowed sweet thing!"

"Dave – I just can't get this fucking right – I..."

"Look dear – not everything can be fixed by punching, kicking and generally being obnoxious!"

"Who fucking says? It always has worked for me!"

"Okay, before I come any closer can you please put the knife down... The scissors too... And just to be safe, the Sellotape as well... Thank you."

Who would have thought that there was an ever increasing list of things that Hit Girl could not do! At the top of the list, of course, was cooking without a microwave – mind you, she sucked at that too. That night we discovered another one – wrapping Christmas presents without losing your temper.

Mindy was surrounded by unwrapped presents and a rather large pile of mutilated and destroyed wrapping paper, not to mention several empty rolls of Sellotape. Actually, she had managed to wrap one present – well, sort of!

"Laugh at me and..."

..._...

I laughed and a second later I was on the floor with Hit Girl on my stomach. I grinned at my wife and chuckled at her expression.

"You're enjoying this, aren't you?" Mindy demanded as she slid backwards and then her eyes went wide. "Yep, I felt that!"

Mindy adjusted her position on my groin. I reached up and took a good hold on the collar of her blouse and pulled her down so I could kiss her. She yelped, but allowed herself to be manhandled on top of me.

"Fuck me!" She groaned.

"By your command!" I replied as I pulled open her blouse and began to massage her breasts. They hardened to my touch as I pulled the bra out of the way.

Mindy loosened her belt and undid the button on her jeans. I slid them down her thighs exposing her purple knickers which seemed slightly moist. Mindy in turn pulled open my pants, which I had to admit was a relief!

"Give me a minute..." Mindy said, before jumping up, kicking off her jeans and losing the knickers, blouse and bra.

Completely naked, she sat back down, but only after dragging my pants and shorts down to my ankles. She allowed me to guide her onto my cock and she took a deep breath as she sank down to my groin.

"Oh... That felt good..." She exclaimed.

"Tell me about it!"

"We've never done it in here, have we?" Mindy commented as she gently rocked backwards and forwards, looking around the living room.

"Err, kitchen, bedroom, basement, garage, XJR... No, we haven't..."

"Another room off our list then!" Mindy giggled.

There was a whining sound from the door and we both looked up to see Sophia standing there. She looked thoroughly disgusted and turned away shaking her head. Her belly was sagging quite a bit now with, we believed, about six pups.

..._...

We got back to the work in hand – actually, I had Mindy's waist in my left hand... My other was further up on her chest. Mindy was struggling to breath as sensations of joy coursed through her. She moaned each time that I touched a very tender nipple. She was enjoying every second and so was I.

Then I decided that it was time for me to do some work and I flipped Mindy off me and onto the floor. She screamed, but then she started to purr... I looked down at my gorgeous wife and I felt the happiest that I had ever felt since I had first met her.

"Fuck me like there is no tomorrow, Kick-Ass!" She groaned, pulling me down on top of her, her legs spread wide apart.

I reconnected and started to move steadily and then faster and faster. Mindy groaned and began to thrash around on the wooden floor. I continued thrusting and Mindy's face screwed up, her eyes tight shut and then she screamed and I mean screamed; I was surprised that most of Chicago did not all turn to see who was screaming!

We both climaxed within seconds of each other and I rolled off Mindy as she curled up fighting off a massive orgasm that rocked her short, thin frame from top to bottom.

"God damn it!"

I was finally able to speak again... That had to be the worst – or the best, depending on how you looked at it – orgasm ever! My legs were like jelly and my crotch was on fire and I felt like I would never walk again.

Dave was grinning at me with his dorky grin that I loved.

"Merry Christmas, Hit Girl!"

"Merry Christmas, Kick-Ass!"

..._...

Sophia poked her head around the door to see if it was safe.

"You can come in now – the fun's over!" I giggled and she came over slowly. I gave her a reassuring hug, despite being completely naked and sitting with my legs crossed on the floor.

We spent the next hour wrapping the presents. The impromptu sex had soothed my temper and with my husband's help, I managed to get the presents wrapped properly, without any more temper tantrums.

Almost!

I looked up at the clock.

"Oh, shit!"

"What?"

"The kids'll be back in a few minutes!"

"Oh..." I replied as I looked down at my still naked body.

We both pulled on some clothes and pretended all was normal, just in time too.

..._...

"Hi, Dave, Mindy!" Hailee called as she came in with the three kids.

Stephanie gazed around the living room suspiciously. All the presents were already hidden away in our bedroom, but there was still evidence of our work around.

"What have you two been up to?" Stephanie inquired.

"Nothing, why?" I replied innocently.

"Nothing...?" Hailee commented, holding up my bra which she had picked up off the floor.

I felt my face heating up rather quickly.

"Ewww!" Stephanie exclaimed with a pained expression on her face.

Anne-Marie and Danny grimaced, but said nothing.

"So, how was the party?" Dave asked as he smirked at my discomfort.

"Not bad – Danny got kissed by three girls – all under the mistletoe!" Anne-Marie said with a grin.

Danny went bright red.

"What about you? I saw you with Jimmy Edwards..." Danny countered.

Now it was Anne-Marie's turn to blush.

"Stephanie got hit on too!" Hailee added.

"I'm outta here!" A slightly embarrassed Stephanie growled as she ran out of the living room and we heard her running up the stairs.

She was followed by Anne-Marie and Danny.

..._...

"Can't leave you two alone for a minute, can we?" Hailee asked, twirling my bra around her finger.

"Okay, we had sex – I was getting a bit wound up..."

"She threw a major hissy fit and I had to calm her down," Dave laughed.

"Got everything done?"

"Yes, we did. Thanks for taking them tonight."

"Anytime, guys – Merry Christmas!"

The following night

Central Chicago

"What the fuck are you wearing?"

"I thought Hit Girl loved Christmas?"

"Yes, Kick-Ass, I do – but you just look, well... Ridiculous!"

"Nice Santa hat, Kick-Ass!"

"Thank you, Shadow... Just getting into the mood, unlike Hit Grinch over there!"

Hit Girl growled as she turned and headed out of the alley.

..._...

We were out in the City, ensuring that the Season was to be one of 'Glad Tidings and Joy' for all. Some, however, had not got the memo! We had not gone very far when we found our first score...

"Aw, come on – it's fucking Christmas, guys!"

The two men turned to find themselves face to face with their worst nightmare. Hit Girl stared at them, no weapons in evidence.

"We've got families to feed – we need..."

"It's Christmas, so I'm in a good mood – ignore Kick-Ass; he's just loopy..."

The two men were staring at my Christmas headgear.

"... Here – take this and fuck off home. I see you out again and I will not be pleased!"

"Wow!" The man said as he examined what he had just been given. It was a thick wad of cash – real cash.

"I... Merry Christmas, Fusion!" The man exclaimed and they both bolted down an alley.

"Common thieves – they need to be with their families..." Hit Girl said simply.

..._...

It was a good night to be around the town. Everybody was out having fun, doing some last-minute shopping or just enjoying the atmosphere. Just our presence gave many a sense of well-being and safety.

Everybody loved my Santa hat – except Hit Girl!

We posed for quite a few photos. Many wanted a photo of me with Hit Girl, or Shadow with Jackal. It seemed that Wildcat had quite a fan club and she received many requests to display her claws and she even allowed herself to be kissed while having her photo taken!

If we only made one person happy that night, I was happy. It was a far cry from my early attempts at walking the streets. Now, nobody wanted to fight me just to boost their hits on YouTube! Nobody wanted to fight me, period...

Wildcat was in a funny mood that night.

I was very surprised that she allowed people to pose with her, let alone allowed herself to be kissed! I had not realised that there were many who fancied Wildcat and her claws were very popular.

I did notice Trojan bracing up every time that somebody put their arm around her or kissed her. I noticed Splinter taking a firm hold of his arm at one stage, just in case.

Shadow was also very popular. Her combat suit nicely accentuated her developing curves which attracted many teenaged boys, much to Jackal's disgust.

We never saw any action, that night – our weapons went unused and unfired.

I was happy with that, just for a night – especially at Christmas.

Chapter 223*: Kick Hard

Author's Note: This is intended as a fun chapter for Christmas and yes, it rips off a certain cool movie! Enjoy...

Chicago
The John Hancock Center
41st Floor

It was the 23rd December, and we had been invited to a Christmas party.

Mindy was happily chatting with another woman, whom we knew from the school. Holly Rickman had a son in the same year as Danny and Anne-Marie. Her husband worked on the 41st floor of the John Hancock Center for some banking conglomerate that was hosting that night's party.

I was not a big fan of parties and knew that Mindy was only tolerating it because of her friend, Holly. Mindy treasured every friendship that she possessed; she had missed out on having friends for most of her life. I was starting to get annoyed with some dickhead in a thousand-dollar suit who kept trying to hit on Mindy.

I had decided to take a moment to freshen myself up – actually I needed a piss!

While I was in the bathroom, I took a moment to enjoy the silence – I had endured nearly thirty minutes of women jabbering away. Despite Mindy insisting that she did not get on with 'the Moms', she was getting on like a fire, fuel and air mixture – explosively!

..._...

Then my senses went on high alert – was that gunfire? Oh, fuck – I was in a goddamn skyscraper, at Christmas and something bad was happening – a plot for a bad movie? Actually, no, it was the plot for a fucking awesome movie! Anyway, we had a problem and I could be a part of the solution – Yippee-Ki-Yay!

There must have been some eighty people at the party and my wife was among them. We could help easily, but what about our identities? I suppose if I kept Mindy out of it, I could just Kick-Ass!

Yeah, that was funny...

Maybe not!

One of the side effects of being married to Mindy was that I had inherited some of her traits and not the good ones either – I had no need for boobs and other certain items!

I reached down and checked my left ankle – I carried a ceramic throwing knife with a six-inch blade in a scabbard. Being ceramic I had easily passed through the metal detector without incident. I also knew that Mindy was probably carrying an arsenal about her person. First things first, I needed to figure out what was happening.

I moved towards the doors from the bathroom and out into the corridor.

I was having so much fun.

Dave had actually had to pin my arm behind my back and march me to the car earlier in the evening! I was glad he did too; I could have fought him off, but a part of me wanted to socialise – it was a skill that was still new to me.

Four years earlier, Dave was my only friend – how sad was that!

Holly was great and so were her friends. Dave had started to get annoyed with an asshole called Jake, who was a total idiot, despite his expensive taste in designer suits. He kept leering at my subtle curves and exposed skin, not to mention creeping me and the other women out. Dave had wandered off to the men's room to cool off; we did not need a scene!

"What are you doing after Christmas – going anywhere?" One of Holly's friends, Rebecca, asked.

"We're hopefully going to spend a week in the Caribbean on our yacht – we all need a break..."

I was cut off as the gunfire ripped out from over by the elevators...

As I peered out into the party, I saw several armed men herding everybody together.

Some more armed men were heading towards the offices to clear them. The men threatened and swore at everybody, using intimidation tactics to overpower the men and women present. I saw two men heading in my direction, both armed with Cz Scorpion Evo 3 A1 sub-machine guns. Oh dear, it looked like I had brought a knife to a gunfight!

I dived for a door that opened up into an area for hanging up coats and shit. While I ran, I pulled out my cell and punched in the Fusion Alert code. Rather than beep, with the screen flashing green, the cell buzzed and the screen flashed red. I tried again, and again with the same result. Then I noticed the symbols at the top of the screen – there was no cell signal!

Fuck!

The men were shouting as well as shooting their Cz Scorpion Evo 3 A1 sub-machine guns.

It sounded a bit like German! I was getting a seriously bad vibe about all this – kind of reminded me of a film from way before I was born, which was one of my favourites. We were all herded into the southeast corner of the floor; many of the women were panicking, but I noticed that Holly was made of sterner stuff.

"Holly, stay close to me," I ordered and she nodded.

Under my limited dress I had a pair of throwing knives and a very small automatic pistol, a Glock 43 in a holster, up high on the inside of my thigh. It only held six rounds and I carried no spare magazines – hey it was a goddamn Christmas party for fuck's sake!

I was counting the men and I had reached fourteen, but I knew that there would be more as I could still hear gunfire on the far side of the floor. I also noticed that Dave had not returned from the bathroom. Where was he? What were his intentions? Would he do something stupid? No, I trusted him; he would know what to do.

"All of you – hands on head – now!" A voice called out and we all did as we were told.

If only they knew who they had under their weapons, just then!

I found myself by the elevators.

The buttons were red; I stabbed them, but nothing happened. The men were good, they had obviously locked out the elevators after their arrival.

"Hey!"

I turned to see a gunman aiming his Scorpion at me. I rolled as he opened fire and hit the fire-door and then started running up the fire-stairs. Up? Why not down? I had no idea why I went up – it just seemed the right thing to do!

Bullets struck the door frame as the heavy fire-door swung shut behind me.

I noticed one of the men who was not holding a weapon and seemed to be in charge.

'You are a dead man!' I thought to myself, taking a mental photo of his face.

Then a gunman appeared and spoke rapid German to his leader. The leader looked very annoyed at the news that he was receiving. He gave his man a curt order and he ran off towards the elevators. Then the leader raised his hands for silence and started to speak.

"Ladies and gentlemen, ladies and gentlemen..."

I left the fire-stairs at the 45th floor.

The place was like a building site with lots of exposed wires and incomplete office walls. Now, how to send out an alarm... I was interrupted when I heard the 'bong' of an elevator arriving.

A very large man stepped out of the elevator, his Scorpion held out in front of him. If I played my cards right, I might get myself an automatic weapon. I kept to the shadows, at least I was trying to until the damned asshole turned on all the goddamn lights! I was suddenly completely exposed...

I dived forwards just as the gunman saw me and he brought his weapon around to shoot me. I dodged the first burst of nine-millimetre projectiles as I dived behind a desk, the computer monitor taking the burst instead. I scooped a stapler off the desk and threw it as a diversion – and the stupid cunt turned away from me giving me the chance I needed to attack.

I drove a fist into his right side, causing him to partially double over. He dropped the sub-machine gun and turned towards me, lashing out with the fist of his right hand. I caught the blow on my lower right arm, kicking out and catching him in the right knee. He bellowed out in pain as I followed up with a punch into his stomach.

His elbow came around and caught me in the side of the head causing a burst of bright light in my head and I stumbled momentarily trying to regain my balance. I ducked as another blow was aimed at my head and I rolled backwards towards the fallen Scorpion Evo 3 but I was intercepted and missed it as he kicked out sending my skidding across the floor, away from the gun.

"Fuck!" I yelled out in frustration.

"Leck mich am arsch!" Came the crude reply. I did not speak German, but I caught the drift of the insult.

I took the moment to draw my six-inch ceramic blade from its scabbard on my lower leg. My opponent grinned as he drew his own nine-inch blade. I shrugged – size was not everything; just look at Mindy!

We circled for a moment before we began to fight.

"Fucking, Yank!" The German growled as he swung the blade forward.

I deflected it with my own, kicking out, but the man dodged and he was able to swipe at me again with his knife cutting my jacket.

"My wife would not like that!"

I slashed, catching the man in the right arm. Blood oozed from the wound but otherwise he kept moving, ignoring the pain.

'Impressive,' I thought.

Then he made a mistake and I was able to stab him in his right bicep. He yelled out and I seized his right arm, snapping it back and hearing the cartilage of his elbow cracking. I elbowed him in the side of his head and forced him to drop the blade.

I wrapped my right arm around his neck.

"You kiss my fucking ass, fritz!" I growled as I twisted his head until I heard a satisfying crack.

..._...

I pulled off my ripped jacket knowing that I would have Mindy to deal with – she had bought me the suit.

Next went my tie – I might as well fight comfortably! I retrieved my knife, cleaned it off on the dead man's clothing and returned it to its scabbard. I retrieved the Scorpion sub-machine gun and checked it still functioned correctly. There were about fifteen rounds left in the magazine. As I inspected the dead man, I found three more full magazines, two small blocks of C4 explosive, a remote detonator, a small handheld radio and a Zippo cigarette lighter.

All of the extra equipment was in a small black daysack. I stuck a spare magazine into a pocket and left the rest in the pack.

It was time for some intelligence gathering...

"I wanted this to be a professional operation, efficient – however, your boss; he will not be joining us for the rest of his life! This can go any way you want – you can walk out, or be carried out in a body bag... Have no illusions – we are in charge! Decide now, each of you..."

My mind registered the 'bong' of an elevator arriving as I listened to the 'leader' and his fairly standard demands. He was a professional, I had to give him that. His men, too. One thing – professionals were predictable. If they were mercenaries, then they most likely were soldiers – that meant that they had been trained and most soldiers the world over received the same basic training.

It was a weakness and one which could be exploited... A woman screamed and I turned instantly to search for the danger – oh fuck!

There was a dead body resting in the elevator...

At least it was not Dave... it was only a fucking terrorist!

I was lying prone on the roof of the elevator car.

The doors opened and I heard a woman scream – she must have seen the body – oops! A man entered the elevator – he looked to be the leader; he carried no obvious weapon and the other, armed, men appeared to defer to him.

I listened as they talked two feet beneath me.

"A security guard we missed?" One man inquired in English.

"They're usually retired Policemen, growing fat on a pension – no, no, no, this is something else, something different..."

The leader was obviously smart...

"We have to do something, Hans..."

"Yes, we do... We have to tell Karl that his brother is dead! Tell him to come down..."

"Karl... Herunter kommen!" A man said into a radio.

"Franco, you and Fritz take the body upstairs and out of sight; I don't want the hostages to think too much."

I looked up and saw movement on another elevator far above me.

As I watched, a gunman appeared from the elevator.

He was raging and kicking out at anything – he sent a table of food flying across the room. I smiled.

"God, that man looks really pissed!" Holly stated.

"He's still alive..." I said quietly feeling elated inside.

"What?"

"Only my husband can drive somebody that crazy!" I replied.

Other than me, of course!

I continued up to the roof and tried to use the radio that I had appropriated.

Damn! It was encrypted and required a code to be entered for use. I tried various channels but I was unable to transmit. That was when bullets came pouring in my direction – Karl, I assumed; he seemed pissed for some reason!

I returned fire with the Scorpion, being careful to conserve my limited cache of ammunition. I ran down one side of the building and found a hatch – I kicked it open and dived inside, pulling it closed behind me. There was a locking pin which I inserted into the handle, just as I heard pummeling from the other side.

I found myself at the top of a concrete staircase. I proceeded downwards, looking out for the enemy.

"Come to a party, get together, we'll have a few laughs!" I commented sardonically

..._...

Then Karl appeared.

I assumed that it was Karl – he was large and very, very pissed. He came around a corner and we both saw each other at about the exact same time which made firearms useless. He got the first punch in which sent me flying backwards – it fucking hurt like hell, too!

I dropped the Scorpion as I fell and Karl dived towards me, punching at me. I fended off many of the strikes, but not all – I had the advantage as I only felt some of the pain. I managed to kick out and Karl flew backwards into the wall. I dived after him...

"Motherfucker – I'll kill ya!"

The leader – he seemed pissed as he reappeared from an office.

He gazed around and he focussed on Holly. He strode forward and seized her arm, dragging her to her feet.

"Get your fucking hands off her!" I growled, yanking her back down to the floor. I stood up. "Take me, bastard!"

"No, Mindy..."

I shrugged off Holly's frantic hands and stepped forwards.

"Any woman in a storm...!" The leader said smoothly.

I was dragged away from the other hostages.

"I have a use for you... Mindy, did she say?"

"Yes, Mindy – but I'd prefer it if you called me Mrs Lizewski!"

"If you wish... Mrs Lizewski."

"You should have heard your brother squeal like a fucking girl as I snapped his chicken neck!"

Maybe not the best thing to say – it seemed to piss him off even further! The fight was getting nowhere; we were fairly evenly matched.

He reached for a pistol that had dropped onto the floor – Karl swiped it up and sent several shots in my direction. I rolled and dodged each one as they threw up concrete dust from the floor. I pulled my knife and flicked it back towards Karl.

Bullseye!

Karl fell to the floor, the knife dead centre in his forehead.

Now, to find the leader and the others.

I reached the 41st floor, only to find... Nobody.

All the hostages had gone – including Mindy. Think, Dave, think! What were they doing here? I checked every office and shot dead three more gunmen who had been checking each office for any stragglers. I was shocked to find a dead man in what was obviously the Boss' office. There were plans of the building arranged on a table.

I checked my weapons – oh, shit; I had two rounds left in my pistol! I checked the gunmen – their weapons were all empty – crap...

I checked the plans again; one particular page appeared to have been selected.

It appeared to be a vault...

On the 32nd floor...

We were on the 32nd floor and I was being dragged along by the man who I now knew was called Hans.

Most of his remaining men were guarding us, about six – although I thought that it may have been all of them. We stopped at a vault...

"After all your posturing, all your little speeches, you're nothing but a common thief."

"I'm an exceptional thief, Mrs Lizewski and since I'm moving up to kidnapping, you should be more polite!"

I rolled my eyes as the man went back to the vault.

..._...

"Oh, Hans!"

I snapped my head around at the sound of my husband's voice. Karl and his men did the same. Something told me that this was the endgame... I gasped as Dave came into sight and I saw the torn clothes, the blood on his face and shirt. He had a pistol raised towards Hans.

"Hi, honey!"

"Honey?" Hans echoed.

"Yeah, that is my wife and I am having a very bad day..." Dave growled back as he edged slowly closer. "Any chance that you can give me a hand here, honey – I'm feeling kinda down to two right now!"

I immediately grasped the situation – Dave only had two rounds left – there were seven gunmen, including Hans who had his own pistol a few inches from my head. The other gunmen were all reaching for their own weapons. Time to earn your keep, Hit Girl!

I thrust my head backwards, catching Hans in the nose which exploded. I rammed my left elbow into his chest and dived for the floor pulling out my pistol. I fired six times, catching six men – all headshots – and I dropped the pistol. Dave fired at Hans – two rounds. Both passed through him and hit the glass window behind him.

Hans stumbled backwards towards the window – he hit it quite hard. The glass cracked badly... It gave way and Hans fell through, but not before he caught hold of the window frame. I moved towards him and knelt down.

"Happy trails, Hans!" I growled, prising his hand off the window frame – he seized my arm.

Hans pulled out his pistol as he hung there, gripping onto my arm with his other hand. I yanked backwards and I watched with cold eyes as the man dropped the pistol and struggled to regain his grip, but he failed and he began to fall and fall.

"Yippee-Ki-Yay, motherfucker!"

I turned as I heard somebody approaching, it was Mindy.

"Where is the bastard?" she growled.

"I let him go..." I replied with a smirk.

Chapter 224*: An Unexpected Gift

Author's Note: A very Merry Christmas to everybody!

Thursday evening
Christmas Eve

Glenview

I looked in on the kids' bedrooms and asked both Anne-Marie and Danny to join me in the study.

"Close the door, please, and sit down."

Both kids looked worried.

"You're not in trouble," I reassured them, then smirked. "For a change...!"

They did not look too convinced, but I went on anyway.

"Tell me, what do you think about Stephanie?" I asked. "Be honest, I want to know your thoughts."

"She's nice and she helps me with my homework," Danny replied. "She's kind to me and I see her like a big sister."

"Steph's a good friend and I enjoy sharing a room with her – we look after each other," Anne-Marie replied. "She can be a bit strange at times, but I'm not exactly what you would call normal, so I won't hold that against her."

That was exactly what I had hoped to hear.

"How would you like her to become your big sister?" I asked them both. "For real..."

I saw looks of surprise on the two young faces before me.

"You mean she would become a Lizewski?" Danny asked. "Like us?"

"Yes, and she would then be the big kid in the family."

They both thought about that for a minute, looked at each other for another minute and then they both nodded.

"Yeah!"

I got up from my chair.

"Mom?" Anne-Marie asked as she stood up, intercepting me.

"Yeah."

"Can I ask her... You know, if she wants to be our big sister?"

"If you want; we'll do it together, all of us."

A short time later

"Should I be worried?" Stephanie asked as she came into the living room and found all four of us sitting down on the couches, waiting for her.

"Probably," I replied, but with a reassuring smile.

"Anne-Marie has something to ask you, Steph – come and sit down," Dave said, indicating a seat on the couch beside him.

Stephanie sat down, still looking a little apprehensive. Anne-Marie too, looked apprehensive and she paused for a few seconds before diving in with a simple question.

"Steph, would you be our big sister?"

Whatever Stephanie had thought the question was going to be, she was taken aback by what was actually said. She looked over at me and then up at Dave. Her face was a wonderful mix of emotions, but mainly confusion.

"I don't understand," She finally said.

"Steph, we want you to become a Lizewski – Stephanie Lizewski, to be exact," Dave said quietly.

"You would be a big sister to these little monsters!" I cautioned.

Anne-Marie laughed and looked at Stephanie.

"You want to adopt me?" Stephanie asked, sounding astonished at the mere suggestion.

"You're not all that bad!" I commented.

I think we must have overloaded the poor girl as she began to cry. Dave hugged her as she cried and I was fairly certain that they were tears of happiness – at least I hoped so!

"Did I say something wrong?" Anne-Marie asked, looking very concerned.

I was about to say something, but instead Stephanie pulled away from Dave and spoke first.

"Sorry, I didn't mean to worry you. I just... Well, nobody has ever been so nice to me as you guys have... If you really want me..."

"Of course we want you, Steph – otherwise we would have never asked," I replied with a reassuring smile.

Stephanie began to cry again and Anne-Marie went over to hug her – she was soon joined by Danny. I looked over at Dave as he moved over letting the three kids sit together.

He smiled and nodded.

When it came time for bed that night, they were all very excited, it being Christmas Eve and all.

I turned out the lights and headed back downstairs, but then I heard feet on the landing behind me and I turned to see Stephanie running towards me. I was shocked when she grabbed me around the waist and hugged me tightly. After a minute she looked up at me, an enormous smile on her face.

"Thank you, Mindy, for the best Christmas present ever..."

"Stop it – you're gonna make me cry!" I laughed and I wasn't kidding either.

"I just wanted to say thanks," Stephanie said, releasing me and heading back to the bedroom.

"No problem! Goodnight, Stephanie."

The following morning

Friday

Christmas Day

Glenview

It was very cold outside and the rain was coming down in buckets – big buckets!

As usual, it was toasty warm inside though. I was enjoying the best of dreams – of course there was blood – who the hell did you think I was? Then I was rudely awakened...

"Merry Christmas, Mom!"

"I'm too damn tired – leave me alone!"

"Payback's a bitch, ain't it?" My husband laughed without sympathy. "Get to it, kids!"

Mindy screamed as first Danny and then Anne-Marie began to jump on the bed. Finally, she sat up, looking very tired.

"So not funny!" She growled, but she still gave each of the twins a hug and me a kiss.

"Why so tired?" Stephanie grinned with a wink. "Did Dave keep you up all night?"

Mindy's mouth just flapped like a goldfish...

"No... It's got nothing to do with you, young lady, anyway..." Mindy chuckled. "Merry Christmas, all of you!"

Then she saw the clock...

"It's not even six-thirty yet!"

"Normally, it's you waking me up!" I commented dryly.

It was going to be a very special Christmas.

We were a real family, just the five of us – oh, and Sophia too! Nobody got dressed until almost lunchtime. It was good to be able to sit in the cosy living room, a roaring fire in the fireplace and the kids ripping open their presents. We all had mugs of hot chocolate – with plenty of marshmallows!

After the floor in the living room had quite literally vanished beneath wrapping paper, cardboard and other assorted debris, I suggested that it was time to clear it all up. That suggestion did not go down well, until I hinted that there might be another present for each of them and then suddenly all of the wreckage mysteriously vanished within a few very brief minutes!

..._...

I pointed at the door to the garage.

The three of them went in very slowly and dubiously, especially Stephanie – what were they expecting, a bomb! Then there were three very loud screams and yells. I looked at Dave and smiled. He wrapped his arm around my shoulders and gave me a kiss, then we headed into the garage.

In the centre of the space where my XJR usually parked were three motorcycles. Two were identical in size and style, but with different colour schemes. The other was bigger and in yet another colour scheme.

The first two machines were Honda CRF70F trail bikes, one in blue and the other in pink. The third machine was a small-wheel Honda CRF125F in yellow. The three kids were smiling fit to burst as they jumped onto their new motorcycles. Considering Anne-Marie and Stephanie were still only wearing the over-large t-shirts that they slept in, they looked a little strange! Danny was in his Transformer pyjamas as usual.

I allowed them to start the engines, just so that they could hear them. I think we had picked the correct machines – the smiles assured us of that!

..._...

While the kids ran off to play with their presents and talk about their new motorcycles, I called Marcus to wish him, Paige and Megan a Happy Christmas. Megan was being very noisy in the background and the excited eleven-year-old took some coaxing away from her presents to say Merry Christmas.

I called Cathy and she seemed to have a very quiet house, so I asked where Josh and Chloe were.

"Upstairs!"

"Oh – I won't ask any more!"

"Tell me about it!"

..._...

We all sat down to an enormous meal that afternoon.

Sophia was included, with her own big bowl of Turkey and other trimmings. Dave did most of the cooking, with the help of Stephanie. I was ordered out of the kitchen, as usual! Dave was a remarkably good cook, for a man – and I told him so.

"Well, you are a remarkably good vigilante – for a girl!" He whispered into my ear and I felt all warm and fuzzy inside for some reason.

There were some difficult moments too.

It was the first Christmas for the twins, without their father and they had felt very sad at one stage. Dave talked to them and we made sure that we remembered their father. Stephanie, though, she did not want to talk about her family, even though Danny asked her about them. I glossed over the question and moved the conversation onto something else, sensing Stephanie's unease.

I of course missed my Daddy, as Dave did his. Nevertheless, we were determined that everybody would enjoy the special day. We had Noddy Holder blaring out around the house, along with plenty of the other songs to keep everybody happy.

By the early evening, everybody was very full and feeling tired. Sophia fell asleep in front of the fire and we all dozed off at one stage, thanks to the warmth and good food.

It was a very memorable day and our first as a real family.

No matter how much I tried to be normal, I knew that I never would be.

Hit Girl was a part of me and all the integrating into society could never change that. Being normal allowed me to experience new things. I knew that was important to Marcus, who dreamed of me being permanently normal – but he was realistic and he knew that it would never happen. Dave was happy, no matter what persona I took.

I hoped that bringing Stephanie into the family would give her a chance at a normal life. The nine-year-old was as damaged as me, so she needed the support of people who were familiar with her situation and would be able to control her. Dave and I were the only people who could do that. Unchecked, Psyche would take over Stephanie, as Hit Girl did to Mindy Macready, all those years ago when I first came to Chicago and before Dave found me.

A big part of me fought against being normal – Hit Girl hated to be normal, but another part of me craved normality and the love of another human being. If I had not taken up Dave's offer in that taxi, back when I was fifteen, where might I be now?

"You dwelling on the past, again?"

I looked up to see Dave standing beside the couch.

"Just a little..." I replied.

That night, I went up to see the girls.

"Danny – in your own room, please..."

"Night, Mom..." Danny said, giving me a hug and heading to his own room.

I sat down on the end of Anne-Marie's bed before speaking again.

"Are we in trouble?" Stephanie asked.

Why did they always think that they were in trouble?

"No, Steph... But it is about you... Nothing bad!" I replied quickly. "Stephanie, you're going to be ten soon and if you're gonna be living with us permanently, then I think you should have your own bedroom. There's an empty room just across the landing and round the corner – it has its own bathroom and everything."

I watched as both girls looked at each other, however it was Anne-Marie that spoke.

"Can we stay together for just a little longer, please?" She asked.

It was amazing how easily, and quickly, the two girls had bonded, despite there being almost two years' difference in age, not to mention that they had been brought up in very different cultures and countries.

"Okay, we'll talk about it again in the New Year."

"Thanks, Mom."

"Thanks, Mindy."

I smiled and gave each girl a hug before heading back downstairs.

"They want to stay together a little longer," I said as I entered the living room and passed Dave five bucks.

"Told you!" Dave grinned pocketing the bill.

Chapter 225*: A Change of Scene

The next morning Saturday

It was in the early hours of the 26th December that I was awakened.

"Mindy, quick!"

It was Anne-Marie and she was in a panic, mumbling something about Stephanie. I jumped out of bed and followed my daughter upstairs to where I could hear sobbing. It was Stephanie and she was sobbing uncontrollably into her pillow. When I finally got her to talk, after carrying her downstairs to our bedroom, she kept saying the same sentence repeatedly.

"I killed them... I killed them..."

Dave had been awake when I had returned to the bedroom with Stephanie.

We were both more than a little concerned by her comments. Dave had a very grim expression on his face. I had no idea what it was all about, but it was obviously something from an early part of Stephanie's life.

Between us, we managed to calm the young girl down enough for us to find out what was going on. Stephanie explained that she had had a flashback about her parents' death, brought on by queries earlier that day and talk about adopting her, on Christmas Eve.

Over the space of an hour, she was able to recall the flashback.

...+...

"In this program, you will save the lives of our citizens..."

The voice was always the same; middle-aged, throaty and female. I had no idea who she was, but she spoke with a British accent; that in itself was strange as I knew full well that I was currently in the United States of America. The lecture was always something about patriotism, national pride and saving lives - usually American and British lives.

Never any other nationality, but the emphasis was on the British aspect, which I assumed was because I was British.

"As part of this program, you will need to sacrifice your old life..."

...+...

Stephanie was shaking as she detailed her thoughts and memories.

"I had been with them for about four weeks... I was prevented from sleeping... Noise in my cell – yes, it was a cell... I had been on holiday with my family and I was taken... Constant questions... Constant talking..."

I looked at Dave and his horrified expression mirrored my own.

...+...

Like always, I was in a small room.

I had no idea exactly where it was; I never did, but it looked like an examination room in a hospital. Against one wall was one of those wheeled hospital beds. In the middle of the room was a metal desk with a computer workstation sitting atop it.

Over in the farthest corner, were three occupied chairs with two adults, a male and female, and a young boy about the same age as me.

...+...

Stephanie began to cry again.

"Though they had hoods covering their heads, I knew exactly who they were. The hoods were not to hide their identities from me; but mine from them..."

I was still in the dark about exactly what was going on, but something at the back of my mind was adding things together and a nasty conclusion came into my mind, which I dismissed instantly as being too horrid to contemplate.

"They were my past – my family; my father, my mother and my younger brother, Jimmy..."

...+...

I became aware that there was someone beside me.

The owner of the voice; somehow, I felt that I knew her, but I had no idea who she was. She was thin, tall and horse-faced with greying dark hair. She was still lecturing me – as usual.

"An asset's greatest weakness are those who know them. People who know you can tell others about you; therefore, they must be eliminated..."

The woman stepped forward and stood before me. Her arm came up and in her hand was a pistol. I instantly recognised it as a Heckler & Koch P30SK.

...+...

The girl was shaking and sobbing, so we took a break and I went to get some water for Stephanie from the bathroom.

"Dave, I can't – it's too hard..."

"Take your time, Steph. However, I believe that you need to follow this through to the end. I have been through these things with Mindy and keeping things bottled up... Just trust me, you need to get it all out of your system and talk about it."

"I'll try..."

"That's good advice, Steph, believe me," I offered.

...+...

"Take this weapon and eliminate those closest to you. When you have done so, you will leave here not as who you were, but as Stephanie Walker."

Calmly, I took the weapon from the woman, grip first. I could tell it was loaded, by the weight – three rounds; one for each member of my family.

It was easy to do; it felt natural. Three gentle squeezes of the trigger and as the smoke from the gunshots was sucked away by the air-conditioning and the sound of the gunshots faded – three bodies lay dead. My family was dead.

The doctor walked over to them, pulled the hoods from the heads of their slumped bodies. I had shot all three in the head; instant, clean kills...

My first...

...+...

Holy, shit!

I stared at Dave, unable to speak. He was horror-struck, as was I. He held Stephanie tightly as she shook violently with each sob. I thought that my life had been fucked up – but I had never killed my own family as part of my brainwashing...

I just kept coming back to: holy, shit!

I felt for the girl, I really did.

I also wanted to kill that woman – she deserved to die; she deserved to suffer...

By the time we awoke, later that morning, Stephanie was back to her normal happy self.

She had stayed with us, in our room, on the couch. I had lain awake for quite a while, with Stephanie's story going around in my head. I was horrified, I was angry... Thank God we were getting away from Chicago for a week.

..._...

We all desperately needed a change of scene. Everybody was suffering from something, be it boredom, anxiety, PTSD – whatever... A holiday was required and what better than somewhere hot – a few weeks earlier, I had decided on the Caribbean; I had an asset there which should prove to be perfect.

Preparations had been ongoing since November.

"Can I see my passport?" Danny asked.

I grinned, handing it over and passing an identical looking one to his sister. I passed another to Stephanie.

"Wow!" Anne-Marie commented as she examined the small blue booklet.

I watched as Danny eagerly flicked to the photo page and he smiled happily. I knew why too.

"It says my surname is 'Lizewski!'" He announced proudly.

Anne-Marie dived to her own photo page and smiled too.

"Wondered if either of you would notice. You are both officially Lizewski kids!" I confirmed.

Anne-Marie then looked over at Stephanie.

"How come her passport is different?" She asked, noticing the differently coloured document.

I laughed, pleased with my daughter's powers of observation.

"Stephanie is British, so she has a British passport. You two are American citizens, so you have American passports."

Anne-Marie took Stephanie's passport while Stephanie took Anne-Marie's.

"European Union, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland," Anne-Marie read off the cover before flipping to the photo page – she laughed.

"You look a dork!"

"Says you, Yank!" Stephanie replied with a smirk as she held up Anne-Marie's photo.

..._...

I had enjoyed winding Chloe up before Christmas.

"Oh, Chloe?"

"Yeah!"

"You need to go shopping..."

"Cool – what do I need – besides another very revealing bikini?"

"Something to cover your body with – more specifically, a cocktail dress..."

"A cocktail dress?" Chloe repeated.

"Yeah..."

"Why?"

"Because we have been invited to a 'Cockers P', in Antigua."

Chloe looked majorly confused and a little wary.

"Sorry, I have absolutely no idea how to respond to that!" Chloe finally replied.

"It's a Royal Navy Cocktail Party; you know the Brits – they're a bit strange!" I went on to explain. "You remember Lieutenant Lawrence? He helped us during the Amber Alert at the beginning of October. Well, he is going to be in the Caribbean, in HMS Dragon, which is exercising with USS Churchill. They will both be alongside in Antigua when we are. Commander and Mrs Bennett were invited with guests – the Commander's daughter – you, and her partner – Joshua. Apparently, Mr and Mrs Lizewski rate their own invitation from the establishment!"

"I suppose that explains everything!" Chloe commented dryly.

Chapter 226*: The Atlantic Storm

Saturday Afternoon

Miami

The sun was very bright as we left the aircraft and after collecting our bags, we all climbed into the waiting vehicles.

The mini-convoy took us through Miami and along the MacArthur Causeway. Across the water, we could see the cruise ships lined up, ready for their Caribbean and Atlantic cruises. We headed to South Pointe, in the South Beach part of Miami. The vehicles stopped at the shore end of a long jetty. Our many bags were collected by a porter who followed us down the jetty towards our accommodation for the week.

At the other end of the jetty, lay the 'Atlantic Storm'.

..._...

The Atlantic Storm was white, from stem to stern and a little over one hundred and twenty-one feet long overall. She displaced over two hundred tonnes, which was more than four times that of the Salty Swallow. She was powered by twin 1,450-horsepower diesels that could push the vessel to over twenty-five knots.

The Atlantic Storm was an ocean going yacht built by Ocean Alexander. There were four decks: Sun Deck, Bridge Deck, Main Deck and Lower Deck. On the Sun Deck, above the enclosed bridge, was a Jacuzzi. The Main Deck had the Dining Area, Main Salon, Galley and the Owner's Cabin. The Lower Deck had two further Queen Size Guest Cabins, a pair of twin Guest Cabins and there were three Crew Cabins, two of which had bunk beds, located in the bow. Immediately aft of the enclosed bridge was the Captain's Cabin.

The yacht had been ordered months before and she was very ready for what would be her maiden voyage after her shakedown cruise from the builders in Vancouver, Canada.

Everybody was stunned by her size and beauty.

"Christ, Mindy!" Josh exclaimed as he ran his eyes along the yacht from stem to stern.

"What?" Mindy asked innocently.

"I thought the 'Salty Swallow' was big..."

"Maybe she's compensating for something," Chloe grinned.

"Yeah, her tits..." Josh laughed.

Smack!

"Fuck, Mindy, that hurt!" Josh exclaimed, rubbing the back of his head.

"Idiot!" Megan growled as she pushed past the annoyed Joshua.

"What she said," Stephanie added as she and the other kids followed Megan up the gangway.

"Get your gear put away, properly, and get changed!" I called out after the kids.

..._...

At the top of the gangway, I was met by a large man with a big smile on his face.

"Chief Tyrol, Mrs Lizewski. The engines are warm; diesel's topped off, as is the lube oil. The gyros are spun up and she's ready to depart."

"Thank you, Chief."

"I've also taken the liberty to complete a few upgrades here and there in the communications, radar and navigation areas. Maybe I should show you what's what..."

"Lead the way, Chief – Dave, you'd better come too."

We followed the chief up to the bridge.

..._...

Almost an hour later, the Chief left us with a wave and I headed aft and outside to the Aft Bridge Deck, before taking a gangway up to the Sun Deck. There I found Stephanie and Megan showing off their very limited bikinis to a very happy Curtis and Tommy who had changed into swim-shorts and t-shirts. Stephanie was by far the thinnest and palest; her recent scars were very evident on her abdomen, not that she seemed to be worried about them.

"Girls! You'd better get some lotion on your skin or you'll be cooked within an hour – Megan, take care of that, would you, please."

"Aye, aye, Cap'n!" Megan replied, throwing a mock salute.

"Funny!" I laughed. "Care to walk the plank?"

An hour later

I walked to the base of a different plank, more specifically the gangplank of the USS Churchill.

"Mrs Lizewski!" The Petty Officer at the base of the gangplank said cheerfully.

I frowned.

"You know who I am?"

"How could I forget a beautiful young lady? I saw you come aboard, in Scotland, Ma'am. You, too, Miss Bennett. The Captain is in the hanger – please go aboard."

"You bucking for promotion, Petty Officer?" A familiar voice called down from the flight deck as we headed aboard.

"Always, Captain!" The Petty Officer called back.

Chloe grabbed hold of her Dad and gave him a big hug.

"Hi, pumpkin!" Commander Ryan Bennett laughed, hugging his daughter back.

"Less of the 'pumpkin', Daddy!" Chloe growled.

"Of course... Pumpkin!" Commander Bennett laughed as Chloe glowered up at her father.

"You ready, Captain?" I asked, steering the conversation away from Chloe and orange fruit.

The Atlantic Storm

Ryan Bennett stood on the capacious bridge for a moment, studying the electronic chart on the computer screen. He checked the engines; both were throbbing away at idle. He moved out onto the port wing and engaged the port manoeuvring controls. From there he could conn the large yacht out of her mooring while still being able to see the dock. Dave was beside him, watching and learning. I sat on the cushioned seat ahead of the bridge, taking in the view around Miami. Chloe and Josh appeared along with Abby. Chloe and Abby each wore a skimpy bikini with Josh in shorts and a t-shirt. All were barefoot.

"Mindy, why is there a foreign flag flying from the back of the boat?" Chloe asked.

"Where do we start?" I laughed. "First the back of the boat is the 'stern' and the 'flag' is an 'ensign'. Normally I would prefer to fly the Stars and Stripes, however, for various reasons that I am not going into now, I opted to go for a so-called 'flag of convenience'. That ensign hanging off our stern right now, is the Red Ensign of Gibraltar."

"Gibraltar is a British Overseas Territory on the south coast of Spain, Chloe," Abby explained.

"I know that!" Chloe responded tartly and her Dad chuckled.

Four hours later

45 miles east of Long Key

We were all gathered on the Sun Deck, apart from Ryan who was on the Bridge.

Danny, Stephanie, Tommy and Anne-Marie were playing a card game at the table while Josh, Megan, Curtis and Chloe were chatting on the sun loungers. Dave was in the galley with Cathy and Abby, preparing dinner. I had offered to help, but Cathy had made a scathing comment about my cooking abilities and I had stormed out of the galley in disgust.

It was really good to see everybody having fun, no more fighting, just the sun, the warmth of the breeze and the open sea. Everybody had a chance to be themselves for a change and we could forget about being stabbed, shot at and punched. That was most important for the pre-teen members of Fusion.

..._...

Everybody had been instructed by Ryan on the SOLAS, or Safety of Life at Sea, regulations. Everybody was issued with a lifejacket suitable for their body size and where spare ones were stowed. Instructions were given on how to abandon ship in an emergency. Anne-Marie and Stephanie actually received a telling off from Ryan for not taking it seriously enough.

We also covered other equipment such as the GMDSS, EPIRBs and SARTs. Dave had passed exams in all that stuff, I was still learning. The GMDSS (Global Maritime Distress and Safety System) allowed our position to be pinpointed by satellite if we got into trouble and the vessel was sinking, all with the press of a single red button on a console at the rear of the bridge. Everybody was shown this button and how to activate it – it was protected by a plastic orange cover labelled DISTRESS. The EPIRBs and SARTs were devices to help searches pinpoint our position via satellite (EPIRB) or radar (SART).

We would be out of sight of land for much of the cruise, so knowing what to do in an emergency was essential for all on board. We covered the fire alarm, the general alarm (seven short blasts and one long blast on the ship's horn) and most importantly the man overboard alarm (three long blasts on the ship's horn).

..._...

We had demonstrated the man overboard drill a couple of hours out of Miami.

It was both an important thing to learn and a bit of fun, too. Ryan ordered everybody to don their lifejackets and muster on the Aft Bridge Deck. After checking that everybody was correctly attired, I turned to everybody.

"Right, now you all have your lifejackets on, we can practice our man overboard drill," I suggested.

"Oh, you can fuck right off!" Josh growled, backing away from me. He had been used on the Salty Swallow for our drill.

Unfortunately for him, he backed into Dave who picked him up and threw him overboard, somewhat effortlessly. Most laughed at Josh as he swore violently before he hit the water with a huge splash. I seized one of the ship's telephones and punched the tannoy button.

"Man overboard, port side!"

Immediately the ship's horn sounded three long blasts and the helm was thrown over to port, taking our churning propellers away from the bobbing Joshua.

Chloe and Megan laughed, but Anne-Marie, Stephanie and Danny, looked a little shocked at Josh being thrown overboard.

"Now, kids, keep an eye on Joshua – the inflated orange life jacket makes him easy to pick out," I directed. "We have two options; we could perform a Williamson turn, which would bring us back on a reciprocal course or we could just turn and head directly back towards him, as he is still in sight."

"Cool!" Danny commented.

"Let's go get Josh – he should be suitably damp by now!"

..._...

I headed forward onto the bridge and stood beside Ryan who was looking through some binoculars as he span the wheel and adjusted the throttles.

"I don't think he likes you!"

"What do you mean?"

"My lip reading skills are a bit rusty, but I think he just said: 'I – fucking – hate – you – Mindy!'"

"He loves me really!" I laughed.

Ryan expertly manoeuvred the Atlantic Storm onto a new course taking us into a position where the winds and currents would bring Josh to us. Finally, Ryan cut the engines to ensure that Josh was not sucked into our propellers and chopped into fish food! I jogged back aft to watch as the rather annoyed looking Josh, who was gently bobbing up and down in his brightly coloured life jacket, came closer. I went below to the Swim Platform and lowered a ladder. Josh swam over and climbed out of the Atlantic Ocean. A smirking Chloe came down and handed the dripping Josh a towel.

"Bloody funny!" Josh said with a scowl.

..._...

Dinner that night was in the Main Salon as we lay hove to, so all thirteen of us could eat together. We had a good meal of steak, egg and chips for the first night aboard. Danny and Curtis were teasing Anne-Marie about her chucking up her breakfast the last time she was on a boat, which ended up getting a bit rowdy when Megan stuck up for Anne-Marie and told the two boys where to stick it in her usual, rather forceful and crudely descriptive manner!

Josh was teased mercilessly about his dip too, which gave everybody something to laugh about.

That night

All but Ryan and Tommy were in bed.

They had the First Watch until midnight. We would arrive in Nassau at approximately ten that night. Dave and I would be in the bridge for our arrival in a little over two hours. With a bit of pushing I managed to get Danny and Anne-Marie into their cabin and into bed. They were both overexcited about their first proper cruise at sea. I made them promise to remain in their cabin and not go up on deck without me or Dave.

Next, I checked in on the two lovebirds – they had already started their carnal activates, so I left them to it! Next, I headed forward and down to the crew's quarters to check on the remaining pre-teens. They were all in their bunks, which was a surprise. They were all tired, even though they weren't ready to admit it, but the gentle rolling of the yacht, despite her stabilisers, had them nodding off in no time.

Once all four were asleep I headed to the Owner's Suite and found Dave in bed awaiting my arrival. I kicked off my sandals and dropped my bikini bottoms, top and t-shirt.

"Damn you look hot, Mrs Lizewski!" Dave murmured.

"Well, Mr Lizewski, I want you to make me so much hotter!"

Dave and I were awoken by the anchor, as it plunged down into the water.

It was dark as we both joined Ryan and Tommy on the bridge. Ryan passed us both a coffee from the large pot on the table.

"All quiet, ma'am!" Ryan chuckled.

"Thank you, captain!" I replied with a smirk.

Ryan showed Dave and I where we were on the chart and explained the anchoring procedure. Tommy was packed off to bed while the three of us checked that all was secure and we shut down the engines.

Ryan went off to join his wife in bed, while Dave and I went back to our own stateroom, looking forward to some fun, the following morning.

Dawn broke warm and pleasant.

I opened my eyes to see my husband looking back at me, a big grin on his face. However, before we could consider doing anything, the door to the stateroom burst open and Anne-Marie ran in and jumped on the bed.

The seven-year-old was dressed in her one-piece swimsuit, but with shorts and t-shirt over the top – she was barefoot.

"You look happy, this morning," I commented.

"It's beautiful out there!" The little girl exclaimed.

I had to agree with her, the view out of the starboard windows was awesome and the sunlight streamed in indicating a beautiful day.

"Come on, Dave – time to get up!"

"Oh, Cathy said coffee is on and breakfast should be ready in half an hour," Anne-Marie said as she bolted for the door.

I went to check on the others.

..._...

Chloe looked very pleased with herself as she emerged from her den of iniquity that morning and I noticed some marks on her neck.

"Please tell me that you did not bring that damn collar?"

Chloe smirked.

"I would never lie to you..."

"Well, I wish you would – ewww!"

"What's ewww?" Megan asked appearing in the lobby.

I was about to say 'nothing' when Chloe grinned fiendishly.

"You remember that collar which Mindy threatened you with – you know; the strip naked and be a bitch collar?" Chloe chuckled.

"Vividly!" Megan replied with a painful grimace which had Chloe laughing before Megan then turned on Mindy. "I can't believe you told Chloe about that, you bitch!"

"You sure you don't want to dress down for us?" The fifteen-year-old teased.

"No!" Megan growled back, blushing furiously.

"I wouldn't mind seeing you in only a dog collar, Mindy..." Josh commented with a grin, joining the conversation.

"Well, I wouldn't mind seeing somebody ripping off your dick and balls!" I replied with a smirk. "Somehow, I don't see that happening, either..."

"Moving on..." Josh said smoothly as he headed for the Galley and breakfast.

The Galley

I was impressed!

Cathy must have been up for ages – there was a virtual mountain of food on the table and Josh dived straight in. The other kids appeared, one by one, looking tired, but amazed at the view out of the windows. Outside, it was hot, however inside, with the air conditioning, it was comfortable.

Off to the south, about a mile away, was Nassau, the capital and largest city of the Bahamas, and the towering hotels of Paradise Island. Around us were several other mega-yachts, all at anchor. I grabbed a coffee and a plate of food before heading up to the Sun Deck, the highest point on the Atlantic Storm.

I found Ryan already there, with his nephew.

"Morning, Ryan, Curtis."

"A lovely day, Mindy!" Ryan replied.

"I've never seen anything like it..." Curtis commented.

"Plenty more to see, son, plenty more..." Ryan added.

Breakfast was fun, and a good chance for everybody to chat and enjoy the hot sun and perfect view over the azure waters of the Caribbean. Curtis apparently, had enjoyed ensuring that Megan was thoroughly covered in sun screen – he had been slapped, though, when he thought that the skin covered by her bikini top also needed sunscreen! Surprisingly, Stephanie had allowed Tommy to do her back and shoulders – without maiming him. Anne-Marie had thought that Curtis' behaviour and the fact that Megan had enjoyed it, was thoroughly disgusting!

"I'll bear that in mind when you are wrapped around some boy, in a few years' time!" Megan retorted, receiving a scowl from the younger girl.

..._...

After breakfast, we opened up the boat garage at the stern and put our tender in the water.

The fifteen-foot Castoldi Jet Tender, in white and dark blue, slid gently into the water. The tender was capable of over thirty knots and could carry seven people. The propulsion was provided by a single 110-hp, diesel engine which powered a waterjet at the stern. This had the advantage of there being no propeller to be worried about in shallow water, or when beaching the tender.

At the tender's maximum speed, we would have fuel for just over three and a half hours.

I went out with Chloe, Megan, Anne-Marie, Stephanie, Danny, Curtis and Josh. It was the first time out for the tender, so we needed to thoroughly test it. We all wore compact inflatable life-jackets – just in case.

"You know how to use that life-jacket, don't you, Josh?" Megan teased.

"Would you like to test yours?" Josh growled back with an evil smirk. "Right now?"

"Err, no thanks, Joshua..." Megan replied with an uneasy grin, swapping seats with Stephanie, to get further away from Josh.

"Does this boat have a name, Mom?" Danny asked.

"Yes, this tender has a name: Tempest."

Tempest

We bounced over the waves at around twenty knots, passing between other yachts and enjoying the cooling breeze and salt-water spray as we moved.

Everybody was holding on tight as the ride was 'active' to say the least! After several fun minutes, I slowed to allow Chloe a turn at the helm – she took off like a bitch in heat, which was not altogether surprising considering Chloe's love of speed and we rapidly exceeded thirty knots.

All of the kids loved it!

For a bit of fun, we headed towards Paradise Island and ran the tender into the shallow water and we all went onto the beach and enjoyed the feeling of the hot sand between our toes. None of us had experienced such beauty as there was on that beach. Beautiful sand and azure waters that were warm and clear.

All of the kids learnt very quickly not to drink the salty water as a massive water fight erupted – mainly caused by Chloe and we were all very quickly soaked, not that it mattered as the hot sun rapidly dried us off. Josh was able to find us some enormous ice creams which went a long way to refreshing us before we pushed the tender off beach and headed back towards the Atlantic Storm.

It would have been great to spend more time on the Bahamas, but we were on a tight schedule – maybe on the return trip. As we circled our floating home, I got in some really good, high quality photos and video. Dave and Cathy were waving at us as we cruised past – I also noticed that Dave was holding a camera and he videoed us too.

I hoped to have many happy mementoes of our first family holiday.

Chapter 228*: The Bahamas

That morning
Sunday

10:00

The Atlantic Storm

The fun was cut off rather abruptly as we approached ten o'clock.

By then, everybody had had a go at driving the tender. We needed to get underway and head south, towards Antigua. Once the tender was safely stowed in its garage and the door closed and sealed, we completed preparations to weigh anchor.

Every hatch, was checked and double-checked. Every rope and cable, was checked and double-checked. Once all the necessary checks had been completed, and only then, the engines were started. Just one rope wrapped around a propeller at that point, could wreck the entire cruise. The twin diesel engines throbbed away ready to propel the Atlantic Storm through the calm azure waters.

..._...

At exactly 10:00, the anchor lifted off the sea bottom and I gently eased the twin throttles forward and span the wheel to starboard, taking us onto an easterly heading. Ahead of the bridge, I could see the Portuguese bridge settee crammed with Steph, Anne-Marie, Chloe, Abby and Megan, all enjoying the view and the cool breeze as we left Nassau, heading north-east to round Eleuthera.

Behind me, Ryan and Cathy were enjoying a beer and a glass of white wine, respectively, as they sat on the couch with Dave and Josh. Tommy and Curtis were visible on the bow, in the eyes of the ship, as far forward as they could get.

As we left the lee of the land, we began to pitch and the yacht casually absorbed the waves, the twin gyroscopic stabilisers keeping her on an even keel. We increased speed to twenty knots and I could not help smiling – everything was just perfect. Nothing could ruin our holiday; I had my family and my friends with me.

I was in heaven.

Two hours later

12:00

20nm northeast of Spanish Wells on Eleuthera
Position: 25.6525° N 76.9160° W
Course: 032°, Speed: 20 knots, 185nm logged

It was midday and my turn on watch.

On watch with me, I had Stephanie, while Mindy relaxed above us on the Sun Deck, in the Jacuzzi with Chloe and Abby. Ryan was on hand if required, but he too was enjoying some down time with his wife on the bow – you don't want to know! Half an hour later, we turned onto a new course of 095° and I put Stephanie to work, plotting our position on the chart and learning some nautical navigation. She was bright, despite only being nine and picked up quickly on the complexities of longitude, latitude and how to plot a position using a compass rose and parallel rules. The Atlantic Storm had every modern electronic navigation system available and they were bang up to date, but Ryan thought it important that everybody should know how to navigate with a paper chart – paper charts did not break down!

A little over an hour later, we were turning southeast onto a course of 136° – Stephanie proved very competent at the helm, too.

..._...

Cathy, Ryan and Chloe brought us lunch and stayed with us while we ate.

While we were talking, Cathy and I both noticed Chloe slowly and stealthily reaching for a bottle of Budweiser...

"Did I ever tell you about Chloe, when she was twelve?" Cathy asked me, pretending that she had not noticed.

Chloe froze.

"No," I replied, sensing a good story.

"It was the first time she ever had alcohol..."

Chloe scowled and withdrew her hand from the bottle of beer. Cathy smirked as she continued speaking.

"Ryan was at sea and I was at home with young Chloe... Late one evening, I heard singing from upstairs – but I thought nothing of it, until Chloe's bedroom door burst open and she came prancing out and stood at the top of the stairs, shouting for me.

"Well, I went to the bottom of the stairs and looked up... There was Chloe standing with her hands on her hips, staring down at me – only she was completely naked! Now, back then, Chloe did not have a figure – in fact she did not have much of anything, let alone hips for that matter."

Chloe was going very pink in the face, but she kept her mouth shut as her father smirked in her direction. I nodded for Cathy to continue.

"Well, Chloe started to come down the stairs, but when she only had two steps to go, she fell and sprawled at the bottom of the stairs, ending up on her back... She lay there giggling for about five minutes before she jumped up and bolted for the bathroom where she promptly and spectacularly threw up! She promised me then that she would never touch alcohol again!"

"Not my finest moment..." Chloe muttered.

"A certain young lady learnt something that day, didn't she?" Ryan commented.

"Yes, she did..." Chloe confirmed.

..._...

At 16:00, Chloe and Megan came on watch.

Ryan was there to watch the handover. Chloe had learnt navigation and boat handling from a young age, so she was entrusted to stand a watch, with Megan to assist.

"Course: one three six degrees. Speed: twenty knots," Stephanie advised Chloe. "No issues, no traffic."

"Thank you, Steph – you are relieved."

"Cool – I need to get a tan!" Stephanie said quickly as she departed the bridge at speed.

"You two behave, now!" I warned as I followed Stephanie.

"Yes, Dave – all under control," Chloe chuckled and Megan rolled her eyes.

"I'll make sure Chloe doesn't get drunk!" Megan said with a scowl at Chloe.

I found Mindy in the Jacuzzi, chatting with Abby and Cathy.

They waved for me to join them and it felt glorious being able to snuggle up to my wife and I gave her a very deep kiss – much to somebody's discomfort!

"Ewww!" Stephanie moaned as she slid in beside Mindy. "God, it's only been four hours since you last saw each other!"

Ryan laughed as he appeared on the deck and heard Stephanie's comment. He began to prepare the grill, to the starboard side of the Sun Deck for an early dinner. He also passed his wife a chilled glass of white wine, which she gratefully accepted. Mindy and I each received a beer. Abby and Stephanie had cold Cokes with ice.

..._...

Our tranquillity was destroyed when there was a violent ear-splitting scream from aft and I turned to see Anne-Marie berating her brother who had just emptied a bucket of cold water over his sister – with the help of Curtis. Tommy was laughing fit to burst.

"Boys!" Anne-Marie exclaimed before sliding into the Jacuzzi next to Stephanie.

"It's getting a bit packed in here," Cathy observed. "I need to go get the meat out of the fridge."

While Cathy headed down the steps to the galley, I laid back and enjoyed the view. There were a few other vessels about, some large container ships and a few yachts of varying sizes, but nothing came close and our gentle rolling on the waves went uninterrupted. I must have dozed off as I soon found Mindy prodding me and I could smell steaks cooking on the grill a few feet away.

..._...

"Looks good – I assume Chloe hasn't collided with anything..." I quipped.

"No, they seem to be doing well; they turned onto a course of 142°, heading between Rum Cay and San Salvador, a few minutes ago – although I think Megan is getting a little annoyed with her instructor!" Mindy replied, indicating the deck below.

I listened and I could hear Megan complaining bitterly and loudly, while Chloe told Megan that her markings on the chart were 'a load of shit!' Chloe could be a real bitch when she wanted to be, but I also knew that Megan was very keen to learn how to navigate, so she took Chloe's bitching, like the bitch that she herself was.

The steaks were done, as was an enormous pile of salad and other delicacies from the Galley.

Curtis took a pair of steaks below for the two girls on watch who, it seemed, were very hungry and desperate for some food! I had to admit that I was quite surprised that Megan and Chloe had not fought while on watch together. Sometimes the two of them wound each other up, with bad results. However, at that moment, I was impressed; both could be very professional when the need arose.

An enormous cruise ship passed us, heading north at a distance of two miles and we could see a lot of people waving at us and we waved back. Other than that, we were very much alone as we continued to head south. Which turned out to be good as Curtis and Josh had decided to see how loud they could get the almost five-figure sound system in the Main Salon!

..._...

Everybody aboard was soon dancing to Duran Duran and the track: 'Hungry like the wolf' – hey, it was an awesome song with cool lyrics. I may only have been an egg at the time when it came out, but I loved 80s music and, so it seemed, did almost everybody else. Anne-Marie was not too amused at first, but she soon got into the music and enjoyed dancing about like a lunatic!

Chloe thought it was incredibly embarrassing when her Father appeared on the bridge – dancing!

It then got worse as Josh went on to play the uncensored version of the Beautiful South and 'Don't Marry Her'... That did not exactly help as Danny, along with Curtis and Tommy, took great joy in following Josh's example and using the original wording: 'Don't marry her, fuck me', while Anne-Marie wanted to know what 'sweaty bollocks' were...!

..._...

The ever perceptive Josh seemed to notice that Dave and I were not impressed by his choices of music, so he selected a tune that he knew would calm me down – cunt!

'Now, I've had the time of...'

I smiled at Josh and he shrugged before he headed up to the bridge. There, as I understand it, he began dancing, somewhat provocatively, with Chloe – which freaked out Megan more than a little! Me, I just clung to Dave and we enjoyed the track.

I had to admit that on the cruise, I was having '...the time of my life...'

That night

20:00

Midway between Ponta Guarico, Cuba and Southwest Point, Inagua Islands

Position: 23.6098° N 74.4365° W

Course: 142°, Speed: 20 knots, 387nm logged

At 20:00, the helm was put over and we turned 45° to starboard and onto a new course of 187°, to pass between Long Island and Crooked Island.

It was a perfect night and I was standing watch with Tommy. The light was fading, but we still had very good visibility. I hoped that my steak and the beer that I had drunk at dinner would not put me to sleep during my watch!

It was awesome being out in what was almost total darkness. Tommy and I were both fascinated by the stars above us; they seemed larger and brighter for some reason. Apart from keeping an eye on the radar and our position, we both enjoyed identifying the formations of stars – it kept us awake too.

Tommy, despite the boy only being two months short of his twelfth birthday, was interesting to talk to. His childhood had been ripped apart too. His kidnapping had forced him to learn new skills very rapidly so that he could survive. The kid continuously impressed me with his skills and I enjoyed sparring with him as he often liked to fight dirty, which gave me a challenge.

We whiled away the hours until midnight chatting and laughing – Tommy also knew some very crude jokes! We were both looking forward to when we could go to our beds.

Chapter 229*: At Sea

The following morning
Monday

20nm west of Crooked Island
Position: 22.2777° N 72.6209° W
Course: 187°, Speed: 20 knots, 467nm logged

At midnight, Cathy and I took over the watch from Mindy and Tommy.

I gave Mindy a big hug as she went below to bed – she looked very tired; Tommy too. We both settled down to another watch at sea. Cathy enjoyed the night – she said it was peaceful. At a little after one in the morning, we turned southeast onto a course of 154° heading towards the eastern tip of Cuba – we were also joined by another body for the watch.

"Can I join you guys? Please."

"Feel free, Steph," I replied. "Can't sleep?"

"I'm still getting used to all of this, Dave – it's not easy..."

"No action, is that it?" Cathy asked with a smile.

"Something like that – the past few years have been all go, with very little down time... and now, all of a sudden, I can be a normal child and enjoy myself... I can never get rid of that other part of me, but at least that is not all my life is... Does that make sense?"

"Yes, I suppose it does," I replied, offering the young girl a Coke.

"Thanks."

Whatever Stephanie was, she was always polite. She was also a cold killer and we had seen her in action – only the once, but we knew that she was capable of killing with as little emotion as Hit Girl. The rest of us actually felt emotions when we killed and we fought them constantly, but Hit Girl and Psyche; they were different, from a psychological point of view at least.

I left Stephanie and Cathy talking out on the port bridge wing while I updated our position on the chart.

At five that morning, we were passing between the eastern tip of Cuba and the Inagua Islands. Fifteen minutes later, we altered course to the east, onto a course of 092° to bypass the Dominican Republic, Puerto Rico and the British Virgin Islands.

We had a full day at sea, plus most of the following morning.

..._...

Despite us being on holiday, I was not about to let my fitness lapse.

Each and every morning, before breakfast, I did my exercises before heading up to the Galley to eat. I also tried to spend at least an hour each day on some Taekwondo, which was safe when Anne-Marie and Danny were around. I would have loved to have been able to get some weapons practice, but that was not possible – no weapons would come out during the cruise.

When I practised, others joined me – sometimes Megan and Stephanie, sometimes Josh and Chloe and even Anne-Marie and Abby! It gave us all an appetite and also built up a sweat.

..._...

That morning, after breakfast, I signalled for Dave to cut the engines and we lay hove to, gently rocking on the waves. We were alone, with no other ships visible. I ordered everybody to come aft on the Main Deck – for some reason Josh hung back, well away from me!

"Time for some fun – who has noticed the large 'item' on the aft end of the Bridge Deck?"

"I did!" Curtis called out with a grin – he knew what it was; he'd peeked.

"Anybody else...?"

I was interrupted by the hum of hydraulics and electric motors as the coaming at the rear of the Sun Deck opened and a telescopic crane made its appearance. The crane jib swung aft under the control of Ryan, lowering the steel cable with a hook at the end, towards the Bridge Deck where Dave attached the hook to a four-point sling on my newest toy.

"Damn!" Megan breathed as the, jet black metallic and deep pewter satin, watercraft was lowered over the side and into the water.

Once floating alongside, I reached out and secured the painter to a cleat. I smiled hugely as Dave appeared beside me at the stern.

..._...

"What is it?" Danny asked, looking at the new arrival as we launched the Tempest too.

"That, is the Twister," I explained. "Twister, is a 295-horsepower, 3.5-metre jet ski that can carry three people at over sixty miles-per-hour..."

"She insisted on speed and went for the 1,600-cc engine!" Dave said with a grimace. "Now, I am going to take the Tempest – who wants to ride with Mindy?"

Two nutcases raised their hands.

Fifteen minutes later, I was racing over the waves at over forty miles-per-hour.

Behind me, I had Chloe and Stephanie. Both were holding on very tight! Fifty yards away, Tempest raced around – we were much faster, so we ran in a large circle around Tempest and Atlantic Storm. Speed! It was awesome. Behind me, I could hear Chloe giggling and laughing, along with Stephanie who was doing much the same.

I took every opportunity to jump over the waves, crashing down again and riding up the next. The spray was cool in the hot sun and I was enjoying myself. As we swept past Tempest, I saw the smiling faces and the laughter. That was what everybody needed – time to be a kid, time to be a teenager – time to have fun...

The holiday was perfect.

Mindy was fucking nuts!

I held on as tight as I could – you could say, for dear life; quite literally! My arms were wrapped very tightly around Chloe's waist and the teenager was giggling fit to burst, with the odd scream thrown in as we periodically crashed down into the water.

I just prayed that I would live long enough to see my tenth birthday!

I was seriously worried about my wife.

She had gone completely nuts over power and speed!

I knew that she was skilled and that she had excellent reflexes, however she often pushed things too far and... I trusted her, but I also knew her – very well... I angled Tempest towards the speed freak on Twister and moved to intercept.

Not an easy task, Twister was far more manoeuvrable than Tempest and Mindy was not making it an easy intercept, either!

I had to be careful as I did not want to empty my six passengers out into the open ocean. I kept Tempest on an even keel as much as possible, but Twister still had the edge and Mindy knew what she was doing. I had to outwit Mindy if I wanted to gain the upper hand.

"Hold on!" I called to my passengers.

I received yells of acknowledgement and excitement as I increased the throttle and executed a sequence of manoeuvres that tricked Mindy into thinking we were moving to port when we were actually heading to starboard and we soon found ourselves in a position to cut her off.

Mindy wisely decided to call it a day, rather than risk anybody getting hurt.

At eight that night, we were passing north of the Dominican Republic.

It was my first nighttime watch and I was more than a little bit nervous, however I trusted Chloe and knew that despite our rivalry, she would help me get things right. We often argued and teased each other and I knew that I got on her nerves which had resulted in us fighting, on more than one occasion.

As Chloe updated our position, half an hour after we came on watch, I asked her a question.

"Chloe... I..."

Chloe turned and smiled at me.

"Spit it out, Megan."

"Why do I antagonise you?"

Chloe grinned and sat down on the couch, patting the seat beside her.

"When you first appeared, I saw you as a threat – another girl who was surprisingly good at what she did."

I felt myself blushing at the hidden compliment, but let Chloe continue.

"I also saw a lot of me, in you. When I was younger, about nine I suppose, I was a major bitch and I often went out of my way to piss people off – I enjoyed it, seeing the reaction that I had caused. It wasn't until a couple of years later that I began to see the hurt that I caused by my acting out. I suppose that I didn't want you to go the same way.

"I have the utmost respect for what you do, Megan, and I would fight by your side, any day, any place... Despite the way that I often treat you, I see you as a younger sister and a very good friend. You have saved my life on more than one occasion, Megan and to be honest, sometimes I am jealous of you..."

"What?" I exclaimed, stunned at that revelation – the famous Shadow was jealous of little Wildcat!

"Just don't go spreading it around – I have a reputation to uphold."

I grinned back at my friend.

At midnight, Dave and I climbed up to the Bridge.

For once, we were together on watch.

"You two get to bed and don't wake anybody!" I said to the two girls as they headed below.

Megan turned and grinned at me.

"I hope you two are going to behave..."

"I always behave, little Megan," I replied with a wink.

Megan grimaced and ran after Chloe.

"You are going to behave I assume?" Dave enquired.

"Are you...?" I teased, walking around the Bridge and locking each access door.

"Navigation first – play later..."

"Horseshit!" I replied as I gently released the clips on my bikini top and allowed it to fall to the deck.

Dave just shook his head and rubbed his eyes with his left hand. I also noticed a growing bulge in his shorts as I stepped out of my own. It felt kind of weird to be standing completely naked on the Bridge, but who gave a shit!

..._...

I sat on the back of the couch while Dave dropped his shorts to the deck and then pulled off his t-shirt in one swift movement. He was definitely ready and as hard as he ever got. He gently ran his hands over my bare chest and I yelped when his rough, manly palms rubbed over my hyper-sensitive and very erect nipples. I kissed my husband on the lips deeply and passionately while his left hand made its way downwards, across my stomach. I tingled all over as I felt his fingers running down through my pubic hair and towards my engorged, and very ready, labia.

His very touch had my heart racing and my breathing increasing like I had just fought a major battle against a hundred ninjas. My increasing arousal was intoxicating and I began to forget that I was on a mega-yacht, with eleven other people onboard, fast asleep below. All that mattered, was me and Dave, everything else came a distant second at that moment.

Dave also enjoyed my initial stages of arousal as my breasts enlarged and my heart raced, just as much as I did. I always began to moan – I couldn't help it! My hips would move, totally unbidden, as his ministrations put my body on auto-pilot and up on the proverbial cloud nine. My insides, especially my lower regions, felt like live grenades were exploding within me. Then I was struck by sensations that made me feel like I was being Tasered. I could do nothing but arch my back over the couch and then it hit me full strength and...

I screamed and I screamed.

..._...

As I was coming down from my cloud nine, I was suddenly very thankful that there was an entire deck between us and everybody else who was sleeping! I kissed my husband like I had never kissed him before and then, it was my turn to return the favour once my I was able to breathe again.

I sank down onto my knees – mainly because my legs wouldn't support me, but also as I needed to, and I gave Dave the best damn blow-job he had ever had.

Damn – Mindy was on a roll that night.

Her perspiration covered skin reflected the red lighting that illuminated the bridge and it made her look somewhat sinister, naked and bathed in red light. She may have been Hit Girl, she may have been Mindy, but right at that moment, she was my wife. Her orgasm had been epic, one of her best, and I felt very pleased for causing it... Now she was determined to return the favour and Mindy being Mindy – well, she was never to be outdone!

Her lips wrapped around me and she took me in deep before gently pulling back and licking me from top to bottom, concentrating on the more sensitive areas and I felt my legs beginning to weaken as she picked up speed. I closed my eyes, visualising her supple but muscular body, bathed in sweat. I had a feeling that I was the only person in the world that Mindy would actually kneel down before – willingly at least...

..._...

I suddenly had the weirdest thought – what if we had a collision right then, right at that moment? I could visualise the court of enquiry: '... and what were you doing at the time of the collision, Mr Lizewski?'

My answer? It would have to be truth...

'Fingering my wife to an explosive orgasm and then receiving the best damn blow-job known to man!'

I actually laughed and accidentally drove myself further into Mindy's mouth which made her choke for a moment. She glanced up at me for a moment her eyes wide, but then she smirked before eagerly returning to her meal.

I had no problem with the deep-throat part – it was just a bit of a surprise...

What Dave was laughing about while I had him in my mouth, I had absolutely no idea – however, if he was happy, then so was I... At that moment, I had the weirdest thought – what if somebody walked in on us? Would I continue, or would I stop? Hey, I was Hit Girl – I'd just keep on blowing!

I sensed that Dave was struggling to stand as I ran my tongue around the top of his cock, enjoying the saltiness of his pre-cum and I could feel the blood throbbing inside him as it kept him hard. He was moaning and groaning, his hips moving rhythmically with my head as I moved up and down him.

Then I felt it, a small tremor, and then another – Dave was about to blow...

..._...

It felt like a flamethrower had just hit the back of my throat – the liquid actually burnt! There was an awful lot of the salty, but sweet tasting fluid as it continued to pump up into my mouth. I swallowed as much of the liquid as fast as I could but I still felt some oozing out between my lips and dribbling down my chin. Dave pulled himself away from my mouth and I swallowed the last of him, licking my lips clean.

He sank to the deck of the Bridge behind the couch and did his best to control his breathing which was heavy to say the least. I giggled at the sight of my husband struggling to breathe.

I was very proud of myself.

At ten to four that morning, the aft Bridge door opened and Cathy strode in with Abby.

Cathy sniffed the air, gazed over at Dave and I, then grimaced at Abby.

"Dirty bastards!" The fifteen-year-old girl growled as she scowled at us both.

"What?"

"Don't play innocent with me, girl," Cathy chuckled. "The Bridge stinks of sex!"

I sniffed the air myself, not detecting anything out of the ordinary. It must be the doctor in Cathy.

"Smells like my daughter's apartment..." Cathy added.

I felt myself blushing and decided to go find Cathy some coffee. Dave just smirked. As I returned, I heard Cathy talking.

"Was it good?"

"The best!" Dave replied and I felt myself grinning from ear to ear.

"Well, Mindy seems to be positively floating across the deck!" Cathy commented.

At 09:00, after breakfast, we reduced speed to twenty knots and rendezvoused with USS Churchill.

It was the first chance that Ryan had had to check on his Command. It took a couple of hours from first sighting the destroyer, to us coming together and cruising on a course of 130° together. The destroyer smoothly and expertly pulled alongside and adjusted her speed to keep pace two-hundred yards to starboard.

We exchanged courtesy messages over the radio while Ryan used the satellite phone to get a more in depth update from his Executive Officer, Lieutenant Commander Wes Edwards.

USS Churchill

"Fuck me!" The sailor commented. "The one in the blue and white bikini has some awesome curves!"

"Let me see!"

The two sailors jostled for the mounted 'Big Eye' binoculars – the second sailor forced his mate off and glued his own eyes to the lenses.

"You're right – awesome tits and curves... What have we here? Another girl in a purple number – she looks damn fuckable – hold on blue and white girl is lying down on the sun-pad, tits down... She's untying her top..."

"Watch boring you?" Came a voice from behind.

..._...

The two sailors span around to see their worst nightmare.

"Morning, XO, sir!" The two sailors called out, standing at attention as the Executive Office put his eyes to their binoculars.

After a few seconds, the officer stood up and turned to the two unfortunate sailors.

"You two wouldn't be ogling the Skipper's semi-naked daughter now, would you? Nor the Skipper's semi-naked and very close friend?"

"No XO!"

"Get back to work!"

Mindy and I took the opportunity to top up our tan on the Sun Deck.

I had selected my most revealing bikini and received a very disapproving scowl from my father for wearing it – he knew, as I did, that there were 348 enlisted sailors and 31 officers two-hundred yards away.

I wanted no tan lines, so I opted to undo my bikini top for that all over tan. Josh appeared and he readily rubbed in some sun block – I did not want to get burnt! Mindy also allowed him to do the same with her back – Josh actually looked very uneasy; I think he expected Mindy to attack him...

I was pleased for Daddy – he missed his ship, but I knew that he was enjoying the time with Mom and me, plus Curtis. I was enjoying the extra time with Daddy; it was special and I knew that Mom was overjoyed at the extra time she had with her husband.

The cruise was perfect and it benefited everybody – we could all let our hair down and just be kids for a change. We had left all the trouble behind, in Chicago. Nobody was shooting at us; nobody was getting injured – we were in paradise.

..._...

I had been worried about my best friend, Mindy.

The past few months had been very difficult for her. As I gazed over at my friend, dozing happily in the sun, I was able to visualise all the times that she had been in pain, both physically and mentally. I had shared her pain when Marcus had been shot; the anger that she had felt in Gotham when Megan and Curtis had been injured. The sadness when she had taken custody of Anne-Marie and Danny after their father had been killed. We had all shared the pain when Paige had been shot down and we had all stood beside Megan and Marcus during their pain.

Mindy had almost lost another, a hundred stories up above Chicago – Stephanie had survived what had to have been the scariest night of her life and Mindy had adopted the girl. Mindy now had two families – her own and Fusion. I felt great pride at being such a close and personal friend to Mindy – it was almost two years since we had first met and I never regretted a moment.

We stayed with the American warship until 15:00 when we altered course for the last time towards our ultimate destination, Antigua.

We had arrived!

Atlantic Storm entered Deepwater Harbour at a little after seven, that evening. To port, moored alongside the dock we could see HMS Dragon. We came around and went alongside, starboard side to the dock and facing the sea, about a hundred or so yards from the destroyer's bow. The 500-foot British warship towered above our meagre 120-foot yacht. Ahead of us were two giant cruise ships, moored at the head of the harbour.

As soon as we were secured and satisfied the Customs Officers, Abby was left in charge of the little monsters while the senior crew members got changed for that evening's activities.

The Type 45 Destroyer, HMS Dragon

The three-year-old, five-hundred-foot destroyer was festooned with flags and bunting from bow to stern and bright floodlights lit up her hull from the waterside. On the dock there was a small Royal Marines band playing some gentle music as people arrived. At the base of the gangway a very smart and well-armed Royal Marine stood guard. Beside him were two sailors armed with L85A2 assault rifles and Glock 17 pistols; evidently, the Royal Navy took their security seriously.

After showing our invitations, we were waved up the gangway towards the flight deck at the stern of the warship. At the top of the gangway we were met by a Royal Navy Lieutenant in a short-sleeved white bush jacket, matching trousers and white leather shoes.

"Lieutenant Lawrence. Welcome aboard Her Majesty's Ship Dragon, Mrs Lizewski, Mr Lizewski."

"Good evening, Lieutenant, we meet at last," I replied, offering my right hand which Lawrence took and kissed! I blushed – I had never had my hand kissed before.

"Mr Lizewski," Lieutenant Lawrence greeted with a shake of Dave's hand – Dave seemed somewhat relieved! "Mr Williams, Miss Bennett; welcome aboard. This way please."

..._...

We were escorted into an enormous marquee that had been erected on the even bigger flight deck. Inside there were tables of drinks and some food. The marquee had been decorated with flags and I could see through into the capacious hanger, in one corner of which was one of the ship's two Wildcat attack helicopters. I had noticed a twin at the far aft corner of the flight deck outside the marquee, as we had come aboard.

There were many people already present, sipping cocktails and talking amongst themselves. I noticed Ryan and Cathy talking to a senior Royal Navy Officer. Lieutenant Lawrence led us in that direction.

..._...

"Ah, Mindy, Dave!" Commander Ryan Bennett announced. "Please meet my opposite number, Commander Richard Perrin, Captain of HMS Dragon. Commander Perrin, please meet Dave and Mindy Lizewski and my daughter Chloe and her, err partner, Joshua Williams."

We all exchanged pleasantries, before conversation began.

"So you own that white beauty down the dock, Mrs Lizewski?"

"I do, Captain," I replied, pleased that the Atlantic Storm had been noticed.

"I understand that you are all enjoying a break away from Chicago?"

"Yes, we have had a very stressful few months."

"I bet you have," Commander Perrin commented with a wink, "– complete with getting involved with that idiot, Mitchell!"

I blanched at the mention of Commander Mitchell, but rapidly pulled myself together. I scowled and looked to Lieutenant Lawrence for support.

"All is well; the Captain wouldn't rescue the Commander if he were drowning!"

"Too true – that idiot was a very bad example of a Royal Navy Officer. My apologies young lady. Anyway, I understand he is gone."

"Indeed he is!" Lieutenant Lawrence continued. "He was only an Acting-Commander, so when he literally fell flat after that job, well done by the way, he lost his half-stripe... Guess who got it, too!"

"Spook here, managed to worm his way into Mitchell's job – from next week he is Lieutenant-Commander Lawrence, no less!" Commander Perrin advised.

"Congratulations!" I said and I was genuinely pleased for the man.

"The Captain is well aware of the assistance that you gave HMG, both in the UK and the other month. He is a firm believer in what you, and your team, do in Chicago," Lieutenant Lawrence went on.

"Now, I must go and see to our other guests," Commander Perrin said cheerfully. "Please avail yourselves of the drinks – except for you two of course; there are plenty of soft drinks available!"

Chloe scowled.

The steward came towards us with drinks.

Mindy was first.

"Horse's Neck, ma'am?"

"I suppose," Mindy replied curiously, taking a glass and peering into it dubiously.

"It's a cocktail, ma'am," The steward explained. "Brandy, ginger ale and lemon peel."

"Thanks," I said taking one for myself, smiling at my wife's obvious hesitation.

Chloe reached over for a glass, but the steward deftly span his tray 180-degrees, revealing a pair of Cokes.

"Would the young lady prefer a Coke?" The steward asked smoothly, politely and rather pointedly, without missing a beat.

Chloe grimaced and then scowled, annoyed that her attempt at an alcoholic drink had been dashed, yet again.

"Yes, the young lady would, thank you!" She replied curtly, accepting the soft drink.

"Sir?"

"Thank you," Josh said as he took his Coke, smiling at Chloe with a patronising expression.

The steward moved on and we sipped at our drinks. It was a surprisingly friendly atmosphere and we all felt very at ease. Lieutenant Lawrence moved off to talk to some other people, leaving us to chat together.

..._...

"Not bad!" I commented, as Ryan and Cathy came over to join us.

"Nobody does this better than the Royal Navy, remember that," Ryan commented. "The Brits were doing Statecraft a hundred years before the United States were even remotely considered. Nobody is better – never try and outtalk a Brit – it never happens!"

"Well, you should know, dear daughter!" Cathy grinned looking at Chloe.

"Why?" Chloe asked defensively, a little worried about the response.

"Well a certain Brit talked himself into your knickers, or should I say, he talked you out of your knickers!" Cathy explained and then laughed as her daughter's mouth dropped open in shock and she blushed in acute embarrassment.

"Not fair..." Chloe moaned.

"But very funny!" Josh added with a grin.

"You ever want to see me with no knickers on..." Chloe began, but then shut her mouth and walked over to look at the helicopter.

We all laughed at Chloe's discomfort and chatted for a few minutes. Josh wandered over to join Chloe, while we continued to talk.

I was chatting with Chloe, when we were approached by a Royal Marines Commando Colour Sergeant.

"If you will excuse me, sir, but you must be Joshua Williams – you look strikingly like him."

"Excuse me?" Josh asked a little confused.

"I knew your Dad, Paul – we went through basic and a few wars together, lad. I'm very sorry for what happened to him."

"Thank you."

"I also knew your Mother, Sarah – I was your Dad's best man at their wedding. I remember you being born too; your Dad was over the fucking moon, if you'll excuse my French, young miss."

Chloe blushed slightly.

"I remember you... Jim Reynolds," Josh exclaimed. "You used to come around when I was younger; when we lived up in Arbroath."

"That I did and yes that is me. Your Dad would be very proud of you, right now, Jackal, my lad! You're doing good, living up to his expectations, and I'm very impressed by your choice in women, too – very Shadow-y! A United States Navy Commander's daughter no less – not bad, Joshua!" Jim turned to Chloe. "You look after this lad, young miss, he's a keeper, and I can promise you that."

"I know, thank you," Chloe replied a little confused.

Chloe and Josh both found themselves back with Chloe's parents who were chatting with Commander Perrin.

"You expecting to become a Grandmother any time soon?" Commander Perrin enquired, as Chloe joined the group and he completely ignored the horrified look that he had generated on her face.

"I would hope not, but eventually, it might be nice..." Cathy Bennett replied before she indicated her daughter and Josh. "Mind you, even the randiest rabbits known to mankind take more time off than these two!"

"Mom!" Chloe exclaimed, blushing madly and peering around to see who might have overheard her Mother.

"Don't get me started!" Commander Perrin laughed. "The moment my youngest daughter – she's nineteen by the way – the moment she discovered the joys of sex, that was it – squeaky bedsprings morning, noon and night!"

"Tell me about it!" Dr Bennett replied with a chuckle.

"I even suggested to my daughter that she should buy shares in Durex!"

"I'm certain that Chloe and Josh buy in bulk – at least, I hope so..."

"Mom could we please change the subject from our... Ughh!"

..._...

Further humiliation for Chloe was averted when they were joined by two more people, a shapely woman in her late forties and a young girl of maybe nineteen-years-old.

"Ah, finally!" Commander Perrin exclaimed, embracing the woman and giving her a kiss.

"Hi, Daddy!" The girl said in greeting as she hugged her Father.

"Commander Bennett, Dr Bennett, please say hello to my wife, Alexandra, and my daughter, Cassandra..."

"Oh, please don't call me that – call me Cassie!" The girl interrupted with a glare at her Father.

"Alexandra, Cassie, please meet Commander Ryan Bennett of the USS Churchill and his wife, Dr Catherine Bennett."

"Very pleased to meet you," Cathy replied. "The blushing creature beside me is my daughter, Chloe and with her is her boyfriend, Joshua."

"Hello," Chloe said.

"Good evening," Josh added politely.

"An Englishman!" Cassie exclaimed, then she winked at Chloe. "Too many damn Yanks!"

"Born and bred. I'm trying to convert a few of these traitorous colonists!" Josh replied with a laugh.

"The thirteen colonies are ours, Joshua – it is far too late for an insurrection now!" Commander Bennett laughed.

"Just let me know, Josh and my Royal Marines will support you," Commander Perrin chuckled with a smile at his opposite number.

Cassie Perrin studied Chloe for a moment and then she scowled at her Father.

"Please tell me that you have not been discussing my sex life, nor been telling that appalling condom joke?" She complained.

"A British Naval Officer never lies!" Her Father responded with a sly smile.

"Oh, God!" Cassie exclaimed, blushing slightly. "Chloe, Josh – my apologies, come with me. There is a much better place to sit and chat up by the Phalanx guns, than down here with this lot!"

Cassie grabbed Chloe's hand and headed for the helicopter hanger.

"Cassie knows this ship almost as well as her Father," Alexandra Perrin commented as the three kids vanished.

Cassie took us up two gangways to a point on the upper deck where we sat down in the shadow of a six-barrelled Phalanx, twenty-millimetre, radar-controlled cannon – yeah, I had spent enough time onboard warships to know what was what!

"So, where do you live?" I asked Cassie.

"A small town – you'll never have heard of it..."

"I might..."

"A town in Scotland, called Stirling..."

"Outside Falkirk?"

"How could a Yank know that?" Cassie demanded, very surprised.

"We spent some time in Falkirk, earlier in the year," Josh replied. "We have friends there."

"I spend a lot of my life there, while Dad is away at sea; I miss him when he goes away," Cassie said quietly.

"I know what you mean – I don't see anywhere near enough of my own Dad and yeah, I miss him..."

"It's not easy being the daughter of a sailor, but I love my Dad and I know that he loves what he does," Cassie added.

"I have to agree!"

"So," Cassie said, turning to Josh. "What's your story and how do you end up romantically involved with a Yank?"

"My Dad was a Royal Marine – I grew up following him around places like Poole and Arbroath. Then he left the Royals and we ended up in the US. My Dad got involved with a bad crowd and then... Well, he was killed."

"Oh, I'm sorry..."

"Shit happens!"

"Tell me about it..."

Cassie was not tall a tall young woman, about an inch over five-feet.

Her shoulder length dark brown hair hung loose and matched her dark brown eyes. She was obviously very intelligent and seemed to be very much a Daddy's girl. Almost as much as another girl, I thought, as Cassie and Chloe chatted together.

It was turning out to be a very nice evening. As the girls chatted, I looked out over the dock and I could see the Atlantic Storm moored alongside ahead of us. She was lit up from stem to stern and looked very beautiful in the fading light. It was strange meeting a colleague of my Dads, especially one that I had actually known. It was a first for me and it had stirred up some varied emotions inside.

What did my future hold for me?

When I awoke at seven that morning, I felt so happy – nothing could destroy such a beautiful day.

The sun shone and the temperature was in the high twenties. The previous night had been just perfect and it had been good to be able to spend time with Dave. We had met new people and gained some new friends. One thing that did worry me, was Joshua. He had been a little subdued when we had returned to the Atlantic Storm. Josh had waved it off to fatigue but I caught the warning look from Chloe and did not press it. The look told me that Chloe was worried, but that she could handle it.

I gave everybody a not so gentle boot as we were due to leave for nine o'clock, that morning. The kids had been up until almost eleven the previous night having a mini party and I was sure that I could hear the music from the Dragon! Whatever, Abby said that they had all enjoyed themselves – which was the point and there were empty cans of Coke everywhere, not to mention the remains of many pizzas! Needless to say, it was not easy to motivate the tired kids to get up and dressed.

..._...

With breakfast over, we had the engines running and were ready to depart on time. Commander Perrin, his wife and Cassie, along with Lieutenant Lawrence, were on the dock to wave goodbye. We slipped our moorings and headed out of Deepwater Harbour on a course of 254° at 20 knots. Everybody was excited to be back at sea again. They all enjoyed the open ocean – all of us had grown up in cities, so having nothing to block our vision was something totally new and much enjoyed.

Our destination was the island of Guadeloupe. The island was shaped like a butterfly and our final destination, Guadeloupe's largest city, Pointe-à-Pitre, was in the south of the central portion that joined the butterfly's two 'wings'. We would arrive off the northeast coast and pass down the east side of the right hand part of the island before wrapping around to the west along the south of the island and then north to Pointe-à-Pitre.

I wanted the island to be a great place to unwind before we headed home.

Almost six hours later

Pointe-à-Pitre, Guadeloupe

By 15:00, we were moored at a dock in Pointe-à-Pitre, Guadeloupe.

We used the tender to ferry people across the small harbour to where there was a beautiful beach with pleasant white sands. All the kids; including the teenagers, wanted to play in the sand – I had to admit that I was one of them: yes, Hit Girl liked to play in the sand!

Megan and Chloe seemed to be the most excited about the prospect of playing on the beach – miles ahead of Stephanie, Anne-Marie and Danny. Tommy and Curtis were looking forward to messing about in the water and Abby was intending to just sunbathe.

I, on the other hand, had other ideas...

The sun felt hot on my skin as I lay on the warm sand.

I had never been to such a place. My holidays, when I was younger – and when I still had a family – had been to cooler places, such as Scarborough or The Lake District. My pale body was screaming out for some sun after many months of being covered up from head to toe in black clothes and boots.

My thoughts were interrupted as I heard mutterings and the mutterings were getting closer... I braced myself as the mutterings sounded very much like Tommy and Curtis. What did the two idiots have planned...

I screamed as freezing cold water landed on me and I opened my eyes to see the two wankers pouring two large bottles of iced water over me!

I heard Stephanie scream.

No big surprise as I had watched the two boys moving carefully towards her while unscrewing the tops of two large bottles of iced water. I knew exactly what they had planned but I had no desire to intercede; Stephanie could look after herself, very well.

The girl sprang up and chased after Curtis who seemed to be the slower of the two boys and Stephanie looked furious with the laughing eleven-year-old. She never caught Curtis as Tommy intercepted her with a well-executed tackle that had the two kids rolling across the sand laughing.

I went back to kissing my husband in the shade of a palm tree.

Twenty minutes later, Dave and Ryan headed back to the Atlantic Storm for what they called: 'male bonding' while I decided to go shopping – I may be a cutting edge vigilante, but I was still female and I enjoyed shopping, either for a new pair of jeans, or an assault rifle.

I pulled two pairs of shorts, two t-shirts and two pairs of sneakers out of a bag.

"Anne-Marie, Danny – put these on..." I called.

"We going shopping?"

"Yes, Danny, we are."

As the two kids got dressed, I sought out Stephanie.

"You want to come, Steph?"

Stephanie popped her head up from the enormous hole that she and Tommy were digging. The sand covered girl thought about the question for a moment before she replied.

"No thanks; got a lot of work to do here."

"Okay – stay out of trouble!"

"We won't..." Came the response from Tommy and Stephanie.

It was hot and there was a very pleasant warm breeze; I was happy.

We were taking a walk a short distance from the beach and the sea. It was paradise and I had never experienced anything like it. The kids just loved it; it was a far cry from that hell on earth called Gotham where they had grown up and even their current home in Chicago for that matter.

The kids had spent the past hour on the beach, digging holes in the hot sand. I did not want to dwell on what Josh and Chloe were doing – let's just say that Josh was very thorough with the suntan lotion! Mind you, so was Curtis, and Megan just squealed... Cathy was out somewhere, shopping with Abby who had given up on her sunbathing.

..._...

The shops were full of the usual tourist rubbish, but I thought it would be good for the kids to have a souvenir or two to take home with them, to show their friends. We passed dozens of places, none of which had what I was after.

"Mom, where's Anne-Marie?" Danny asked.

"Huh? She's..."

I looked around, expecting to see my daughter close by. There was no sign of her; no big problem, she would never have gone far. I started looking at the crowd around us – there was still no sign of the seven-year-old girl. Where had I last seen her? I thought back... She had stopped to look at some t-shirts and I had called for her to come... Then I had been distracted by Danny and we'd kept walking. How long? It could only have been five minutes – maybe ten?

Oh my God!

Despite my training, I felt panic rising inside me. I had just lost one of the two very young people that I had promised to protect with my life! I looked around, everywhere, keeping a very tight hold on Danny's hand as I did so.

"Anne-Marie!"

I was yelling now and yes; I was really panicking.

"Anne-Marie!"

"This is the life, eh, Dave!" Ryan laughed as we both sat on the Sun Deck, enjoying a cold bottle of beer each.

It was great to have the 120-foot megayacht to ourselves for a change; no noisy kids – just peace and quiet as the waves lazily lapped against the white hull. It was paradise itself, at least, I thought so. Ryan and I just wanted to laze around – it was what men did when on holiday...

Every hour spent without being shot at or chased by ninjas, was a blessing and I was determined to enjoy every damn moment of it. Mindy – well, she missed not being shot at or chased by ninjas – but despite that, I was happy for her; she was having the time of her life and I hadn't seen her so happy in quite a while.

It was the same for the others... Our peace was destroyed as my cell rang...

"Oh, crap!" I growled and reached for the offending device.

"No peace for the wicked!" Ryan teased.

"It's the purple one!" I commented as I answered the call.

I grinned at his comment.

But then my grin began to fade as I saw Dave's expression go from amused to shocked and then onto scared for a moment before his entire face then went steadily darker and darker.

He slowly put the cell down before turning to face me. For a moment, I felt a little bit of fear as I saw the darkness in Dave's face. Something very bad had just happened. It took a minute for Dave to focus on something as archaic as speech.

He just said one word – actually, just a name.

"Anne-Marie."

The Beach

I was busy groping Chloe when my mobile rang – crap fucking timing!

"Ignore it!" Chloe whispered as she giggled to my touch.

I knew that I had to answer it; it was Dave.

"Put Chloe down, we have a situation..." I shivered; Dave's tone was colder than I had ever heard it, "– Anne-Marie is missing..."

"What? When?"

"Mindy is searching the streets – she has Danny with her, Ryan and I are going ashore, too. I need you and Chloe to get the others together and safely back to the Atlantic Storm."

"Got it!"

I turned to Chloe who looked very worried by my expression.

"Get everybody together – we're going back to the boat. It's Anne-Marie – she's gone missing..."

Chloe just stood there for a second, her hand over her mouth.

"Move it, girl!" I growled and Chloe jumped into action, running towards where Megan, Stephanie, Tommy and Curtis were playing.

I had a bad feeling in my stomach. If anything happened to that young girl, Dave and Mindy would be devastated... However, on the other hand, whoever had taken Anne-Marie should be afraid, very afraid – if they only knew what hell they had just unleashed upon themselves.

The Caribbean was about to get a damn sight hotter!

Two hours later

The Atlantic Storm

I was sobbing fit to burst when I finally returned to the boat empty handed.

Cathy had met up with me and taken Danny back aboard earlier on. Dave and Ryan were still out there, searching. Chloe had met me at the gangway and I could see that she had been crying too. I collapsed into my best friend's arms and she helped me into the Main Salon and then onto the couch.

..._...

Ten minutes later, it came.

The message.

It was confirmation that my daughter was not just lost; it was confirmation that she had been taken. Chloe walked into the Main Salon, she was carrying something in both hands and her face was full of sorrow. I had held on to the hope that Anne-Marie was just lost and that the Police would find her... Cathy, Stephanie and Megan froze – they looked horrified.

Chloe hesitated before she spoke, the anguish evident in her face.

"A motorcycle courier just delivered this," she said quietly and calmly, fighting back the tears.

..._...

In her hands was a large padded envelope. On the outside was a simple note.

FOLLOW INSTRUCTIONS – SHE LIVES ANYTHING ELSE – SHE DIES

Chloe carefully opened the envelope and I stood up to see what was in it.

She pulled out what looked to be a piece of pink material. I felt my heart beating harder and I was struggling to breathe. I sank to the deck, unable to comprehend what was happening as I felt the hot tears pouring unrestricted down my cheeks. I had never felt the way I was feeling right then – my mind was reeling and I could not focus on my thoughts. I felt arms hugging me tightly as I cried – it was Megan.

I looked up at Chloe and at what she held in her hand. I recognised it immediately; it was my daughter's t-shirt – the very one that I had given her and that she had been wearing that very afternoon and...

"Is that blood?" Cathy demanded, taking the t-shirt from her daughter.

..._...

Why?

Every time something good happened in my life, it was closely followed by tragedy. The past few days had been heaven – now... Why? It was too much – I bolted for the nearest bathroom and violently vomited up everything that I had eaten over the past few hours. I kept retching even when my stomach was empty – I had never reacted like that over anything, not even the death of my own Daddy.

I was Hit Girl, I had an iron stomach – or so I had thought.

USS Churchill

Twenty-two nautical miles to the northwest

"XO, Captain on the SatCom – secure!"

Lieutenant Commander Wes Edwards grimaced. That probably meant trouble and he was not wrong!

"Sir, how..."

"Can it, Wes! I need a list of all air and sea traffic leaving Guadeloupe in the past three hours; track and destination, and I need it yesterday!" Commander Ryan Bennett ordered his Executive Officer.

Questions could wait – the Captain had spoken...

"Aye, aye, sir!"

Hanging up the satellite phone he relayed the order to the Combat System Officer – his department ran the state-of-the-art SPY-1D AEGIS radar system that was at the heart of the destroyer. The department's motto was 'In God We Trust. All Others We Track...'

Next, he called up HMS Dragon and spoke directly to her Captain, requesting anything that her equally state-of-the-art, mast-top mounted Sampson AESA radar had detected in the previous three hours. Within minutes, all relevant information began to flood through the high-speed, digital Link 16 data system that allowed NATO warships to exchange radar and fire control data.

As a final act he ordered the ship's course altered towards the south.

Somewhere in the Caribbean

I felt woozy as I struggled to open my eyes.

For a moment, I thought that I was safely back in my cabin on the Atlantic Storm, but something didn't feel right and I had a headache. My vision was blurry as I looked around me and it took me a moment to focus. I was on a boat, that was for certain and pretty obvious; I could feel the motion – we were definitely at sea and I could hear the engines throbbing away beneath me.

I sat up, noticing almost immediately that my t-shirt and shorts were both missing, but I was glad to see that I was still wearing my one-piece swimsuit and my sneakers. I looked around me, taking in my surroundings; I was sitting on a scrappy looking mattress on a narrow bunk, in a small cabin.

I began to feel scared and I felt fear. The fear rapidly grew inside me and I began to cry, sobbing as it gripped me from within. I just sat there on the bunk as I struggled to get my mind in order – how had I got here? I could not think; I was too scared... Where was I? The tears streamed down my face as I continued to sob; I could not stop them – I was alone and my family was gone... Maybe for ever! What was going to happen to me?

My mind cleared for just a moment and I seized upon it, I stopped crying and it all started to come back to me in a giant rush: Guadeloupe, the beach, shopping, t-shirts – the hand across my mouth.

I remembered struggling against the hands that held me as I was dragged away from the daylight, away from my family. I remembered a sharp pain as somebody slapped me hard across the face – I reached up and felt the dried blood around my nose. I then had a vivid memory of an evil smelling rag that had then been clamped over my nose and mouth. I was still fighting even as I succumbed to the blackness...

... Then I woke up – here and now. The fear came back with a vengeance – I was shaking as I started to sob again, the tears flowing freely. I had only ever felt so scared, just that one time before; when Daddy had been murdered in Gotham, just before Dave and Josh had rescued us – but back then, I had not been alone...

"Mommy..."

"Mommy... Where is my sister?"

I had moved from the deck to a more dignified position on a couch where I was hugging my young son who was very scared.

"I don't know, Danny... But I promise you, I will find her, and those that took her, they will motherfucking pay!" I hissed.

Danny looked up at me in surprise; I never usually swore in front of Danny or Anne-Marie. As I looked down at my scared seven-year-old son I came to a difficult decision and I focussed on him.

"Sorry, Danny; I should not have sworn like that, but I am really pissed and... Well, it's time you learnt a secret – a big secret..."

Time since abduction: 00:03:51

Nine minutes later

It was unbelievable – I had trouble taking it all in... I just sat there, stunned.

I looked over at Dad – or should it be 'Kick-Ass' – and Mom, or rather 'Hit Girl', then over to Chloe... Megan just smiled at my confusion.

"It's all true, Danny – I'm Wildcat..."

"Chloe is Shadow, Josh is Jackal, Curtis is Trojan...?" I added.

"Very good!" Dad commented. "It will make it much easier for us to operate and for us to find your sister if you know the truth, Danny – your sister is 'Rogue', by the way..."

"Now, Daniel..." Mom began getting my attention.

My proper name – that worried me, and for a moment I felt scared again; there was something cold in the way Mom spoke.

"You will never breathe a word, Daniel Lizewski, or there will be consequences."

Somewhere in the Caribbean

The door to the cabin flew open.

The man was huge, but I still glared at him – it had been a while since my sobbing session and for now, I was over it.

"Don't look at me like that, you fucking little bitch!"

The man had a strange accent – not American, but not quite British – maybe a mix of the two.

"Why are you keeping me?" I demanded, forcing myself to be brave.

"Your Mummy and Daddy are going to pay for your safe return... Won't that be nice?"

"Not nearly as nice as watching my Daddy smash your face in!"

Maybe that was not the best thing to say!

I was grabbed roughly by the arm, dragged off the bed and thrown towards the door, crumpling to the deck where I caught my knee and grazed it making me call out in pain.

"Get up!"

I was dragged out of the cabin and up some steps. I saw that I was on a yacht – an older yacht, made of wood. I found myself being picked up and carried down a gang-way before being thrown into the backseat of an old SUV.

"Move and I cut you – understand?" The man growled.

I flinched at the sight of the very large knife and nodded, my brief show of bravery had evaporated.

The waiting was the worst.

I felt awful and I knew that everybody else did too. All were back aboard and we were just awaiting the inevitable. My mind was racing with possibilities – money was not a worry; we had plenty. Part of me said to just pay up and get Anne-Marie back. However, my core principals came to the fore – somebody was going to pay and it was not going to be me...

To keep myself occupied, I put my mind to contemplating all of the wonderful things that I could do to whomever was behind my daughter's kidnapping – stress made me very creative! I was just contemplating if you really could cut somebody's heart out with a spoon, when my avenging thoughts were cut off as another padded envelope arrived.

Again, it was straight to the point.

In the padded envelope was another item of clothing – my seven-year-old daughter's shorts. I did not know how to react – my hands balled into fists as I closed my eyes, trying to control my many emotions. I felt conflicting emotions; I wanted to cry, I wanted to scream, I also wanted to hurt somebody, and I wanted to kill – oh, I so wanted to kill... I looked up to see that my family and my friends were too scared to come near me...

Only, I needed them, so I forced a smile and gave in to my emotions, allowing the tears to fall. Chloe and Stephanie ran forward and they hugged me as Ryan took the note and headed for the Bridge. He was back within two minutes.

"Those co-ordinates are for Road Harbour in the British Virgin Islands. We can be there in eleven hours. The engines are warm – we can depart immediately."

*That night
Wednesday*

The Atlantic Storm

*Location: 20nm northwest of Guadeloupe
Position: 16.5584° N 61.8272° W
Course: 315°, Speed: 20 knots, 1,292nm logged*

Time: 22:00

We left the dock at nine that night.

We were heading north towards the British Virgin Islands where I hoped to be reunited with my daughter. The whole situation was getting to me and I needed to be on my own, so I headed to my stateroom and closed the door behind me. I lay on the bed, just staring at the ceiling for about half an hour before I was disturbed – it was Dave.

"Talk to me..."

I took a deep breath and sat up.

"I'm worried about how this is going to pan out."

"We've been in tough situations before," Dave pointed out.

"Yeah, but this is different – we volunteered for this shit..."

"I know; I know – Anne-Marie did not."

"We promised to protect them with our lives..." I reminded my partner.

"We did, and that is exactly what we are doing right now. We are heading north to get our girl and we will not stop, till we get her back."

That same time

Somewhere in the Caribbean

I soon found myself in yet another boat, a much bigger boat. Only, this time, I was not alone in the cabin.

My hands were bound behind me and I was sitting in a soft chair. I could see out a window, but all I could see was water – a lot of water. In front of me were two men and they were both armed with pistols in holsters under their arms. There was also a woman – she had a pistol on her belt.

My bravery had decided to return, so I decided to see how far I could push them.

"I need to pee."

"Cross your legs."

"I have been – I really need to pee!" I persisted.

"For fuck's sake!" One of the men swore.

"I'll take the little bitch!" The woman hissed.

She yanked me out of the chair, dragged me down a corridor and then she opened a door and shoved me into a bathroom. I just stared at her.

"My hands are tied; how can I go!"

The woman muttered under her breath as she spun me around roughly and untied my hands.

"Get peeing!"

"I'm not going with you watching!"

The woman turned her back in disgust.

"I don't trust you, you'll look..."

The woman glared at me like I was an idiot. Then she punched the wall and slammed the door shut. I was alone and now I had to figure out how to escape... I looked around the bathroom – it was all marble. I did need to pee, so I did, but took my time over it.

"You done?"

"Almost..." I yelled back.

I had to think fast... I opened the cupboard under the sink – bingo! After finishing my work, I banged on the door.

"I think we have a problem?" I called out.

The door was yanked open and...

"Oh, shit!" The woman yelled as she saw the toilet overflowing, courtesy of seven strategically placed toilet rolls.

The woman ran off towards some stairs and I took off in the opposite direction, pushing my way through a door and down another corridor. There ahead of me was another door, a sliding one and it was partially opened. I moved forward quickly and quietly, there, I found myself peering through an open door which appeared to lead onto the bridge.

I crept through the door and found the place empty – ahead of me was a whole load of hi-tech equipment and the wheel. I knew I had merely seconds before I was found – there, over to the right, a phone! Mom had drilled into my brother and me, a number for use only if we were in big trouble – I dialled it.

Safehouse F Chicago, USA

I was in the Command Centre with Kim and Matty when I heard a chilling sound.

"What's that?" Kim asked.

"It's the 'Hit Phone'..." I replied ominously.

"Mindy will kill you for calling it that..."

I hit the button to answer the call and a voice came over the speakers, echoing around the room.

"Hello?"

Jesus Christ!

"Anne-Marie! Where are you?"

"I... I don't know – I'm on a massive white boat..."

"Look around, can you see land?"

"No, just ocean – it's dark..."

"Look around you, anything... anything that can help us..."

"Err, G – W – A – P... Somebody is coming..."

As we listened, we heard a door open and then voices – a man and a woman.

"The sooner we get that little bitch to the island, the happier I will be."

"She'll be safe there, no escape – unless she's a good swimmer!"

There was laughter which was rapidly cut short.

"What the fuck...?"

Anne-Marie screamed.

"No... No..."

There was the sound of a slap and then the call was cut off.

Somewhere in the Caribbean

I lay on the deck and felt the blood on my mouth.

"You fucking little bitch!" A man growled into my ear as I was dragged up from the deck.

I was carried back to the Main Salon and thrown onto the couch. As I landed, I felt a hand across my face – the pain was immense and I started sobbing, both out of pain and fear. My hair was seized and my head pulled back. I found myself staring into the dark eyes of one of the men.

"You see this?" A knife was shoved an inch from my eyeballs and I flinched backwards away from it. "Try anymore shit and I gut you like a fucking fish... Now sit your fucking arse down, like a good little girl and fucking behave!"

The Atlantic Storm

Time: 22:45

"Mindy – I've got Marty on the VC!"

Abby came running into the Sky Lounge, aft of the bridge and seized the remote, changing channel on the large-screen TV. I saw Marty and he was not smiling, behind him stood Kim.

"I have mixed news, Mindy, Dave – you need to listen to this..."

"Hello?"

I grabbed the remote from Abby and turned up the volume as I heard my daughter's voice... Tears began to well up inside me...

..._...

Then came the scream.

"No... No..."

There was total silence in the Sky Lounge as everybody there heard the slap. Several faces turned to look at me as I felt extreme anger building up within me. They dared to lay a hand on my seven-year-old daughter... They dared to hurt her...

I was brought back to my senses and everybody jumped as there was a sharp and loud, cracking sound. I looked down and saw that I had snapped the TV remote control in two.

I wrapped my arm around Mindy and focussed on Marty.

"At least we know that she is alive. We also have two new facts – she is being taken to an island, possibly a private island? We also have four letters – G, W, A and P."

"What do those letters mean?" I asked.

"Sorry, Dave – I have no idea..."

"I do."

We all turned to look at Ryan.

"A callsign. If she was on the bridge, then she may have seen the boat's callsign – or part of it..."

Marty interrupted Ryan.

"I have sixty-seven vessels with GWAP in their callsign. I'm gonna have to narrow things down a bit."

"See what you can dig out on private islands near the British Virgin Islands – especially people with 'massive' mega-yachts."

"I'll get back to you..."

Marty was gone.

Time: 23:00

We were heading north towards the British Virgin Islands and on the way, we would plan what we were going to do once we got there. I decided I needed to talk to everybody before anything went sideways. Dave did not agree with what I was about to say, but I pushed on anyway.

Everybody was crowded into the Main Salon and they all looked at me expectantly as I stood ready to speak. I took a deep breath and looked at them – my friends and my family.

"You all know what has happened. You also know that I am going to do everything and anything to get my daughter back. However, the risks will be high – we are no longer in Chicago, this is the real world where law and order does not exist and I don't want to put any of you at risk. Dave and I will execute the mission..."

I paused for a moment, out of curiosity, as I noticed Josh leaning into Chloe.

"You wanna do it, or shall I – you'll leave less of a mark..." He said calmly, but I could see irritation in his face.

"You wanna fucking bet?" Chloe replied. She looked livid and her eyes were flashing with anger – only I missed the danger.

I opened my mouth to continue when Chloe stood up, strode over to me and...

"You hit my Mom!" Danny exclaimed indignantly as the cringeworthy sound of skin slapping skin echoed around the Main Salon.

"Talk like a bitch, get slapped like a bitch!" Chloe growled ominously as Mindy put a hand up to her very pink looking left cheek and just stood there looking stunned.

"You hit my Mom!" Danny repeated.

"Yeah, I did, Danny; sometimes, she needs it. Very few people can slap Hit Girl and survive – however, I am one of them."

Chloe then turned to the stunned Mindy.

"You stopped being so goddamned stupid? We are all ready and willing to risk our lives to go after Anne-Marie – and don't you fucking forget it, or you'll just get yourself slapped again!" Chloe finished, sitting back down again, still fuming.

"You were saying..." Josh said to Mindy as he smirked.

"Forget I even spoke..." Mindy said very quietly as she blushed to match the outline of Chloe's hand on her left cheek before turning and heading forward to her stateroom.

"We already have!" Cathy commented with a chuckle.

I went after Mindy.

I followed her into the stateroom, closed the door behind me and sat down on the couch by the portside windows.

"Mindy, you are not alone. We are all in this together – we are a team; we are Fusion... Even in the Caribbean!"

Mindy turned to me as she sat on the bed.

"Thank you, Stephanie, thank you for reminding me of that..." Mindy smiled. "Talk about embarrassing!"

"Yeah – it must have been; that handprint looks good though..." I grinned. "I've got to look after my Mum, don't I!"

Time: 23:30

Nobody mentioned the embarrassing situation from earlier – which I was very happy about – as Dave and I began to prepare our equipment.

Me, being me, I was always prepared... We had no idea what sort of a fight was before us – but I was fairly certain that it would be on a tropical island somewhere. We could not exactly bring all of our usual vigilante gear with us – our normal combat suits were not wearable in the tropical conditions of the Caribbean, so we would need something more lightweight and suitable for both the climate and the terrain. In the boat garage that was located in the stern of the Atlantic Storm, I had several discrete equipment packs stowed there that were masquerading as life-rafts.

For any waterborne assault, there were a pair of Zodiac FC470 Commando Assault Boats with 55-horsepower outboard engines. Each could carry ten persons with their equipment, although we would use both for any assault. Dave and I broke open two of the other containers that contained equipment for everybody on board – except for Danny, Abby and Ryan, of course!

We called everybody to the Aft Bridge Deck and began to hand out equipment.

..._...

Each person received a pair of pants and a combat shirt in the British MTP (Multi-Terrain Pattern) colour scheme. On top of those would be worn an MTP assault vest for weapons and equipment. Each vest was also customised with additional composite light-weight body armour and the wearer's normal colours were added to the vest to allow for easy identification in battle. For footwear, I supplied each person with a set of light-weight Viper MTP boots. Everybody was also provided with a facemask that would conceal their identity, covering the area around their eyes and nose. I allowed individual users to select their own headgear, be it a bush hat, baseball cap, or a Fast helmet. Light-weight gloves were also provided.

Those who selected the Fast helmet would have the option of carrying night-vision equipment. Another container from below was filled with weapons. I had everybody's favourite pistol and PDW available, plus some heavier weapons.

Those heavier weapons included the FN Minimi Mk3 in 5.56-millimetre calibre, the FN40GL-S 40-millimetre grenade launcher and Kick-Ass' favourite, the Atchisson AA-12 12-gauge automatic shotgun.

..._...

Danny was wide-eyed as he watched all the activity going on throughout the Atlantic Storm. Cathy was preparing medical supplies which would be added to everybody's kit. Ryan was on the Bridge keeping an eye out for anybody sailing too close – we did not want to be spotted with so much illegal equipment up on deck! Josh insisted on playing motivational tracks over the yacht's music system at full blast; these included Queen's, 'One Vision' and Survivor's, 'Eye of The Tiger' among others...

Everybody spent time checking out their equipment and weapons to ensure that everything was ready. Kick-Ass and Jackal would carry the heavy weapons while Psyche and Wildcat would be our light-fighters carrying the lightest loads; each with a pistol and an MP7A2 only, plus knives, and relying on their skills. On that note I had made Wildcat's day by producing an updated set of claws for her to wear, which were embedded in a set of light-weight gauntlets.

Both Megan and Stephanie spent a lot of time sharpening their knives – Stephanie was a very different girl now that she was preparing for action and she was very serious as she focussed on her tasks.

Shadow and I would carry a P90 and G36C respectively, plus a selection of our usual bladed weapons. Trojan and Splinter would both carry P90s and they would be tasked with protecting the exfiltration zone and our backs during the initial assault. They would also be backup, as required. Medic would remain with the boats, as required – we seriously hoped not to require her medical skills.

Neptune and Hal would remain on the Atlantic Storm. Hal would co-ordinate the attack as she was used to doing in Chicago. Extra technical support would be provided by Battle Guy who would connect via satellite to assist Hal – we had sworn Marty to secrecy; I did not want anybody else in Chicago to find out about Anne-Marie.

As for the yacht itself? To tone down the white hull we had tons of dark grey camouflage netting to hang about the superstructure before the attack so we could come in close without being seen in the moonlight.

All of the fervent activity and preparation kept everybody from worrying about Anne-Marie. We even kept Danny busy with numerous tasks as he was really missing his twin sister. There was another problem too; Dave.

Our daughter had been with me, when she had been taken. Nobody blamed me, at least nobody dared to say anything about it, but I detected something in Dave's manner towards me. There was nothing that I could put my finger on, but I felt like he was blaming me for losing Anne-Marie. He was caring and loving towards me, as he always was – only something felt different between us.

That moment was not the time for a rift between us, so I decided to leave it until our daughter was safe.

We had finally identified where Anne-Marie was being held – at least we hoped so!

Traffic analysis completed by USS Churchill had discovered a boat leaving Guadeloupe and that boat had departed on a northerly course about thirty minutes after Anne-Marie had gone missing. That boat had stopped at an island – a small privately owned island. Another, much larger craft had been tracked on a course similar to that which we were now on. With some more detective work by HMS Dragon and Marty we also knew the identity of that yacht and more crucially, who owned it – that yacht had the callsign: GWAP6.

Our final destination was to be Buck Island. The island was privately owned by a British ex-pat and it was located in the British Virgin Islands. I was getting excited: we had an amphibious assault to plan – a first for me and a first for Fusion.

Dave was very keen to go all Matrix – if we let him!

The Atlantic Storm

Location: 2.2nm east of Buck Island

Position: 18.4309° N 64.5173° W

Time: 09:00

We were at anchor and as close to our final destination as we dared.

We had, after much deliberation, put together an assault plan and we were going to act on it to the best of our abilities. Ryan had spoken with Commander Perrin and Lieutenant Commander Edwards, advising them of certain aspects of our plan – there was nothing that the two Naval Officers could do openly, but if we happened to blow the lid off a drug cartel, for example, then they could act – however, they both agreed that running an exercise close by, would be acceptable...

..._...

Almost everybody was below, getting some much needed sleep before the night's action. My first destination was the Bridge as it was to be our Command Centre. Following me to the Bridge were Ryan and Dave.

"Time to go purple, gentlemen!" I said with a grin as I reached under the starboard helm console, slid back a hidden protective cover and pressed a recessed button, twice.

A small touchscreen keypad illuminated on the right hand portion of the upper console below the wind speed and direction indicators. I rapidly entered an eight-digit code and the right-hand of the four nineteen-inch touch-screens changed to a menu system of twelve options. Dave chuckled at the purple tint that appeared around the menu.

"Nice!" He quipped.

I ignored him as I selected option 4 on the menu: 'UAF-1 ESM'. The Racal ESM or Electronic Support Measures system was totally illegal on the Atlantic Storm; just don't ask where I got it! The system was designed to sniff out electronic signals, such as search radars, and tell us how far away the transmitter was and in which direction. It could even tell us the frequency and band which could help us identify the transmitting vessel. Even better, we could detect them using their radar, before they detected us with their radar.

The ESM system would be critical in getting close to the island without being detected. If we identified a radar on or around the island, we would then be able to jam it with the next option on the menu; option 5: 'Type 675 ECM'. The Thorn EMI ECM or Electronic Counter Measures system was again, totally illegal – probably more so than the ESM; if you must know, the two systems fell off the back of a Brazilian Type 23 frigate! The ECM system was capable of jamming a wide variety of electronic signals, including communications, but primarily radar. The ESM system would identify a signal and the ECM system would then jam it, making it useless.

Ryan actually raised an eyebrow as he perused the list of options.

"Most of these weren't purchased from your average yacht chandler!" He mused and I felt myself blushing slightly.

"They were... Just not a normal one..." I replied before lapsing into embarrassed silence.

"When do we use option 1; that looks like fun?" Ryan enquired.

"You'll know when you need it, Commander."

Dave and I went below to get some sleep

Thursday

The Atlantic Storm

Location: 2.2nm east of Buck Island
Position: 18.4309° N 64.5173° W

Time: 19:00

Down below it was a show of organised chaos as everybody was changing into their combat gear.

Danny sensibly stayed on the bridge with Ryan, well out of the way. I was wearing the MTP pants, shirt and boots. Around my waist I had a webbing belt that carried my communications equipment, plus it supported a holster on my right hip for a Glock 23, which was strapped to my thigh. Arrayed around the belt were spare magazines and a nine-inch combat knife. Once I was changed, I went around the yacht checking on everybody else.

First stop was the bow.

..._...

Chaos, was a very accurate word to describe what I found!

The only one with pants on was Tommy. Megan and Stephanie were still in their underwear and seemed to be struggling with their assault vests.

"You guys getting dressed anytime soon?" I asked.

"Sorry, we were sorting out all these straps..." Stephanie said.

"Curtis, eyes off Megan's ass!" I warned.

"I don't mind..." Megan began.

"Get some clothes on – we have a mission..." I grumbled.

I decided to leave them to it!

Time: 21:20

"You look ready to kick ass!"

"Funny, Neptune!"

"Sorry, Kick-Ass – just trying to lighten the mood... Wow..."

Shadow appeared on the bridge, blushing beneath her mask, an MTP baseball cap on her head backwards.

"Very nice, daughter of mine!"

"Thanks, Dad!" Shadow replied, giving me and her Dad a twirl.

She wore the same kit as me, except that she bore an FN Five-seven in a holster on her right hip and she held her bō-staff in her left hand with her P90 suspended from the front of her assault vest and a pair of spare fifty-round magazines on her left hip.

..._...

Jackal appeared next and he carried much the same equipment as Shadow, apart from the bō-staff. On the back of his vest he carried his Ninja-To and on his chest he bore three Fairburn-Sykes fighting knives. He smiled appreciatively at his girlfriend and slapped her on her behind which received a giggle in response! Neptune rolled his eyes and went back to his own preparations as Wildcat, Psyche and Splinter appeared, closely followed by Trojan and Medic.

Neptune grinned as his wife showed off her own armour and the SIG Sauer P226 in a holster on her belt. Medic in turn checked out her husband's body armour and his own SIG pistol. Hal took her place on the bridge, setting up a pair of laptops on the table at the couch. Hal was also wearing body armour; I was taking no risks. Around her slim waist was a belt with a Glock 17 pistol in a holster.

Kick-Ass and I checked over each and every member before Chloe and Josh did the same for the two of us. We were finally ready.

Even Danny wore body armour – as I said, I was taking no risks.

Some hours earlier

Buck Island

I was brought ashore.

There was no way to know where I was, except that I had been able to see plenty of land. I had been dragged off the yacht – a much bigger yacht than the Atlantic Storm and thrown into the back of an open topped SUV. I think I might have annoyed the two men and the woman – they seemed to enjoy throwing me around and I could feel bruises all over my body.

We drove up a stone track that led towards a hill that had a building on it. The SUV pulled up outside the building, which turned out to be several buildings, and I was physically handed to another man – what was I? A suitcase! He did not look happy as I smiled at him and he slapped me around the face, which stung. I did my best not to cry, but just glared at the man, wishing that he would drop dead – I had already figured out that if I was going to survive, I would have to toughen up. The man began to issue orders and I was thrown at the woman who dragged me down some steps and towards a swimming pool.

The woman was gripping my swimming costume tightly and she used it to drag me over to a building to one side of the pool.

"Hey – the swimsuit is new!" I called out.

"You think I give a shit!"

The woman pushed me hard through an open door and I fell into a metal something and then to the concrete floor. I felt something trickling down my face and when I reached up to it, my hand came away red. Then the door was slammed shut and I heard a bolt slammed into place.

I jumped up and banged on the door, yelling to be let out, but all I heard was the woman's feet walking away. I gave up and sank to the floor – I had never felt so alone. I had no idea where I was and nobody else did, either. My family were hundreds of miles away and now I knew that I would never see them again, ever...

I started to cry again.

That night Thursday

Location: Two miles to the southeast of Buck Island

Time: 23:20

The attack had begun.

Through the darkness the island waited, swathed in deceptively protective darkness. Beside a dock at the north end of the island lay an enormous yacht, much bigger than the Atlantic Storm – it would be secondary target. Our reconnaissance had shown that coming ashore near to the residence, at the southern tip of the island, would be very dangerous and probably very deadly for us all, thanks to towering cliffs and the roaming, well-armed, guard force.

Instead, we could come ashore at the north-eastern tip of the island. From there we would move almost the full length of the 43-acre island – almost 850-metres – taking out any armed men as we went. Most of the island was dense tropical greenery and it would take a couple of hours to make a stealthy approach to the residence which was perched on the top of a small hill.

..._...

The two, 4.7-metre Zodiac Commando Assault Boats were launched from the stern and everybody climbed aboard. After a final check of persons and equipment, the two coxswains: Kick-Ass and Jackal, gently backed away from the Atlantic Storm before turning for the distant shore.

As I crouched next to my partner, I felt feelings of hope course through me – we had to succeed; I needed my daughter back. However, as I looked back at my yacht, I had a funny feeling that I was not gonna see her again...

I quickly lost sight of the 120-foot yacht, blacked out as it was and covered in copious amounts of camouflage netting.

The next morning – early!

Friday

New Year's Day, 2016

Time: 00:01

The north-eastern beach of Buck Island

The attack had begun and we were ashore.

The two assault boats were pulled high up the beach and into the trees, well away from the surf, and anchored. Kick-Ass and Jackal moved forwards and spread out, raising their Minimi machine guns to their shoulders and scanning the area through the NVGs on their helmets.

Shadow and I moved forwards between the boys and raised our suppressed PDWs. We both bore NVGs on our helmets too. The beach was clear, just as we had expected. Splinter and Trojan hid amongst the palm trees with their suppressed P90s at the ready.

Wildcat, with Psyche beside her, ran up the beach and they both took off to the south, towards the main building on the south cliff of the island some seven-hundred metres away.

"Fusion ashore!" I called.

"Hal copies Fusion ashore – see you in a few hours – bring back our girl!"

I checked my watch, it was just after midnight.

'Happy New Year,' I thought to myself.

Time since abduction: 01:04:51

Time to deadline: 01:23:14

Time: 00:12

It was Psyche who got in the first kill of the night.

"Wildcat; I have a contact, twenty yards ahead, in the trees. Looks like a guard, smoking."

"Go for the kill, Psyche – and keep it quiet!" I reminded her.

In my NVGs, I saw the slim frame of Psyche move forwards silently, her boots making almost no noise on the soft sand and tropical grass. I watched in anticipation as she closed on the unsuspecting guard and then I saw her leap into the air, coming down on the man and driving a nine-inch blade through his neck while her other hand clamped over his mouth. The guard fell to the ground and I saw Psyche remove her knife and stab the man again, this time through the heart.

"One down!" Was the curt response which sounded so cold when delivered in a monotone British accent – 'oh, I've just killed a fly, oops'.

That girl was cold when she had to be – I supposed it was her training from before we found her – still gave me the creeps though! I caught up with my friend, who was nonchalantly wiping off her blade on the guard's clothing before replacing it in the scabbard on her belt.

We moved off as soon as we had dragged the guard into deeper foliage.

..._...

Behind us, the main assault force followed our cleared path. We took our time – rushing made noise and noise could get Rogue killed.

The next two kills were mine – I drove the claws of my left hand into another unsuspecting guard's throat, ripping it open and I pushed his face into the sand until he quit moving. His pal appeared, busily zipping up his pants – his weapon, an AK-74 assault rifle, was leaning against a tree. As he reached for it, he saw his fellow guard lying prone on the trail. He lived for only a few more seconds as I drove the right set of claws into his left side, destroying his left kidney and chopping up his intestines. The other set of claws were driven directly into the man's heart, cutting it into three pieces.

The massive internal bleeding and severe shock killed him very quickly.

Time: 01:15

"I'll say this for him: he had a lot of guts!"

"Fuck me!" I groaned at the incredibly bad joke. "We really need to talk!"

Psyche had just ripped open a man's stomach with her knife before following through by stabbing her blade through his heart.

"Quit your bitching, Wildcat – we have work to do and it's two all, I believe..."

With that, Psyche vanished into the undergrowth and I rapidly followed on behind. Was that crazy bitch keeping score?

..._...

We skirted around the buildings at the base of the first hill.

That would be for the main assault force to handle. It was tough going – the night was humid and the undergrowth was thick. Our boots kept us upright on the slippery bits and we moved in complete silence, searching for our next prey.

Two-hundred yards' behind

We were the main assault force – all four of us!

The man who lived on the island had to have a private guard force and we found them, fast asleep and spread across three chalet type huts down by the sea on the north-west side of the island. There were three men on guard duty – extra emphasis on 'were'!

Hit Girl and I ran forwards, directly at the men. They never saw us coming in the darkness as Hit Girl drove her knife into the throat of the first man, then she gently lowered him to the ground.

"Does it hurt...?" Hit Girl growled as she drove the blade deep into the man's heart. "Good, very good..."

I concentrated on my own targets – the two men were eight feet apart. I whirled around, one blade of my bō-staff severing the head of the first man as I finished my movement by driving the opposite blade directly into the other guard's heart – he was dead before he hit the soft white sand beneath him.

Kick-Ass took the first chalet and Jackal the second – Hit Girl took the third while I stood watch.

The men never knew what killed them.

I pulled a suppressed Walther P22 pistol from my webbing and promptly fired off six rounds – plink, plink, plink, plink, plink, plink. The pistol had been selected precisely for the reduced sound emitted by the weapon. Outside the hut, nobody would have heard a thing...

I checked that the hut had six corpses before turning for the door.

All three seemed to reappear at the same time.

I had not heard a thing, but all three changed out the magazine on their Walther P22 pistols before stowing them in their webbing. Kick-Ass held up six fingers, Hit Girl – five, Jackal six. Seventeen kills – just like that.

We moved off into the jungle.

Up ahead

I was determined not to fuck up.

Not like the last time, when I ended up dangling from a tall building, over a thousand feet above Chicago! I had a single mission – to rescue my little sister. I could not fuck up – not even once... I was in my element – I dug deep into my programming and focussed on nothing but the mission. I was Psyche, I was a killer, I was unbeaten...

I was also annoyed to find no more men to kill!

Time: 02:25

"This is Psyche; we're at the residence... approaching from below the pool..."

"Copy that!" Hal replied.

"Take care!" Hit Girl added.

We were approaching up a steep grassy slope with trees and undergrowth, well away from any pathways.

We had hiked almost a kilometre during our detour around buildings and pathways. Above us was the swimming pool. To the left were the pool house and behind it, a pair of chalets. To the right was the main residence. So far, nobody knew we were on the island – however, several men were dead and they would be missed sooner rather than later...

I took a moment to look out to see – there was something out there; I could feel it. Was it good, or were we in deeper shit than we already were? When you looked at it from a certain point of view, Fusion had just invaded a foreign country. The British Virgin Islands, were a British overseas territory and the British had fought wars over less...

We separated and I went to the left – towards the pool house, while Wildcat continued around to visit the chalets. I took a brief look behind me with my NVGs and smiled as I made out Shadow, Hit Girl, Jackal and Kick-Ass approaching up the slope in the near distance.

..._...

The pool house was dark and the door was closed.

I turned the handle and carefully pulled the door open – the hinges were obviously well oiled. I scanned the area with the NVGs, enabling the active infra-red. I could see a blanket and some other items – a plate with a partially eaten sandwich and a can of Coke.

Rogue!

I quickly searched the pool house and sadly, I found nothing else.

"Fusion – just found where they were holding somebody – no joy, though."

"Copy that!" Hal replied.

I left the pool house and immediately ran into another guard – I pulled out my knife, but he deflected it.

Time: 02:50

As I watched the residence from a hundred yards away, I saw Psyche appear and immediately get into a fight with a guard.

The girl could move when she needed to and ever since landing on the beach, she had been an ice cold killer. As a vigilante, she had to control her temper and limit the killing, but here on the island, I had let her off the leash, so to speak and she was working out beautifully. I also knew that she was very, very pissed off about somebody seizing her little sister and she wanted revenge, just as much as I did.

The man she was fighting, was good, but Psyche was smaller and more agile; she dodged his knife thrusts with jumps and dives, rolling along the ground at one stage. I did not dare say anything over the comms, in case I distracted her. Then the nine-year-old girl drove her knife into the man's chest and I saw blood erupt out of the man's still beating heart. The blood splashed over Psyche as she lowered the man to the ground and then stood up.

She turned to face us and the young Brit threw us a casual salute, before heading up the stairs away from the pool. I just chuckled to myself and I saw Shadow shaking her head, but smirking all the same.

All hell seemed to break loose!

I was hauled out of the bed and dragged down a corridor. I could hear gunfire and I was scared – it was dark and there was shouting and flashes and... I was pushed into a room and the door was slammed shut and locked.

I covered in the corner and just shook with fear. It had been so close, that man – he had tried to remove my swimsuit. Only minutes before, he had pulled me out of the pool house and taken me to his room. I had no idea what he had in mind, but he obviously wanted me naked for whatever it was...

Then the gunfire had started and interrupted things.

I heard the gunshots and we all bolted up the hill, ignoring all further attempts at stealth.

Over to the left, in the second chalet, I had seen the flash of gunshots, then Wildcat had emerged and I could see blood dripping from her claws. She headed towards the main residence, following in her partner's wake.

Jackal and Kick-Ass ran up and over to the left to get into position to cut off reinforcements that might come up the stone track. I followed Shadow over the perfectly manicured lawn, dropping a guard with a throwing knife. We dropped down onto a bricked drive where there was a parked SUV.

As I passed by, I attached a remote charge to the underneath and then continued on towards the residence.

Dammit!

I had not been quick enough and that bastard had got two shots off – both had missed, but the damage had been done. However, the bastard had paid, with my claws in his heart... I dived out of the chalet and saw Psyche pushing her way into the residence.

By the time I caught up with her, she was raging. The young girl had pinned a guard against the wall, the muzzle of her MP7 buried deep in his throat.

"Where is she?" Psyche bellowed as she drove her right knee upwards into the man's stomach.

"I – don't – know..." The man gasped.

"There must be a hundred reasons why I shouldn't blow you away. Right now, I can't think of one..."

With that, Psyche literally blew the poor bastards head apart with a three-round burst. The girl was gone before the body had hit the ground.

As Shadow and I ran down the steps towards the front door of the residence, we came under heavy fire.

I dived to the left and Shadow to the right, we both engaged with our heavier weapons. The fire was accurate too as bullets pinged off the stonework that we were hiding behind. Then I heard some bad news.

"Contact! Contact! Contact!"

It was Kick-Ass and then I heard the FN Minimis commence chattering away and I knew that reinforcements were trying to come in from behind us. I returned fire, dropping a man – we had to move and we had to move soon, Rogue's life was at stake.

Dammit, we were so close!

The Residence

Time: 03:05

"Who the bloody hell is attacking us?"

"We have no idea boss – we seem to have lost several men already, but we have extra men coming up from the barracks on the mainland and they will cut off the attackers' escape route. A group of men are cutting off the residence, as per standing orders."

"Are they soldiers?"

"We have no idea; nobody has actually seen them yet."

"Are they here for the girl?"

"No way – no way they could have found out where we took her. The girl's parents are just rich fuckers – no way they could have had an operation mounted this quickly. It's probably just a competitor, boss."

"Whoever they are – kill them and if possible bring one to me – I want answers!"

Shadow and I were able to break out as we laid down some heavy fire.

The main door was closed to us, but that was soon remedied as I slapped a block of C4 onto the locking mechanism in the centre. I yanked out the activation tag and dived behind the nearest wall...

There was a crashing explosion and part of the door sailed over our heads. We both surged forwards, finding two dead men – at least it might have been two; it was difficult to tell... My Glock 23 barked out orders of death as we moved forwards. I felt a bullet strike my body armour – damn it hurt! I swapped my Glock to my left hand and raised my G36C in my right – pouring death in two directions as I dived for cover behind a couch.

Shadow crashed down beside me as she swapped out the magazine in her FN Five-seveN pistol.

Atlantic Storm

Time: 03:18

Things did not seem to be going well.

I monitored all the voice traffic as the team fought. Beside me was Danny – or rather 'Ravage' as he should be called.

"We need to get closer, just in case..." Neptune announced as he spun the wheel and advanced the throttles.

There was a whopping sound from the radar system as a large contact was detected eighteen miles out and closing at six knots.

"We have company!"

Buck Island

We had joined up with Wildcat and Psyche in the kitchen.

Psyche had just put a bullet into a man's face after pistol whipping him with her SIG. She was smiling – the girl was enjoying the killing, just as I did...

"He says she's in there!" She growled over the comms pointing at a large wooden door.

I felt my heart beating harder – we were close.

"Kick-Ass – we have a location, northern-most building, ground level..."

"Copy!"

I placed another charge – this one smaller than before.

Again, I pulled the tab and crouched down.

..._...

The door burst open and I rolled in, shooting at anything that was over five feet tall.

I saw my daughter, right there, across the room behind the men. She was still wearing her one-piece swimsuit and sneakers, nothing else; she looked very scared as she huddled into the corner. I felt anger surge through me as I found myself desperately wanting to get close to my daughter so that I could hug her and get her out of that dangerous place.

"I have eyes on Rogue!"

There was an explosion from across the room as a window shattered and Kick-Ass made his entry, almost ripping the head off a man as he twisted the head in anger. Several men ran out of another door and as the other members of Fusion appeared, we took control of the room.

Shadow kept a lookout at one door, Wildcat the other.

..._...

"Well hello there!" I said as I saw the boss cowering on the floor – he matched his photo perfectly.

He did not seem too happy to see me...

First though, I had to see to my daughter. She was still in the corner of her room. Her eyes were tight shut and her arms were over her head and ears trying to block out the noise. I could see the streaks of tears on her dirty face as I approached. There was no recognition from her, she seemed too stunned to notice me as I knelt down beside her.

I gingerly reached out and touched her shoulder.

I felt the gloved hands take hold of me and I heard a voice.

"This is Hit Girl; I have Rogue – repeat, I have Rogue!"

I looked up into a face that was masked. I could not see who it was, but for some reason I felt safe, I had no idea why. All around me I could hear shouts and the sounds of battle being fought. It reminded me of the war films that Danny loved to watch with Dave. I never liked them, but the place sounded just the same. Around me I could see death; people were dying as they tried to stop me from being rescued.

The gunfire began to fade and I was pulled around to face my rescuer.

"Are you okay?" The voice growled, but it felt familiar somehow.

I knew that I was safe, but I needed more...

I spoke through my sobs...

"I want my Mommy..."

"She's here, little one, she's here," I said as soothingly as I could and I hugged my daughter tightly.

Anne-Marie looked up at me, desperate for the love that she so desperately needed from the one person that was so badly needed at that moment.

"Where?"

The little girl looked around anxiously and a little confused.

"Right here..."

I just stared, uncomprehending, as Hit Girl reached up and began to pull off her helmet and mask.

Was I about to find out who Hit Girl really was? Then I saw blonde hair appearing and... Oh my... Mom?

"Mom!"

I hugged Mindy so tightly. My Mom... She was Hit Girl and she had come for me; I was safe, I was complete. I looked up as an enormous shape cast its shadow over the both of us. I recognised the green and yellow markings, it had to be Kick-Ass and I took a hopeful chance.

"Hi... Dad...?"

"Hi, sport – ready to go home?"

"Yes, please!"

Time: 03:30

Chapter 236*: Rogue Descent

Later that morning
Friday
New Year's Day 2016

Location: Buck Island

Time: 03:35

She was scared and she was shivering with the cold even as her Mother wrapped her arms around her.

She began to feel safe for the first time. The roughness of the military clothing and body armour against her skin felt surprisingly reassuring to her as the arms clung to her like glue. The sight of her Father, standing not too far away, clad in similar military clothing and body armour gave her a feeling of pride, security and well-being. She had been shocked to find out who had come to rescue her from captivity and even more shocked to find out who had been beneath the masks.

Her Father had replaced his own mask soon after allowing her to see his face, however her Mother, had not. She had rising suspicions about the identity of the other masked vigilantes who stalked the perimeter toting large and angry looking weaponry, ready to tear into anybody who dared to approach. She desperately wanted to leave, but her Mother was busy talking to her captor, using words, some of which she had never heard before, but all of which she knew were bad, very bad.

..._...

As she focussed on the man that had tormented her, she felt an intense anger building up inside of her, like she had never felt before in her short life. She had the irresistible urge to want to hurt the man and that thought scared the seven-year-old girl to her core.

As she watched, Hit Girl kicked the man in the chest, sending him sprawling onto his backside. His hands were bound behind him, so he yelled out in pain as he landed on the floor.

"Do you know who you were fucking with?" Hit Girl growled with venom in her tone.

The man just shook his head; he looked scared, really scared.

"Do you know who that little girl belongs to?"

Again, the man shook his head.

"I am Hit Girl; she is my daughter and you are going to die..."

A rush of recognition spread across the man's face.

Everybody knew about Hit Girl and what she was capable of. It was obvious by his expression that he knew he had made an enormous mistake. The fear in the man's face seemed to move on and he started to shake. I felt nothing but hatred for the man; I wanted him to die – he had hurt me and taken me from my family. I so wanted to hurt him. I got to my feet and walked over to Mom.

"Hi, honey," Mom said, looking down at me as I hung onto her arm.

I looked up into her eyes and then down at the man lying on the floor.

"I want to hurt him..."

I saw shock in my Mom's eyes and on her face, but only for a moment as she smiled, ignoring the man on the floor. She knelt down and looked into my eyes.

"That is a big step, honey – but if you want to, you can."

I felt a hand on my shoulder – it was Dad, he nodded down at me and smiled.

"I want to kill him..."

Now, she was really scared.

The young girl wrapped her small hands around the butt of the small pistol – small it may have been, but the Walther P22 was still large in her hands. She shook from head to toe at the thought of the power that she held in her hands. The man was hauled to a kneeling position before her. A puddle of clear liquid spread across the floor beneath the man.

Her Mother gently whispered encouraging words into her ear as her larger hands braced the pistol.

"Breathe in and out, in and out. Keep calm, both eyes open, aim the pistol at your target – centre mass – the chest is good..."

The man's eyes were wide with fear. What shocked me was that I actually enjoyed his fear; I was in control, instead of him – he was at my mercy. Mom's whispering continued as I focussed on my target.

"Feel the anger, think of what he did to you and focus that into hate... When you are ready, gently squeeze the trigger, again and again..."

I focussed along the top of the weapon, keeping both eyes open. Then, as my breathing became slow and regular, I gently squeezed the trigger. The pistol jerked in my hand. My brain registered a flash, followed by a large bang and some smoke. I squeezed again, and again, and again – ten times I squeezed before the pistol just clicked with each further squeeze.

..._...

What did I feel? I felt nothing.

Mom gently lifted the pistol out of my hands, and I looked up into her face. She smiled down at me reassuringly before she stood up and pulled on her mask and helmet, switching her identity in an instant. Even though I was now looking at Hit Girl; I knew that she was still my Mom.

I finally turned to the man. He was lying on his back and his chest was covered in blood and his shirt was ripped to shreds. There was a large pool of blood spreading around him. I would have expected to have been freaked out by what I was seeing, but I was not. Why?

I looked up at my Father; he nodded his approval, as did the vigilante that I recognised as Shadow. Another man began to move on the other side of the room. There was a single gunshot and Shadow replaced the pistol in her holster – that man did not move again.

..._...

"Come on, little sis..."

I felt another arm around my shoulders – familiar. Despite the mask and blood-soaked combat gear, I knew that it was my big sister, Steph. I smiled, still overawed by everything that was happening around me.

"Here, put this on..." She said and handed me a t-shirt.

I dragged it on and was then helped into a thick camouflaged jacket.

"This is body armour; it will help protect you as we head back to the boat..." Steph went on calmly, securing the jacket around me – it was heavy.

I got a close up look at all the blood on Steph's gear – I hoped none of it was hers. I took in the large knife and the pistol on her belt – she was all business. I struggled to comprehend that my nine-year-old sister was armed to the teeth, but I had no chance to get my mind straight as I was dragged off by Steph, towards the destroyed door.

My sister pushed me roughly against the wall with her left hand and raised her machine-gun with her right, before sending a short burst down the corridor and then she moved, pulling me with her. Immediately behind me, were Mom and Dad.

Dad was facing the other way, watching behind us, an enormous machine-gun in his hands.

"You guys had better hustle – we have many inbounds from the north..."

"Copy that, Jackal – we're moving out now with Rogue."

I was worried now – the ride out was not going to be easy. We had my daughter; now we had to get her to safety... I tried to shield her from the violence and dead men, but that was going to be impossible. I forced myself to focus on the extraction and not my daughter.

As we came around a corner, we found ourselves back in the kitchen. There was a woman there – she wore body armour, but instantly dropped her pistol to the floor and raised her hands. She glared at Rogue who moved closer to Psyche, gripping her left arm tightly.

Psyche looked down at her sister for a moment.

"Did that woman hurt you?" She asked Rogue.

Rogue nodded. Psyche's lip curled, she raised her MP7 and sent three, three-round bursts into the woman, sending her flying backwards across the kitchen before the corpse crashed into a glass-fronted refrigerator. The body was quickly covered in cakes and other items of chilled food.

"She won't hurt you or anybody again... She got her just desserts!"

Shadow actually laughed as we moved out of the kitchen.

Gunfire erupted from the next corridor and Psyche yanked Rogue down and thrust her against the wall, putting herself between the danger and her sister.

Wildcat took up position behind Psyche as backup. Rogue put her hands over her ears and hunched against the wall – I could see her shaking with fear. Our stocks of ammunition were getting low – very low! We had to break out and soon – in the jungle and the trees we would stand a chance.

"I'll handle this..." I growled as I reached behind me and into my webbing. I winked at Kick-Ass "Corridors are my speciality!"

My hands reappeared holding an FN Five-seven in each hand. I dived over towards a small counter ignoring the bullets that hammered into it. I sat on my haunches, leaning against the counter and steadied my breathing, my two pistols held up either side of my head. A flood of six-year-old memories appeared unbidden in my mind, but I shoved them away and focussed on taking out the gunmen.

"Hit Girl is moving in three – two – one..."

I rose up from behind the counter, diving out to my right and began firing each pistol – not a round was wasted as I sent death in every direction – using the furniture to jump into the air, I rolled and flipped my way down the corridor using the walls as leverage for my next dive towards a target.

My eyes kept sight of each of the dozen or so gunmen as I moved. I dived to avoid their bullets, watching their aim and dodging accordingly – I felt bullets passing very close and I was certain some had clipped me.

I span as two bullets connected with my body armour throwing me off and I hit the corridor wall before falling to the floor. A man came close but I sent three bullets into his groin and another into his face dead centre. Three more men appeared at the far end of the corridor, only six feet away. I raised both pistols from my crouched position and was about to fire when the three men seemed to explode with blood and flesh flying...

I turned to see four weapons spitting fire as Kick-Ass, Shadow, Wildcat and Psyche poured bullets into the three men, shredding their bodies.

Silence reigned as the three bodies fell to the floor of the corridor in a pool of blood and shredded flesh.

"Don't do that again!" I cautioned Hit Girl as I strode past. "You looked beautiful out there..."

My wife smiled up at me as she reloaded her pistols before keeping them in her hands ready for use. Psyche came forward with Rogue, averting the younger girl's eyes from the carnage about her. Shadow and Wildcat came last, covering our rear. I was down to my last two-hundred round belt for the Minimi and had just two thirty-round magazines left for my G36K.

Jackal joined us as we left the residence. He had been lying prone on the ground, sending short bursts of fire north from his Minimi. I pressed the button on a detonator and the charge that I had placed on the SUV detonated, taking two men with it.

Kick-Ass sent half a dozen smoke rounds towards the road from his FN40GL-S 40-millimetre grenade launcher.

Time: 03:55

We ran across the beautifully manicured lawn and down into the trees.

From the sound of the gunfire, we would need to fight our way back down to the beach. Dawn was rapidly approaching and we could 'see' and 'be seen' as the light level steadily increased. We gathered together for a moment and checked over our ammo loads.

Hit Girl had just blown through forty rounds and I knew that she was low on ammo for her G36C. Shadow had just over half a magazine left for her P90 – about thirty rounds. Wildcat and Psyche had one thirty round magazine left, each.

We also had injuries – three. Nothing serious, but a dressing was applied to Hit Girl's upper left arm and the same for Psyche and Jackal. Psyche had taken a bullet to her right thigh – only a gouge, but it still bled and Psyche was ignoring the pain, just as Hit Girl did. Jackal had received shrapnel in his left shoulder from a grenade, but that would have to wait until we got back to the Atlantic Storm.

I was annoyed at being wounded, but shit happened and that corridor had been murder...

I was more worried about Psyche and Jackal, but they told me to 'stop fucking winging' – damn Brits! Once we were all sorted out, we began the trek back to our assault boats. Trojan and Splinter had reported men coming ashore near them, with vehicles. They were in a difficult situation – they could not engage without compromising our boats – our escape. They had to guard the boats and they would both be safe as long as nobody headed in their direction.

I turned as I heard a helicopter, back up at the residence.

That had to be more reinforcements... Damn it!

..._...

The first fifty yards were fine, but then the bullets began to fly from two different directions and we caught in a deadly crossfire.

Psyche and Wildcat were lying on top of Rogue, keeping her protected at all costs as the bullets cut through the dense vegetation. We were pinned down and our two Minimi machine guns were getting low on ammunition. We could not move without endangering our lives. Then I heard the whine of multiple turboshaft engines and the throb of many rotor blades – kind of reminded me of Apocalypse Now...

..._...

Four helicopters flew overhead in formation.

Two were United States Navy MH-60R Seahawk helicopters and were armed with four Hellfire missiles each. Flying as escort, were a pair of Royal Navy AW159 Wildcat HMA.2 maritime attack helicopters, crewmen evident in the doorways firing their pintle mounted, Browning M3M .50-calibre machine guns into the gunmen that were blocking our escape.

All that was missing was Wagner's Ride of the Valkyries at full volume!

A Hellfire missile was launched from one of the Seahawks; it rocketed off its launch rail and dived downwards towards a truck that was moving towards our position. The truck exploded seconds later. Two more missiles were launched by the other Seahawk and there was a much larger explosion as the mega-yacht, moored at the pier, bulged in the middle and then exploded.

..._...

"Fusion, Atlantic Storm..."

It was Neptune.

"... Make for the pier, we're coming to get you!"

"Fusion copies – give us twenty minutes and say thanks for the gunships!" I replied.

It was not over, but we now had a chance. More men were heading down from the residence where they had been deposited by the earlier helicopter. Our rear was unprotected. In the expanding light of dawn, I could make out a blue helicopter flying a short distance away – there was a man in the main cabin and he was aiming a machine gun directly at us, but before I could do anything the helicopter exploded as a stream of .50-calibre rounds from one of the Wildcat helicopters shredded the fuselage.

..._...

Then the comms came to life again as Hal called in.

"Fusion, Atlantic Storm – bringing callsign Four Two Charlie onto your frequency..."

Huh?

"Break, break. Fusion this is Four Two Charlie – we have your backs. Go for the pier. Out!"

The voice had been British and the callsign was of a format used by the Royal Marines Commando. We were not alone on the island... Seconds later, we all heard medium machine-gun fire, about sixty yards distant and we could see tracer rounds from two different firing positions reaching out for the approaching gunmen.

I needed no further encouragement and we ran. Kick-Ass, his Minimi exhausted of rounds, seized hold of our daughter and scooped her up into his arms.

Wildcat and I were on the left flank when we heard movement in the trees.

That was when I fucked up – I was very tired and I missed the roots at my feet and as a result I sprawled to the ground losing the grip on my MP7. Wildcat made to help me up, but then a gunman appeared in ambush and he brought his rifle up...

Before either Wildcat or I could react – a fucking bush rose up and casually snapped the gunman's neck! The 'bush', winked at me and then vanished back into the undergrowth. Fuck me! That must have been a bloody Royal Marines Commando – between him and the gunman, I was going to need some clean knickers...

Atlantic Storm

Time: 04:31

I edged closer towards the island.

Dark smoke blocked out the approaching dawn. The almost two-hundred-foot mega-yacht was belching smoke as she lay on her port side, leaning away from the far side of the dock. Men were evident on the dock and around it – that would never do.

I had ferreted amongst Dave and Mindy's weaponry and selected a suitable solution.

"Go Rambo!" Hal quipped as I stepped out of the bridge, a FN40GL-S 40-millimetre grenade launcher in my hand.

I laughed and began to fire and reload the single-shot weapon, sending high-explosive rounds into the water around the dock. The men ran, some sending bullets in my direction. Several of the men fell as Splinter and Trojan engaged them at the end of the dock.

Once the dock was clear, I ran back into the Bridge and guided us alongside the end of the dock. I ran to the bow and with Danny's assistance I got a pair of lines onto the dock. I had one final task – I sent a dozen smoke grenades onto the beach to shield us from the shore.

..._...

As we lay alongside the end of the pier, we were a sitting duck.

From the starboard bridge wing of the Atlantic Storm, I scanned the smoke-strewn beach and the trees through the binoculars. It was like a scene from some old war movie. I could make out burning debris and dead bodies. Splinter and Trojan were midway down the pier ensuring that nobody could make a rush attack on the Atlantic Storm. Across the pier the burning remains of the mega-yacht settled into the water.

I could hear the chatter of machine-gun fire, not too far away. The helicopters had been a godsend otherwise there would have been no way for me to bring the yacht into the dock.

Time: 04:44

Finally, I saw movement.

It was my daughter, or rather Shadow with her P90 to her shoulder, clearing the way ahead of the main assault force and on either side of her I saw Wildcat and Psyche. Less than a minute later came the lioness herself, Hit Girl, emerging triumphantly from the smoke and the trees, her head held high and in her arms, her cub.

I breathed an audible sigh of relief as behind her came the lion, in the form of Kick-Ass, guarding both his lioness and his cub. Beside him was Jackal – everybody was safe. Thank God!

My wife ran down the pier, urging everybody to move and helping them up the boarding ladder I had hung over the bow. Kick-Ass turned halfway down the pier and once everybody was past him, he raised the FN40GL-S 40-millimetre grenade launcher and sent a pair of rounds into the boathouse at the shore end of the pier. He turned back towards the yacht as the boathouse came apart in response to the pair of explosions within it.

Kick-Ass was grinning as he boarded the yacht. As soon as all were aboard, I advanced the throttles and we gently backed out away from the dock before turning and heading out to sea at twenty-two knots.

Time: 05:00

I was not letting my daughter out of my sight!

Once we were aboard, Dave carried her down below while I followed barely a foot behind. Cathy already had a bath running, so as soon as Anne-Marie set foot in our stateroom, she was stripped and dropped unceremoniously into the hot water. Cathy would check her over as soon as she was clean.

I stripped out of my clothes and body armour, and while my daughter relaxed in the tub, I took the opportunity to take a shower – I could still see Anne-Marie through the steamed up glass partition, so I was content. Dave was keeping us both in sight at all times as he pulled off his own body armour before helping our daughter wash her hair.

As she was swung into the bath I had seen the dark bruises all over her body, not to mention several cuts. I was incensed that anybody could do that to a young child. I felt absolutely nothing for those that had died – they had brought it upon themselves...

..._...

Once I had finished my shower and examined my own bruises and cuts, I wrapped a towel around my body and sat on the edge of the tub. Anne-Marie put her head against my thigh and I gently stroked her wet hair.

"Thank you, Mom..."

"I would never leave you, either of you. I love you both very much. I am so very sorry that you were taken and that you had to experience something so horrific..." I took a deep breath. "You also learnt a secret, today. Something which I wanted to keep from you and your brother until you were both old enough to properly understand what we do..."

My daughter looked up at me.

"Mom... I have only the utmost respect for what you all do. I've known that you and Dad have been up to something, but I never thought for a minute..."

"I was worried that you would hate me for what I do..."

Anne-Marie took my hand and she squeezed it.

"Never... If you were not a vigilante, then me and my brother would be dead in Gotham, instead of being cared for. I know I let you down and sometimes I don't acknowledge what you do for us, but after this... I know that you and Dad love us and would do anything for us..."

I lifted my daughter out of the bath and wrapped a soft towel around her. I sat her on my lap and hugged her, letting the tears fall along with those of my daughter. Dave came and wrapped his own strong and reassuring arms around us both.

After several minutes, Anne-Marie went quiet and then she spoke.

"So I assume that everybody onboard is a vigilante?"

I grinned – Anne-Marie had an insatiable need for knowledge.

"Except for Ryan, yes," I replied.

After Anne-Marie had been checked over thoroughly by Cathy and dressed, she was mobbed in the Main Salon by everybody wanting to check on her.

As she sat on the couch, she went from person to person, pointing with her finger.

"Shadow, Jackal, Wildcat, Trojan, err..." She stopped at Tommy.

"Splinter..." Tommy said.

"Hal..." Abby added.

"Medic..." Cathy chimed in.

"Psyche..." Stephanie said with a grin.

"Ryan is Neptune and you, young lady, you are 'Rogue' while your brat of a brother, is 'Ravage'," I added.

"Rogue... I like that..."

"I think Ravage is kinda cool!" Danny added as he sat next to his sister, overjoyed at having her back.

Joshua was not happy.

He was on his bed face down, holding on tightly to my hand. Mom was busy swabbing his damaged shoulder and injecting some local anaesthetic before she got to work with some tweezers. The skin was black and blue from the abuse it had received and Josh was in obvious pain. Beside me sat Steph, a clean white bandage on her right thigh.

She had insisted on staying after Mom had dressed her wound so that she could help Josh. I had no problem with that, so we both held his hands as he grimaced with the pain until the area began to go numb.

Mom then set to work removing the jagged pieces of plastic and metal that had dug into the flesh. After ten minutes of careful work, Josh's shoulder was tidied up and a large dressing was applied.

Chapter 237: Rogue Escape

Later that morning
Friday
New Year's Day 2016

The Bridge of the Atlantic Storm

Location: 50nm north of Buck Island
Position: 19.2616° N 64.5542° W
Course: 000°, Speed: 20 knots, 1,715nm logged

Time: 07:30

A little over two and half hours later, we were fifty nautical miles north of the island.

We had all thought it was over, but it was not – not by a long shot!

An alarm began to sound and a symbol flashed on the radar screen to the right of the helm console. It was the CPA or Closest Point of Approach alarm. The computer that drove the radar had calculated that a contact would pass within our two-mile buffer zone – in fact, the computer decided that the contact was on a collision course as it closed at over thirty knots from our port beam. It was intending to do us harm; my training and experience told me that. I reached under the helm console, slid back the protective cover and pressed the recessed button.

As soon as the small touchscreen keypad illuminated on the right hand portion of the console, I rapidly entered the eight-digit code and as before, the right hand of the four nineteen-inch touch-screens changed to a menu system with twelve options. I still found the purple tint that appeared around the menu amusing.

I selected option 1: 'BATTLE MODE'. Instantly a loud klaxon sounded throughout the Atlantic Storm.

..._...

'Battle Mode' made significant changes to the operation of the yacht. Firstly, the de-rated engines were restored to their full power rating, adding a few hundred extra horsepower to each of the engines. The engines were also permitted to be pushed way past the red-line for a limited period allowing bursts of almost thirty knots.

In addition, various electronic systems automatically came online – most of which were illegal for the average civilian vessel to carry. It was to be assumed that the advancing vessel was using its radar to track the Atlantic Storm from beyond visual range. As soon as the ESM system came online it immediately began to identify and prioritise any electronic emissions that it detected. I ignored the enormous returns from the distant warships' immense radars while the computer concentrated on the much closer and infinitely smaller radar of the converging contact as an imminent threat. With the press of a key, the ECM system began transmitting via a narrow beam on the exact same frequency of the approaching radar and on a much higher power setting, drowning it out. The advancing craft would be blind.

I advanced the twin throttles, increasing our speed to twenty-six knots.

Mindy and Dave arrived on the Bridge in response to the alarm that had just stopped sounding, just as an ESM alarm sounded from the console.

I turned to check the screen. An identical pair of radars as that which we had already detected were moving closer. I selected the ESM and set it to jam those radars, too. It was fairly obvious that two more high-speed craft were on a converging course. Mindy picked up a phone and called the Main Salon.

"Josh, get the kids down below into the crew quarters. Have Megan and Curtis break out the MP5s and stand guard."

The crew quarters in the bow were protected, both by the inbuilt strength of the bow and the layers of Kevlar armour in that part of the hull. As long as the kids remained in the central crew area, they would be safe. As I watched, Dave punched another code into the same keypad that Ryan and I had used previously, only this time a camouflaged hatch was released in the deck beside the helm.

Dave hauled out three G36K assault rifles with folded stocks and two magazines each. Chloe, wearing body armour appeared on the Bridge hauling a case of loaded magazines which she dumped onto the deck. She had another G36K strung over her back. She took six magazines and headed up to the Sun Deck where I knew Josh would be waiting with a Minimi.

We had to prevent them from boarding – if they did, it would all be over. We had no chance of sinking them, but we would try. Dave and I would man the Bridge wings while Ryan coned the yacht. Abby would assist Ryan.

We had all pulled on our body armour, again.

Time: 07:40

Somebody was obviously pissed at our destroying their operation!

How far were they willing to go to for revenge? Were they like me? I had allowed revenge to consume my childhood; were these people the same? My answer came quickly...

Tracer rounds reached out for us from the closest go-fast boat. Each of the 36-foot Rigid Inflatable Boats had a mounted heavy machine gun in the bow. They were ultra-maneuvrable and targeting them at speed was not easy. We were in trouble and we needed help. I seized the radio handset and punched the button labelled '16', before pressing the transmit button.

"Mayday! Mayday! Mayday! This is Atlantic Storm, Atlantic Storm, Atlantic Storm. Call sign Zulu Golf Charlie Sierra Seven. Break. Mayday! The vessel Atlantic Storm is located in position one-nine-decimal-two-six north, six-four-decimal-five-five west, course two-seven-zero, speed two-three knots. We are a British-flagged Motoryacht and we are taking fire from multiple unknown attackers and are in need of immediate assistance."

I released the transmit button.

HMS Dragon
Forty-five nautical miles to the southeast

Commander Richard Perrin turned in his chair as the bridge radio, tuned to Channel 16, jumped to life with every mariner's worst nightmare.

"Mayday! Mayday! Mayday! This is Atlantic Storm..."

He recognised the female voice almost immediately, but the moment he heard the distressed vessel's name, he leapt into action.

"Bearing of that signal!"

"Three-one-seven, sir!"

"Officer of the Watch, alter course, three-one-seven, take us to twenty-six knots!"

"Aye, aye, sir – alter course three-one-seven and increase speed to twenty-six knots! Helm..."

The Officer of the Watch (OOW) passed the new orders to the helmsman while Commander Perrin continued issuing his own orders.

"Quartermaster, flying stations! Scramble the ready Wildcat!"

The Quartermaster began to issue commands over the ship-wide tannoy as the nine-thousand-ton destroyer heeled to port, altering its course to Starboard and her twin screws beat the wake into a raging white torrent as HMS Dragon accelerated like the thoroughbred she was. In every compartment aboard a speaker burst into life.

"For the alert flight crew, for the alert flight crew: scramble, scramble, scramble!"

..._...

Almost two hundred feet further aft, the pilot and observer ran out of the Wardroom, heading aft towards the flight deck where their helicopter awaited them. They immediately climbed aboard and strapped in as the flight deck crew began to remove the lashings securing the Agusta-Westland Wildcat HMA.2 helicopter to the flight deck.

The twin Rolls-Royce/Honeywell T800 turboshaft engines rapidly came to life with an increasing scream. Minutes later the rotors began to rotate, steadily increasing in speed. Within another two minutes the helicopter was cleared to launch and the pilot released the harpoon deck lock before the helicopter leapt into the sky.

The Wildcat translated to port to clear the destroyer's superstructure before dipping its nose and gaining forward speed, accelerating to over one hundred and sixty knots.

..._...

While the helicopter was launching, Commander Perrin tried a scare tactic.

"Atlantic Storm, Atlantic Storm, Atlantic Storm. This is British Destroyer Dragon, British Destroyer Dragon, British Destroyer Dragon. We are turning to assist, armed air support is launching and will arrive first."

It was hoped that the aggressors would hear the response and seriously consider whether or not to take on a state-of-the-art 9,000-ton destroyer in battle.

..._...

Ten minutes later, the Wildcat had made radar contact.

"Captain, PWO, Talon 376 is reporting four radar surface contacts. Interestingly, one of the contacts is actively jamming the other three. Even more perplexing is the fact that the jamming is coming from a Royal Navy Type 675 ECM, sir! The jamming contact has altered course in our direction, too, sir."

Commander Perrin chuckled as he muttered to himself, "Clever girl! Where did you get that from – definitely not Tesco!"

With the Atlantic Storm having turned towards them, they were now closing at almost fifty-knots. In forty-five minutes they would be in gun range. For now, the helicopter would have to run interference.

He then responded to his Principal Warfare Officer.

"Classify the jamming contact as the Atlantic Storm and confirm intent of the other vessels. Engage only on confirmation of belligerent intent."

Royal Navy Wildcat HMA.2 Call sign Talon 376

On a terse command from the pilot, the two crewmen aboard slid open each side door, locking them back and they readied their Browning M3M .50-calibre machine guns that were mounted in each side-door on a pintle mount. Each heavy machine gun had a hopper of 600-rounds ready to fire. The weapon could empty that hopper in less than a minute if required. The weapons were carried as they were more than capable of punching holes in boat engines and stopping a chase before it even began, but then the Wildcat was directly descended from the world's fastest and most agile helicopter, the Lynx, so a chase would be over very quickly anyway. The Wildcat could fly faster sideways than most go-fast boats could travel forwards!

The pilot observed the four craft heading in his direction. The largest was the 120-foot Atlantic Storm. She stood out, a pure white leviathan against the azure blue water as she cut through the waves at over twenty-five knots. The 190-ton vessel was able to cope with the ocean waves much better than the three much smaller go-fast boats that were harassing her.

The Atlantic Storm was zig-zagging every time that one of the other craft tried to line up a shot. Tracer rounds were evident coming from machine guns on the go-fasts. The pilot put his helicopter into a steep dive before buzzing the first go-fast at less than fifty feet. The crew ducked and then somebody did something very stupid – they opened fire on the Royal Navy helicopter.

"This is Talon 376; we are taking fire and declaring self-defence – engaging!"

The Atlantic Storm

Time: 08:05

Commander Ryan Bennett looked out of the bridge windows at the gratifying sight of the British maritime attack helicopter.

The staccato sound of the heavy machine guns engaging the attacking boats drowned out the lighter machine guns of the go-fasts and the gunfire from outside the bridge as Dave and Mindy engaged the go-fasts with their assault rifles and the heavier gunfire from the Sun Deck above being delivered by Joshua with Chloe's assistance. It was lucky that the armoured glass, required for ocean-going vessels, also had the unintentional side-effect of being bullet resistant! Nonetheless, there were still numerous chips in the glass.

He knew that support from HMS Dragon was coming – the Dragon's mast-top Sampson radar was being tracked by the ESM system as it topped the radar horizon. However, they had to get to within ten nautical miles for the Dragon to be able to engage with her 4.5-inch deck gun.

There was still seven miles to go – almost fifteen minutes.

Royal Navy Wildcat HMA.2
Call sign Talon 376

The pilot smiled as one of the go-fast boats exploded in a spectacular fashion.

He swore that he saw at least one body spinning across the wave tops – 'Fuck 'em,' he thought. He aimed his helicopter at the next boat, weaving as he avoided incoming tracer fire. That was fine; if they were firing at him, then they weren't firing at the civilian yacht. He was paid to be shot at; they were not, although he was not altogether certain about the 'civilian' status of the yacht, despite the defaced Red Ensign that flew from her stern.

As he observed the white yacht, he could see various crew members on the yacht firing weapons at the go-fast boats. On the upper deck, he could see a machine-gun in use and a girl firing an assault rifle. On the bridge wings, a man and a woman could be seen also engaging the attacking boats with assault rifles.

Only the previous day, he had flown the very same helicopter against drug-dealers on an island. His crewmen had engaged mercenaries and he had achieved an air-to-air kill; a rarity for a helicopter. He had also heard that a child had been kidnapped, which had been the catalyst for the attack and that was all the reasoning he needed to put his life on the line.

"Crew, coming around again, standby to attack..."

Time: 08:18

HMS Dragon
Twelve nautical miles to the southeast

Commander Richard Perrin was pacing his capacious bridge when word finally came in from his PWO that they were approaching gun range.

"Officer of the Watch, hands to Action Stations, if you please!" He ordered.

The General Alarm sounded, followed by the Quartermaster's voice: "Hands to Action Stations, hands to Action Stations!"

'What hornet's nest have you stoked up now, Mrs Lizewski!' he asked himself as his ship rumbled to the sound of many feet and the closing and securing of hatches.

..._...

A few minutes later, and with the precise targeting information provided by Talon 376, the firing sequence for the 4.5-inch gun began.

"Target correct..."

"Four five on, bearing red zero-six-eight, range eighteen-thousand yards..."

"Command approved, four five..."

"Four five, engage... Four five, shoot..."

The deck-gun on the destroyer's bow elevated and turned to port as a round slid smoothly into the open breech, which then slammed shut. With a loud bang and a lot of smoke, the gun fired, instantly ejecting the spent casing and loading another four-foot-long round.

The fired projectile ripped through the air at 2,850-feet per second – it would take just nineteen seconds to reach its target.

The Atlantic Storm

There was a ripping sound, like torn linen.

As Mindy watched, a water-spout appeared a few yards from one of the go-fast boats, soaking it in salt-water. Thirty seconds later another projectile ripped through the air and then another close behind. The go-fast was fighting for its life as it twisted and turned, then the craft seemed to stop before it came apart as it tried to occupy the same spot as the 114-millimetre diameter projectile. The explosion was spectacular as three-kilogrammes of RDX/TNT detonated on contact sending wreckage and body parts in all directions.

There was still one go-fast left and that quickly fell to the Wildcat helicopter, despite its violent manoeuvres and attempts to escape, as it blew up under the onslaught of .50-calibre rounds. Mindy breathed a huge sigh of relief, clearing her G36 and placing it on the deck. She watched as the British helicopter matched the Atlantic Storm's speed and course, the pilot showing off as he flew backwards at twenty-six knots!

"Atlantic Storm, Atlantic Storm, this is Talon 376 on your starboard beam, over!"

"Talon 376, Atlantic Storm. All clear, no injuries, nice flying. Over."

Mindy entered the bridge just as I finished responding to the helicopter.

"Area is clear. We will shadow you till mother arrives, Talon 376, out."

Mindy looked over at me, then at the bullet marks on the windows. That annoyed her! She grabbed a phone and punched the tannoy button.

"Stand down, stand down, return all weapons and report damage to the bridge."

Mindy was all business – and I thought I was a hard Captain! Thankfully nobody had been hurt in the attack – only Mindy's pride.

"Thank you, Ryan – you threw this tub around like a pro!" Mindy grinned.

"Not the first time I've been under attack!" I replied.

Twenty minutes later, HMS Dragon hove into sight, a giant White Ensign flying from its yards.

By then, all weapons had vanished from sight and the casings of all expended rounds had been cleared away. Within minutes of the British destroyer taking up station to port, a boat delivered a package from Commander Perrin. The package had details of a layover point.

We were to follow him to an island – an island that was unnamed on our charts!

Chapter 238*: Rogue Challenge

That evening
Friday

Eight hours later

Location: CLASSIFIED
Position: CLASSIFIED

1,865nm logged

Time: 17:00

Officially, the island did not exist.

Unofficially, it belonged to the British Government.

Officially, there was neither a state-of-the-art destroyer, nor was there a state-of-the-art mega-yacht anchored in the crystal clear waters of the lagoon. Officially, we were not anchored off the shore of an island with a guard force that had 'shoot-to-kill' orders on anybody unlucky enough to wander ashore without prior authorisation.

The island was a secret. I had no problem with that; I liked secrets. My life was a secret. Almost everything about me, my husband, my family, and my friends was a secret. At that moment, a pair of Royal Navy divers were inspecting the below water sections of the hull of the Atlantic Storm for any damage from the attack. I was furious at what had happened to my yacht. Almost as soon as we had anchored I had taken the tender out to get a good look at my vessel.

There were a lot of bullet holes and plenty of shrapnel damage on the starboard side, mainly, but some to port as well. The bridge windows were damaged, but intact. Watertight integrity appeared not to have suffered, so we were in no danger of sinking. However, the Atlantic Storm would need to go into a shipyard for hull repairs and some new glazing. She had done her job and she had protected us; nobody was injured in any way – for that I was eternally grateful.

We would make cursory repairs to the hull with the help of Commander Perrin's crew, so that problem was solved. Another problem was our exposure – all of the men behind Anne-Marie's kidnapping on that island had died, along with their hired mercenaries and we had jammed all of their communications during the attack on the Atlantic Storm; the credit would go to HMS Dragon for sinking the go-fast boats. That just left the crews of HMS Dragon and USS Churchill.

I would talk to Commander Perrin about it over dinner that night.

..._...

Moored a few hundred yards away from us was a large grey vessel.

She was the Royal Fleet Auxiliary tanker, RFA Wave Knight. On our arrival we had been directed to moor alongside the 31,500 tonne vessel, where we received a little over four thousand gallons of diesel to top off our capacious full tanks and quite a few litres of fresh water. We had burnt a lot of diesel while out-manoeuving the go-fast boats that morning.

Unfortunately, it was just another vessel and another crew of witnesses – nevertheless, I did appreciate the fuel!

..._...

There was one other problem left to be solved, well two actually.

The first was that my youngest daughter had killed a man. She was not yet eight, but she had killed her tormentor and she had shown maturity way beyond her tender years. What was that going to do to her? So far she had not shown any sign of acknowledging those ten bullets that she had fired into that man. I was not keen on bringing it up in conversation yet, either. Cathy had suggested that Anne-Marie might be blanking the event out, or that other events were preventing those crucial memories from coming forward.

Either way, it was a problem would have to be addressed at some stage or other...

..._...

The second problem... Stephanie – she had fought really well, but there were times that she had gone over the top – I was not complaining, but Megan had been worried by Stephanie's behaviour, as had Chloe. She had helped to avenge Anne-Marie and at the time, I had not been bothered with collateral damage on that island. However, back in Chicago – we could not have the girl going off like a loose cannon and killing everything in sight in an undisciplined manner.

I would talk to the girl at some stage.

..._...

On the cruise to our current location, Dave and I gathered Chloe, Megan and Stephanie together. The three of them were the only ones to witness the events inside the residence.

"I need to talk to you three about what happened..."

"You mean when Anne-Marie fired off ten rounds into that cunt?" Stephanie enquired.

"Yeah... At the time, I thought it right to allow Anne-Marie to get some revenge. I could understand why she wanted to hurt the man, but when she asked to kill him..."

"Kind of shocked me a bit, that did... I thought we only had one psycho!" Megan said, tipping her head at Stephanie.

Stephanie scowled but let it pass.

"You can talk!" Chloe chuckled, receiving her own scowl. "I was more than a little surprised that you went along with it, Dave – Mindy, I can understand; she's a nutcase, but you...?"

Dave just smiled without replying.

"Thank you, Chloe... I love you too. For now, please don't say anything to anybody else about what I allowed Anne-Marie to do. I know what it is like to kill at seven-years-old... If Marcus finds out, he will probably kill me – when Danny finds out what his sister did..."

"I suppose it is enough of a shock to find out that your parents are Kick-Ass and Hit Girl. I know, from my own personal experiences, the shock of finding out who is under those masks. I also know the pressure of keeping such a big secret. I also know that I caused shit by constantly wanting to become a vigilante, despite being told that I was way too young – and maybe I was. The poor girl has a lot of crap ahead of her and I for one, will be there for her."

"Well said, Megan!" Dave commented, speaking for the first time. "We'll all be there for Anne-Marie."

Chloe gave Megan a hug and nodded. It was good to see the two of them getting along better.

"Our lips are sealed, Mindy," Stephanie said and the others nodded.

"Please – no..."

"What?" Paige asked.

"It had to be her – it just has to be!"

Commander Perrin came aboard with his daughter, Cassie.

The Commander's wife was currently topping up her tan in Antigua while Cassie spent a week with her father aboard HMS Dragon.

"Are you guys all right?" Cassie exclaimed, almost the moment she came aboard.

"Yes, thanks to your father, amongst others," I replied, giving Cassie a hug. "I suppose you know..."

Cassie looked awkward for a moment before replying.

"Yes, Daddy told me what you all do 'behind the scenes'," Cassie said before scowling at her father. "Daddy then went on to tell me in glowingly colourful terms what you might do to me if I blabbed – not that it was necessary!"

Commander Perrin showed no hint of shame at having threatened his daughter on my behalf.

"I trust the Commander; therefore, I trust you Cassandra – just keep that warning in mind..." I said darkly, intentionally using the name that I knew she hated to show how serious I was.

We moved onto happier things as Cassie was introduced to the others who had not attended the cocktail party in Antigua. She thought that Megan and Stephanie were very cute – if only she knew them. As for the twins, they were classified as 'sweet and innocent' – again, she obviously needed to get to know them!

..._...

We all sat and chatted in the Main Salon while Cathy, Abby and Chloe prepared dinner. As usual I was banned from the Galley, especially for something as important as that night! Conversation tended to avoid the events of the previous few days and concentrated on happier times. Cassie was keen to find out more about Fusion, as were Danny and Anne-Marie.

Dave took great delight in telling some very embarrassing stories about Mindy Macready and Hit Girl, which got a lot of laughter from everybody and more than a few scowls from me! I was actually pleased that Danny and Anne-Marie could find out more about their adoptive parents; there were to be no more secrets, I had promised them that.

Cathy had appeared at one stage with some of her own anecdotes – I did not ever dream that there was a condition beyond 'total humiliation'. Dave rescued me by telling everybody that I needed to cool off before my face set fire to something!

..._...

Dinner would have been a cramped affair, what with fifteen people, but we managed it by sending the younger kids out to the Aft Main Deck, to eat there, while the adults and the older teenagers remained in the Main Salon. Commander Perrin had brought a selection of wine over with him, plus some beers, too. Some of the beers had already been drunk by Ryan, Dave and the Commander during the 'let's all embarrass the fuck out of Mindy' session, earlier.

For the meal, I allowed Josh, Chloe and Abby to have a drink – it was my yacht after all! They each had a glass of wine, which Josh enjoyed, Chloe tolerated and Abby turned down after a few sips. I had to admit that it was not too bad – I was developing a taste for alcohol. I had no idea if that was good or bad!

"Let's make sure you can still walk when you stand up, my girl!" Cathy warned her daughter who blushed in response.

The meal was good – steaks with corn on the cob; not fresh but we were in the Caribbean after all! Dave had to check on the younger members of the crew a few times as they seemed to be getting a bit rowdy while the sun went down.

..._...

"Commander, how come there were Marines and helicopters at the island?" Chloe enquired – a question on all our lips.

Commander Perrin chuckled for a moment before replying.

"You can thank Spook for that. He got onto his controller, in London, and reminded them – quite strongly I might add – that HMG owed Hit Girl – it was merely an hour later that I received my orders: '... Assist in recovery action at Buck Island without endangering your Command...' I requested extra assistance from USS Churchill and they loaned us their helicopters – they wanted to do more, but they could not.

"Anyway, the moment it was suggested that the Royals were required to go play in jungle swamps, they jumped at the chance. I have never seen the damn Bootnecks so happy! They set off in their little rubber boats as soon as we were close enough. The flight crews jumped at the chance to fire off some real ammunition too..."

"Thank you, Commander – we all owe you our lives..." I said.

"Nonsense, girl – I'd do anything for a pretty lady in distress!"

Cassie blushed with embarrassment – I blushed too, but with pleasure!

Dave stood up towards the end of the meal.

He called in the kids from the stern and had them gather around the table.

"Ladies and gentlemen, I would like to propose a toast. To Anne-Marie Lizewski – for keeping her wits about her, despite her ordeal."

The poor girl blushed bright red as everybody cheered for her. Dave then turned to Commander Perrin and Ryan.

"Commander Perrin, Commander Bennett – thank you for providing your expert assistance. Ladies and gentlemen, the Royal Navy and the United States Navy, in the form of HMS Dragon and USS Churchill!"

It was the turn of the two Commanders to colour slightly as the applause arose for them both and their commands.

..._...

It was well after eleven by the time the Commander and Cassie returned to the Dragon. We were due to depart by 06:00 for the long trek back to Miami and then onto Chicago and home.

It would be good to get back to our, not so normal, lives.

The Atlantic Storm

Time: 06:00

We had nine-hundred and fifty nautical miles ahead of us, about forty-three hours.

The idea was to arrive in Miami in the early hours of Monday morning. Until then, we would have a pleasant cruise home and allow time for our bruises to heal. I had every intention to enjoy the warmth of the sun on my body.

..._...

I inadvertently tried to keep Anne-Marie in sight at all times. Once or twice, I lost sight of her and I started to panic inside. It was the same with Anne-Marie, too. She never wanted to be alone and she had refused to go anywhere on-board unless somebody was with her – this had resulted in Megan accompanying her to the bathroom, more than once! Although to my mind; as long as my daughter was with somebody, I felt happier letting her out of my sight.

A few times I had engaged her in conversation and tried to find out what had happened to her after she had been taken, but my questions were ignored – Cathy advised me to give her time; she would tell me when she was ready.

..._...

For now, Anne-Marie played happily with the other kids and I tried to ignore the vicious bruises and cuts all over her body. Those bruises and cuts still made me mad, every time I saw them. In turn, Anne-Marie had been unhappy about the small bandage on my upper left arm, not to mention those on Stephanie and Joshua. Anne-Marie knew that the wounds had come from rescuing her, but none of us complained about the wounds or why we got them.

I was really happy to be safe and back with my family and I knew that nothing would happen to me now.

It had been my fault that I had been taken – if I had listened to Mom, back on Guadeloupe, then all would have been well and nobody would have got hurt. I hated to see the bandages on Steph and Josh, not to mention, Mom.

I felt really bad about it all. Mom had tried to talk to me about what had happened, but I kept shutting her down – I was not ready to talk about it, not yet. I knew that I had to, but there was something else that I would then need to talk about...

I had killed that man.

Time: 10:20

I was fast asleep on the Sun Deck with Anne-Marie snuggled up beside me, when I was rudely awakened by the General Alarm blaring throughout the Atlantic Storm.

I sat up so fast that Anne-Marie fell to the deck and she yelled out in pain and annoyance. I dived for the companion way below and rushed onto the Bridge, arriving at the same time as Dave and Ryan. Chloe and Megan were on watch.

"Who hit the alarm?" I demanded, glaring at the two girls.

"I did," Chloe began. "We have visitors..."

Megan pointed out the starboard side and for the first time I noticed a large ocean-going tugboat heading in our direction, about five miles distant. I seized a pair of binoculars and ran out onto the deck; Ryan did the same. He studied the tug for a moment and then he ran back onto the Bridge, rammed both throttles fully forwards and after shoving Megan out the way, spun the wheel hard to port.

The Atlantic Storm accelerated and heeled over to starboard as she turned hard to port.

"Pirates!"

..._...

"We can outrun the tug – no sweat, but she may put fast boats into the water..." Ryan explained.

"They already have!" Chloe interjected.

I turned back to the tug and saw two large boats appear from around her stern. They headed directly for us and I could see a dozen men in each – all armed.

"No, dammit – they are not going to take us – Megan, get the grenade launchers and the high-explosive rounds. Chloe, find Josh and get the Minimis out and plenty of ammo," I ordered as Dave pulled out the G36K assault rifles from the compartment in the deck.

Abby appeared in the Bridge doorway with Anne-Marie by her side.

"Abby – get the kids into the bow..."

Abby vanished, dragging Anne-Marie with her.

Less than ten minutes later, we were ready.

We all wore body-armour and we were ready to repel borders. No, softly, softly – I was in no mood for fucking about! I took a Minimi from Josh and we both headed up to the Sun Deck. Mindy and Chloe seized a grenade launcher plus a G-36K each and went forward to the bow.

Once the girls were in place, Ryan altered course, turning directly for the approaching boats. The expression on the pirates' faces was priceless; they were not used to a civilian vessel suddenly turning on them!

Josh and I were lying prone on the sun pads either side of the Jacuzzi. The Minimis were on their bipods and aimed forward. As the two pirate craft crossed our bow, I pulled the trigger, sending bursts of 5.56-millimetre rounds at each boat. At the same time Josh opened fire, along with Mindy and Chloe.

..._...

Grenades rained down on the pirates, exploding in the water beside them, closer and closer as the girls quickly got the range. Our bullets struck the fibre-glass hulls of the large craft and I was gratified to see the odd spray of blood as we chewed into the men on board the boats.

A grenade or two landed in the closest boat and it promptly blew up, sending men and sections of boat flying through the air and skidding across the waves. The other boat tried to turn tail, but Josh and I got its range, filling it with holes and killing most of those onboard. Then the range was too short and we coursed past the sinking boat as Mindy and Chloe poured fire into the swamped hull from their assault rifles.

The tug boat in the near distance was turning away and heading for the Gulf of Mexico.

Time: 10:48

We quickly got back on course, tidied up and stowed all the weapons.

I was back on the Sun Deck with Anne-Marie as if nothing had happened. I had never fought wearing just a bikini and a flak-jacket! I had found it exhilarating somehow... So, it seemed did Josh and Chloe who were up to no good on the other side of the Jacuzzi...

"Is life as Hit Girl always this exciting?" Anne-Marie asked with genuine interest.

I just laughed.

"Yes, it is..." Dave replied for me as he lay down beside our daughter.

Danny and Curtis came up the companionway and they sat down with Megan, Tommy and Stephanie to play a game at the table. Abby was curled up on a sun lounger with her laptop. Ryan and Cathy were down below on the Bridge – I did not want to even think about what they were doing!

"This is going to be so much fun..." Anne Marie commented. "Will I get to see your lair? Josh said I would be able to see the Hit Cave..."

"It is not called that – Joshua!"

That afternoon

I was down in the galley – I was not cooking, just making a sandwich; so that was allowed!

For a moment's peace and quiet, I decided to sit by the galley windows and relax. My mind seemed to wander and I found myself thinking back to my first meeting with Dave and that fun evening at Rasul's...

I was jerked back to reality by a gentle, but persistent, prodding in my side. It was Anne-Marie.

"What's up?" I asked, seeing the uneasy expression on her face.

"Can I sit with you..."

"You don't need to ask – here, have some of my sandwich..."

"What's in it?"

"Bananas."

"A banana sandwich?"

"What's wrong with that?" I retorted.

"Just a little weird, but I suppose weird is what I have to get used to, huh?"

I laughed at that comment.

"Mom..."

"Yes..."

"When did you become Hit Girl?"

Oh – and the questions begin!

"Where do I start?"

"At the beginning?" My daughter offered.

...+...

"Okay... Once upon a time, there were two super-cops called Daddy and Marcus who were very good at getting bad guys. Frank D'Amico was the baddest guy of them all and he came up with a plan to get rid of Daddy. Being framed as a drug-dealer was the worst possible thing that could have happened to Daddy. Prison was not his natural habitat... He was very upset!

"With Daddy in prison, his pregnant wife was all alone, and could not cope... But all clouds have a silver lining and out of her death... Mindy, was born! Marcus became the child's guardian and Daddy started a plan of his very own. Five years later, he left prison and he was ready. Now it was time for Mindy to get ready, too.

"My Daddy took custody of me and took me away from Marcus and he started a game... A game of super-heroes... I was Hit Girl and he was Big Daddy – we would fight crime in New York City and ultimately, we would take down Frank D'Amico and his entire organisation... At least that was the plan."

...+...

"How old were you when you started to train to be Hit Girl?"

I knew where this was going – Anne-Marie had taken a bite of the forbidden apple and she had found that she liked it, just as I had twelve years previously – and now she wanted more, much more.

"At an age that was far too young and I know what you are thinking, young lady, and it ain't happening!"

"But..."

"No buts!" I said as strongly as possible without scaring the girl.

"But I..."

"Your mother said it was not happening, Anne-Marie, so leave it at that."

I turned to see Dave leaning against the galley counter, Danny was beside him as was Stephanie and Megan. Dave's tone had been one which the kids knew not to argue with – as did most of the others.

"I've never heard that version..." Megan said quietly.

"It was what my Daddy fed me to make me go along with his plan and not to question the killing and the violence. I was young, naive and knew nothing about life. Daddy managed to corrupt my conscience and my emotions – it was all a game... Until he died."

"Let's leave your mother in peace, kids..."

"No, Dave; they need to hear it – all of them. I am damaged and I will always be the way I am – I never wanted any of this world for any of you. Not you, Megan, nor Curtis. Tommy found his way into the nastier part of life as a consequence of his kidnapping. Stephanie was brainwashed, just as I was. Now you both know about our lives, I can't keep you both out of it, but I can prevent you from putting your lives at risk – and I will! I will train you, Anne-Marie, and you, Danny, so that you can protect yourselves to the point where you can both use lethal force as a defence against harm, but I will not train you both to fight offensively."

Anne-Marie opened her mouth to continue arguing, but one glance from Dave and she shut her mouth, glaring down at the galley table.

The Atlantic Storm

I awoke around ten and headed up a deck and aft to get some fresh air.

There I found Stephanie staring out towards the horizon. She turned as I stepped out of the Main Salon and the doors closed automatically behind me. She smiled, returning to stare out to sea.

"Hi..." I said.

We had not talked since Mom's speech in the galley, the previous afternoon. I sensed that she was avoiding me.

"What's your story, Steph?" I asked. "I remember the nightmares on your first night with us... Plus others."

Stephanie turned towards me and smiled.

"I was on holiday and I was about your age – we were in Colorado somewhere; my memories are fuzzy. I was taken and brainwashed. They turned me into what I am..."

She shrugged.

"You saw me at the island – you saw what I am capable of... I wish you had never seen any of it; as Mindy said, we are both bad people and neither of us had a choice about our lives. If you don't want me to be your big sister, now that you know what I am..."

I had never seen Anne-Marie so angry.

She punched me in the stomach, quite hard and I went down on my knees, my arms wrapped round my abdomen.

"You are an ass, Stephanie!"

I looked up at the angry girl and felt ashamed for what I had said.

"I don't care what you are inside – you came for me, you killed for me, you protected me, you risked your life for me..."

Anne-Marie then jabbed at my bandage, which made me cry out in pain.

"You even got wounded for me. You are everything that a big sister should be and so much more. I would not trade for anything."

Anne-Marie then stalked off, leaving me on the deck. She paused at the ladder to the Bridge Deck and turned to face me.

"I'm not apologising for punching you, either – you deserved it!"

I headed onto the Bridge where I found a scowling Mom and Chloe.

"What?" I asked.

"Oh..."

On the screen was a full colour image of Stephanie getting up from her knees and rubbing her stomach.

"I assume there was a good reason for that?" Mom inquired with a raised eyebrow.

I explained what had happened. Chloe smirked then laughed before she spoke.

"Beware, Rogue at large!"

Stephanie spent the rest of the morning looking a little embarrassed, but I saw her chatting happily with her younger sister as if the morning's events had never occurred.

For our last evening aboard, we were going to have an enormous meal – the idea being to consume as much of the supplies as possible, especially the perishables. This meant a lot of preparation which took up most of the afternoon.

I ended up sitting down for almost five hours, writing up the Ship's Log. A lot of time was spent figuring out what I actually could put in the Log! I finally went with the basics for the official document, but sent the unedited version to Marty.

Everybody also spent time packing their kit, ready to go ashore.

That evening

The party began...

Josh put on his usual selection of dubious tracks and everybody got a drink – soft for the under sixteens. Abby and Cathy had been baking all afternoon and there was a wonderful select of food on offer. We did not sit down to eat, it was to be a buffet. Dave was cooking steaks on the Sun Deck, with Curtis to help him.

Everybody was excited at the prospect of being back home and I was pleased that everybody had happy smiles on their faces. I had my family: Dave, Stephanie, Anne-Marie and Danny. I also had my wider family: Fusion. I had never been happier.

Only twenty-six months previously, I had left New York, I had left Dave – I had been alone.

Then it had all gone so badly wrong...

I was running.

I was scared.

I was alone.

I had nothing, but the clothes on my back... And the blood on my hands.

My safety, my freedom, it had all been forsaken.

The Atlantic Storm

It was after midnight when things began to calm down.

I was able to dance with my husband to some cheesy music that Chloe had selected: Celine Dione with her 'Beauty and The Beast'! I enjoyed the feel of my husband's rough skin, ignoring the appalled look on Stephanie's face as we kissed.

On the couch, Anne-Marie and Danny were fast asleep, worn out with all other eating and fun. I could hear giggling from the Aft Deck and it sounded like Chloe and Josh were enjoying themselves! Ryan and Cathy had vanished to the Captain's cabin – 'to keep an eye on the radar'...

Home!

Well, not quite home – but at least we were back in the US. I stood on the Bridge of Atlantic Storm for the last time and gently rested my hands on the large steel wheel at the helm. She had done us proud – now though, after two-thousand seven-hundred and twenty-four nautical miles, eighty-four bullet holes and having expended over seven-thousand gallons of marine diesel, the old girl was going in for a refit – she would come out even better than before.

In the summer, I hoped to return and maybe cross the North Atlantic to Europe.

..._...

"You coming?"

I turned to see Dave waiting at the door.

"Yes. I'm going to miss the old girl – she's done us proud."

"That she has," Dave agreed.

I reluctantly left the Bridge and made my way to the stern and the gangway ashore.

Late morning

Chicago

West Columbia

"Anything exciting happen on your cruise?"

I studied Marcus for a moment and then I grinned.

"Business as usual..." I replied.

Marcus knew exactly what that meant!

"Do I want to hear about any of it?" He groaned.

"The twins know..."

"Oh?" Marcus asked sternly and I winced. "How did that come about, then?"

"We invaded the British Virgin Islands!" Megan announced with a smile.

Marcus groaned.

"I knew that was you..."

"So, is Fusion at war with the British now?" Paige enquired with a chuckle.

"Hey, we gave the goddamned island back!" I growled in response.

..._...

"How many holes, this time, Megan?" Paige asked her daughter as they hugged.

Megan scowled.

"Not a one, Mother!"

"Wow!" Marcus chuckled.

"It was Mindy, Steph and Josh that got hurt this time..." Megan explained before shutting up as I glared at her.

Marcus raised an eyebrow.

"Flesh wounds, nothing more – honest!"

Glenview

Sophia was over the moon to see everybody – and very big!

It was great to be home, too. Kim gave me a hug as she and Marty headed out the door after dropping Sophia back home.

"Thanks, guys – see you tomorrow."

I gave Dave an enormous, and very deep kiss, which had me standing on the tips of my toes...

"That is so goddamn disgusting!" Stephanie growled.

"I feel sick..." Anne-Marie added with her own grimace.

"What she said," Danny finished mirroring his sister's expression.

I laughed as Dave put me back down. I turned to my three kids and smiled.

"Why don't you three go get some rest – so Dave and I can..."

"You want us to get lost – so you can get fu..."

"Stephanie – language!" Dave said quickly and Stephanie smiled sweetly.

"Actually, Steph, you're bang on!" I replied with a dirty smirk and the nine-year-old pretended to throw up as she ran towards the stairs followed by the twins.

..._...

Once they were gone I turned to Dave.

"Hey, Kick-Ass, you big stud!"

"That's me, honey."

"Take me to bed or lose me forever."

"Show me the way home, Hit Girl!"

God, I loved those white uniforms...

That night

The kids were tired and grumpy come dinner time.

Once they were fed, they were sent to bed – it had been a very long day for us all! I said goodnight to Danny and went through to see the girls. Both were in their beds and grinning – looking innocent was not their forte!

I gave Anne-Marie a kiss.

"Thanks for coming to get me, Mom."

"I will always do anything that I can to keep us all together. Night, Steph."

"Night, Hit Girl!"

The following morning

Tuesday

I awoke late – well after ten.

Dave was snoring, so I went to check on the kids. I had checked on them in the early hours of the morning and I had found Stephanie in Anne-Marie's bed with the younger girl snuggled up to her sister. She was asleep, but Stephanie was still awake. She saw me and whispered an explanation.

"Nightmare – tell you about it in the morning."

"Thanks," I replied as I left and went back to bed.

I was glad that Anne-Marie was not alone and that she had somebody with her who had an idea of what she was going through.

..._...

When I got to the kids' rooms, I found Danny fast asleep and snoring. The girls were already awake and they were enjoying a hot bath with quite a few bubbles!

"I think we overdid the bubbles..." Stephanie commented as loads of bubbles flooded over the side of the bath.

"Ya think!" I chuckled, then got serious. "You want to tell me about last night?"

Anne-Marie knew that I was talking about and to her; she grimaced, but nodded.

"I had a big nightmare and Steph came to keep me company."

"You ready to talk about what happened?" I asked.

My youngest daughter nodded slowly.

"Okay – when you two are finished, we'll talk over breakfast... Please don't flood the entire house!"

"No promises!" Came the shout as I headed downstairs.

I was alone in the kitchen when my two daughters appeared, their hair still wet.

Dave had taken Danny out, leaving us girls alone – apart from the puppy-filled Sophia! They grabbed some cereal and then sat down at the counter to eat.

"They used something to make me go to sleep..." Anne-Marie said between bites of cereal. "... They hit me too, making my nose bleed."

I looked at Stephanie who was taking in every word and her expression had hardened.

"I woke up on a boat – I got really scared when I found that I was on my own... Then a man appeared and he..."

The story continued on for half an hour – Stephanie and I both laughed when Anne-Marie mentioned the toilet rolls stuffed down the toilet – I hated every time that my daughter recounted a moment when she was hit or otherwise hurt. Stephanie's expression, like my own, was getting frostier and frostier as the story progressed and it hit absolute zero as Anne-Marie recounted the man attempting to undress her... Turned out it was the man whom she had killed.

Anne-Marie had no concept of what the man had considered doing to her when she was naked and I was very pleased about that. It was obvious from Stephanie's expression, and her clenched fists, that she knew only too well what the man had intended to do.

The story finished with my unmasking and Anne-Marie learning who Hit Girl was. I looked at Stephanie and she was shaking with fury and I will admit that she looked scarier than I had ever seen her. Her look of hate for those people bore into me as she looked back into my eyes. She reminded me of myself at that age; no remorse – nothing but hate. I had to agree with her sentiments – they had all deserved to die.

Every last one of them...

Chapter 241*: Nightmare Attack

Thursday

There was something strange about certain people in Chicago.

I was putting together a file on Hit Girl and Fusion – for my own amusement. I already had quite a few photos, only something did not quite add up. There was something familiar about the people in my photos, but I had no idea where from...

That afternoon

D-JAK

I ran up the stairs with my sister close behind.

"You two are late!"

"Sorry, Chloe!" We both answered running to our places in the class.

Chloe smiled and rolled her eyes. I blushed in response and took up the same stance as the other kids, my younger sister following my actions beside me.

..._...

Forty minutes later I was dripping with sweat and desperate for a drink.

I saw Mrs Wilson – oops, Mrs Williams, appear and she had some cartons of juice for us all. Chloe called us together and sent us for a ten-minute break. While I drank my juice, Mindy, dressed in her black Gi, came over.

"Hi, Lauren – you're doing really well."

"I'm really enjoying myself, thanks Mindy."

There was something about Mindy – she was nice and I liked her; only her eyes told me something... But I had no idea what. It was the same with our instructor, Chloe – her eyes were the same. I had no more time to contemplate my thoughts when we were called back to our places.

"Now kiddies – let's up things a bit!" Chloe growled.

The following night

Friday

I should not even have been in that part of the city where I was.

It was stupid, and it was dangerous. But I needed to get some more photos – was I getting fixated on Fusion? I had no idea where they would be that night, but I thought that if I stuck to some of the darker parts of the city then I might find them.

I was waiting in the shadows of an alley, just off the street, when I heard a noise from down the alley. I was feeling scared – I was being stupid. It was time to leave...

There was somebody close, I could feel it. I made to move – then a hand came around and clasped itself across my mouth. I tried to scream as I was physically lifted off the ground, I struggled and fought against whoever held me.

"Get the little bitch into the SUV and let's go..."

I was being kidnapped!

A black hood was pulled over my head and I was thrown into the back of something.

Beneath me, I felt a leather seat – then my camera was pulled from around my neck and I heard it dropped to the floor of the SUV. I tried to use all my senses to identify what was going on and maybe where I was going.

I sensed movement close by and then I felt a stinging pain in my head and...

..._...

When I came around, my head was sore. But I felt something that was much worse than a headache – I felt hands on my belt...

I was lying on my back, on a bed, with my arms over my head. I tried to move them, but they were tied together at the wrists and then to something solid. Ominously, my legs were tied too, but spread apart about the width of a normal bed. I opened my eyes, but I must have been blindfolded as all I saw was blackness. I could hear things, though, and there was defiantly somebody moving about.

Whoever it was, they were undoing the belt on my jeans – that freaked me out and I started to struggle against my bindings.

"Keep still!" Came a gruff voice.

I froze and opened my mouth to cry out only to find that I had been gagged, too. I felt my belt being pulled out of the belt-loops and heard it fall to the floor. The same hands then got to work on the button of my jeans, quickly opening them and pulling down the zip. I was crying now and begging through the gag as the fear grew inside of me.

My right ankle was released from the bed and I tried to kick out as my jeans were pulled down my legs. The jeans were pulled off my right leg and I realised that I was no longer wearing my sneakers nor my socks. The right ankle was then secured again. The process was repeated on the left ankle and leg so the jeans could be removed completely.

I was relieved to still feel my knickers – at least for the moment.

..._...

Nothing else happened for several minutes.

I was shaking with fear and my bare legs were starting to get cold. Then I felt hands on my chest and I realised that I was not wearing my thick jacket. Something cold and metallic touched my stomach and I felt it move upwards. I also felt cool air on my skin – somebody was cutting off my t-shirt and sweatshirt. I started to struggle against my bindings again.

The movement up my stomach stopped and I felt a stinging sensation as a hand slapped my left cheek. I cried out in pain and stayed as still as I could as I was stripped completely. I felt the cold across all of my body as the last item of clothing, my knickers were cut off me. Then to top off my humiliation, I heard the click of what could only be my camera. What was happening to me?

Why?

I was sobbing and I felt complete hopelessness with my situation. Then I felt my restraints being removed and I hoped that things were going to get better...

Forty minutes later
Eastern Chicago

"You enjoying your 'peeping tom' routine?"

"Funny, Hal – I'm not peeping, I'm... scanning!"

"Yeah, seen any naked men yet, Leon?"

"Look, I – break – Fusion, I have a situation; range: two-four-eight yards, bearing: zero-eight-seven, from my current location, fourth floor!"

"Leon, Hit Girl – what do you see?"

"I have a naked girl – twelve or thirteen – she's being raped by some fat fuck; Leon is engaging..."

The Apartment

The pain was extreme.

I had never felt anything like it – he was rough and it hurt. After the first few minutes, my body started to react strangely. Something started to feel good – and that sickened me. I knew what was happening to me; I was not stupid – I knew an orgasm building.

The man was enjoying himself, ramming his thing inside of me again and again. Then, just as I reached my climax, he reared backwards and I heard a sound – breaking glass? Then the man's head seemed to – well... Explode!

I reacted instantly as stuff splashed across my face and body – his brains I guessed. I pushed his body out of the way and rolled off the bed onto the floor. I jumped up and made for the door to the bedroom and then out into a hallway. I had no idea where I was going, but I saw what looked like an external door. I pulled back a pair of bolts and yanked at the door; it was heavy, but I hauled it open enough to squeeze out.

..._...

Two sensations hit me as soon as the door clicked shut behind me. First, I felt a chill and realised that I was still completely naked and standing on the fourth floor of an apartment block. Second, I could feel the man's bodily fluids dribbling down the inside of my left thigh. I ran down several flights of stairs and I burst out into an alleyway. The cold hit me full force and I felt disoriented for a moment before I fell to the snow covered ground, shivering almost immediately.

As I lay on the snow, I heard an engine – a big engine. I heard snow crunching under some large tyres. Then came the sound of doors opening and several voices. I heard feet approaching on the soft snow, crunching towards me and I felt something rough push underneath my bare back and thighs and I was then very gently hoisted out of the snow and carried a short distance into blissful warmth.

Just as gently, I was placed onto something soft and a blanket was wrapped around my still shivering, naked body.

Northwestern Memorial Hospital

The senior Doctor on duty that night ran towards the main door.

She burst out into the ambulance bay where an enormous black vehicle rested. The rear hatch opened and the easily recognisable form of Kick-Ass appeared, a blanket wrapped bundle in his arms. The armour-clad vigilante strode over to where a pair of nurses were waiting with a gurney. He gently laid the bundle down and turned to the Doctor.

"The girl is aged around twelve to thirteen. We found her, naked in the snow, after breaking up her rape."

"She's in good hands," Dr Cathy Bennett replied as she waved the gurney towards the door and began issuing orders. "Reese give us a hand here – Maggie, page Dr Manning."

Eastern Chicago

The Apartment

I sat alone in the darkness.

I was silently stewing in my own anger as I awaited the return of the other man. On following the trail from outside the apartment building, I had found the fourth floor apartment and ignoring the headless corpse that lay just three feet away from me, I had found evidence of somebody else living in the apartment.

I would have been both mad and itching for revenge even if it had been just any teenaged girl who was unlucky to find herself seized and raped. However, I knew the girl and she was under my protection. What was the stupid girl doing in a place like the apartment? I had found her clothes and her camera – I also knew that she had a thing for Fusion and taking photos of us in action.

About half an hour after I had sat down to wait, I heard a knock on the door and then the door being pushed open.

..._...

"Bert?"

So the headless bastard was called 'Bert'.

A hand reached in and flicked the light switch – once, twice and then again for good measure.

"Damn bulb – what's happened this time?"

"I smashed it!" I growled from the darkness and almost laughed as the man jumped like a hundred feet in shock.

I stepped forwards and the light spilled onto the purple gauntlet of my right hand – the man began to scream.

An hour later, I stood up and turned to the man.

"Thank you for your help, Frank..."

I aimed my pistol at his head.

"But, you said..."

"I lied!"

"Nooooo..."

I pulled the trigger twice and left the apartment, closing the door behind me.

An hour and a half later

Northwestern Memorial Hospital

I had spent the past couple of hours being prodded and poked in the most humiliating ways.

Don't get me wrong, everybody had been real nice to me, but arriving stark naked for a start, was embarrassing once I had been warmed up and I was able to understand what was happening to me. The full body examination as part of the rape-kit had been very humiliating as a complete stranger inspected every square inch of my body – including a painful internal examination.

It was also the first time that I had acknowledged that nasty four letter word – yes, I had been kidnapped, stripped and then raped. It had happened, whether I liked it or not...

..._...

Finally, I had taken for a bath to wash off all the dried blood and brains that were all over me. Then I had been given an ill-fitting hospital gown and taken to a bed in a small private room. I endured a visit from the Chicago PD too, which was not much fun. The Doctor, who seemed slightly familiar – I was sure that I had seen her around at D-JAK, well she reassured me that I was fine and that I should rest.

I had dozed off for a short while when I heard something and came wide awake, instantly fearful of being attacked again.

"Have no fear... We are not here to hurt you."

The voice was electronic and it scared me until I realised that I had heard it before. A light came on beside the bed and I recognised a blue armoured gauntlet. Then I heard another voice and saw a very familiar purple form appear in the light.

"You need to stop pursuing us, Lauren – please don't do it again... You are safe from the men that did this to you and I have your camera, which I will return to you in due course."

"Who found me?"

"That was Kick-Ass – he brought you here to the hospital."

"Thank you," I said.

"Stay safe..."

With that, Shadow and Hit Girl were gone.

Chapter 242*: Visiting The Hit Cave

Late Friday night

"Seriously!"

I was livid as I pulled over to the side of the road. The marked CPD SUV with flashing blue lights pulled in behind me. I had not been speeding! I rolled down my window and awaited the CPD clown who had pulled me over.

"Licence and registration, Hit Girl!"

I laughed as I turned to look at the two CPD clowns.

"Fucking assholes!"

"That's no way to talk to the Police, young lady..." Murphy chuckled.

"We deserve respect; I believe..." Fellowes added with a smirk.

I was not in the best of moods, considering the night I had had, so...

"Well, guys, Hit Girl is fresh out of respect – eat this!" I growled as I dropped the car into 'Sport' and put my foot to the floor, spinning the large rear tyres of the Jaguar XJR and leaving the two cops in a cloud of tyre smoke.

Saturday morning

"It is not called that..."

"But it's such a cool name!" Danny persisted.

"I agree with Danny..." Anne-Marie added.

"They have a point," Stephanie interjected reasonably.

Dave just chuckled.

Minutes later, the two kids' eyes went wide as the XJR finished curling down the circular concrete ramp and we stopped beside Iron Hide under the bright lights of Safehouse F as the door closed behind us. I jumped out and opened the back door, letting my two daughters out. Dave did the same for our son and before long the twins' eyes were darting around so fast that I thought their eyeballs might spin around or drop out of their heads.

"Cool!" Danny breathed.

"The Hit Cave!" Anne-Marie exclaimed.

"It's... We don't..." I turned to glare at the grinning Joshua. "You see what you've done!"

It was both exactly as I had expected and nothing like I had expected.

I had expected awesome and it was awesome, but it was so much more – I had dreamed about being part of Fusion for ages. Now it was all coming true... I was struggling to take it all in. Steph was grinning at me and I felt pangs of jealousy; she had known about all this for weeks. Not only that, she was a vigilante – Psyche.

Mom had tried to explain to me that Stephanie was 'different', but I hadn't really understood and I could tell that there was stuff that Mom did not want to go into. Danny was actually drooling, which was disgusting!

Megan pulled me over to a room full of computers and there I found Marty and Abby. The computers and the big screens were amazing – it was like Star Trek, only way better...

My brain was overloading...

It was... It was awesome... The roof of the Safehouse towered above us... I was speechless...

"Danny – please stop drooling; it's really embarrassing!"

My sister scowled and passed me a tissue.

"I love it... Almost worth you getting yourself kidnapped..."

"Ow!"

My sister could punch hard when she wanted to!

I dragged the two overawed kids upstairs and into the Briefing Room.

They gazed down into the Safehouse and across the mat. I directed their attentions over to the photographs and they were both mesmerized.

"At the top there are my Mom and Dad and next to them, Dave's Mom and Dad."

"They're all dead?" Anne-Marie asked.

"Yes, they are – below them is me and my Daddy – actually Hit Girl and Big Daddy."

"You look awesome, Mom – and I love the pink belt."

"I loved that belt – I still have it somewhere; it was my favourite colour..."

"Other than purple!" Josh quipped.

"Other than purple," I confirmed with a smirk.

"That was how I first met Mindy – she was wearing that getup," Dave said with a shudder.

I laughed.

"I think I scared him back then."

"Who are they?" Danny asked, looking at the next picture down.

"Justice Forever!" Marty said quietly. "That's me, the dork at the front – Battle Guy. Kick-Ass with Miranda..."

Stephanie actually leant in closer to Dave at the mention of Miranda's name.

"... Night Bitch. Insect Man, Dr Gravity and..."

"My Mom and Dad," Tommy added with a smile. "Remembering Tommy."

"Last but not least: Colonel Stars and Stripes. She's not there, but Sophia was a member, too – Eisenhower."

"Even the damn dog is a vigilante!" Anne-Marie laughed.

"Language!" I growled and Anne-Marie smiled sweetly focussing on the final photo.

"Who's the guy in the cool looking uniform?" She asked.

"That's my Dad," Josh said. "With my Mum."

"Those photos are a memorial to the fallen – many of those on that wall, they fell while fighting the worst scum on earth. They died for us all – doing what was right," Dave said as a reminder to us all.

While Marty and Abby showed the twins around further, Dave, Josh, Chloe and I took Megan aside into the galley and had a quiet chat about our newest vigilante, Psyche, and her behaviour on the island.

Once we had finished talking, I went to find Stephanie. She was downstairs in the dojang with the twins and Abby. I asked Abby to take the twins upstairs and closed the door after them. Stephanie looked worried as I waved for her to sit down on the mat.

"This is difficult for me, but we need to talk about what occurred on the island... You enjoyed yourself – didn't you?"

Stephanie smiled.

"I won't deny it – I did enjoy it, which shocked me, just a bit..."

"You were very good and it was the first time we got to see what Psyche could really do when let out on your own..."

"But..." Stephanie interrupted.

"But... Some had concerns over your behaviour – now, you did beautifully and without your participation, Anne-Marie may have died. I will also owe you for taking part in her safe return. At the time I did not care how many died, or how they died. Dave said that you reminded him of me when he first met Hit Girl. I was cold, calculating and without remorse.

"The two of us are different to the others – we are not normal and we never will be. That is part of the reason for my adopting you; I want to help you have as normal a life as possible. Now we are back in Chicago, things are different. You cannot kill indiscriminately, nor can you cause collateral damage. As I said, on the island everybody was fair game. However, I was a little concerned by you dropping that woman in the kitchen."

"She hurt Anne-Marie, so she deserved to die..."

"I know, only she was unarmed and she was surrendering. I turned a blind-eye to it at the time, considering the circumstances and the fact that we were not taking any prisoners. Please, think before you kill – it's bad enough that Anne-Marie and Danny know about who we all really are, but for them to see us killing..."

"I promise to control my emotions in future – I let my emotions run wild and that was why I killed that woman. It won't happen again..."

"It mustn't; but I did the same, back when I was eleven and my own emotions almost got me killed – twice! Dave rescued me both times – Hit Girl is not infallible and I know that you aren't either."

I stood up and Stephanie followed suit. We hugged for a minute before we were interrupted by a visitor.

..._...

"You two finished, or are you going to make out..." Josh inquired with a dirty grin as he came into the room.

"Can I hit him?" Stephanie asked.

"Feel free..."

Two seconds later Joshua was on the mat, Stephanie having sent a flying kick to his head. Chloe came in just then and glanced down at her boyfriend.

"What did you do this time?" She asked with an exasperated tone and expression.

"Just 'cause I'm on the floor, why do you always assume it's something that I've done?" Joshua complained.

Josh looked up at the three icy glares from the surrounding females.

"Christ – okay...!" Josh growled.

"Here..." Stephanie stepped forwards and helped Josh back to his feet.

"Thank you, Steph – nice kick, by the way."

"Thanks," Stephanie replied, smiling at Josh. "Hope I didn't hurt you."

"Oh, little Stephy has a thing for Josh..." Chloe grinned. "I have a competitor..."

"Have not!" A furiously blushing Stephanie retorted.

That evening

Safehouse F

While Stephanie and Joshua embarrassed themselves, I had gone back to see Marty who had been examining Lauren's camera.

He did not seem sure where to start and looked a little embarrassed, so he just showed me her photos. There was a mixture – typical of a teenager with a camera. Photos of her friends at school, photos of her younger sister and her mother, photos of parts of Chicago and then...

Holy fuck!

There were images of Lauren at the apartment – in the first few she was dressed, but then began a selection of degrading photos showing more and more skin before almost forty images of the girl completely naked and in some very unflattering positions... I was furious and very pleased that both men were very, very dead – although I would have liked to have made 'Bert' suffer more!

"It shocked the hell out of me when I saw them – the poor girl..." Marty stammered.

"That fits in with what the surviving cunt said – they must have been for blackmail or something similar – destroy those photos, keep the genuine ones..."

"Will do!"

As I was walking out of the Command Centre, I had an idea.

The following morning

Sunday

Eastern Chicago

I was back home after being allowed out of the hospital.

Mom had brought me some fresh clothes and I had been very glad to get home. I was uninjured, apart from some scratches and bruises. After cuddles from my very worried younger sister, I retreated to my room where much to my surprise, I found a box sitting on my bed. Tentatively, I opened it and was very surprised by what I found inside; it was my camera!

Along with the camera there was a purple card, on one side was embossed, HG, while on the other side was a simple message: 'Stay out of trouble!'.

..._...

I turned on my camera and checked my pictures – they were all there...

Huh – I never took those!

I was seeing images of Fusion: Kick-Ass, Hit Girl, Shadow, Jackal, Petra, Wildcat, Hawk, Trojan and Mist. I had no idea where they were taken, but it was obvious that whoever had taken the images had been very careful about what was captured. There was a photo of Hit Girl posing beside her purple Panigale. Another had Kick-Ass standing next to Titan with Jackal and Shadow. My favourite was a photo of the two leaders together: Hit Girl and Kick-Ass side by side.

I had no need to follow Fusion anymore.

Two days later

Tuesday evening

Emily Edwards looked up as she heard the knock on the door of their apartment.

She was not open to visitors – it had been a trying week, what with her eldest daughter being kidnapped and then raped. However, the knock sounded insistent and she was more than a little surprised to find out who was standing outside her door...

"Good evening, Mrs Edwards..."

If Mrs Edwards was shocked to find two female vigilantes at her door, she did not show it. She stood back and waved them both in before closing the door.

"Sorry for the intrusion, but we wondered if we could speak with your daughter, Lauren," Hit Girl said.

"You are welcome any time – Fusion has saved the life of my daughter twice..."

"I am only sorry that we could not have helped her sooner..." Shadow said.

"She's upstairs with her sister... Lauren!" Mrs Edwards called, but there was no response.

"Lauren!"

No response.

"Lizzie!"

A young girl appeared at the bottom of the stairs and she seemed very anxious about something.

"Where is your sister?"

The girl stared at the floor before bursting into tears.

"She went out – she said that she needed closure and had to find out more..."

"What?" Mrs Edwards exclaimed.

"Shadow, stay with them – I'll go find Lauren," Hit Girl ordered as she headed out the door.

I knew exactly where I might find the girl and I wasn't a moment too soon.

Lauren was heading down the same alley where we had found her, only a man was headed towards her with a smile on his face. I came up behind Lauren and raised my pistol.

"I don't think you want to be here tonight..." I growled.

The man stopped and raised his hands.

"I don't think I want to be here tonight..." The man said as he turned and ran.

Lauren span around.

"What are you doing here?"

"Saving your ass again, Lauren."

"I can look after myself – I need to look after myself..."

"Okay – I know when I'm not wanted."

"You don't know what it is like to have everything taken away from you and to be forced to do bad things..."

I did, but now was not the time.

"I have never experienced what you experienced the other night and I am really sorry that we could not have helped you sooner."

"You killed the other man, didn't you – I wanted to do that..."

"Yes, I killed him..."

"I need some sort of closure – they violated me, they made me pose..."

"I know – I saw the pictures... I destroyed them."

"Thank you."

"What you went through will take time to heal... A lot of time. But you have to stop doing this – your Mother is so worried about you."

"What the fuck would you care?"

"I care – more than you know..."

"Why?"

"Because you are a strong young woman and I think you will go far – you may be a bloody nightmare, but I intend to help you every way that I can."

Lauren began to sob and I held her tightly for several minutes before she sorted herself out.

"I have something to show you, if you are willing..."

I pulled Sentinel over to the side of the road and turned off the engine.

"Why have we stopped?" Lauren asked.

"With the information that I obtained from that other man – this is happening..."

I waved at a building several dozen yards down the street. Several black-clad men were moving down the sidewalk before smashing down the front door of an apartment block and rushing inside. There was an explosion of noise and at least three gunshots. Then a man bolted out of a side door and ran towards us up the sidewalk.

"Lauren – get ready to open your door... Now!"

Lauren pushed open the heavily armoured door and the runner slammed into it very hard before falling to the street unconscious.

"Awesome!" Lauren laughed as she pulled the door closed.

Within minutes we saw the Police reappear and bring out men in handcuffs along with several young women in various stages of undress. They were rapidly wrapped in blankets as ambulances began to arrive. A Cop ran towards us, took a glance at our vehicle and dragged the unconscious man back down the sidewalk without another look.

"I know it won't mean much, but those girls are safe thanks to the information I acquired the other night."

Chapter 243*: Urban Predator

*The following morning
Wednesday*

North Park Elementary School

I turned to the three girls and one boy.

"Be good, all of you – especially you!"

"Why single me out?" Stephanie demanded somewhat defensively.

I scowled at the nine-year-old.

"What did I tell you earlier?"

Stephanie rolled her eyes before responding.

"No maiming, no killing, no being abusive, no being overprotective of my siblings..."

Megan was giggling and there was a growing smirk on Anne-Marie's face. Danny just looked a little concerned.

"I'll be a good little girl, all day, I promise!"

"If she isn't, I'll put her out!" Megan promised, laughing at Stephanie's annoyed expression.

"Have fun, otherwise what's the point!" I said as I gave them all a hug before they headed into school.

Then I had a thought – what might I bring to my first day of school?

"Stephanie!"

"What now?"

"Hand it over..."

The girl's shoulders slumped as she knew that she had been rumbled.

"But..."

"Now!"

The girl reluctantly reached into her backpack and produced a black Walther PPK/S .22-calibre pistol. I palmed it smoothly so it was not seen by any of the other parents.

"We'll talk later, and if necessary you'll be strip-searched in the car every morning!"

That night

The Edgewater Lounge

Mindy and I were spending the evening at our usual watering hole.

Shannon had just served me a beer and Mindy a Coke while we sat at the bar. The kids had all survived their first day back at school – even Anne-Marie, despite her kidnapping experience... I knew that she was not over it, but we were working on that.

Surprisingly, we had not received a call from the school Principal saying that Stephanie had killed another kid – so that was good too!

It was nice for Dave and me to have some time together of an evening away from everything.

Several minutes later, my attention was drawn by two people entering the bar. One, a dark haired well-built man maybe two inches under six-foot tall, sat on a stool directly across from us on the other side of the bar. The other, a woman who was a couple of inches shorter than the man but with long mousy blonde hair – she sat down next to the man.

What had caught my eye was the fact that neither of them actually looked at Dave nor me – a dead giveaway that they were looking for us. However, it also occurred to me that they were being very obvious and exhibiting just enough 'trade-craft' to let me know that they were people to be taken seriously. I gave Dave a kiss, letting my eyes look on his own – he had picked up something too.

We moved away from the bar to a booth – we both sat on one side with Dave on the outside. The vacant seat opposite us was an obvious invitation, which was accepted once the couple had been served their own drinks – a beer and a glass of white wine.

"May we join you?" The woman asked with a smile.

"Of course, please..." Dave replied with a disarming smile.

"Shall we skip the bullshit?" I suggested.

The man grimaced, but grinned quickly.

"Jason, Jason Bourne."

"Nicky Parsons."

"I assume that you know our names," I continued.

"Dave and Mindy Lizewski," Nicky replied without hesitation.

Both the man and the woman seemed to be able to handle themselves, but neither seemed armed – however the man seemed to be a weapon all on his own.

"So?" I pushed.

"You've been looking into something that was supposed to remain buried – Treadstone..."

"Let me guess – you're another product of those delightful people at the CIA?" Dave suggested.

"I believe I am not the only victim of brainwashing, Mrs Lizewski..." Jason mentioned pointedly.

I grimaced.

"Why were you searching?" Nicky asked, getting things back on track.

"We discovered a young victim – only this one was only partially trained. Her brainwashing was not completed..."

"Urban Predator..." Nicky breathed looking at Jason with venom in her expression.

"The bastards went ahead... How old is she?"

"Nine..."

"Fucking bastards – they were supposed to have stopped that before it ever got going – training little kids from an early age!" Nicky exclaimed angrily. "I hate to say it, but they got the idea from you..."

"Is this place secure?" Jason asked.

"We can talk safely..." Dave confirmed.

"I was the last survivor of Treadstone – I made sure of that..." Jason said darkly.

"I was part of the Treadstone operation. I was helping to apprehend Jason after he went rogue," Nicky explained. "It was a top-secret operation that transformed ordinary US Service members into assassins. It was a way of getting around certain Congressional interference when it came to assassinations. Treadstone used a behaviour-modification program to remove morality and make them unstoppable in their missions. The participants' loyalty was absolute – or so the CIA thought until Jason upset things for them!"

"There was another attempt – Blackbriar – we fucked that up for them too," Jason advised us with a grin.

"So there are more kids out there?" I enquired, a little horrified.

"Teenaged assassins?" Jason asked. "Yes – the aim of the program was to have them ready to operate by about thirteen to sixteen. We have no idea how many actually 'graduated' from the program – we hoped none. However, if you have one – then there may have been many more. Was there an adult with the girl?"

"Yes, there was – she was also brainwashed," Dave replied quickly.

"Some adults were intended to be guardians and a control figure for the kids during training."

"That makes sense..." I growled angrily.

"I am very pleased to see your reaction to this – it means we were right to seek you out," Jason confirmed. "You are going to need our help to sort this out."

"Can we meet her?" Nikki asked – genuine concern on her face.

"The girl's welfare is my responsibility – let me think things through," I replied. "How can we contact you?"

The following morning Thursday

I noticed something as we walked down the street.

My senses said there was a problem. I instantly went on alert and guided Nicky down the next street on the left. She looked up and grimaced at my expression – shew knew; we were able to communicate without words. It was not a surprise – the CIA were not stupid; not totally, anyway! They had tracked us to the Chicago – I knew they would; getting in and out of the US was getting harder.

Now, I was going to make them dance to my tune for a change...

Glenview

Mindy hung up the cell.

Her expression was a mixture of worry and amusement.

"That was Bourne – the CIA are in town and we need to setup a little ambush..."

"That sounds like fun, honey – I don't think I've kicked over a CIA Agent before," I grinned before going cold and serious. "It'll be good to start having a go at those that made Stephanie..."

"Somebody call me?"

"Hi, Steph – we may have use of your skills tonight... We also want you to meet somebody."

"Who," Stephanie asked and she actually sounded interested.

"Somebody like you."

"A psychotic nut job?" Stephanie asked with a grin.

I thought for a moment before replying.

"Probably, yes."

That same time

Central Intelligence Agency

Langley, Virginia

"What the hell is he doing in Chicago?"

"He just showed up – a complete fluke we spotted him, really."

"What is going on in that city? First we lose that Walker girl and that Swedlow woman, then we have persona non grata number one, Jason fucking Bourne turning up!"

"Not to mention all those vigilantes..."

"Fuck those sad bastards – idiots in costumes; they're not important... Mind you – where's that Fusion file from December?"

Mark Martin took a moment to fish through the files on his boss's desk before passing over the relevant file. CIA Deputy Director of the Support Directorate Noah Vossen seized the file and flicked through it for a moment.

"There – Fusion gained a new member soon before Christmas. Female, short and violent and if that weren't enough, she's using her fucking codename - Psyche! She has to be living somewhere – how come we haven't found her yet?"

"We've checked all across the city; schools everything – no Stephanie Walker anywhere..."

"Time to make 'Urban Predator' work for a change – I'll show those fucking bastards that I can still kick ass!"

CIA Station

Chicago

Paul Stein checked his email and was annoyed to find an urgent tasking waiting for him.

He scanned the email briefly, taking in certain names and phrases: 'TREADSTONE', 'URBAN PREDATOR', 'FOXTAIL', 'AURORA', 'PSYCHE', 'BOURNE', 'VOSEN'.

There were some very specific instructions detailing his next actions. He was concerned about operating in Chicago; the CIA had no mandate to operate within the Fifty States, not that they did not operate covertly.

His first task, was to activate a deep-cover operative: Saoirse Doherty – a hell of a name!

That afternoon

St Benedict Parish School

Northern Chicago

The ninth-grade girl paused as the cell buzzed on the table beside her.

She picked it up and after unlocking it, checked the text message: 'FOXTAIL-ALFA-NOVEMBER-UNIFORM'. A smile crossed her lips and her eyes lit up with excitement as she replied: 'FOXTAIL-YANKEE-BRAVO-LIMA'. She had no idea that just a few miles outside the school, a man checked his cell, nodded and then drove off, his task complete.

The girl checked the time and headed off for her last class of the day as if nothing had occurred. To look at the girl, you would not see a highly trained assassin. She was almost five and a half feet tall, with short, dark brown hair and blue eyes. While she was in ninth-grade, you could be forgiven for believing her to be in the tenth or eleventh grades.

..._...

After the last class, she was about to leave the school when another girl came up to her.

"Office asked me to give you this, SD..."

"Thanks."

The girl checked the plain brown envelope and examined the seal – it was intact. She walked over to the side of the building and broke the seal. Inside the envelope were some photos – a man, a woman, a young girl and another woman. There were names on the back of each photo and warnings concerning how dangerous all four were – especially the young girl.

After examining and memorising the photos, Saoirse Doherty walked back into the school and over to the Office.

"Hi, Mrs Grey, could you shred this envelope for me?"

"Of course, Saoirse – one second."

Once the envelope was completely destroyed, Saoirse Doherty took a brief walk and jumped on her bus home.

That same time

Glenview

Stephanie was quietly fuming.

She was sitting cross-legged in the bath while Mindy awaited her decision. Mindy had made her decision, but she was allowing Stephanie to make hers out of respect for the girl.

"Come on, make up your mind – you either dye it or lose it..."

Thanks to the CIA being in town and presumably hunting her, Stephanie needed to change her appearance. She had been given two choices; dye her long blonde hair another colour – or have it cut short. Stephanie of course, wanted neither however, so after a lot of screaming and struggling she had found herself in the bath awaiting one fate or the other.

"Alright, dye it!" The nine-year-old growled reluctantly.

"Finally!" Mindy chuckled.

"At least you don't have to worry about the drapes matching the carpet!" Megan laughed as she smirked down at Stephanie.

"When I get out of here, you are bloody history, kitty-kat!"

..._...

Only that was not the end of it!

Megan had then suggested that both girls should have their hair dyed – making them the same. Mindy had thought that a good idea – but that was where the arguments had started. Anne-Marie was hauled into the bathroom to see what she thought; she liked the idea – only the girl wanted 'Hit Girl Purple'!

Mindy actually considered that idea a good one, but then contemplated what Marcus and the kids' school might say...

..._...

Finally, the two girls were finished – again after a lot of complaining as both girls had quite thick hair and it took a while.

For a time, they both sat gloomily examining their new hair in a mirror. Both were now a deep copper red colour which was very similar to Megan's own hair colouring, but darker. To all intents and purposes, the two girls did look like sisters, which was the end result that we had wanted.

"Get a grip, you two – I think it suits you both..."

"You would – I hate the colour!" Stephanie moaned.

"Live with it – it might just save your life..." Mindy warned.

That Night

Safehouse K

The CIA were not exactly hard to track, which was a somewhat pleasant surprise.

Despite that, we were not taking any chances as the three armoured SUVs raced through the open gate and into the yard behind Safehouse K. As soon as the vehicles stopped, we piled out, leaving only the drivers behind.

We all rushed into the Safehouse as all three SUVs quickly vanished out the gate.

..._...

"Nice place you have here!" The man commented as he gazed around the immense open area.

Hit Girl turned to the man as he removed his balaclava.

"You ain't seen nothing yet!" She hissed.

"She sounds like you when you're 'on the job!'" Nicky chuckled, pulling off her own balaclava.

"This way..."

As we walked over to a section of concrete that was marked with a dashed yellow square, a slight rumble could be heard as that section of the concrete floor moved down and then to one side, revealing a concrete staircase. We all vanished downwards and the concrete slab returned to its previous position, hiding the staircase.

We came out into a comfortable lobby that had carpet tiles on the floor and the walls were painted a pleasant light purple. We all headed through a pair of double doors into a large open area that contained a briefing area, a kitchen and a place to sit and eat. As we entered, lights clicked on across the facility.

I had never been there before and it looked cool.

..._...

"Love the colour scheme, Mindy!" Nicky commented.

"Thanks," Hit Girl said as she pulled off her mask. "We should have some time before those goons show up."

Kick-Ass pulled off his own mask and made for a large eighty-inch horizontal touch-screen table that was a duplicate of that at Safehouse F. It was already active and it showed the surrounding area in visual, night and infra-red modes.

Then Mindy turned to me.

"Time to show yourself, Steph."

I took a deep breath and pulled off my mask, feeling shy for some reason or other. I looked over at the two new people; I knew their names, but nothing else about them. Mindy waved for us all to sit down while Dave leant against the table and watched.

Shadow and Petra kept their masks in place while they kept watch on the surveillance systems.

"Stephanie, my name is Jason Bourne and this is Nicky Parsons. We are very familiar with your situation and how you are what you are..."

Stephanie looked confused.

"You're only nine, am I right?" Nicky asked.

Stephanie looked at me and I nodded with a reassuring smile.

"Yes."

"British?"

"Yes."

"Jason is a product of a CIA program called Treadstone – he was brainwashed into becoming a mindless assassin that would follow orders without question. You are the product of another one of the CIAs less clever ideas – Urban Predator..."

Nicky went on for twenty minutes. During that time, I saw Stephanie's eyes go wide with amazement and then narrow with anger. When Nicky stopped talking, Stephanie just sat there, staring at the floor.

"Steph?"

I was a little worried by her quietness.

"There are others like me out there?" Steph asked quietly.

"We believe so – only we have no idea who or what. You were not the first, but I hope you were the last..." Jason confirmed.

"So that is why I had to have my hair dyed this ridiculous colour this afternoon?"

"You look really sweet, Steph," Nicky said and I heard Shadow giggle behind us.

Stephanie scowled and was about to retort when Petra shouted over.

"Incoming!"

Chapter 244*: Ambush at Safehouse K

Thursday night

Southwest Chicago
Safehouse F

They came out of the darkness, in six separate, but identical teams.

Each team consisted of six bodies and they closed on the Safehouse from four different directions. No lights were in evidence so they were obviously making use of NVG equipment. I looked over at Jason.

"You going to turn your hand?" I offered.

"Show me the way, Hit Girl!"

"Shadow, take Mr Bourne to the armoury and find him some body armour, NVGs and weapons. Petra, let's get ourselves ready."

"What about me?" Stephanie asked indignantly.

I winked at Nicky as I replied.

"I need you to stay with Nicky – she needs guarding, plus I can't leave a stranger in the Safehouse alone."

Stephanie glared at me as she pulled on her mask. I had expected an argument; however, Psyche just readied her weapons and took up station near to the entrance.

Safehouse K had five floors above ground.

The entire first floor was entirely devoid of obstacles – just 22,000 square feet of open concrete with a concrete staircase rising up in the centre, on the north side. On the south side, again in the centre of the long side of the building, was a single lift shaft with a cargo elevator. At the back of the building, on the west end by the loading docks, was a steel fire escape that gave access to and from each floor.

The CIA team separated, one team went to each of the five floors while the remaining team remained outside to guard against our escape.

"Overwatch, any sign of snipers?" I called.

"Still scanning the area, Hit Girl," Leon replied from her roof-top perch two hundred yards away to the south-west.

"Jackal, Wildcat – check in!"

"We found their vehicles and they are wired – two men on guard..." Jackal replied from two streets away where he and Wildcat monitored the CIA's six SUVs.

"Hawk, Splinter, Trojan – check in!"

"We have the control van under surveillance – no obvious guard, but we are still covert," Splinter replied.

The three vigilantes were in Beast, half a mile away, and about thirty yards from a large black van that purported to belong to an electrical maintenance company. No one was going to escape without our express permission...

"CIA teams are moving into position. They are at each fire door on the northwest corner fire escape," Battle Guy announced from Safehouse F.

"Ready!" Petra announced from her position on the fifth floor.

"Ready!" Shadow announced from the fourth floor.

"Ready!" Spectre called from the third floor – Jason needed a name and it had been Nicky's idea.

"Ready!" I growled from the second floor.

"Ready!" Kick-Ass hissed from his position in the side alley, eight feet from two armed CIA men.

"Ready!" Psyche added from the basement level.

Out of the night, there came sniper shots from three separate directions as gunfire poured into the fifth, third and second floors of Safehouse K.

"Heavy rounds coming in!" Petra announced.

"No shit, Sherlock!" Leon replied as she scanned the area for the snipers.

"Triangulating!" Hal announced from Safehouse F using strategically placed microphones to measure the time between sound reaching each microphone. "Sniper One – eight-zero-zero yards, zero-nine-zero!"

"Sniper One is masked from my location!" Leon responded.

"But not from mine – I have him..." Medic replied from across the nearby water where she was the backup in Titan with Mist.

"Sniper Two – seven-nine-one yards, one-nine-seven!" Hal called.

"I have him..." Leon replied and then two rapid shots were heard over the comms. They were suppressed, but the round was supersonic. "He's dog meat!"

The coroner would have fun with that body – the first bullet had obliterated the man's head while the second had entered the destroyed base of the skull and then travelled the length of the body before exiting at the crotch and burying itself into a concrete wall.

"Sniper Three – five-one-six yards, two-five-eight!" Hal called.

Overwatch Position

"Oh fuck!" I said calmly over the comms. "He has me..."

A large round struck just inches from my left hand sending up chips of concrete. I had no time to flinch; I steadied my rifle and muttered a curse as I sent the tip of another .50-calibre round downrange...

"Fucking bastard thought he could outshoot me..." I exclaimed as my bullet bored straight through the other sniper's scope and into his brain via his right eye.

For good measure, I shot the man who had been guarding the sniper's back and who came forward to see what had happened to the now very dead sniper.

Titan

Almost a kilometre away, Medic moved stealthily through the darkness with Mist a dozen yards behind.

The sniper was still shooting – but he had a protector, guarding his back. As Mist watched with a P90 to her shoulder, Medic advanced towards the protector who turned and raised his Colt M4 carbine, sending a three-round burst of 5.56-millimetre bullets into Medic's heavy chest armour.

"You fuckers make me sick!" She exclaimed in her electronically shrouded voice as she pulled the trigger three times on her Kel-Tec KSG shotgun, blasting the unfortunate CIA man into a bloody mess. "Fuck with a little girl's mind will you, you sick bastards?"

Medic advanced and blasted away at the sniper even as he rolled to meet the new threat from behind him. His head was vaporised as the contents of four 12-gauge shells exploded out of the end of the shotgun.

"Sniper One and another sick fuck are down – permanently!" Medic growled into the comms.

Safehouse K

The assault teams had thought they were onto an easy entry.

They had sniper support which was normally an equaliser, but they had become more and more worried as they had heard each of their own snipers go off the air, not to mention the cautionary warning of an enemy sniper in the area. The fifth floor team made their entry at the same time as the other teams, blasting open the fire escape with a block of C4. They pushed through the debris and began firing single shots in prearranged directions and then fanning out in pairs to cover the 110-foot width of the open plan area. There were numerous wooden packing crates scattered in a seemingly random arrangement.

There was nothing random about the layout; Safehouse K was used for multi-aspect training.

Safehouse K: Basement

From my safe location in the basement, I was able to monitor the attack.

Yes, I was annoyed at being kept safe, but I had no choice. Every floor had low-light and infra-red closed-circuit video surveillance, so I was able to follow the fight with Nicky beside me. As I watched, I saw Petra up on the fifth floor as she moved forwards and toward the centre of the open space before jumping up onto a stack of wooden crates.

Almost a minute later, she smoothly and silently drew a single combat Katana from her back, and then casually took off the head of a CIA attacker as he moved past. His partner turned at the movement to take the same Katana in the neck.

..._...

I laughed as I saw the confusion in the other two pairs of Agents on the fifth floor as they called for the third pair to respond.

"That was very well done!" Nicky said appreciatively.

"Your man has nothing on us!"

"Is that so..."

..._...

Spectre was on the third floor – we could see him moving through the darkness.

"Spectre, movement at your nine o'clock – M4 to the right shoulder..."

We saw Spectre move over to one side slightly and raise a hand with a knife visible. The hand plunged downwards and sideways into the neck of the unfortunate CIA Agent who died without knowing what had killed him. His partner lasted only a few seconds longer as his legs were kicked out from under him and he dropped his carbine, crashing to the floor. The knife plunged down again, into his heart, killing him instantly.

The man crashing to the floor had attracted other attention and bullets peppered the wall behind Spectre as he dove to the floor, rolling and bringing up his Glock 17 pistol, squeezing the trigger several times.

"Six down..." Spectre said in a cold monotone that echoed Psyche's own.

Half a mile away CIA Command Van

There was intense consternation in the Command Van as the on-scene commander fretted about his men.

They were dying and he had no idea why.

"What the fuck is happening in there?"

His snipers were no longer responding – which probably meant that they were dead – there was an enemy sniper in the area and his men were being engaged on all levels of the building. Maybe there was more to these Fusion guys than had been briefed.

"What was that?" The commander said as his attention was drawn to a flat screen monitor mounted in the large control panel that ran down the left side of the van's interior.

"Not sure, boss..."

A large dark form seemed to materialise out of the darkness beside his outside team. The wireless camera had been placed just before the attack, along with several others.

"Team seven – check your six..." The commander ordered urgently over the communication circuit.

The two men turned and both opened fire with their M4 carbines, however their bullets did not seem to do anything as the menacing dark form advanced towards the men. The dark form was wearing obvious, heavy body armour and it simply raised a wicked looking AA-10 shotgun and several blasts later, the two CIA men fell to the ground.

"Fuck!"

Seven hundred miles to the east Washington DC

"Christ! What is going on in that fucking city?"

A masked face, with green and yellow markings, appeared on the screen before them. CIA Deputy Director of the Support Directorate, Noah Vossen stepped back involuntarily.

"You're running out of men, Vossen – give it up!" Came the electronically enhanced voice of Kick-Ass.

Then the screen went blank – the blast of the shotgun, the last thing they saw. Vossen threw his cup of coffee across the conference room where it smashed against the wall beneath the large flat-screen monitor mounted on the wall.

"Fuck Kick-Ass; fuck the lot of them – kill them all!"

Chicago Safehouse K: second floor

The first pair died together, each taking a Katana in the chest, cutting their hearts in half

I reached down and pulled the comms off the head of one of the dead – a woman.

"You feeling scared yet?" I growled into the microphone and I saw two pairs of CIA Agents freeze. "Well, you should be; I'm just getting warmed up, how about you?"

"All teams, switch to alternate channel!"

I dropped the comms, smirking as I headed into the darkness.

Safehouse K: fourth floor

I grinned at Hit Girl's psychological attack on the CIA.

She loved fucking with people's minds! I had seen the Agents on my level freeze as Hit Girl had spoken – they had all heard Hit Girl's announcement, as had been intended. I raised my FN Five-seveN pistol and secured a suppressor to the end of the barrel – it was time for target practice!

I stalked my prey.

That voice had freaked me out; I would not deny it!

The voice was full of evil and menace – I knew that it was Hit Girl and I knew her reputation... We had to be careful. I looked over at Carl; he looked a little freaked out too, but our training quickly took over and we moved steadily through the darkness.

My mind registered the flash first, then the sound of suppressed gunshots as Carl's head exploded, covering me in blood and brains. I instinctively triggered off half a magazine in the direction of the flash.

"Wrong direction, cunt!"

The voice scared me to the core and I knew what was coming next. My brain momentarily registered the sharp pain in the side of my head as the bullet smashed through the bone...

Half a mile away CIA Command Van

"Who do we have left?"

"Of the thirty that went into the building?" The tech agent replied. "Zero... Of the six guarding the perimeter... Two left..."

"Better make that zero!" Another tech reported despondently as there were several flashes on a screen before him.

The commander turned to a third tech.

"Get us the fuck outta here!"

The tech scrambled into the driver's seat and had just started the engine when he heard the roar of a large and powerful engine from his right. Bright lights illuminated, dazzling him as the roaring increased and whatever it was, struck the Command Van broadside.

Beast

The van was flipped over onto its side as the reinforced bumper on the front of Beast struck it squarely in the side.

Hawk stamped on the brakes and leapt out, raising her Assegai spear and throwing it towards the first man attempting to escape. It struck the man in the back of his right shoulder and he went down, screaming.

Splinter and Trojan pulled open the rear door of the van. Seven rounds later, there was silence in the Central Intelligence Agency's Command Van.

Hound

Wildcat and Jackal approached the two CIA guards who seemed very jittery.

"Howdy, cunts!" Wildcat growled as her claws ripped into and through the neck of the first man.

Jackal said nothing as he violently twisted the neck of the other man. Both men were dead before they hit the ground.

"Good work, Wildcat!"

"Can I blow 'em now?" Wildcat asked. "Please? Pretty please? Pretty please with a cherry on top..."

"You do that..." Jackal chuckled, walking back towards Hound.

Wildcat pulled a remote detonator from her belt and flipped off the safety.

Safehouse F

Six almost simultaneous explosions told me that Wildcat had just put a small dent in the CIA's vehicle inventory.

It was over. I was not pleased with all the killing that had occurred, but they had invaded my building! It would take a while to sanitise everything, but I had a distinct feeling that the CIA would do it for me; they would not want any evidence to remain.

The CIA would remove all traces of the attack.

Washington DC

Vossen turned away from the screen and glared at his subordinate.

"Get a clean-up team in there – tonight never happened!"

Two days later Saturday afternoon

I was walking down the street with Anne-Marie, not too far from home, when I had the weirdest feeling.

It felt like I was being watched – my training kicked in and I instantly became more aware of my surroundings. As I casually looked around, though, I couldn't see anybody acting suspiciously and my counter-surveillance skills were seeing nothing. Then I passed a girl who seemed older than Chloe, but younger than Mindy, maybe sixteen or so, or possibly older. There was something about her that triggered something deep in my subconscious.

The girl actually smiled at me as she passed by, but I ignored her.

..._...

An image was forming in my mind as I sat eating my dinner that evening.

I was receiving some strange looks from the others as I ate, just gazing into nothing.

"Problem, Steph?" Mindy asked.

"Maybe..." I mused, and then it hit me like a brick. "I've seen her before!"

"Huh?" Danny asked, his fork halfway to his mouth.

Images began to form in my mind, images that had been lost, deep in my subconscious. They were old memories from my very earliest days of being trained by the CIA. I remembered sleeping in a large dormitory with many other girls of varying ages. That face – the girl had slept only three beds away from me. I remembered getting up each morning and showering with the other girls before breakfast. I had always hated showering in public, at first, but that feeling about any loss of privacy had soon gone away. I remembered eating breakfast with the others, which had included boys too.

All the faces were blurry, all except one. That girl – she was definitely another me, only she was much older which meant that she was probably fully trained – an assassin. Had she recognised me? My hair was a different colour, but would that fool her?

It wouldn't have fooled me, I knew.

..._...

"Stephanie!"

Mindy was shouting now; I must have tuned out.

"I don't remember her name, but I remember the face – she's part of Urban Predator..."

"You certain?"

Mindy looked worried as I nodded.

"My nemesis..."

"That doesn't sound good," Mindy commented as she bit her lip – she was worried.

"She can only be here for one reason..."

"To kill you?"

"Yes."

Chapter 245*: Puppies

That evening Saturday

I could not believe that it had been so easy!

Once I had seen that photo of the young blond-haired girl, I knew that I had seen her before. I had wracked my brains to remember where and when. Then I had it – Glenview! I had walked the streets each afternoon and evening – then all Saturday.

There was something about the two girls with copper red hair. One of them was about the right age and her eyes... They were not the eyes of a normal girl which told me something about her. I had smiled at her as I had walked past – just being friendly, nothing more. It was not until I was a couple of dozen yards beyond her, that my brain added everything together – it had been her, my target!

I had turned back instantly, but the girl had vanished...

Sunday morning

There was an argument going on, up the stairs.

Usually, the arguments ended up getting violent so I thought that I had better intervene. As I got to the top of the stairs I noticed Josh loitering outside the girl's bedroom.

"What are they arguing about this time?" I asked, dreading the answer.

"Girly shit."

"Who started it?"

"Err, that would be Chloe!"

"Chloe...! What's the argument over for God's sake?"

It was getting quite heated, too – I left Josh to it, but kept an ear open.

"You are so wrong!" Chloe exclaimed.

"Am not!" A very hyped up Stephanie replied with fire in her eyes.

"You are both wrong!" An indignant Anne-Marie chimed in.

"Not happening – I should kill you all where you stand!" Megan challenged with a smirk.

"Okay – we are at a standoff, so let's sum this up..." Chloe began diplomatically, pointing at each girl in turn.

"Anne-Marie: Pinkie Pie... Stephanie: Rainbow Dash... Megan: Sunset Shimmer... Me: Apple Jack..."

"I preferred Twilight Sparkle..." Mindy mentioned as she walked past the door. "Although Rarity was awesome in her own way..."

"What!" All four girls exclaimed sounding very surprised.

"Hey, I did do things other than killing people when I was younger!" Mindy replied offhandedly.

"To be honest, I fancied Fluttershy; no idea why..." Josh chimed in as he walked away.

Sunday afternoon

"Oh you have to be kidding!" I exclaimed as I passed by the living room.

They were all crying! Mindy, Chloe, Stephanie, Megan and Anne-Marie; they all had tears running down their faces, but they were all smiling.

"It's the movie – it was very moving..." Mindy tried to explain as she wiped away her tears.

I walked in and picked up the DVD case from the table.

"Okay: 'My Little Pony: Equestria Girls'?" I enquired.

"Yeah, Dave – it was awesome!" Chloe replied, blushing slightly.

Danny looked appalled and refused to enter the living room; I just shook my head and walked out.

"Come on, Danny – let's go do something manly!"

Two days later Monday afternoon

Glenview

We had built what could only be described as a 'nest' for our fearless, but very pregnant, canine companion.

She had been living in her 'nest' for the past couple of weeks, down in the basement. All the kids thought it was awesome that there were going to be puppies; I was excited too. Sophia was perfectly healthy and the vet was very pleased with her progress.

Today was the day...

..._..._...

Sophia was lying on her side and something told me that the puppies were coming, and that was when her waters broke. I felt sorry for Sophia who seemed to be very uncomfortable and she was panting steadily. All three kids were there to watch, plus Megan – poor Sophia, she had no privacy. How would I feel if I had half a dozen people watching me giving birth!

During the wait, Sophia got up and moved around quite a few times and we all kept encouraging the uncomfortable dog. She was much more than family to us, and we hated seeing her in so much discomfort. Then it truly began, as a pained expression passed across Sophia's face and she raised her upper hind leg.

"What's happening?" Anne-Marie demanded, sounding worried.

That was when something dark began to appear from between Sophia's hind legs. I had never seen anything like it before and I was mesmerized as I watched.

"Ewww!" Stephanie exclaimed.

The first pup appeared and it was covered in a thin membrane which Sophia chewed at and then ripped open before she licked the pup clean, eating the membrane as she went. The pup squealed as its fur was rubbed up the wrong way and I saw enormous smiles grow on the kids' faces and I was surprised to feel tears in my eyes. I was so used to taking lives that I was not used to seeing new lives come into the world.

Dave reached over and checked the pup.

"It's a Megan – sorry, a bitch!" Dave chuckled, ignoring Megan's not very amused glance.

Soon after, the next pup appeared – there was some blood too, which Dave cleared up. Sophia got to work on the 'sack' that enclosed the little pup.

"Is she eating the pup?" Anne-Marie asked.

"No, that's the umbilical cord – Sophia's chewing it off. See, she's washing the pup now and the first one is feeding."

"It's so disgusting..."

"You would have been a mess too, soon after you arrived in this world," I reminded Megan who grimaced at the thought.

Five hours later, it was all over.

We had received seven pups in total before Sophia was finished: five females and two males. All seven were healthy and they were happily squeaking and feeding. Sophia was much relieved for it all to be over and she dozed quite a lot, despite the pups pawing incessantly at her underside.

"Well done, girl, well done!" I said, stroking her gently as she rested.

..._...

A little over an hour later, Sophia decided to take herself upstairs and I went with her and then took her outside where she made use of the garden's facilities. After that she seemed to be enjoying the fresh air after all those hours of labour. While that was happening, Dave and Stephanie were taking the opportunity to swap the soiled bedding of the 'nest' for clean stuff.

We returned to the basement to find seven little bundles lying in the 'nest', squealing and cuddling up together; they looked so sweet! Sophia stepped in amongst them and went from pup to pup checking each one out and giving each one a gently lick to reassure them that Mom was back. She laid down on her side, somewhat reluctantly, and the seven squealing bundles quickly dived in for some more of Mom's milk.

Stephanie and I gently stroked Sophia who looked very happy; a new Mom.

The following morning Tuesday

By the time the kids had left for school, the pups had all gained names.

Once I had returned from dropping the kids off, I explained the names to Sophia. Each pup wore a string collar in a different colour for identification purposes. Dave and I lined up the seven pups before their mother.

"Okay, Sophia, from the left. We have Hercules, he has the blue collar. Then we have Kiara – she has the purple collar. The bitch with the orange collar, is Hope and the pink one is Josie. The brown collared dog is Razor while the remaining two bitches with grey and yellow collars are Layla and Piper."

Sophia barked approvingly at each name.

..._...

Once the pups were around 2 months old, they would begin their training. Each would gain a vigilante name, as well as their normal name. They would be taught to be loyal and to obey without question. In return we would gain their respect and we would take charge – this would involve extra training on our part; humans communicate verbally, dogs do not, they read body language and react accordingly. We would reinforce their acceptance of good behaviour and also punish where necessary – each animal would be very different and would have to be treated accordingly. They would all need a lot of attention and a lot of exercise. As such, once they were old enough to be separated from their mother, we would rotate them through The Farm where there was plenty of space and barking dogs being trained would not upset the neighbours.

Each dog would be trained to be a vigilante, much as their mother was – and yes, they might learn similar skills to 'Schwanz!' The training would take over a year and more likely eighteen months to complete.

..._...

Everybody wanted one!

Not to mention that some had actually laid claim to the pups too. I wanted one, of course – I fancied Kiara, hence the purple collar. Megan also wanted one, as did Anne-Marie, Danny and Stephanie. Marty was considering having one as well. Ultimately, all of the pups would need a home and I didn't mind the idea of keeping one or two with us, maybe a boy and a girl, and finding homes for the other five.

That evening

"How sweet!" Paige squealed on seeing the seven pups lined up as if on parade.

"Cute little buggers," Marcus commented with a smile.

"You two are officially doggy grandparents!" Dave laughed.

"Just what I always wanted!" Marcus growled.

"I have a feeling that Megan is angling for one; she tidied her room before school this morning and emptied the dishwasher without being asked..." Paige commented.

"... She also helped make dinner and offered to take out the garbage!" Marcus added.

I laughed.

..._...

Half an hour after Paige and Marcus had left, we received another pair of visitors.

"I hear that Chicago has a new batch of vigilantes!"

"Vicious they are, too," I replied with a smirk.

"Oh my God, Hank – they are so fucking adorable!" Trudy Platt announced.

"I'm quaking in my boots!" Hank Voight laughed as he gazed down at the seven little squeaking bundles.

"Give 'em time, Hank..."

For now, all the pups were almost completely black, although there were some tan-points on the lower legs, cheeks, eyebrows and under the tail root. We would need to wait for a few months to see how the colour schemes would work out, but both the mother and the father were pure-bred, so we expected the pups to follow suit into the usual Alsatian/German Shepherd colour scheme of black and tan.

I loved them; they were so adorable and they would make awesome vigilantes...

Chapter 246*: Nightmare

Two days later
Thursday

Chloe and I hijacked Mrs Edwards when she came into D-JAK that evening with her two daughters.

"We heard about Lauren's attack – we're very sorry about what happened," I began, once we had sat down in my office with a coffee each.

"It has been a very tough couple of weeks, but she has a lot of friends to help her, both at home and at school. However, I think she needs more..."

"That is why we asked you in here – I think that we can offer your daughter more... A challenge as a distraction from what happened to her. We can also teach her to defend herself to a high level."

"That would be good."

"We can also offer your daughter a lot more, besides," Chloe added before changing the target. "You were in the Army, I believe."

"Yes – having Lauren cut short my career. I was a Chief Warrant Officer 2 in Armament Systems Maintenance."

"What do you think about the vigilantes that currently operate in the city?" I asked tentatively.

Emily Edwards' eyes seemed to light up at that question.

"You mean: do I believe in what you two do for the city when you are out at night?" I asked, watching for a reaction from the two young women sitting before me on the couch.

There was no outward reaction; the two girls would have made awesome poker players!

"I am behind what you do, one hundred percent," I went on. "You are offering to make my daughter a member of your team?"

Again, no outward reaction, so I continued.

"I believe that Lauren would be overjoyed by your offer – however, there would be non-negotiable conditions. Lizzie does not get involved – she does not even know about her sister being a vigilante. Lauren will be fully trained before she goes out on operations. Also, I want to offer my services..."

"You are very astute, Mrs Edwards..." Mindy commented.

"Emily, please."

"Emily – we could definitely make use of your talents – Chloe, here, well she breaks weapons on a regular basis..."

"I can believe that..." Emily commented as she chuckled at Chloe's hurt expression. "Does my daughter have a name?"

"Yes, she does: Nightmare..."

"I like that. Me?"

"Welcome aboard, Athena!"

The following evening
Friday

"Where are we going, Mom?"

"Mindy is taking us on a little visit, Lauren."

Lauren did not seem to believe her Mother's reply – but it was the truth and she had no choice but to accept it. Her younger sister, Lizzie, was spending time with Megan and Curtis, while we headed towards southeast Chicago. Lauren began to smell a rat as I turned into a very grotty looking salvage yard before then turning sharply into a rusty looking warehouse.

The girl actually screamed as I drove directly at a concrete wall which sank out of sight in a blink of an eye and we began to descend sharply into the ground. Lauren span around in the backseat to see the concrete and steel barrier rising upwards to close off the primary vehicle access ramp to Safehouse F.

..._...

"What is going on?"

Lauren received no reply; I was keeping silent, but her Mother was stunned into silence as we kept turning and turning, dropping down and down before we finally burst out into the bright lights of Safehouse F and the large armoured door rapidly lowered into place and locked.

Emily and I climbed out of the XJR and I opened the rear door for Lauren.

"Come on!" I chuckled.

The stunned teenager climbed out of the car and just stared around her, unable to talk. I led her through the glass partition and onto the mat where she just spun around trying to see everything at once. Emily just turned slowly taking it all in.

Then Lauren found her voice and she turned towards me, her eyes narrowing with suspicion.

..._...

"You're her!"

"Yes, Lauren, she is..."

Lauren span around to face a smirking Chloe.

"You!"

"Hello, Nightmare," Chloe replied with a friendly smile.

"Nightmare?"

"Your new name – if you want it..." I said in reply.

Lauren turned to her Mom in disbelief.

"Mindy wants you to be part of her team – why she would want that, I have absolutely no idea!"

Lauren scowled.

"Shall we get a coffee, Emily," Paige suggested walking up. The two women knew each other from D-JAK and I smirked as Emily scowled at Paige.

"It all becomes so clear!" Emily laughed as she took in Joshua and Dave standing above us on the walkway along with Hailee and a grinning Stephanie.

Safehouse F

My brain was struggling; I was overloaded as my mind could not process everything that I was seeing before me.

I recognised Mindy... I recognised Chloe, Dave, Paige, Josh, Hailee and Stephanie... They were all vigilantes... Oh my God! I turned to Chloe.

"That was you on my fire escape!"

"Yes, it was; you enjoyed the photos, I assume..."

"I can't believe that you are all superheroes and I've been spending time with you guys..."

I turned to Mindy.

"You..."

Then to Dave as he came down the steel staircase beside us.

"You picked me up out of the snow; you took me to the hospital... You both saved my life... Thank you..."

"You're a special young lady and you deserve more from life than what those bastards did to you..."

I smiled at the confused girl as she struggled to make sense of everything around her. I put an arm around the kid's shoulders to reassure her.

"Fancy a tour, Lauren?"

"With Hit Girl?" Lauren replied hopefully and I laughed.

"With Hit Girl."

While Lauren was talking with Chloe upstairs, I headed down to the Command Centre at the behest of an eager Marty.

"I've found her – she was buried in those files that Miranda brought us after we acquired short ass..." Marty began.

"Marty, I would hate to have to hurt you..." Stephanie growled. Marty winked at the girl as he continued.

"... The description matches a girl who went by the name of 'Foxtail' and here she is..."

Marty brought up a screen with an image of a young girl about ten-years-old and her vital statistics which appeared more up to date than the photo.

"The bitch shares my fucking birthday!" Stephanie grouched – I had noticed that too.

"She's highly skilled," I commented.

"And I'm not?" Stephanie bristled.

"Stephanie, I have no complaints with what you can do and you have proved yourself; you have nothing to prove to me or anybody, understand..."

"Yes, Mum..."

"I think you're awesome, Steph!" Marty said, ruffling Stephanie's hair.

Normally, she hated anybody doing that – apart from Dave, but instead she just smiled and went slightly pink in the cheeks. It was good to finally have some information that we could act upon, especially if it would help keep our team alive.

"Okay, Lauren – we need to have a little talk and we may touch on some not so happy subjects, so please bear with us," I said calmly as Lauren sat in the briefing room while Chloe, Josh and Dave sat beside me. "You know us all, in one way or another. You go to the same school as Chloe and Josh – which brings us onto the harsher side of life as a vigilante."

"We have let you into a secret, a large secret..." Chloe said, taking over smoothly. "By letting you into our secret, we have put ourselves at risk – one word from you in the wrong place and you will put many lives at risk... It is no stretch to consider that given a choice of one person dying or many – you can understand the obvious choice."

Lauren went a little white.

"I understand and I can promise you that I will never say a word to anybody..."

"Not even to your sister, Lizzie... You will never discuss us, or anything to do with Fusion when at home – understand?"

"I do..."

"Your Mom knows about us and she understands the need for secrecy. From this point on – you will never use our vigilante names when we are not in costume and conversely you will never use our real names when we are in costume. I know this is a lot for a thirteen-year-old to take in, but we have both been there, Josh and I, and it can be done."

"We will support you and we will help you," I went on. "Everybody in Fusion has a unique background and some of us have very traumatic backgrounds that brought us into Fusion. You will learn this as time goes on and you meet everybody properly. Most of the faces that you will see around you will seem familiar, but you have only seen one side of us all."

"If you have any questions or problems, you can talk to any of us at any time. Fusion is a family and we support one another in whichever way we can... There are many more rules to learn and we will come down on you hard when you break them and you will break them. We will always explain where you went wrong and we will guide you as long as you are willing to accept that guidance. Some..."

I looked directly at Chloe.

"Some chose to ignore guidance and advice, going their own way – they may choose to embarrass themselves and tell you their stories; if they do, learn from them as they have. You will be starting out at the bottom and working your way up – there is a lot for you to learn before you find yourself out on the streets of Chicago. You still wanting to join us?"

Lauren smiled.

"Just try and stop me!"

Chapter 247: The British Sector

The next morning Saturday

As we had discussed, before Christmas, Stephanie was getting her own room.

I was allowing her to decorate the room as she saw fit – within reason of course! Joshua was helping her, so I had given Joshua permission to use his 'emergency' credit card – whether that was a good idea...

Couriers had been delivering boxes all week and Joshua had threatened me with grievous bodily harm if I went anywhere near any of the boxes or Stephanie's new bedroom! I had complained bitterly and I had pointed out quite reasonably I thought, that her 'new room' was in my goddamn house!

"I want it to be a bloody surprise, Mum, so like it or fucking lump it!" Stephanie had said simply before slamming her new bedroom door in my face.

"Finally – a bitch that stands up to the queen bitch!" Dave chuckled as he headed downstairs with a smirking Danny. I glared after them.

..._...

Joshua and Stephanie spent all weekend working in the room from six in the morning to almost midnight. I was seriously annoyed at not being allowed into a part of my own house, but I let it slide.

For the moment...

On Saturday morning, I had walked past the bedroom and I had heard Stephanie yelling at Joshua: "Hey, asshole, I'm a fucking girl and I have the cunt to prove it; so fucking live with it!"

"Whatever you say!" Had been Joshua's very defensive response.

..._...

Later that same afternoon, Chloe and I had been downstairs in the kitchen when we had both heard a loud yell and we ran upstairs to find Joshua on the landing, literally. He was on his knees with his hands clasped somewhere delicate and Stephanie was standing beside him trying, in vain I might add, to look innocent; she avoided our eyes as we looked questioningly at her.

At first, Chloe was glaring angrily, but then her eyes softened and she started giggling at her boyfriend's rather painful predicament!

"Laugh it up, bitch – you're back to two fingers tonight!" Josh groaned between clenched teeth.

Chloe stopped laughing, but only for a few seconds.

"I'm sorry, Josh..."

"Like fuck, you are!" Josh complained as he rolled onto his back still grasping his obviously bruised manhood.

"It was an accident..." Stephanie began.

"Yeah, sure!" I chuckled as I headed back down the stairs followed by an unconvinced Chloe.

..._...

"You think those two are, you know... At it?"

Chloe looked at me and thought for a moment.

"Come on – Steph is far too young and Joshua knows that if he even points his dick at another anything, I'm gonna go Bobbitt on him which would also be the least of his worries!"

"Just asking..."

Sunday morning

Chloe and Josh had arrived early – before six, just as they had on Saturday morning.

Stephanie was already up and she was waiting impatiently for Josh to show up. The young girl did not look amused by his arrival.

"What time do you call this, cunt?" She demanded.

"Oh-five-fifty-eight!" He replied tiredly.

"Not good enough!" Stephanie replied without a hint of humour. "Move it – or I'll take the lash to you..."

Josh grimaced apologetically at Chloe before being dragged into the bedroom by Stephanie who slammed the door. Chloe and I were left staring at each other.

"I wonder if she really does have a lash," Chloe murmured as we both went downstairs for some breakfast.

..._...

We were soon joined by a very tired Anne-Marie.

"They're making too much noise..." She complained.

"Sorry – maybe allowing them free reign was not such a good idea..."

"Stephanie needs her space," Chloe reminded me.

"I know – but something tells me that I've just lost a chunk of my house!"

..._...

At lunchtime, I placed a plate of beef sandwiches and some cans of Coke outside the bedroom door and knocked. I heard furious scrabbling from the other side of the door and then it flew open a few inches.

"What?" Stephanie demanded.

"Food!" I replied with a grin.

"Oh, thanks..."

The door was slammed in my face as soon as the sandwiches and Cokes had vanished inside.

That afternoon

"Hello ladies!"

I looked around the kitchen and then back at Chloe.

"No ladies here, Josh!" I quipped.

"Too true – anyway, girls – m'lady upstairs, well, she demands your presence, Mindy."

"Demands?" I enquired.

"Sorry, Mindy..." Josh replied.

I got up, followed by Chloe.

"Sorry, beautiful, but it's Mindy only..."

"I know when I'm not wanted!" Chloe replied with a smile.

..._...

Joshua led me upstairs to Stephanie's new bedroom.

"Okay, my homicidal American friend, you are now allowed to visit..." Josh said with a flourish as he pulled off a white sheet that had been covering the doorway for two days. "... The British Sector!"

The door now had two signs affixed to the outside:

YOU ARE LEAVING THE AMERICAN SECTOR

And more worryingly, under a Union Flag:

YOU ARE NOW ENTERING
THE BRITISH SECTOR

Josh then pushed open the bedroom door allowing me my very first look at Stephanie's new domain (or sector).

"So, my house now has a Cold War Era British Sector?" I enquired.

"Yes, it does..." A smirking Stephanie replied. "... British laws begin at the threshold and the US Constitution ends, full stop!"

"The British have invaded and taken control..." Josh quipped as he saw my expression after Stephanie's pronouncement. "... We'll work on the rest of the house, over time!"

"Like hell, you will!" I replied as I ran my eyes over the rest of the room.

"Insurrection sucks, huh!" Stephanie smirked as I rolled my eyes at the obvious dig towards the American Revolution against the British.

I turned my attention back to the room.

..._...

The walls of the room had been tastefully painted in lilac, while the ceiling was a very pleasant sky blue. The carpet was the same cream colour and had not been changed. To my immediate left, past the walk-in closet, there was a new, and enormous, king-size bed against the wall with a Union Flag quilt, and pillows to match – they were taking the British theme thing just a tad too far I thought!

In the large bay window before me, were a pair of comfortable looking chairs and a low table on which sat a lamp and Steph's new Samsung tablet that she had been given for Christmas. Over against the far wall beyond the bed, was a desk with several shelves above. On the desk, was a brand new laptop (and her school homework) and around the room were several strategically placed wireless speakers. Stephanie had a liking for 1980s music and currently a track I actually recognised was playing: Tubthumping by Chumbawamba:

*I get knocked down
But I get up again
You're never gonna keep me down
I get knocked down
But I get up again
You're never gonna keep me down*

*Pissing the night away
Pissing the night away
He drinks a whiskey drink
He drinks a vodka drink
He drinks a lager drink
He drinks a cider drink*

*He sings the songs that remind him
Of the good times
He sings the songs that remind him
Of the better times*

*Oh, Danny Boy
Danny Boy*

I walked around the bedroom checking out the selection of British themed pictures and posters that adorned the walls, plus one or two of Rainbow Dash. Overall, I had to admit that I was very impressed by what the two of them had accomplished in just the one weekend.

..._...

"Well done, Steph – I am impressed, you too, Josh."

Stephanie was beaming with pride at the praise and Josh seemed pleased too.

"What are you looking for?" Stephanie queried as she saw me checking out the walls again.

"A picture of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the Second!" I chuckled.

Stephanie scowled.

"We didn't want to go too far!" Josh explained.

"That bed is enormous, Steph – we might actually lose you in it!"

"Cool, huh?" Stephanie replied and then she came over and hugged me around the waist. "Thanks, Mindy – you don't know what this means to me, letting me have my very own space..."

I could see the tears spilling over and down my daughter's cheeks.

"I do, Steph, I do..."

Then the track changed and I cringed...

"Jason fucking Donovan and Kylie fucking Minogue!"

It was time to go!

..._...

I went to leave and that was when I saw the inside of the door.

On the back of the door were two signs. Firstly, under a Union Flag:

END OF BRITISH SECTOR DO NOT PASS THIS POINT

And then beneath that:

YOU ARE ENTERING THE AMERICAN SECTOR
ABANDON ALL HOPE YE WHO ENTER HERE

"Oh, very fucking funny!" I muttered.

That Night

I was out on my own – well, sort of...

My Fusion Honda CRF250L was red over blue and at the rear it bore the registration plate: PSYCH. I had nagged and nagged (to the point that I thought Mindy might actually punch my lights out) to be allowed out on the machine and finally Mindy had given in – I had also wanted to be 'alone'. Therefore, as a result, I was cruising down the street while Shadow rode two blocks over and parallel to my direction of travel. Jackal was also on the prowl within a mile or so of me – and of course my overprotective mother was watching from Safehouse F!

..._...

I was on the lookout for trouble and to be honest, I was not as focussed on my surroundings as I should have been; I was too excited at being out on my motorcycle and out on my own as the vigilante Psyche. I may not have been concentrating, but I quickly slammed on my brakes at the sight of a man being assaulted on the pavement outside a 7-11. I parked beside the curb and dismounted, removing my helmet before taking control of the situation.

"Okay, you fucking cunts!" I growled and the two youths turned away from their human punch bag.

The idiots had been so intent on their attack that they had neither seen nor heard my approach – their loss, my gain! I drew my Sais from the tops of my boots and approached.

..._...

"Aren't you a little short to be a vigilante?" One of the youths laughed sarcastically causing the other one to chuckle as the man who was being hit struggled back to his feet.

The other cunt kicked him back down again, "We aren't finished with you yet!"

That just made me angrier, "I may be short; but I can take you two fuckers on, any day or night!"

I flicked a Sai and it flew through the air, striking the cunt who had kicked the man down, in the left shoulder. He went down, a hand to his wound and he yelled out in pain.

Safehouse F

"She seems to be doing well..." Shadow commented.

The image on the large screen was coming from the HD camera mounted on the front of Shadow's Suzuki V-Strom and it showed Psyche's performance from Shadow's hidden location a few dozen yards up the street.

"She could be doing better..." I growled. "She never checked in to say she was taking on those two idiots..."

"Go easy on her, Hit Girl!" Shadow replied as she continued to watch over the younger vigilante out on the street.

Southern Chicago

I followed my Sai in and flipped the first cunt onto his back before he could react.

My boot pushed down on his neck, hard enough to stop him breathing which scared him enough not to move.

"You need help, sir?" I asked the cunt's victim.

"I'm fine, thank you."

The man got to his feet, wiping blood from his face as I glared down at the cunt beneath my foot, the tip of my other Sai resting on his forehead. I stepped back and ordered him to flip over onto his stomach. I zip-tied his hands behind him before kicking him, accidentally on purpose, in the side as I stepped over him.

I yanked my Sai out of his colleague's shoulder, wiped it off on the cunt's top and returned both Sai's to their slots in my boots.

"You might want to get that looked at – but for now..."

I yanked him down onto his face and zip-tied his hands behind him so he matched his pal. Then, as the adrenalin rush began to ease, I had a sudden and unwelcome thought: oops; I had not checked in...

"Ha!, Psyche – I need somebody to pick up two idiots at my location..."

"Better bloody late than bloody never..." Hit Girl growled back.

"Sorry..." I began.

"Don't apologise – just get out there, Psyche!"

..._...

"I'm rolling..." Shadow called as she watched Psyche pull on her helmet and mount her motorcycle.

Once Psyche had started the engine of her Honda and moved off, Shadow vanished down an alleyway.

I turned right and cruised up South Marshall Boulevard towards Douglas Park.

Something caught my attention, soon after I passed beneath the railway lines. It was a black motorcycle; I could not recognise the make or model but it was larger than mine and being ridden by a female dressed from head to toe in black. The rider wore a full-face black helmet and she stuck up the middle finger of her right hand as she cut me up.

As I followed South Sacramento Drive up the east side of Douglas Park, I saw red and gave chase – which in hindsight was probably not the best plan!

..._...

The black rider veered off to the right and onto the pavement towards the Flower Hall just before the junction of South Sacramento Drive and West Ogden Avenue and that was when everything went bad – very bad. Something in the back of my mind, a little voice kept telling me to just ride away, but I ignored it – however, I did check in, at least I tried to...

"Hal, contact...!"

The rider ahead of me slammed on her brakes and stopped broadside, directly in front of me. I tried to avoid her but between being distracted by calling in to Hal and surprise at the manoeuvre, I fucked up my braking, I skidded and that forced me to dive off my motorcycle just before it careered into a tree with a resounding crash. I rolled across the grass and came to a halt lying on my back. I was bruised, I knew that, but otherwise I seemed intact – then I heard movement and pulled off my helmet just as I saw a face appear above me.

Actually not a face, as all but the eyes was obscured by a ninja-style mask.

..._...

"Well, well, well – Stephanie Walker, we finally meet in person. You've actually not done half bad for the scratty little kid who cried every night for fucking months keeping us all awake and who most of us expected to be a worthless reject!"

It was Foxtail!

She was trying to bait me – okay, I cried a lot when they first took me, who wouldn't! She was relishing in the fact that she had caught her prey and that she was about to kill me. She knew all about me, only she had no idea what I knew about her...

She had a weapon pointed at me – my trained mind recognised it as a SIG of some sort. I ignored it while I rapidly arranged my thoughts before responding to the girl standing above me.

"Well hello, strange black girl – or should I call you: Foxtail – it is so good to finally meet you!"

I saw the eyes go wide as my comment struck home.

What the hell?

How could she know who I was? So much for having the upper hand... Psyche took advantage of my shock and before I recovered, the pistol was pushed away and a boot took me in the groin; the bitch fought dirty which made something, deep in my memories, resurface. I had a good few inches on the girl so I was determined to win – the easy option would have been a stabbing move or using a pistol, however, it was obvious that the girl had full body armour which would change how I fought and eventually killed the girl.

Yes, I had known the girl – in as much as we had known anybody that we trained with – we had been encouraged to see the other kids as competitors which meant that there had been very few, if any, friendships. I had remembered Stephanie Walker – she had been small and she had been teased mercilessly by the other kids for being British, for being small, and for crying all the time. I had enjoyed making the girl cry; it had made me feel good inside at the time...

"This ain't the fucking showers and I ain't a push over like that girl you killed..."

Chapter 248*: The First Kill

Southern Chicago

Foxtail fell over backwards, after my kick and I quickly sprang back to my feet.

Her comment had caught me out and it had brought back a flood of unwelcome memories...

...+...

October 2013

It had only been a month since I had been kidnapped.

My memories of what had occurred were fuzzy – probably something to do with the drugs that they forced me to take. I hated being apart from my family and somehow I had a feeling that I was never going to see them again. I was seven-years-old and I was very scared – I was not alone; I was surrounded by dozens of other kids in a similar predicament. Some of the kids were my age, some older and a few of the bigger kids were at least twelve. We were kept very busy during the day which never gave me the time to think about my family or my new situation, which I suppose was part of the idea. At night, though, I never felt more alone – the other girls were nasty and they seemed to enjoy making me cry and scream at them.

I had nobody and none of the adult instructors cared much about what was going on – I was just told to 'toughen up' and to 'stop bitching, bitch' among other, not so nice, comments. There was one particular girl, she was about eleven or twelve and she seemed to really enjoy tormenting me, until one morning when I just snapped.

March 2014

It was soon after I had turned eight; I had been at the facility for about seven months. The continued torment over the past six months or so had pushed me to a state where I was not going to take any more and that bitch was going to pay for everything that she had done to me. She had humiliated me, she had bullied me and she had tormented me just that one time too many...

That morning I had woken up and I had heard her voice – she had been talking about me, as usual... Some other girls were laughing at her comments and looking over at me as I climbed out of bed. A little while later, we were in the showers, as usual. The showers were arranged in groups of six in a rectangular cubicle with two showers on each wall and a large opening at the other. There were four such cubicles that backed onto each other in the centre of the bathroom. Around the outer walls were arranged toilet stalls and sinks.

Each morning was busy as thirty or forty girls used the toilets, washed and showered before going for breakfast. It was a fairly tight schedule and woe betide anybody who was late to classes! I had only ever been late just the once – never, ever, again...

...+...

As I pulled off the t-shirt and shorts which I slept in and hung up my towel for my shower, I heard a voice calling out to me.

"Hey, Walker! Ready for another psyche session?"

I glared at the grinning twelve-year-old girl as she stood under the running shower. I headed into the cubicle and found my own shower – I had reluctantly got used to being naked in front of others, months before.

"Leave me alone, Newton..."

"Or fucking what, you scrawny little British twat?"

I snapped and the next thing I knew; there was blood swirling in the water towards the drain in the centre of the tiled cubicle floor as I pulled back my arm to smash my fist into her face again. I must have just launched myself at the other girl, but I never got the chance for another strike as the bitch drove her own fist into my left side. I fell down to the tiles in agony. As I pushed my wet hair out of my eyes, I stared up at the other girl, ignoring the fact that we were both very naked and I rose to my feet – a little shakily, but I managed it. There was surprise on many of the faces around me; I was the 'snivelling brat' who everybody expected to fail miserably.

There was a lot of shock on Newton's face too as I got back to my feet. She had expected me to stay down to avoid another beating, but no – I had taken my last beating from her...

...+...

I took advantage of her surprise and drove my right hand into her kidney and my left into her chest – I heard a rib snap and the other girl screamed in pain. I may have been 'scrawny', but I was building up muscle and I was eating correctly, as an instructor had advised me. I was much stronger than I had been – much stronger and Newton seemed to have overlooked that little fact.

The girl was even more shocked, but her training soon kicked in and she reacted, kicking me away from her and I fell back against some other girls who cushioned my fall. They pushed me back to my feet, eager to let the fight play out. Needless to say, none of the girls in that place were even remotely normal – they all lusted for blood and fighting was just a normal part of our lives.

We were now surrounded by girls, watching the fighting as if watching a pair of naked girls fighting was perfectly normal. I landed a nice punch on Newton's jaw and more blood appeared to join the rest. The sight and smell of the blood seemed to energise me and I kept hitting and hitting, ignoring the punches and kicks that were returned to my own body. I was focussed on my target – as I had been taught. As a way to bury my loneliness and the constant longing for my family, I had got stuck into my new studies.

I had never thought that I would actually be able to use any of the skills that they were teaching me – but there I was, beating the crap out of a girl four years older than myself.

...+...

The instructors had taught us to fight in any way that would win – so I took that to heart as I punched the girl in her breasts and in her abdomen; I knew the bitch would be sore as she was on her period. Advantage, advantage, advantage – look for any advantage, the instructor had drilled into us. I had no similar targets for her, plus I was a lot shorter and I had learnt to dodge much earlier than I had learnt to fight back.

I was going to win – or I was going to die trying...

There was a fight going on – it was that British slut, Walker, and another girl, Newton.

I was very annoyed to find that the fight was over by the time I reached the bathroom and fought my way through the mass of other girls baying at the fight. I reached the entrance to the shower cubicle just in time to see the end result.

Through the swirling, dissipating steam, I could make out two forms on the far side of the cubicle and copious amounts of blood swirling across the tiles and into the drain. One form was a prone girl and it was obvious that she was never going to move again – the side of her head was caved in... Above the naked dead girl, stood another girl.

...+...

The eight-year-old girl was naked and covered in blood, her bare chest was heaving with the exertion and her face was contorted with rage, tears spilling down her cheeks. She stood with her hands on what passed for her hips and she glared at us all. I saw no emotion in the grey-blue eyes where fear usually resided – instead, I saw the familiar gaze of a killer; it was the young girl's first kill.

"Who's fucking next?" She growled angrily.

The crowd rapidly diminished as three instructors appeared and gaped at the scene they found before them. So, the British twat had sharp teeth and she obviously knew how to use them! I actually gained a little respect for the girl – just a little... Walker was lucky that the facility we were in actually rewarded that kind of behaviour... In any other school in the world, you kill another pupil and you're history – here, you kill another pupil in a fit of rage and they'll fucking promote you!

...+...

One of the key targets for any kid at the facility was to gain their identity; their codename – it was a rite of passage. I had gained mine: 'Foxtail' when I was ten and I had successfully completed my Phase 2 training. That little bitch, she had barely begun her Phase 2 training and she had gained hers: 'Psyche', they called her. That was the reward for her killing that girl, four years her senior.

Not surprisingly, Psyche was left alone after that little episode. Nobody liked her – that was life – but she had earned some respect, and to be honest, nobody wanted to die at her hands, either!

...+...

January 2016

As I sprang back to my feet, I got the distinct impression that my throw-away comment had confused the girl – good; her loss!

The park was dark, apart from a few dim lights scattered around the paths. We were also very much alone as we began to fight.

I was quite a bit out of my league, so I would have to fight dirty to compete with Foxtail's size and strength advantage – not to mention her increased skill level. Again, that voice was there and it was telling me that I should not be fighting Foxtail; I was being stupid... I drew my Sais and noticed that Foxtail had some teeth of her own!

Her 'teeth' were about sixteen or so inches in length with a blade length of just under 12-inches. The matching pair of butterfly swords glinted in the light of the nearest street lamp. The blades were highly polished and they possessed a wicked curved Turkish/Kukri clip-point to them. Both blades were drawn from beneath the back of her jacket and I could see her eyes sparkling as she brought the twin blades up before her.

We circled each other looking for an opportunity to strike. I noticed that we were both moving away from our motorcycles – mine appeared intact, so that was not a major issue, but I really needed to try and escape. Everything that the CIA had taught me and everything that Mindy had quite literally hammered into me on sword fights flew through my mind.

Foxtail attacked and I fended off the first blade with my left Sai as the other blade came around towards my right side. I raised my arm, missed with the Sai and felt the blade strike my armour – it hurt, but it did not penetrate. I heard a brief cry of disgust from Foxtail; presumably, because I wasn't cut in half!

I soon found out that Foxtail was wearing her own body armour when I managed to strike her in the side with the point of a Sai, which obviously ruled out a quick stab to the chest! I was certain that Foxtail was going to aim for my head and neck; well, I was going to do the same...

"That all you got, Foxy girl?" I jeered.

Safehouse F

"What is she doing at the park?" Hal demanded as she looked at me.

"Psyche – check in!" I called.

There was no response...

"Fuck it! Hal, bring up VOX for Psyche..."

I could hear the distinctive sound of metal on metal clashing – what the hell was Psyche involved with? Then I heard her voice.

"That all you got, Foxy girl?"

..._...

I was stunned – Psyche was fighting Foxtail!

Ignoring protocol, I reached over Hal's shoulder and hit the panic symbol by Psyche's name on the touch screen that sat before Hal. Immediately, an alarm went off in the Safehouse and in the visors of Shadow and Jackal, a warning symbol appeared with Psyche's name and exact location including directions.

I just hoped that we would be in time.

Southern Chicago

I punched Foxtail hard in the face and then again in the chest.

"Psyche – help is on the way!" I heard Hit Girl say over the comms.

They knew what was happening and I also knew that I was probably in shit...

"This is Shadow – I'm closing on Psyche's position; twenty seconds on South Sacramento Drive..."

"Break... Jackal is thirty seconds out on West Ogden..."

Foxtail was down on one knee, her butterfly swords held tightly in her fists, she was only down for a moment as she glared directly at me.

"You're braver than I thought, young one..."

Foxtail looked away as the sounds of two motorcycles turning into the park came to both our ears. I took a second to look in the direction of the approaching sounds to see Shadow and Jackal heading towards me – when I turned back, Foxtail was running towards her motorcycle, but I chose not to pursue.

..._...

Shadow skidded to a halt beside me while Jackal headed after Foxtail.

"You okay?" Shadow demanded.

"Stupid question!" I retorted angrily as I jumped on behind Shadow and we followed Jackal.

Several gunshots ripped out from Foxtail as she mounted her motorcycle and I saw Jackal return fire from his FN Five-seveN pistol. Foxtail accelerated away and Jackal kept an eye open while I checked out my motorcycle which I righted with Shadow's assistance.

All seemed in order, so I pulled on my helmet and we headed back to the Safehouse.

Safehouse F

I was so fucking angry and I was very grateful for Dave being only yards away.

Shadow pulled up with Psyche behind her. Jackal pulled up last and all three dismounted, removing their helmets. Shadow must have seen my expression as she turned to Psyche.

"You might be safer keeping the helmet on..." she said without a hint of humour and I saw Psyche flinch.

"Leave us..." I growled as I stood on the mat and everybody fled leaving me, Dave and Psyche alone.

Psyche began to remove her mask.

"Leave it," I said, struggling not to shout and Psyche did so. "Come here!"

Psyche did not move – but she looked directly at me.

"Get your fucking ass here – right now!"

Psyche moved forwards hesitantly.

"You fucked up, tonight – you broke my rules and you put yourself at fucking risk..."

As soon as Psyche was in arms reach, I grabbed hold of her armour and flung her through the air. The young vigilante screamed as she hit the mat, coming instantly back to her feet.

"I forgot alright, I forgot to check in..."

"A mistake that could have got you killed..."

"It won't happen again..."

"Damn right it won't!"

I had never seen Mindy that angry before and a recent comment of Dave's crept into my mind: "The only times that I have seen Mindy beside herself with anger has been when someone she really cares about has been hurt or put at risk."

"Why did you fight Foxtail?"

"I didn't realise it was her until we were already fighting..."

That was a very lame excuse and I could tell by Mindy's expression that she had come to the same conclusion.

"Brings us back to earlier – if you had checked in the moment you saw her..."

"I said, I was sorry..."

"Sorry, won't keep you alive!"

"Go get changed, Steph and we'll go home..." Dave said, resting a hand on my shoulder.

Chapter 249*: Reaction

Early Monday morning

Glenview

I could not sleep.

It was the first night in my new bed, which was not helping. Not only that, I had also pissed off Mindy. The ride back in the car had been quiet and subdued – Mindy had not said a word as she drove. However, once back home she had taken me upstairs to my new bedroom and helped me into a hot bath. My body ached and I was covered in bruises, which thankfully were the worst of my injuries.

Despite Mindy helping me wash and then helping me get into bed afterwards, she was obviously still mad at me. We had talked a little, but I sensed that Mindy was just happy I was still alive and that was a feeling that I was growing to enjoy. It had been years since anybody had cared about me, in any way.

After Mindy had gone to bed, I had just stared at the ceiling and considered Mindy's final comment as she had left the room.

"We all make mistakes – just learn from them, okay?"

I hated to make mistakes – I was better than that, or so I thought!

Later that morning

"My God! What is that smell?"

I ignored my little sister and continued eating my toast. I was feeling annoyed with myself and the last thing I wanted was a seven-year-old getting on my nerves.

"Why do you like toast so much? It's dry and kinda tasteless... What's that black stuff on it?" Anne-Marie persisted.

I nudged the jar towards the ever-inquisitive girl. She seized it and read the label...

"Yeast extract? What the hell is yeast extract?"

"Something that I will use to wash out your mouth, if you use bad language, young lady!"

"Sorry, Mom!"

"Mindy calls it 'gun grease'," I admitted with a smirk.

"There's nothing wrong with Marmite – try some..." Mindy replied.

Anne-Marie tentatively reached for the small piece of toast that I held out to her. She took a bite and then I heard Mindy sniggering as Anne-Marie's face screwed up and she spat the toast out onto the kitchen side before running over to the sink and sticking her mouth under the running tap.

I burst out laughing and saw my little sister's wet face going very red. Finally, she turned off the water and turned around, water having soaked the front of her t-shirt.

"Very funny – you both tried to poison me! Stop laughing; it's not funny!"

I couldn't reply; I was laughing too hard and it hurt... Mindy tried to reply, but she was crying with laughter and finally, Anne-Marie simply stormed off and we heard her stamping her way up the stairs. Once we had both stopped laughing and pulled ourselves together, Mindy smiled at me.

"We all make mistakes, Steph, even me and I shouldn't have shouted at you last night. We still friends?" Mindy asked.

"No – you're my Mum, which is so much better..." I replied, finishing off my toast and Marmite.

..._...

"What's up with her?" Danny asked as he entered the kitchen and watched his sister storm out and up the stairs.

"Stephanie tried to 'poison' her with Marmite," Mindy laughed.

"Cool – I like Marmite; Josh gave me some the other day and it wasn't too bad."

"Chloe will really hate you!" I warned him.

That was when I had a thought – Chloe!

"I need to go out, Mindy – can you give me lift?"

South Cottage Grove

After Mindy had dropped me off, I walked upstairs and knocked on the door.

"Steph!" Chloe exclaimed as she opened the door.

"I need to talk – can we?"

"Of course, come in."

I saw Joshua and felt uncomfortable. Joshua, though, was his usual perceptive self.

"Chloe, I need to pop out for about an hour, see you both later..."

I smiled a thank you as he headed out the door, he waved it off. Chloe handed me a Pepsi Max and we sat down on the couch.

"What's up?"

"I feel like I've let Mindy down and..."

"Well, you've come to the right place, Steph; I've fucked things up more times than I care to remember – Mindy even kicked me out of Fusion, once..."

"Woah, when did that happen?" I asked, a little shocked.

"A little over a year ago, it was November 2014 and I was fourteen-years-old. I thought a lot of myself back then and thought that being the great Shadow meant I could do anything and that I was all but invincible..."

"That notion vanished fast when Josh threw himself in front of me, taking three bullets, two of which passed straight through him and then into my right shoulder – you've seen the scars. That was Ralph D'Amico – he shot me with my own pistol and that really pissed me off and left me baying for his blood. The bastard also took my pistol – that pistol was very special to me; Dave and Mindy gave it to me for my fourteenth birthday.

"Well, we began to have some trouble with a pair of vigilantes that had just shown up in Chicago. Turned out they were British – you'll meet them at some stage, Cameron and Natasha; you'll like 'em. I made the decision to go out on my own, one Thursday night, turned out to be the worst decision that I had made to that point and it was also the first time that I was actually scared of Mindy and what she might do to me. The two British vigilantes somehow got the drop on me and I awoke in their 'Safehouse', my mask had been removed and I was tied up."

"Wow – you were fucking stupid!" I commented.

Chloe blushed and nodded.

"That's an understatement! I knew I was in deep shit and I had no idea how to escape, but I eventually got out of my bindings with the help of a knife that I kept hidden in my combat suit – even Mindy never knew I carried it. They knocked me out again! Then we had company in the building we were in – it was an old building awaiting demolition. It was him..."

"Ralph D'Amico?"

"Yeah – I was angry, scared, and a whole host of other emotions. Remember, I didn't have the luxury of your training, nor Mindy's – I was a stupid fourteen-year-old wannabe and I was about to die, and I knew it... I heard his voice and it scared to my core – I persuaded Cameron and Natasha to let me go and give me back my mask. I was never so happy to hear Mindy's voice – she didn't bollock me, she just told me to focus and finish the mission.

"To cut a long story short, we escaped, but so did D'Amico. Fusion had arrived to cut off his escape on the ground. He ran back into the building to get to the roof and a helicopter. That was when I made a few more mistakes. I bolted off after D'Amico – I never stopped to get extra ammo for my P90 and when Hit Girl told me to stop, I told her to 'fuck off!'"

I gasped and Chloe looked embarrassed.

"I ignored all radio calls and ran after D'Amico with Hit Girl hot on my heels. By the time she caught up with me, I was pinned down on the roof with no ammo left... Hit Girl kept the helicopter at bay and I managed to chop off D'Amico's arm and retrieve my pistol, but he escaped. Fact was, if I had taken extra ammunition, he may not have escaped and I would not have almost lost my arm a few months later..."

"Your arm?"

"D'Amico captured me and tried to cut my arm off with a circular saw – the blade had cut through my combat suit and was cutting into my skin when Jackal destroyed the power distribution board. After D'Amico escaped, Mindy told me she didn't want me around and sent me home for good. I had never felt so low, or ashamed. I got hell from my Mom and Josh refused to talk to me for a week."

"Your Mom's scary!" I commented honestly.

"Yeah – tell me about it! Dave then cooked up a plan to get me and Mindy together – we made up and it was all history. Mindy and I have something special between us. Other than Dave, I am the only other person who can control Mindy. I don't know why, but we connect on some level. When Dave found Mindy in Chicago, after she escaped New York – she was all but feral in her behaviour. Only Dave and I seem to be able to keep her 'normal', if there ever is anything normal about Hit Girl – you are the same and I think Josh and Dave are your people who keep you 'normal'."

"I'm sorry if I..."

"Stephanie, Mindy has a saying: 'talk like a bitch, get slapped like a bitch' and it hurts! I trust you with Josh – besides Josh is a tit man and you ain't got anything for him to play with. You're still young Steph and I wish I had the training you had, just not the experiences – you never completed your training, so you will be expected to make mistakes. Hit Girl makes loads of 'em – and you are only nine, so enjoy your childhood while you can."

"Thanks, Chloe."

"Anytime, Steph – I will always be here for you, if you need me. Josh too, he really cares about you – maybe because you like Marmite! Mindy has high standards and we all struggle to keep up with them, but those standards keep us all alive. Mindy rants like a bitch on heat, but all she wants is for us all to come back alive. Besides – she's your Mom and she really cares about you, so expect her to go overboard when you put yourself at unnecessary risk."

"Hello, girls – all done?" Josh asked as he came into the living room.

"Yeah, all good, thanks, Josh."

"Anytime, Steph, anytime."

One week later
Saturday

With them both being female, I might normally have put off their stroppy behaviour to 'time of the month' type stuff.

However, both girls were years away from any of that shit and they both actually had good reasons for being irritable, cantankerous (nice word), grumpy, sulky, uncooperative, generally unhelpful and argumentative (another nice word). All of those moods were fairly standard for Mindy and she was generally demonstrating at least one of them on most days – but rarely all at once!

For the past week, both Anne-Marie and Stephanie had been going out of their way to cause trouble and even Mindy was getting annoyed. Danny and Sophia kept well out of the way of both girls for their own personal safety!

For Anne-Marie, it was the experience of her kidnapping coming back to the fore. For Stephanie, it had been the revelations of Bourne and her scrap with Foxtail.

..._...

On the plus side, the puppies were now heading on for two weeks old and their eyes and ears had opened. Kiara had been first at the beginning of the week, followed by her siblings, with Josie being the last on Thursday afternoon.

It was another landmark in their young lives.

That night

I was awoken by sobbing.

I immediately sat upright in bed and turned on the bedside light. There were two very miserable looking girls standing beside the bed and it was evident that both of them had been crying, although Anne-Marie was still crying. I grabbed hold of Stephanie and swung her over to the middle of the bed where she climbed in between Dave and me while Anne-Marie snuggled in beside me.

"Okay, who's gonna tell me what's going on?"

"Anne-Marie had a bad dream," Stephanie began. "She came through and climbed into bed with me; she was crying her heart out and was very scared. She eventually calmed down and we both fell asleep... Are bad dreams contagious?"

"Not that I know of..."

"Well, I awoke with a fright, all cold and clammy..."

"She screamed, and it woke me up..." Anne-Marie chimed in.

"We were both crying and scared, so we came down to find you..." Stephanie finished and she sounded a little embarrassed.

"What were the dreams about?" Dave asked gently.

"For me, it was Foxtail and the CIA..." Stephanie replied, cuddling into Dave.

"I saw myself back on that island and Foxtail was there, but none of you were there and my Daddy was there and..."

Anne-Marie began to cry again, so I hugged her until she calmed down. Finally, she looked up at me and smiled.

"You said that you would never keep secrets, when you brought me and Danny to Chicago. I know that you had to keep Hit Girl, Kick-Ass and Fusion from us; I understand that, but I have a question and I want you to tell me the truth."

"Always," I replied with a smile.

..._...

"I now know that you were both in Gotham to destroy the gangs there. I remember Fusion operating and putting down the criminals. I remember when you both came to visit our Daddy and you talked about stuff... Did... Did you get my Daddy killed?"

"Before I get to that, let me tell you something. I used to play the 'what if' game for years and Dave still catches me doing it even now... Don't get sucked into it; it will eat you up inside. I would ask myself if I had helped my Daddy die – what if I had got there just a minute sooner? What if I had shot quicker? What if...?"

"I had the same questions about events in my life..." Dave cut in. "My Dad might be alive if I had made a different decision, but decisions get made and we have to live with them. Yes, your Daddy worked for some bad people. We were targeting those bad people. He tried to help us; he knew the risks and that was why he made Mindy and I promise to take care of you if the worst happened."

"The worst happened. Maybe, if Josh and Dave had gotten to you a few minutes earlier..." I explained. "I regret what happened to your Daddy and what you lost. On the other side of the coin, I will never regret taking you and Danny on – Stephanie's another question entirely, however!"

"Funny, very funny, Mum!" Stephanie laughed.

Anne-Marie laughed too.

"In answer to your question – yes, we put you and your Daddy at risk. It was unavoidable and I can't stop you from holding that against us." I said.

..._...

Anne-Marie pulled herself out from under the duvet and climbed on top of me, staring into my eyes.

"I am going to say this only once and you had better remember it, Mom – I do not hold it against you and neither does Danny. I just needed to hear your version and I respect you for telling me the truth."

I smiled at my daughter.

"There's more to you than meets the eye, girl!"

"I know – fear it..."

Stephanie seized Anne-Marie around the waist and dragged her off me.

"Little runt!" She growled.

Chapter 250*: At Risk

The following morning
Sunday

The Farm

"That really hurt!"

"That was quite spectacular, sis!" My brother laughed.

I felt a large pair of hands seize me around the waist, hauling me out of the mud where I had been lying face down after coming off my new motorcycle. The laughter still rang in my ears! The same hands span me around and then wiped the mud off my visor.

"Hi. This is supposed to be a motorcycle lesson, not a flying lesson!" Dave quipped.

"It got away from me and then..."

I felt tears of frustration in my eyes, but then I felt Dave's reassuring arms as they wrapped around me. I loved hugs; they always made me feel better. I hated to be laughed at, but I always seemed to screw things up; two wheels were definitely harder than four!

Dave looked into my eyes.

"Take your time – I say that to Mindy every now and then, not that it makes any difference."

I saw the smile on my daughter's face – there were still a couple of gaps where teeth had not grown in yet. She was just like Mindy – full speed ahead and damn the torpedoes! I lifted the pink Honda CRF70F motorcycle out of the mud where it had lain on its side. The engine was still ticking over, so I helped Anne-Marie back onto the machine and she sped off to join her brother who was riding around the field on his own, identical, blue Honda.

I turned as I heard the sound of motorcycles approaching.

..._...

Mindy appeared on her KTM 690 Enduro R dirt bike, she was covered in mud, as was the rider following behind. Stephanie rode her yellow Honda CRF125F motorcycle which was as dirty as my eldest daughter's mouth. They pulled up beside me and cut their engines.

"You both seem to have had fun – is there any mud left in the state of Michigan?"

"It was just awesome!" Stephanie said with an enormous grin on her face.

The same grin was duplicated on Mindy's face.

"How are they doing?" She asked, turning her head to watch the twins.

"Well – one of them has been in the mud more than on the saddle..."

"Not a surprise!" Mindy chuckled.

While Dave and Mindy talked, I looked over at my brother and sister.

Not surprisingly, my sister was covered in mud, from head to toe, while my brother only had mud where it had splashed up from the tyres. Anne-Marie would never learn! Mindy had taken me on an off-road ride, as I could ride a bike without any problems, thank you very much! It had been challenging, but I had survived everything that Mindy had thrown at me, including a lot of mud!

"My God!" Chuckled Jack Bay as he walked over.

"I had fun, Uncle Jack – it was awesome..."

"Glad to hear you having fun, Stephanie, not bad for a nine-year-old."

"I'm almost ten, Uncle Jack!"

"Yes, you are, young lady..."

I was very proud of what Mindy and Dave were doing.

They had three awesome kids and I knew that both Damon and Kathleen would be so proud – Dave's parents too, I was certain. I was very aware of the circumstances that had occurred in Gotham and had resulted in the orphaning of Anne-Marie and Daniel. They were both wonderful kids and I greatly enjoyed having them over. Stephanie was something else entirely.

The nine-year-old was another Mindy – the young girl's childhood had been ripped apart, through no fault of her own. Looking at the short, thinly built young girl with flowing blonde hair to below her shoulders, you would see her for what she was – a happy girl enjoying life. It was only when you looked into her grey-blue eyes that you saw death looking back at you. Mindy had explained exactly what the girl was capable of, including a description of her actions on Buck island during the rescue of Anne-Marie. Stephanie was able to kill without any thought – just as Mindy could. It was not that the girl scared me, but what she represented did.

Mindy had been very disturbed by Anne-Marie taking a life on that island. At the time, she had not thought much about it, but in the clear light of day, she regretted allowing Anne-Marie to kill that man. I was amazed how strong the seven-year-old was, considering what she had suffered. She was always smiling and laughing as were the other two kids. Daniel was the only innocent in that family, but I was not there to judge.

Fusion were a key part of order in the City of Chicago as they assisted the Chicago Police Department. Fusion had saved many lives over the years that they had been in the city – they had also taken many too.

Three days later
Wednesday morning

Glenview

"Come on – you're going to be late for school!"

"Yes, Mom!"

I was giggling as we played with Razor and Kiara – both were trying to walk around, but they kept falling over! They were the first of the pups to actually succeed at standing on four legs for more than a few seconds. We all spent many hours laughing as the seven pups attempted to navigate the 'nest' on all four paws. I was sure that Sophia was amused too, as on several occasions I saw her purposely knock a pup over and then look all innocent!

"Move!" Came the yell down the stairs.

"Come on, Anne-Marie, time to go before Mum goes all Hit Girl on us!"

That afternoon

I took the normal shortcut that I always did, down the alleyway – only this time, I had Anne-Marie with me.

Mom would meet us at the usual place, just as we always did after school. Megan was in detention and Danny was at an afterschool club, so it was just the two of us. Normally, if it was just me, I would take the alleyway, but never with Anne-Marie. Only, today we were late and Mum hated it when we were late.

"Come on, Anne-Marie!"

"I've got shorter legs than you!"

"Well, move them faster..."

"Not helping..."

I chuckled and slowed my pace – which was lucky or I might never have seen the flash of light to my left as somebody jumped down from a fire escape, blocking our route. It was the worst possible place to meet her and I was not alone, nor was I in my armour.

..._...

"Who is it, Steph?" Anne-Marie asked and my heart sank.

"Thank you, kid, for identifying my mark and confirming her identity for me... The hair was a nice touch, Walker!"

"Walker?" Anne-Marie echoed.

I ignored my sister's confusion – if she couldn't remember the name I had before I became a Lizewski, then tough.

"Foxtail!" I growled, dumping my school bag and shoving Anne-Marie behind me.

I had no idea what was happening, but I had heard Mom and Stephanie using that name: Foxtail.

I also knew that the name was bad news and that she was not there for our health! Then something Megan had said the other day came to mind – shelter – I needed shelter, I looked around and saw a dumpster; I dived behind it and reached into my school bag, grabbing my cell.

I remembered the lecture from Marty barely a week before.

...+...

"Right you two, these are special phones – do not lose them!"

"Cool!" Danny had muttered.

"On the main screen is a red icon – see it? Press it and hold it for five seconds and an app will appear; you will have ten seconds to press that orange button before an alert is sent out from the phone. That alert will go out to Fusion and help will be on its way – okay?"

"Yeah..." I had replied, never expecting to actually use the feature...

...+...

I activated the cell with my fingerprint and held my finger down on the red icon. Five seconds later a black screen appeared with a single orange button that had a countdown.

I shoved the phone into my pants and prayed.

"Two bitches for the price of one – hope you enjoyed what life you've had, little girl!"

Foxtail was sneering at my sister, who I was glad to see had retreated behind a dumpster, but her head was sticking out!

"Don't you dare threaten her, you fucking bitch!" I declared as forcefully as possible – burying my fears as I gauged my moment.

My heart sank even further as Foxtail drew what appeared to be her signature weapon. The twin butterfly swords reflected what light there was in the alleyway. I was unarmed, but I remembered my training and my eyes darted around me searching...

With Anne-Marie out of the way, I was free to act and I dove forwards the moment Foxtail moved toward me and rolled beneath the twin blades, reaching for the item I had seen on the ground. I came back to my feet and swung the two-foot piece of aluminium scaffolding at Foxtail's legs, missing but causing her to lose her focus and jump over me.

I was not going to make it easy for her – no bloody way!

"Where the hell are they?"

"They're not late yet!" Paige laughed.

"I hate waiting..."

"I hate it when you're on your period – talk about bitchy...!"

Paige was cut off by my cell. I picked it up, stared at the screen for a moment and then I suddenly felt cold, very cold – it was happening again...

"Mindy? What is it?" Paige demanded in a worried tone.

"Anne-Marie!" I replied simply as I sent the position of the alert to the satnav in the Jag.

I burned rubber as I accelerated away.

As I watched from behind the smelly dumpster, I saw Stephanie fight the bigger girl.

Stephanie had a length of metal pole and she was able to fend off the blows from the two swords that the other girl wielded. I knew it could not last and I was fairly certain who the loser was going to be...

Something caught my eye off to one side. Just across from me and a few feet back from the fight, I saw something glinting – it was in a small alcove. I took a chance when Foxtail was facing the other way and ran toward it.

I was curious – so sue me!

This was not going to end well.

I caught sight of Anne-Marie running back down the alleyway but then vanishing – what was she up to? Foxtail had not seen her, so I continued fighting. I was tired from a day at school and not ready for a fight against the odds...

"You fight well for somebody that never completed Phase 2," Foxtail commented.

"Better than somebody who completed Phase 2!" I replied with a smirk as I flipped backwards, just missing a blade by an inch.

I left the alcove, just as I heard running feet from up the alleyway and I saw Megan charging down the alleyway, a pistol in her right hand. Megan pushed me roughly out of the way, brought up the pistol and fired off three rapid shots, none of which came close, but that seemed to be the point.

I felt relief surge through me.

The gunshots had come out of nowhere, but I hoped that they were friendly.

I dove to the ground, clearing myself from the shooter's line of fire. Three more bullets flew past and I heard Foxtail scream and then a thud as she landed on the ground followed by the clatter of her swords landing beside her.

I crawled towards Anne-Marie and looked up at Megan who had a small pistol in her hands pointed downrange.

"You okay?" She demanded.

"I'm fine – you okay, Anne-Marie?"

"Yeah!" She replied indignantly.

Then there was the sound of two more sets of feet pounding down the alleyway from the opposite direction and I looked behind Megan to see Mindy and Paige come to a halt, each with a pistol raised.

"What happened?" Mindy asked.

"It was her..." I started to explain, pointing at where Foxtail had fallen.

Or rather, where Foxtail had fallen... She was gone, along with her swords.

..._...

We had just reached the XJR when I noticed Anne-Marie behaving strangely.

"What's up?" I asked. "It's all over, thanks to Megan..."

Megan grinned and I hugged my little sister.

"I did something bad..."

"Huh?" Mum asked.

"I saw something in the alleyway, in a kind of alcove..."

That was when I heard a motorcycle engine start and then move away at speed.

"You found Foxtail's motorcycle?" I asked gently.

"Maybe..."

"Fuck!" Megan exclaimed. "Why didn't you say when we were back down the alleyway?"

"I'm sorry..."

Anne-Marie was almost in tears at the rebuke.

"Sorry, Anne-Marie," Megan said calmly with a grin. "Tell us what you did."

"I lost my cell – I jammed it under the saddle on the motorcycle..."

"Fucking genius!" I exclaimed, clapping my sister on the back.

I looked up at Mum.

"Can we?" I asked.

"Hell yes!" Mindy replied, grabbing her cell.

West Ridge

I was watching Anne-Marie's cell going north at sixty-five, only, all the others were barely moving.

Something was not right – my cell rang – it was the boss!

"Battle Guy – I have Rogue for you..."

Huh?

"Battle Guy," Rogue announced. "Track my phone – it's currently on Foxtail's motorcycle."

Awesome!

"Yes, ma'am!" I chuckled in reply. "I've got her – she's as good as tracked, boss!"

"Hit Girl says I need a new phone – sorry..." Rogue finished.

"On its way, Rogue, Battle Guy out!"

"Thanks, Battle Guy!" Hit Girl said.

"Is...?"

"Everybody is fine, thanks for asking."

"Is everything okay?" Kim asked.

"It is now..."

The following afternoon Thursday

As usual, I dumped my school bag and ran down the stairs to check on the seven new hounds.

The walking attempts had coincided with tails beginning to wag and the two boys, Hercules and Razor beginning to play fight, with Kiara and Piper being the main targets. I noticed that Josie could hold her own against the two boys, which was good.

"Anne-Marie!" Came the below from upstairs. "Homework before puppies!"

"Yes, Dad!" I yelled back and said goodbye to each pup in turn.

The pups were now allocated.

Kiara was to be mine and Dave's. Hope belonged to Marty and Kim. Josie's home would be with Hailee. Layla had been adopted by Abby. Megan had Piper, while Stephanie had Razor, which left Hercules for Chloe and Joshua. Anne-Marie and Danny were happy to keep Sophia as their dog.

I now had a training regimen to put together for the seven handfuls.

Chapter 251*: The Black Bag Job

Thursday evening

South Wabash Avenue and East Adams Street

"Have you no shame, girl?"

"I'm hungry..."

"You eat too many of those and you won't fit your suit!"

"Fuck you, Trojan!" Wildcat laughed as she dug into her quarter-pounder.

It was dark and very cold, so Wildcat had decided to pay a quick visit to the nearby McDonalds intending to get a coffee, but instead she got food! Couldn't blame her, but for a vigilante to be stuffing her face with a cheeseburger...

"Wildcat finished stuffing her ample gob, yet?"

"Negative, Psyche – she's still cramming it in!" I replied – Psyche was on duty at Safehouse F in the Control Centre.

There was a muffled 'fuck you' from Wildcat as she battled to swallow her mouthful.

"It is remarkably peaceful, though..." I chuckled.

"Look you two assholes – Psyche, I'm gonna kick your limey arse and as for you, Trojan..."

The middle-aged woman rose from her seat as the train pulled into Adams/Wabash station, just as it did every night on her way back from work.

As soon as it stopped, the doors opened and she stepped out onto the platform. The woman was the only person on the platform at that time of night. She hated it when she was alone; she felt extremely vulnerable, just as any woman might – it was not the best place to be at night...

Then my heart skipped a beat as two men walked up the stairs leading from the street – I turned toward the other set of stairs, but two more men blocked my exit. There was a click as a knife was unsheathed – I began to shake as fear coursed through me.

The man with the knife – seemingly the leader – approached me, just my luck to be mugged. But then, everything changed very quickly...

..._...

The man behind the leader – he seemed to fly backwards and I heard him crashing down the steel stairs. There, standing on the side of the stairs was a Chicago Vigilante – she was short and she wore body armour with a mottled brown effect. She smirked as she jumped down onto the stairs. The leader span around, his eyes wide. The other two men moved closer to support their leader, however they both yelled out in pain as both had their legs kicked out from under them. One man had a pistol placed to his forehead, the other the point of a large sword to his neck.

Their attacker was another short vigilante – in a suit made up of greens and browns. The woman recognised him as the vigilante known as Trojan. The leader dropped his knife and raised his hands as Wildcat came up the stairs. She was much shorter than the woman had expected – younger too.

"Knees!" She growled and the leader sank to the steel walkway.

The woman was shocked, but awed, when Wildcat deployed the claws from the gauntlet on her right hand. She placed the razor sharp tips against the man's neck.

"You interrupted my burger..." she growled. "I was enjoying that burger, too..."

Her partner looked over to the woman.

"You okay?" He asked.

"They never had a chance to do anything... Thanks."

"No problem, ma'am."

West Columbia

"Stop right there, young lady!"

"Gimme a break! I just put down two cunts and I..."

"Dollar – jar!" Marcus growled.

"Your bedroom is a tip – it had better be done before you leave for school in the morning, or you are grounded from everything!"

"Mom!"

"Get to it, Megan..."

"Out that door, I'm a respected and feared vigilante – in here? No respect!" I growled as I dug into my pocket and pulled out a dollar bill.

I tried to add it to the overflowing jar on the kitchen side – Marcus was using a one-gallon jar which he had jokingly said was bigger than what Mindy had used and should be plenty... I turned to Mom and Marcus.

"You're gonna need a bigger jar..." I grinned cheekily.

"She's worse than Mindy..." Marcus growled, throwing his hands into the air. "I never thought I'd ever hear myself say that about anybody..."

The following morning Friday

1714 West Grace Street

The young woman strode down the street and stopped outside the apartment block.

She casually examined the building before walking down the alleyway to the east and equally casually glanced up at the apartment on the 3rd (top) floor of the southeast corner of the apartment block.

Six minutes later, the woman entered apartment 3E.

Apartment 3E

"Nice!"

"You in?"

"Leon is in, Hit Girl!"

"Any trouble getting in?"

"The alarm was state-of-the-art, as I would expect for a CIA-based Safehouse, but I've had some experience with them – besides you said that you wanted her to know we had visited."

"Yes, I did – have fun!"

..._...

The kitchen/living room was combined. There was a nice red couch and arm chair, with a square table and four chairs in the corner with nice views. The kitchen had a small balcony facing the south and was well equipped. It was obviously the home of a young woman – it was tidy, but there were also signs that the woman was a teenager. There were several dirty dishes piled in the sink, a typical sign of teenage laziness.

There were no photos in the living room – that was out of place. People always had at least one picture of family or friends... I hit the jackpot in the master bedroom. Hidden behind a panel in the back of a built-in wardrobe, was a small cardboard box. Nothing significant, just a few photos and keepsakes. One photo stood out, it showed a small girl – maybe eight-years-old – with her parents. She was smiling and cuddling her father – an obvious daddy's girl.

I felt sick to my stomach when I thought about Stephanie, and now this little girl, traumatised into becoming killers – Foxtail, like Stephanie, had been an innocent little girl when she had been taken. She obviously felt for her loss – going against established protocols by keeping artefacts from her past life in evidence.

Maybe that meant something.

..._...

I checked every drawer and cupboard that I could find. She had good taste in clothes and along with some school uniforms, I found clothes that were obviously intended to make the girl seem older than she really was. There was also evidence of her being in the 9th grade, which would make her about fourteen, rather than the sixteen that Stephanie had estimated.

The bathroom was clean and relatively tidy – the girl was on her period, evidenced by the contents of the rubbish bin. There was the usual kit, toothbrush, toothpaste – condoms? It was an unsealed pack; one was missing... Under the sink, I also found evidence that she probably did not have a steady boyfriend, not to mention some spare batteries.

She lived alone, that was also obvious.

..._...

I headed downstairs to the basement – the apartment had allocated storage according to Marty's checks. I found a large steel lockbox – it was fairly obvious what required that kind of storage! I looked out back and found Anne-Marie's phone, exactly where she had left it. My eyes went wide at the sight of her wheels.

The motorcycle was all-black, just as Stephanie had reported. The BMW R 1200 GS Triple Black was one mean machine. On the back of the machine, on either side, was a standard aluminium pannier, both of which were empty.

I was jealous!

That afternoon

West Irving Park Road

"Why are we sitting in a car, on a stake out, on our day off?"

"Because we have orders, Sam, and the lady who gave the orders is scary!"

"Chicken!"

"You try saying no to a homicidal teenager!" Paul Murphy laughed.

"Hold on! Target is exiting the building and heading east along West Irving Park – now turning south down North Leavitt towards West Byron."

West Byron Street

"Target has turned east onto West Byron..."

The Iceberg White Ducati Multistrada moved off from the curb and headed east. Cathy Bennett smiled as she got a good look at the young girl walking down the street. Despite her normal reservations about kids getting hurt, that bitch had tried to kill Stephanie and Anne-Marie.

"Enjoy your visitor tonight, bitch!" Cathy muttered as she turned her motorcycle right onto North Hoyne Avenue.

North Lincoln Avenue

"Target is heading southeast on North Lincoln..."

I studied the girl, her face especially, as she walked toward me and then past me – I pictured that face when seen through a sniper scope.

"She doesn't seem all that special, does she?"

"No, Mathilda – she does not, but she is a clear and present danger," Mindy replied as I dropped the gearbox of my BMW X3 into gear and moved off, northeast.

"The circle of life... Fancy a coffee?"

West Grace Street

The Ford Focus was uncomfortable, but I only had to tolerate it for another few minutes. I turned east and saw my target as she passed beneath the 'L'.

"Target is almost home..."

"Thanks, Dave – we'll take it from here..."

I watched as the blue Ford stopped and parked up, fifty yards short of Foxtail's apartment. I ignored Paige as I drove past. Beside her sat Cathy; she had parked her Ducati up a side street and would stay with Paige.

They were in a dangerous location, so close to Foxtail's home.

North Ravenswood Avenue

"You did well!"

"Thank you."

We were parked up outside a commercial building and listening to the bugs that Mathilda had left in Foxtail's apartment. We heard her enter and turn on the TV – a music channel by the sound of it. Then we heard an exclamation.

"What the fuck?"

"She must have found the cup of coffee I made myself!" Mathilda said with a chuckle.

"Some fuck's been in here!"

Apartment 3E

I was infuriated!

Not only did I have to abandon the fight, yesterday, I had now had my home violated – was it Fusion? They were supporting that fucking Walker girl... How could I fail to kill a fucking nine-year-old? How the fuck did they find my apartment...?

..._...

Fifteen minutes later, I was seething...

On the table before me was a cell phone – no longer functioning! I had also found four bugs – two had been obvious finds and decoys, the other two had been more skilfully hidden, but I had found them.

"I'll fucking kill the lot of them!"

What did it all mean? Was I now being targeted? I would have expected to find myself dead if I were...

North Ravenswood Avenue

"I'll fucking kill the lot of them!"

"She found the decoys!"

"All four – very good – I'm hungry and I have some things to do before tonight's fun!"

"I'll drop you off on the way."

That night

Apartment 3E

I could not sleep.

I was sitting in the armchair, dozing, the suppressed pistol in my lap within easy reach. The clock on the wall said it was a few minutes to midnight and I was very tired. The lights were all off and the blinds were down, that would keep a sniper from tracking me. Every door was locked tight, but I suddenly had a strange feeling and a tingling at the back of my neck.

"Good evening, Foxtail..."

I swear I jumped a mile! I raised the pistol towards the voice and my eyes went wide as my heart skipped a beat – it was her...

Hit Girl was in my apartment, only feet away. She emerged from the darkness into the glow from the TV – I had rarely known fear, but now I was way beyond that. While I was good at what I did – I was not in Hit Girl's league, not by a long shot. I could make out the twin pistols, the twin Katana blades, the Tanto...

Talk about being out classed!

The girl was scared.

I liked that – I could sense the fear and it inspired me. The girl raised her pistol and emptied the magazine into my armour – the nine-millimetre slugs compressed and dropped to the floor, all fifteen of them. I must have shaken the assassin to the core as she fell backwards over the arm of the chair onto the floor, but she rapidly stood back up again.

She moved backwards and I knew why as she span around, seizing her butterfly swords from the windowsill. Mathilda had found them, but I had told her to leave them in place – I wanted a fair fight.

Had it all been a setup – meeting Walker the previous afternoon?

Hit Girl was here to kill me, but she obviously wanted to drag it out – she wanted a fight. I would not let her down; I could not win – but I would fight as well as I could. I brandished my twin blades – Hit Girl smirked as she stepped closer and drew her own twin blades – only they were not Katana swords, but the shorter variant, Wakizashi, which were about a foot shorter and much more useful for a fight in an apartment!

"Are you ready to die, little girl?" She taunted her smirk broadening.

"Are you?" I replied, rather lamely I thought

"Yes, I am – let's fight, Foxtail!"

Her blades moved swiftly and I took the full force of the attack on both of my own swords. Hit Girl nodded her approval – what the fuck was this? I pushed her back, much easier than I thought I could... I drove in with both swords, putting everything into the strikes. Hit Girl parried every one, leaving me panting for breath, but I dug deep as the adrenaline flowed – I needed everything that I could give.

I would give everything I had.

She was good.

I hated to destroy her, but it was her or Stephanie and there was no argument with that limited choice and I had made my decision. Okay, I was a bitch, I enjoyed a good fight – I hated for the fight to end and I also enjoyed a good tease too...

I twisted and allowed one of her swords to strike my chest – it hurt, but did not penetrate. I saw her smile spread, but then falter as I pushed back at her.

I pushed the attack and I drove the point of my Wakizashi into her chest...

Thank God for my armour!

The blade did not penetrate, but I saw how angry Hit Girl was – I had struck her; she had given me the strike to tease me. No wonder she had the reputation as a bitch... I was fully aware that my training had been based on her – she had been killing since she was about five or six according to legend and yes, Hit Girl was a legend in her own time.

To be honest, I felt honoured to be fighting her, honoured that she saw me as a worthy adversary – she could have sent any of her underlings to kill me. Or she could have shot me dead in my chair. Then it happened...

She parried away my swords, one at a time, with such force that I lost my grip on first one and then the other – I was disarmed and helpless. She pushed me up against the wall and I felt tears of frustration build up in my eyes; I had failed and I was going to die as a consequence.

I felt the Tanto as it was pressed against my neck. I looked ahead of me and stared into her eyes – I saw nothing but death.

Hit Girl represented death as much as the Grim Reaper did – only I was more scared of Hit Girl.

It was the endgame.

One gentle push of the razor sharp blade that I held to her neck and Foxtail would be no more. I did not even know her real name – nor did I care. I saw the fear etched on her face, something I had seen many times – it was routine, they always showed fear at the end.

I felt no emotion as I stared into her blue eyes...

Chapter 252*: Endgame

Friday night

Apartment 3E

I felt no emotion as I stared into her blue eyes.

Her face joined the others etched in my memory, all the others that I had killed. Many died without ever knowing who, or why. Some died as they stared into my eyes and me into theirs. Foxtail was one of those and I examined those eyes, relishing the fear and then I stopped...

What are you doing, Mindy?

Kill her!

No...

Kill her!

I had seen something in those eyes – I had seen the scared fourteen-year-old girl beneath all that Foxtail training. Underneath, I had been the same – a scared little girl, forced into a life of killing. It was not her fault, just as it was not Stephanie's fault. Somebody else had made both young girls into what they were, just as my Daddy had made me what I was...

Kill her!

No...

I would let her live – maybe, just maybe, we could...

"It's your lucky day, Foxtail..."

I slumped to the floor and I sobbed.

I was soaked in sweat and I hurt where her sword had struck me. I could not believe that I was still alive – she had me, yet she had let me go, Hit Girl had let me live... Why?

I still had a mission...

Had it been a warning to stay away from the Walker girl?

But I had no choice; I had a mission... The Walker girl had to die.

They would kill me, if I did not kill her...

Safehouse F

"What the fuck happened?"

Stephanie was raging and I knew why. What had happened at that apartment? Hit Girl had left and she was on her way back, only we could hear Foxtail moving around her apartment – she was still sobbing.

"What happened, Dave?" Stephanie demanded, her rage building.

"I don't know, Stephanie – you know as much as I do!"

..._...

Hit Girl never said a word as she headed back to the Safehouse. We tracked her motorcycle – something was wrong; she was obeying all speed limits and traffic regulations! Finally, she rode into the Safehouse and parked her Ducati.

She passed through the armoured shield and I could tell by her body language that she was pissed.

Her helmet and mask were thrown across the mat as she went. Stephanie ran out of the Control Centre to confront her.

"What are you doing? Why is that bitch still alive? Do you not care about her trying to kill me? Have you gone fucking soft?"

I expected Mindy to fly for Stephanie – nobody spoke to Mindy like that! Mindy's face was full of confusion, but she smiled at Stephanie, who did not smile back.

"Come on you soft fuck, say something!"

"I couldn't kill her..."

Stephanie was astonished.

"You couldn't kill her?" Stephanie echoed.

"She did not deserve to die..."

"Explain that to me – I seem to have missed something here!" Stephanie raged.

Mindy sat down on the mat and looked directly at Stephanie, who sat down in front of Mindy.

"She deserves to die as much as I do, as much as you do. She did not choose to become an assassin and neither did you, and nor did I. I saw something in her eyes – I saw you, I saw myself..."

..._...

I walked over and sat down next to Mindy. Stephanie seemed to be cooling down and trying to make sense of what Mindy was saying.

"I suppose that makes some sort of sense..." Stephanie said calmly, then her eyes lit up. "You want to turn her?"

"I do – if we can..."

"I can live with that – assuming she doesn't kill me before we turn her!"

Mindy laughed and so did Stephanie. We all got up and Mindy headed for the armoury, but then she turned and kicked Stephanie across the mat where she landed in a heap with a scream.

"What the fuck?" The annoyed girl yelled.

"Just to show you that I've not gone soft, oh daughter of mine!"

"That bloody well hurt, Mum!"

Glenview

"What did you do this time?"

"I told Mum that I thought she had gone soft..." I replied to my little sister as I passed her bedroom door, rubbing my bruises.

"Idiot!"

I laughed as I headed for my room.

The next day

Saturday morning

We awoke late.

"Sorry for shouting at you, Mum."

"It's okay; I deserved it."

"No, you did not – I should have shown more respect for you..."

"Did Chloe ever tell you about a certain phrase of mine?"

Stephanie smiled sweetly.

"You slap me, I slap you back, twice as hard – err, Mum!"

"That's my girl!"

Apartment 3E

I was glad I did not have to go to school.

My mind was still reeling from my close shave. I had woken up on the living room floor, surrounded by ejected casings from my SIG. It had taken me a moment to realise what had happened, but then I saw my SIG, the slide locked back and my two swords.

Hit Girl!

Why had she left me alive? I had pondered that for the thirty minutes I had spent in the shower, but I felt no better as I dried myself and pulled on some clothes. My mind was completely screwed up. Until I had gotten involved with fucking Fusion, I had been focused and in full control – now? What would I say to my handler – he was coming by that night... The CIA did not take failure lightly – we were all but disposable as their pawns.

What a choice: die at the hands of Hit Girl, or the CIA!

Saturday afternoon

Glenview

Our visitor had arrived.

"Cassie!"

The poor girl, she was mobbed by the three kids almost the moment she stepped through the front door. I smiled as I waded through and pulled the kids out of the way, giving Cassie a hug of my own.

"You ready for this?" I asked.

"Apprehensive, but looking forward to it..."

Safehouse F

"Fusion, meet Nemesis!"

The combat suit was full body and no skin was visible although Cassie's ample feminine curves were obvious through the armour. Her overall suit was a very dark grey, however, the armour from the top of her thighs down to her knees was a dull yellow, as was the armour that covered her shoulders and upper arms. The upper chest and back armour were dark grey. The armour that covered her head and neck was also dark grey while the mask that covered all but her jaw was a dull yellow. Her gauntlets were dark grey with dull yellow armour that extended up her lower arms to the elbow. Her boots were lightweight, but had armoured soles and came up to her knees, they were dark grey.

On her right thigh was a holster for an FN Five-seveN Mk2 pistol. On the outer side of her left boot was an 18-inch Tanto with a yellow cotton Tsuka-ito, with grey ray-skin in a dark grey Saya. On her back, angled over to the right shoulder was a 42-inch Katana with the same yellow cotton Tsuka-ito, with grey ray-skin in a dark grey Saya. Around her waist was a utility belt in dark blue that carried communications and ammunition.

Now she was out in the open, we would see what she could do... Who knew that Cassie had a thing for sharp blades and had been training with swords since she was eight!

The blades clashed as the two vigilantes attacked each other.

It was a spectacle to behold!

Nemesis was about four inches shorter than Hit Girl, but that did not seem to be a problem as Nemesis moved fast and she kept moving. The rapid movement stopped her becoming a target for Hit Girl, who seemed annoyed – at least that was what her body language indicated.

It was a surprise to see somebody who could actually keep up with Hit Girl, at least where swords were concerned. Nemesis had been holding out on us – apparently she had been into Martial Arts for about eleven years and she knew a lot of powerful disciplines.

I was expecting a very annoyed wife when all was done!

I could do this – I could take her!

Maybe that would be a bit ambitious, but I was going to see how far I could go... I loved to fight with swords – there was something about them that inspired me. Hit Girl was not amused and I took great joy in raising her temper.

"You're good – I'll give you that!" Hit Girl growled only inches from my face, her blade forcing me backwards.

I smiled at the compliment, but Hit Girl's verbal sparring was not over.

"Only I'm better..."

With that, I was kicked backwards and I fell into a heap on the mat. I had only moments to react, so I rolled sideways, only narrowly missing the descending Katana blade. I swung my blade up and caught Hit Girl's lower arm, causing her to let go the grip on her sword. Hit Girl was not allowing me even a glimmer of success over her – she kicked out, catching me in the side of my head.

I saw stars for a moment before I felt myself being hauled to my feet and hurled across the mat. I was very sore, but I was not about to give up...

"What is it with you goddamn Brits; you never know when to quit!"

"Well – if we behaved like you slovenly yanks, we would never have built the largest empire in history covering almost a quarter of the Earth... We stop for no man – you take us on, we fight to the bitter end, whatever that may be!"

I had no immediate comeback to that and I was also annoyed to hear two other Brits loudly cheering on their compatriot! I had no desire to start another American war with Great Britain, so I just went back to what I did best – I fought.

..._...

Nemesis was tiring and I knew that she could not go on much longer. She had stamina, tonnes of it, but she also needed to learn when to quit... Who was I to talk? I would fight myself to a standstill if Kick-Ass would let me! It was time to finish.

"Sorry, Nemesis, but I know that you won't quit voluntarily, so..."

I executed a high spinning kick, sending Nemesis across the mat, her sword skittering in the opposite direction. I ran over and pulled off my mask to signify the end of the fight. I helped Nemesis back to her feet. As she pulled off her mask, I saw that the young woman was soaked in sweat. I was about to shout for some water when Stephanie appeared.

"Well done, Nemesis – you reminded this traitorous yank that we British can still punch above our weight!"

The grinning girl handed Cassie a bottle of cold water and took her mask off her before fetching the discarded Katana.

That night

Safehouse F

Foxtail had a visitor and he was not happy!

"Hit Girl was here?"

The man was agitated.

"You have well and truly fucked up, Foxtail – I'm gonna have to report this up the line and you know the possible consequences..."

"Yes, I do..."

..._...

"That sounded bad!" I commented, gazing over at Abby.

"Yeah, Marty!"

"We need to accelerate things before the CIA takes her out..."

"Any ideas, Mindy?"

"I'm gonna go chat with Jason."

Safehouse Q Chatham Road

I pulled up the drive and walked up to the front door.

Before I could knock, it flew open.

"Mindy!"

"Nicky!"

I followed Nicky into the living room. Jason was on the couch watching a movie.

"Hello, Mindy – got a problem?"

"Yeah," I said as I sat down beside Jason on the couch. "Would the CIA terminate Foxtail for not completing her mission?"

"It's the CIA – anything is possible..."

"Foxtail just got warned by her handler – I paid her a visit last night, but I couldn't destroy her..."

"You want to turn her?" Nicky asked.

"Is it possible?"

"It worked for Stephanie, but she was only part way through her training... Foxtail? I don't know, to be honest," Jason replied.

The next morning Sunday

Stephanie did not seem happy.

When I awoke that morning, I found her pounding from one end of the pool to another. She was determined and she was not stopping. I walked back to my room and changed into my swimsuit. I returned to the pool and Stephanie was still at it. I dived in and easily caught up to the young girl as she swam.

"Anything I can help with?" I called over as I swam parallel to her.

Stephanie slowed down and stopped before moving into the shallow water and standing up. She turned to face me as she fought to control her breathing and there was concern on her face.

"How many more kids are there out there – kids like me and Foxtail? That training centre was full of kids, of all ages. We might be able to rescue Foxtail, but what about the rest?"

"We're gonna take down the whole damn lot, Steph, I promise you that."

"I don't think Foxtail is going to listen – I don't think she's going to turn, Mindy; I know the training that she went through. I never completed mine, which made it easier for me to leave it behind – she may still have to die."

"I spoke with Jason and Nicky, last night. You could be the key to turning Foxtail – if you think you can handle it. If she can't be turned, you can put a bullet between her eyes, personally."

"Nice image, Mum, thanks!"

Two days later
Tuesday morning

"They are so sweet!"

"That one is mine, Razor – he's able to walk properly now, as can Piper, Kiara, Hope and Hercules... Sophia – stop knocking your pups over!"

"Does she do that a lot?" Cassie asked with a laugh.

"Ever since they started to try and walk – she thinks it's funny!"

"You're very lucky, Steph."

"I know."

Three days later
Friday Night

Apartment 3E

It was my last chance.

If I failed, I would die, one way or another. Did it scare me? Not really, it had been part of our training; we were conditioned to accept failure and to just fight harder to the end. I would not disappoint; I would fight to the bitter end.

So much for Saoirse Doherty!

Chapter 253*: Turning Foxtail

Friday night

Southern Chicago

I had found her!

There she was – a female vigilante standing just several feet away and it was the one that I so desperately needed to kill. In hindsight, it was so obviously a trap... She turned as I approached – she smiled at me. I had to admit, she looked slightly ridiculous in that getup – was I jealous? Get a fucking grip, Foxtail!

I fired off three shots and she went down – no nines for Psyche, .40-calibre only! I heard a muffled scream of pain, but then nothing... Had I killed her? Part of me wished no... What! I kept my pistol pointed as I approached – there was nobody else in evidence. Psyche was not moving, but then as I leant over to check her pulse, I remembered the electric shock gizmo and hesitated.

Then, to my surprise, her eyes opened.

..._...

"You wearing a vest?" She asked with a grimace of pain.

"Yes..." I replied without thinking.

"Good!"

Three gunshots rang out and I felt three sharp pains in my chest, followed by another sharp pain as I crashed to the ground. I found myself on my back and I struggled to stand back up, but I managed it and I felt shaky, then I felt an arm snaking around my neck. I found myself in a choke hold... My training told me to break out of the hold and to kill my assailant, only the man – it felt like a man – held me too tightly and I could not execute the required breakout.

"Don't struggle..." The man said quietly into my ear as consciousness began to fade. "It is not your fault..."

Three hours later

Where the hell was I?

It was dark – I remembered shooting that bitch and then... She shot me! I cried out as I felt my chest; it hurt! I remembered being put down, but nothing after that. I heard movement close by where I lay and a light came on – it was dim and was not intended to dazzle. Then a voice spoke; it was a young voice.

"I was almost like you..."

It was a girl's voice; a young girl and I instantly recognised the accent, too. I felt rage building – yet again, I had failed...

"I know, Walker – I know your training and I've seen you in action, more than once... What are you hoping to achieve here?"

"I want to help you..."

That was unexpected... or was it?

"Why would you want to help me and why would I want to accept your help?" I paused. "What am I doing here?"

"You passed out and you must have been tired; you stayed asleep – you snore by the way; I'd forgotten about that..."

"It's been a stressful couple of days!" I growled in reply. Sarcastic bitch!

..._...

I saw the shape move into the light – it was her, it was Stephanie Walker – my nemesis, only I should have been hers... She was not wearing her ridiculous body armour, just ordinary jeans and a t-shirt. The girl was full of surprises, but why did that make me feel better? She had made no overt attempt to threaten me – she wasn't even carrying a weapon. Her expression was neutral, maybe... No!

"No... It's not happening, bitch!"

She smiled... God, I hated that girl! Why couldn't she just die, like a good little girl!

"Come with me..." she said slowly.

The girl held out her hand to me and I realised that I was lying in a bed. My jacket and body armour were gone, along with my weapons. I was wearing my t-shirt and pants, but no boots.

"We took your armour and weapons..." Walker went on. "Think yourself lucky; I was all but naked when I woke up in that bed!"

I swung my legs off the bed and faced the girl. For a moment, I considered attacking, but what was the point... Was I capitulating?

I slid off the bed and stood up, looking down at the girl who I had tormented for years and then tried to kill. She looked up at me, her expression still neutral – no gloating over her having captured me. Her hand was still extended out towards me.

"Lead the way, Psyche..."

..._...

I followed Psyche out into a passageway.

There was only one way to go – to the right. At the end of the corridor was another door, we passed through it and I found myself in a kind of vestibule.

The door I had just passed through had a sign: 'Medical Center'. To my left was another door that read: 'Power/Generator/Pyro Store'. That door also had the usual 'DANGER – ELECTRIC SHOCK WARNING' type signs, plus a palm scanner for access. To my right was another door that had large bolts on the outside of it; the sign read: 'Interrogation & Holding'.

Ominous! Why was I not in there?

The other doors seemed to lead to couple of storerooms and all had palm scanners beside them. The final wall, farther to my right, was mostly glass and through the glass, I could see a Martial Arts training centre. Even more important, I could see Jō-staffs and other potentially lethal weapons in a rack off to one side. However, the glass door was locked with a palm scanner too!

All that was left were some steel stairs that led upwards.

..._...

Psyche made for the stairs and I followed.

As I emerged into what appeared to be a large cavern, I stopped dead. I was roughly mid-way down the cavern. Behind me was there was a large vehicle-sized steel door and some large vehicles. I instantly recognised Iron Hide, not to mention the pair of Ducati Panigale motorcycles, one in blue and the other a purple colour and a larger motorcycle in black, yellow and green. They were parked behind an eight-foot tall armoured glass shield that ran across the available width of the forty-foot wide cavern and there was a large six-foot figure '1' on it. The top of the shield was angled over at forty-five degrees away from me, to prevent anybody climbing the structure from the far side. The floor of the 'cavern' was ribbed steel and concrete and it felt rough under my feet as I only wore my socks.

Beside me was a large training mat and in front of me, at the end of the cavern and over to the left was a glass-enclosed room that housed computer equipment and large flat screens. It was obviously a Command Centre. Immediately beside the Command Centre was an external steel staircase leading up.

The staircase provided access to a walkway, which ran around the central section of the cavern and provided access to a number of rooms on the second level. There was another steel staircase, which came down behind me. The walkway itself, was about ten feet off the ground and ringed with a steel and glass barrier that rose to a level of three and a half feet and the walkway itself was made of steel, but appeared to have a foam rubber covering. There were various doors visible, that led off the walkway into rooms, with unknown purposes. The ceiling and some of the walls had foam rubber sections that I presumed were designed to reduce the echo in the cavernous room.

..._...

Psyche turned to face me.

Gathered around her were several others, all masked – I recognised Shadow, Jackal, Hit Girl and Kick-Ass. They had arrayed themselves behind the girl – an obvious statement. There was another man, I had seen him before somewhere but I could not remember where. This was some kind of intervention, that was obvious.

"Look at us two sorry bitches," Psyche said, indicating herself and then me. "Look at what they make you give... Do you really want to be a cold-blooded killer, or do you want to make something of your life?"

What was she saying? It was my life, only I had no alternative, but...

"Join us..." Psyche continued and I saw genuine concern in her eyes.

"I can't..."

"There's no such word..."

"You're all killers – just as much as I am... What makes you all so different?"

..._...

I saw Hit Girl, herself, step forward (I flinched involuntarily) and she put an arm around Psyche's shoulders, then she spoke – but not in her usual electronically enhanced voice, but with the voice of a normal young woman.

"The difference, Foxtail, is that we only kill when we have no other choice – we don't kill just because someone has ordered us to kill. I used to be just like you, and so did Stephanie here – if we can change, then so can you... The program was based on me – so I should know the limits of what you can and cannot do..."

The man stepped forwards.

"You are part of a CIA scheme that was beyond immoral – I should now; I was part of another very similar hare-brained scheme," the man explained then waved at the people around him. "These people are killers, that is an accurate description, but in my short time with them I have seen them use their skills for good and they have one thing that you, me, Psyche and Hit Girl lacked initially, they have morality, unlike those CIA bastards."

"My name is Stephanie Lizewski – do you have a better name than 'Foxtail'?"

"I do," the teenage girl replied in her thick Irish accent.

"Well?" Stephanie persisted.

"Saoirse, Saoirse Doherty – bit of a mouthful, so my friends just call me 'SD'..."

"Does that mean that we can call you 'SD'?"

SD smiled for the first time and I took that as a 'yes'.

"Will I ever have to kill again?" She asked.

"Only if you want to – nobody will force you... I choose to kill, or I choose not to kill."

"Why, Stephanie?"

"Huh?"

"Why are you doing this for me? I used to make your life a living hell – even after you killed that girl in the shower..."

"You killed a girl in a shower?" Hit Girl enquired with a tone of intrigue.

"I'll tell you later..." Steph replied still looking at Saoirse. "Everybody deserves a second chance – I got mine here and while I am still damaged, I can now put my special skills to some good and I already have. Not that long ago, I saved the life of somebody very special to me – without my special skills, I would not have been able to do that and that person would have died."

"I can't change on my own..."

"You will never be alone, Saoirse, not if you don't want to be."

I had read about what Fusion stood for, but I had been told it was all bullshit – I now had to make a choice.

Who did I believe?

The CIA?

Stephanie?

Hit Girl pulled off her mask, as did Shadow, Jackal and Kick-Ass. I would be putting my life into the hands of a nine-year-old that I hated and had tried to kill on three occasions. I would also be putting my life into the hands of a woman who had tried to kill me only the night before. My only other option? Go on the run from the CIA... In retrospect, what did I have to lose.

"Hit Girl, Psyche – I place my life into your hands..."

That night

Glennview

"This is really weird!"

"I know what you mean; I've been in your shoes," I replied encouragingly.

"Guys, this is Saoirse and she will be staying with us for a day or two..."

"This another nut job, like Stephanie?" Anne-Marie enquired with a dubious smile.

"What have I told you? That is not polite!" Mindy growled. "The CIA may want to kill her."

"Sorry – good to meet you. I'm Anne-Marie and this is my brother, Danny. Stephanie is our big sister."

"Actually, Anne-Marie, I am a nut job, just like Stephanie," Saoirse admitted with a small grin.

"Saoirse, can you and Stephanie sleep in the same room without killing each other?" Mindy enquired, with a serious tone.

SD smiled for the first time that night.

"What's the point in trying to kill her – I've tried everything – plus I've seen her kill and I'd rather not be on the receiving end of that!"

..._...

"Stephanie?"

"Yeah?"

I looked up to see SD sitting on the chair by the window, pulling off her boots and socks.

"I apologise for everything I ever did to you. I've never known anybody show so much bravery, courage and compassion – even towards an enemy like me... I was a wimp at your age – worse than you were – and to be honest, I was jealous of you and that was why I hated you so much."

"It's in the past, SD – let's just look to the future."

"Okay... We sleeping in the same bed?"

"Yeah – just don't get any ideas; I know we used to share the showers, but just keep your hands to yourself!"

"You're so full of yourself, Brit!"

"I know... Sorry about the bruised tits!"

"If you actually had any, I'd return the favour..."

Bitch!

Early hours
Saturday morning

1714 West Grace Street

Lieutenant Matthew Casey turned away from the blaze.

It was almost out, but it had taken a lot of skill, especially as it had been on the top floor. Men had also been put at risk searching what had turned out to be an empty apartment. He saw two cops walking towards him and recognised them both.

"Morning, guys!"

"Morning, Lieutenant," Murphy and Fellowes responded together. "Arson?"

"Yeah – apartment 3E – nobody inside, though. Looked like a phosphorus grenade was thrown in after somebody kicked in the door. Damn lucky no other apartments were put at risk."

"Shit!" Murphy growled. "I need to make a phone call."

Glenview

I walked up the stairs to wake the girls.

Both girls were sleeping soundly when I entered 'The British Sector'. I shook Stephanie's shoulder and then that of Saoirse. Both girls were instantly awake – Saoirse had a knife in her hand and held towards my throat.

"Really!" I growled.

"Sorry..." Saoirse apologised.

I sat down on Saoirse's side of the bed.

"It looks like the CIA has noticed your failure," I said quietly. "They torched your apartment – I'm sorry."

Saoirse looked pained and then resigned as she lay back down and closed her eyes. I looked over at Stephanie who just grimaced and lay back down too.

Sunday night

Central Intelligence Agency
Langley

"Sir, we have an alarm at CIA Station, Chicago..."

"What now?" Vossen demanded as he swung his legs off the couch in his office.

..._...

A young female face appeared on the screen, staring directly at the security camera, she smiled.

"Sir – I want to tender my resignation from your sick experiment, effective immediately!" The soft Irish lilt said politely.

"I concur..." Another voice stated – that one electronically altered. "It is time for CIA Station, Chicago to cease trading..."

"You burn mine – I burn yours!"

As Vossen watched, Hit Girl and Foxtail proceeded to attach devices to all of the electronic equipment in the room before they both turned back to the screen.

"We'll be seeing you very soon, good buddy!" Hit Girl growled before both girls ran from the room.

"Get an EOD team in there..."

Before he could finish his sentence the screen went white and the connection was lost. The view changed to a shot of the outside of the building. There was a person standing outside the building – that person, dressed in a red and blue armoured suit, waved at the camera!

She then raised her right hand followed by her middle finger and she smiled. Vossen's temper was about to go nuclear and his face was scarlet with rage. Psyche raised what was obviously a detonator with her left hand and used the middle finger of her other hand to press the button. The image vanished...

"Sir – CIA Station, Chicago has just gone offline..."

Vossen did not trust himself to speak, he just stormed out of the room.

Monday evening

Glenview

"Saoirse – this was recovered from your apartment – yes, we found it when your apartment was searched the other day."

Saoirse looked at me and I saw tears in her eyes as she opened the small cardboard box and stared at the intact photos inside. I had asked Fellowes to retrieve the box before anybody else found it.

"Why didn't you kill me?" Saoirse asked.

"A very good question, Saoirse..."

"I was taught to kill without hesitation, just as you and Steph were... When I was about your age, I learnt to control my instincts and I learnt to not kill. It was not easy and it went against everything I knew."

"Will I be able to learn that?"

"I hope so – Stephanie has proved herself a capable killer. I've seen her kill mercenaries without breaking sweat – eight in one night... She's still learning, but she's young. I'll help you as much as I can, but ultimately it is down to you. You fight well – one assassin to another..."

Saoirse blushed.

My entire life was gone.

Had it been a sign? Everything that I had been since 'graduating' was gone, all I had were the clothes that I stood up in and a small cardboard box of memories. Memories of a past life that no longer existed. Mindy had been really nice, and she had taken me shopping that morning for clothes and everything.

I felt weird having somebody to do things for me and help me. I had spent the past couple of years on my own, living as if I were an adult. I was struggling to get used to being with other people, people who genuinely wanted to help me. Stephanie was a case in point – we were mortal enemies, at least we had been...

I could tell by her eyes that she resented me, but I felt that she resented me for what I represented. I represented her past, something that she was struggling herself to put behind her. I was determined to put it all behind me too – if that brat could do it, then so could I! I owed Stephanie – she had saved me from death at best, or a life of unending pain at worst.

..._...

"What ya doing?"

I looked up to see a grinning Stephanie emerge from the bathroom. She was always grinning!

"Hi..."

Stephanie studied me for a moment before joining me on the bed where I sat cross-legged in just an overlarge t-shirt.

"It's a lot to get used to, I know – I'm still trying to cope with it all. I want to help you, but you have to let me... I know we're mortal enemies, but we need each other. Despite our past history, we're the same – almost. You spent longer in that shithole than me, so it'll be worse for you..."

"Thanks, Steph – you're a good kid and I know we've had our disagreements and it would be nice to have a friend..."

"I'm your friend and I always will be, SD."

..._...

"You two, okay?"

It was Mindy, sticking her head around the door.

"Yeah, thanks."

Mindy came in and sat on the bed beside Stephanie.

"I've been meaning to ask, Steph – and maybe Saoirse can help... About that girl – in the shower..."

I saw Stephanie blush and look uncomfortable for a moment. Obviously, Mindy knew nothing about that event! Stephanie looked over at me.

"Mindy doesn't know about what went on in that place – I've not told her yet."

"Sorry if I..."

"No, SD – it needed to come out... Mindy knows that I killed my parents and my little brother, but she has yet to learn about my first hand-to-hand kill..."

I couldn't resist chipping in.

"It was an awesome sight. I was there, but I missed the actual fight. By the time I got to the showers and pushed through the crowds, I saw two people in the showers – one was dead, her head caved in and the other was standing butt naked, with tears streaming down her face and blood on her body. Steph was only eight at the time, but she had beaten a twelve-year-old girl to death, right there in the showers.

"It was the other girl's fault – she had been Steph's biggest tormentor, other than me, and she pushed Steph a little too far. We were all stunned with what had happened; the little British brat, who cried every damn night keeping us all awake and whom we expected to fail miserably, actually had teeth! Not only was she commended for her actions – she gained her coveted codename: psyche.

"That pissed a lot of people off – she was too young for a codename, but the powers that be liked what she did. That attack and killing also gave her some breathing space and she used it to excel in everything that she did. I hated to admit it at the time, but I was impressed with her resolve and how she progressed after that. I had spoken with some other girls about the actual fight and as I understood it – it had been violent; Stephanie went completely wild."

Stephanie was now blushing and staring down at her bare feet.

"I've seen Stephanie fight and when she goes wild, she sure goes wild!" Mindy commented.

"Wow..."

I turned to see two faces at the door. Both were stunned by what they had just heard. It was Anne-Marie who had spoken.

"You went through a lot, Steph," she said quietly. "But you're not a bad person – I know that."

..._...

"Mindy – err, could I ask you a personal question?" Saoirse asked.

"Of course – always..."

"Me and the short, skinny, Brit here," Saoirse went on, ignoring Stephanie's scowl, "were trained in your image – how did you become who you are?"

"Okay," I replied, getting comfortable on the bed and I waved Annie-Marie and Danny to join us.

Once the three girls and the boy were comfortable on the bed, I began the story of my life.

"It all started with my Daddy – he was a cop in New York and a very successful one. He was so successful that he was framed by Frank D'Amico for a crime that he did not commit. He was ultimately thrown in prison and my mother suffered, not being able to cope - she was pregnant with me and she eventually took her own life. I was saved, but she died. I went to live with my Daddy's partner, Marcus, who brought me up for the next five years.

"I don't remember much from that early age, but I was a girly girl who liked pink dresses and My Little Pony... Actually, My Little Pony stayed with me... Anyway, when I was five, Daddy was released from prison and I went to live with him. The first few months were difficult, but fun. Then Daddy began to subvert and corrupt me - it was all a game, a game of superheroes. I had no way of seeing through it all, I loved the purple suit and the pink utility belt - the rest was just a game. By my sixth birthday, I had killed three men. I actually enjoyed it... I truly became Hit Girl – that is, I grew a dark side that became difficult to control.

"The next four years were spent building up everything that we could find about Frank D'Amico. We used torture and any interrogation method that got us the information we needed to complete our mission. The mission was to take down D'Amico and his entire organisation. I became more and more ruthless as time went on. Then a new vigilante came onto the streets when I was eleven."

"That would be me!" Dave said as he sat down on the bed beside me.

"Yeah – the dick in a wetsuit; you seen the 'I'm Kick-Ass!' video?"

"Yes – it was fun to watch..." Saoirse commented.

"Not so fun to experience..." Dave commented.

"Turned out that was Kick-Ass 2.0 – Dave's first trip out was about as successful as the Titanic's first voyage, and it almost ended up the same way too! But I won't dwell on that... Somehow, Frank D'Amico thought it was Kick-Ass going after his pushers – as if! Then Kick-Ass and I met, at some shitty apartment belonging to a dick called Rasul."

"I got to see Hit Girl in action for the very first time. I was amazed – appalled – scared – almost physically sick at what I was witnessing. But she was good – a dozen people died within two minutes – and the bitch smiled as she was doing it. Turned out she was showing off to me..."

"I had a small crush on the idiot... Well, things went to shit and Kick-Ass accidentally betrayed me and Daddy – not his fault! I managed to rescue Kick-Ass, but not Big Daddy. Kick-Ass helped me avenge him and we both took down Frank D'Amico. Kick-Ass blew his ass out the window with a goddamn bazooka, would you believe."

"A bazooka!" Saoirse and Stephanie exclaimed together.

"It was one hell of an entrance I can tell you – didn't see much of it as I was all but out cold. He saved my life and I revealed my true identity to him. I have never regretted that day... Anyway, its bedtime – I'll cover 'Hit Girl and Kick-Ass – part 2', another night."

Tuesday night

Washington D.C.

I had never been in the Capital before – the visit to collect Curtis after his parents died did not really count.

There was an event happening and Dave and Mindy Lizewski had been invited. So had a good friend of ours...

..._...

"Oops! Terribly sorry, old chap!"

"Who the hell let goddamn kids in here?" Vossen complained as the teenage boy accidentally bumped into him.

"Tell me about it!" The slim blond-haired young woman stated. "Damn menace – they should all be institutionalised if you ask me."

"I can only agree, Miss...?"

"Williams, Mindy Williams..."

I enjoyed my chat with the cunt, it helped me get a good feel for my enemy.

Meanwhile, there was somebody else I needed to speak with and she was just finishing up with a tall gentleman.

"Good evening, you must be Deputy Director Landy," I began.

"Pamela Landy, yes..."

"Mindy Lizewski – we have a mutual acquaintance and I believe we can assist one another..."

"Is that so?" Landy replied cautiously. "Who is this acquaintance?"

"Four – fifteen – seventy-one..."

Landy paled for a second before regaining her composure.

"I see – is he well?" She asked.

"He is – he mentioned that you could be trusted..."

"I should be flattered – what is this about?"

"A greying piece of shit that looks remarkably like that gentleman across the room," I replied, sending a casual glance over at Noah Vossen.

Landy smiled and nodded.

"A very apt description, Mrs Lizewski, I feel dirty just sharing the same room as him."

"I will be in touch..." she finished, shaking my hand before walking away.

That was a strange encounter!

I looked down at my right hand; there was something in it... The card was purple, with two embossed letters. The girl was putting a lot of trust in me, exposing herself like that. However, if Jason Bourne was vouching for her...

I was looking forward to my next meeting, especially if Noah Vossen had pissed off Hit Girl!

After he got home, Vossen emptied out his pockets as he usually did.

"What?" He muttered as a small card appeared from his jacket pocket.

He picked up the card and his face went white as he felt the two embossed letters on the purple card... She had been there – she had been so close to him... Why hadn't she killed him?

Vossen was shaking at the thought of what might have occurred.

Chapter 254*: Abigail

February 17th, 2016
Wednesday

The puppies were now four weeks old!

All seven were walking around relatively normally and we had introduced them to some soft food which was very amusing as it took several attempts for most of them to eat the meat – Layla was having none of it and it was a couple of days before she joined her siblings. It was also a difficult time for Sophia as most of the pups now had a full set of teeth. It was very obvious that Sophia was not keen to have that many sets of teeth anywhere near her nipples – I knew what she was feeling as I often had to warn Dave about his teeth quite often!

I had to admit, I was very pleased not to have had to breast-feed anything.

That night

Western Chicago

"Hey, Jackal – over here!"

My partner for the night strolled over and I pointed down at the body I had found. He took a moment to examine the body.

"Awesome tattoo on her neck," Jackal commented.

The woman had a spider-web tattoo on the left side of her neck, which showed beneath her long black hair.

"Is that a dog collar?" I asked.

"Looks like it, munchkin – you should be familiar with those!"

I felt myself blushing – would that dog collar thing ever go away?

"Look, Jack, my name is Wildcat – not fucking 'munchkin'!" I growled.

"A girl gets boobs and she gets an attitude thrown in!"

"You wanna restart puberty?" I growled, deploying the claws on my left gauntlet, and the fucker laughed. I got no fucking respect!

..._...

The woman had long black hair, currently in two pigtails. She was dressed all in black, and apart from the dog collar, she also wore cool wristbands that bore skull and crossbones motifs. The woman was lying on the floor of the alley and she looked to have been knocked out, with a blow to the head.

Something told me not to just call an ambulance.

I found her purse and dug through a load of crap, before finding some ID. The woman's name was Abigail Sciuto and apparently, she worked for the Federal Government, specifically as a Forensic Scientist for the Naval Criminal Investigative Service. I pulled out her cell phone, it was locked, but I inserted a special device that Battle Guy had provided into the USB connection and the phone unlocked after a twenty-second pause.

I found the most dialled number – it said one word: 'Gibbs'.

Washington D.C.

The cell rang.

It was late, so the man was tempted to ignore it as he watched his black and white western on the old television set, but on checking the name on the screen, he accepted the call.

"Abby!"

"Afraid not!" A strange voice replied. "Are you Gibbs?"

"I'm Gibbs; what are you doing with that phone?"

"I've just found the phone's owner – she's currently unconscious and lying in an alleyway in Chicago."

"Chicago?"

"Chicago."

"Who are you?" NCIS Special Agent Leroy Jethro Gibbs asked.

"My name is Jackal!"

Early the following morning
Thursday

Washington Navy Yard

"Hey, Boss – it's a bit late!" NCIS Special Agent Anthony 'Tony' DiNozzo moaned.

"Abby is in trouble – we're on our way to Chicago..."

"Chicago?" NCIS Special Agent Timothy 'Tim' McGee echoed.

"Is there an echo in here?" Special Agent Gibbs complained.

"No, Boss," Special Agent DiNozzo replied. "And here is the final member of our little team..."

"Sorry – traffic!" NCIS Special Agent Ellie Bishop replied.

"At one in the morning, Bishop?" Special Agent Gibbs enquired. "Grab your gear – wheels up in fifty."

That same time

Chicago

My head hurt!

I remembered venturing into a bar near the south side of Chicago, I had been looking for tattoos and I had found one – at least I had thought so... Ow, my head hurt... I sat up and looked around me. At first I thought hospital; there was a lot of activity and I saw a woman facing away from me who wore a white doctor's coat. The hospital image rapidly vanished once I stood up, ignoring the pain in my head. There, standing a few feet away was a Chicago Vigilante in full body armour – she wore blue.

A name popped into my head: Shadow.

..._...

"Well, this ain't no hospital!" I commented.

"No – you are at the Fusion HQ, Miss Sciuto," Shadow growled.

They knew my name!

"You're awake!" The white-coated doctor, commented.

The doctor was wearing a mask of her own, white, in colour scheme. It covered her full face, so I could not see anything, but I was certain that she would be smiling.

"You, would be Medic!" I stated.

"You, would be right," Medic replied.

"Am I a prisoner?"

"No – we found you lying unconscious, well Jackal and Wildcat did... They decided to bring you back here..." Medic advised. "Jackal also called your Boss – a guy called..."

"Gibbs!" I filled in.

..._...

I walked unimpeded over towards a guard rail and I was stunned by what I saw below me. To my right, I saw a glass-enclosed facility that looked way more advanced than MTAC back in Washington. Behind the glass, I could see four people – all wore masks. One wore purple – that had to be the intrepid vigilante, Hit Girl. Another wore green and yellow – Kick-Ass!

Was I a fan of those vigilantes? A little, yeah! They did good, despite being criminals and mass murderers.

"What are you doing in Chicago?"

I looked over at Hit Girl as I drank my Caf-Pow – apparently Hal and Battle Guy had a thing for it too!

"I wasn't supposed to have come up for another day, but I decided to travel up early – you know, see the sights. I got antsy and wanted to start working on the case – a bad habit of mine..."

"You have some intriguing body-art and as for the collar..."

"Thanks..." I replied.

"Why don't you come downstairs and meet Hit Girl – she would like to know what NCIS is up to..." Shadow requested, although I sensed that it was not actually a request, but I was not being forced either.

Falls Church, Virginia

Warrant Officer Jennifer 'Jen' Coates entered the office of the Judge Advocate General for the United States Navy.

It was empty and it had been cleared, pending the arrival of the new JAG. Her Boss was due any moment. It had been many years coming, but well worth the wait. She was to run the office that she had once served as a lowly Petty Officer. So many years and so many happy and sad moments since that time she had been caught stealing and thrown in the Brig at Christmas. If it hadn't been for one man...

That same man now almost flew in the door.

"Morning, Coates!"

"Morning, Admiral!"

Rear Admiral Harmon 'Harm' Rabb, Junior, Judge Advocate General's Corps, United States Navy, took his seat behind the capacious desk and smiled up at Coates.

"It's good to be back, eh, Coates."

Ten years as the Force Judge Advocate, Naval Forces Europe in London, had served them both well. It had also served his new Executive Officer well, too. Colonel Sarah 'Mac' MacKenzie, Judge Advocate General's Corps, United States Marine Corps, was very pleased with herself as she entered the office and sat down across from her husband. Despite marriage, 'Mac' had retained her maiden name for professional reasons, but she was still very proud to be Mrs Harmon Rabb.

..._...

Within minutes, two more Naval Officers entered the office and one stood at attention facing the two senior officers.

Twenty-seven-year-old, Lieutenant Mathilda 'Mattie' Grace Rabb, United States Navy, was fresh off the boat – literally. She had departed the USS Ronald Reagan less than two days earlier and had then flown across the Pacific and the US from Yokosuka, Japan. She was a qualified F/A-18F Super Hornet pilot and she had been serving with VFA-2 aboard the Reagan.

The other officer was another JAG old hand and very familiar with the office and desk before him. Lieutenant-Commander Bud Roberts, Junior, Judge Advocate General's Corps, United States Navy, sat down alongside the Colonel.

"Mattie!" Harm announced with a laugh. "At ease, for the love of God!"

..._...

After a few minutes small-talk, there was a knock on the door and a yeoman whispered into Coates' ear.

Admiral Rabb raised an eyebrow at Coates' expression and was eager to find out what had caused the confused expression.

"You have a call, Admiral – a Mindy Lizewski..."

Admiral Rabb did not miss a beat, sweeping up the phone as it rang.

"Mindy! Long time, girl – congratulations on your marriage..."

"Thank you, Harm. I believe similar congratulations are in order, Admiral Rabb!"

"Thank you, Mindy – I never thought I would achieve Captain's rank, let alone gain a flag! Anyway – your call..."

"What can you tell me about a man called Leroy Jethro Gibbs of NCIS?"

A wave of painful memories swept through my mind.

...+...

"So, what makes you think that I would be involved in any other way than professionally with Lieutenant Singer?"

"You're more comfortable asking questions than you are answering them, huh?"

"I guess I'm not used to being a suspect."

"Suspect? Who said you were a suspect? Have I read you your Article 31 rights?"

"No, you haven't. Which means you're playing a very risky game, Gunny."

"I'm not smart enough to play risky games with a lawyer of your calibre, Rabb."

"That's 'Commander Rabb' or 'Commander', or 'Sir', Gunny. I believe, as a reservist, you're still technically in the Marine Corps."

"I am an NCIS Special Agent, and I don't have to salute you, or 'sir' you, or give you any military courtesy. But you know that. So who's playing the games here?"

...+...

"How long you been doing this, Gibbs?"

"Nineteen years."

"Can you tell somebody's lying by looking them in the eye."

"I can."

"Well, look into mine. Ask me. Ask me!"

"Would you kill for your brother?"

...+...

"Gibbs? Now there's a painful name from the past... He tried to pin a murder on me, many years ago – he's sound, though. You can trust him – he has his own rules, much like you do and I suppose as I do, at least that's what my wife keeps telling me. I'll vouch for him – you have any issues, get him to call me and I'll vouch for you."

"Thank you, Admiral – give my regards to Mac and Jen. Hope to see you, if you're ever up our way."

Later that afternoon

It was a risk, but I had decided to help NCIS.

Abby had given me a description of those I was looking for and also their cell numbers, so finding them had not been especially hard. They had booked into a Ramada on the 1600 block, northwest of the O'Hare airport. I had watched them leave in two rented Dodge Chargers.

They were relatively easy to follow as they moved around the city. They were obviously searching for their colleague. As darkness began to fall, I decided to put them out of their misery.

..._...

The car with Gibbs and DiNozzo in pulled up near to Columbus Park – the other car was several miles away to the east. Both Federal Agents split up and began to examine the area. I knew that Gibbs was Marine, so I had to be careful.

Once DiNozzo was far enough away, I closed on Special Agent Gibbs.

"I wondered how long it would take before one of you guys found us," Gibbs drawled.

"Don't move!"

"I had no intention of moving – Hit Girl!"

I kept my pistol aimed.

"You have somebody that belongs to me."

"Yes... Sort of..."

"You will release her, or so help me God, I'll..."

"Slight problem – we're not exactly holding her..."

"Then where is she?"

"She won't leave!" I replied.

Special Agent Gibbs laughed.

"That's Abby!"

Gibbs had called back DiNozzo and then called the other car to meet them. That was when I was joined by Petra in Hound. In the rearmost seats were Wildcat and Trojan. Out of professional courtesy, I allowed the four Federal Agents to retain their firearms, but I passed out blindfolds.

"Non-negotiable!" I commented before holding out a Faraday bag for their cell phones.

We drove to Safehouse F, via a circuitous route to put them off our exact destination, but finally pulled into the rubbish strewn warehouse that led to the main pedestrian entrance of the Safehouse. We dropped them off and then drove off, but not before pointing out the open elevator.

By the time we had parked within the Safehouse, they were in the catchment area.

Safehouse F

"Nice bunker!" Special Agent DiNozzo exclaimed.

"Thank you..." I replied. "Please leave your firearms on the shelf before you... All of them – knives too."

Once the NCIS Agents were disarmed, I allowed them out of the catchment area and into the Safehouse where Gibbs was jumped upon by Miss Sciuto.

"Gibbs! You got to see it – this place is so awesome!"

"All in good time, Abby!"

..._...

I knew what NCIS was looking for, so I put out a request to my snouts – I wanted to hear about a raven tattoo.

"Thank you, for helping us, Hit Girl," Gibbs said.

"A good friend of mine, Admiral Rabb, said that I could trust you..."

Gibbs looked a little bit shocked and so did DiNozzo.

"He did?" Gibbs enquired.

"I gather you two have a history, but Harm seemed to respect you – therefore, so do I.

Gibbs was able to persuade Abby to leave the Safehouse – there was a struggle with Special Agent McGee when he saw Marty's setup in the Control Centre, but we said he could come back another day...

Two days later Saturday morning

We were at D-JAK, just the two of us.

"Let's try this again, shall we?"

"I didn't put up much of a fight the last time..." Saoirse said dejectedly

"Jeez, don't go all sentimental on me!" I retorted. "I want to see what you can do, personally."

"Didn't she tell you how I fought?"

I grinned, fiendishly.

"She said you fought like a pussy..."

Saoirse frowned and sent a strong kick in my direction as I baited her into action. It was the first time that we had fought, since that night a week ago. To be honest, Saoirse seemed a little scared of me and generally she had been trying to avoid me all week, but I had had enough of that and had dragged her down town. Maybe it was something to do with my almost killing her...

"Come on! You're no bloody use to me if you can't damn well fight... Okay, I almost killed you – get over it – the British short-ass was right; you are a fucking pussy!"

Ouch! That kick of hers connected, and it hurt... Time to see how far I could push her before she snapped... I kicked back and forced Saoirse across the mat. I kept pushing, I tripped her and she fell hard onto her back. I gave her no space, pushing forward and kicking her in the side as she quickly scrambled to her feet. I never let her catch a breath, spinning her and throwing her hard towards the wall, but she flipped over backwards and came at me, anger growing in her eyes.

She went for my neck, trying to incapacitate me, but I dodged just in time – when pushed, she was good! Maybe, by almost killing her, I had damaged her confidence...

"Fucking worthless pussy!" I growled as I dodged again. "Did I break a nail?"

"Fuck you, Hit Girl..."

Saoirse flew at me in a fit of rage and caught me around the neck, pulling me down to the floor where she began to kick and punch me – it hurt too. I let her punch me for a minute before I flipped her over onto her back and pinned her down to the mat, my right forearm across her throat. I was hurting her as I pushed down, but that was the point. I could see fear growing in her blue eyes, just the same as the other night and she froze instead of fighting back...

"Fucking wimp!" I growled.

"Get the fuck off her!"

The angry voice had been unexpected as I had no idea anybody else was in D-JAK!

I then felt a sharp kick to my right side which drove me sideways and I hit the mat hard with somebody on top of me. That somebody punched me in the side of head and for a moment I saw stars, but quickly shook them away. I knew who had attacked me and I suspected why, too. I kicked the girl off me and sent her flying onto the mat.

"What are you doing here, Stephanie?" I asked as I lay on the mat, breathing heavily.

..._...

"I knew you'd take things too far – push her till she snapped!" Stephanie growled, putting herself between me and Saoirse.

Saoirse rose to a sitting position and looked shocked by the turn of events.

"You protecting her, Stephanie?" I asked gently.

"Damn right...!"

"I don't need protection from a little cry-baby, thanks..." Saoirse cut in, but she smirked at Stephanie who laughed.

The three of us went into the kitchen and I handed Saoirse some water, grabbing one for myself and a Coke for Stephanie.

"I'm sorry it I pushed you too far, Saoirse – I was worried about you..."

"I needed it. You scared me, last week and I was scared to be in the same room as you – I felt like you might..."

"Kill you?"

"Yes – but I know you wouldn't – unless I provoked you..."

"You fight really well – don't let a bully like me stop you fighting like you are able to – turn your fear to good use, turn it against your enemy..."

"You are no longer my enemy, Mindy, and neither are you, Stephanie..."

That afternoon

Glenview

My worries about Anne-Marie and her fascinations with everything vigilante appeared to be valid.

On that Saturday afternoon, I walked past the girl's bedroom and I stopped dead at what I was hearing through the barely open door.

"Try it again..." Stephanie insisted.

"Show's over motherfuckers!" Anne-Marie growled.

What the fuck?

"No – like this... Show's over motherfuckers!" Stephanie growled in a much better imitation of the younger me – but with a British accent, which sounded kinda weird.

"Show's over motherfuckers!" Anne-Marie growled again – that time better.

My curiosity overflowed and I pushed open the door. There, standing in front of the full length mirror of the sliding wardrobe door were the two girls, about a foot apart and each was standing sideways, facing away from me and each with their right arm raised and with a pistol aimed at the mirror. Beside the two girls was a laptop with a freeze frame displayed on the screen – me about to shoot out the camera in the burnt out building.

"Show's over motherfuckers!" I growled.

"Damn, that was realistic..." Stephanie said spinning around. "Oops; busted!"

"What the hell are you two doing with pistols – real pistols?" I demanded, glaring at Stephanie.

"I wanted to add to the realism – I keep them under my mattress; you know, just in case..."

I seized the pistol from Anne-Marie's hand and noticed that there was no magazine in the butt of the Heckler and Koch USP Compact pistol. I was still madder than hell and the younger girl shrank before my glare. I turned to Stephanie.

"I'll talk to you later..."

I hauled Anne-Marie out of the bedroom and down the stairs.

..._...

I paused at the bottom of the stairs and spun Anne-Marie around to face me.

"You ever swear like that again; you'll be eating soap for the next year! You ever touch a gun without the express permission of me or Dave, then you will really be sorry..."

"It wasn't even loaded..."

"Who said you could talk?"

Anne-Marie's expression was stormy and she glared back as viciously as she could. I grabbed her arm and dragged the girl downstairs and into the basement.

"Stand there and do not move..."

I walked over to the Armoury, err Panic Room, punched in a code and pulled open the heavy steel door. Once inside, I pulled a Glock 26 off the wall, ejecting the empty magazine. I double-checked that the magazine was indeed empty before selecting a small cardboard box containing ten 9-millimetre rounds. I triple checked the markings on the box and the rounds themselves before loading all ten into the magazine.

I walked back out to the basement, pulling back the slide and walking over to Anne-Marie who rather than looking worried, was seething with rage. I glared at her for a moment before moving into her personal space, a mere foot away from her – I leant down to her level.

"You think you're ready to become a vigilante... Hit me!"

The young girl just stared up at me – I slapped her. The slap was nowhere near as hard as that which I had used on Dave, but it still stung. She glared and I could see her struggling not to cry. Her small fists flexed as she struggled with her emotions and I could see the anger building inside her.

"Hit me!"

Slap!

Her face was red both with my slaps and her emotions.

"You're just a little girl, a scared little girl!"

"I am not!"

With that shout, Anne-Marie rammed her fist, full force, into my chest. It barely hurt, but Anne-Marie had put all her emotions into it.

"You are not ready!" I shouted back, emptying all ten rounds rapidly, five either side of the screaming cowering girl.

"I hate her!"

I studied my little sister for a moment. I had heard the gunfire from the basement and was keen to know what had taken place.

"Tell me what happened."

"She is doing everything possible to stop me becoming a vigilante – she's horrible to me..."

Anne-Marie was very angry – worse than I had ever seen her! She explained everything that had happened and I began to smirk as it all came out.

"So – you think Mum is trying to prevent you becoming a vigilante by not training you?"

"She tried to kill me!"

I shook my head and gave my little sister a very patronising look.

"The meanest, most vindictive vigilante the world has ever seen, tried to kill a seven-year-old girl and failed! Think about that for a moment... That same person who refuses to train you, just taught you to take every emotion you had and turn it into a solid punch. She tried to kill you with blanks, Anne-Marie – blanks!"

"How...?"

"I recognised the sound – they are very different to live rounds, trust me."

"I'm an idiot, aren't I?"

"You're young is what you are. Get your coat – we're going for a walk..."

..._...

"What are we doing?"

It was the tenth time that she had asked and she was getting increasingly annoyed and annoying! We had walked a carefully planned route. Despite what Anne-Marie thought, both she and her brother had been receiving training almost since the day they both found out about Fusion.

"Tell me about the man who just passed us – don't look..."

"It wasn't a man, it was a woman and she had blonde hair and was on her cell..."

"Is anybody following us?"

I grinned as I saw Anne-Marie glance sideways into the glass front of a shop.

"Not that I can see... Woah, hold on... What did I just do?"

"It's called counter-surveillance and we've been training going you and Danny for weeks."

"Who?"

"Me, Megan, Dave, Mindy, Chloe, Josh... Just because we didn't tell you, does not mean we weren't testing you each and every day since we got home from our pleasure cruise in the Caribbean."

"Every day?"

"Why do you think you knew to look out for things when we were attacked by SD?"

"Sorry... I need to apologise to Mom, don't I?"

"Without question!"

"Anybody ever tell you that you talk funny?"

"I could say the same thing about you..."

"Hey...! By the way – we're being stalked..."

"Who by?"

"Hi, kids!"

"Saw you a few minutes back, Mom!"

Two days later
Monday evening

Turned out we had another vigilante in town!

She was called 'Raven', apparently and as I kept track of what went on in New York City, I also knew that she originated from there... What was a New York City vigilante doing in Chicago? I suppose I could ask myself the same question!

As if that wasn't enough on top of everything else!

Chapter 255*: Ruffled Raven

*This Chapter is the continuation of Curse of the Raven, Chapter 10...

The following morning
Wednesday

North Central Chicago

I was astride my Alpine White BMW R1200-GS Adventure, but dressed in a dark-blue set of motorcycle leathers with a black full face helmet.

I had watched from a block away as my target emerged from the warehouse before she walked the half mile to the nearest main road and hailed a yellow cab. I had followed that cab, from a distance, relying on Abby tracking the cab's GPS. I wanted to meet Raven and attempt to figure out what she was...

I had no idea what shit-storm I was about to cause.

..._...

After an hour, the cab pulled over and the girl climbed out after paying her fare. She must have been hungry as she headed directly into the McDonald's twenty yards away on the 600 block of North Clark Street. I parked up, removed my helmet and entered, finding myself standing four people behind her in the queue.

Morgan ordered a cheeseburger, large fries and a large Coke – hungry, as I thought. I watched her sit down at a table by the window and start to eat. I ordered the same and headed for the same table.

"May I join you, Morgan?"

I saw the weirdest expression ever as the girl studied my face – but she nodded and I sat down facing her. She was still scrutinising my face.

"I know you..."

"You do?" I asked a little surprised.

"New York – a little over two years ago... Grand Central Parkway..."

..._...

I froze, a cold feeling shooting up my spine – I reached for my concealed pistol. Then comprehension dawned on Morgan's face and she suddenly went very white and she dropped her cheeseburger to the table.

"You're here to kill me?" She asked quietly.

I blinked hard at that.

"If you believe me to be who I think you do – then you know that would not be true. From one New York vigilante to another – let's be friends..."

I stood up, leaving the shocked girl to her food – I left mine, along with something else.

Fuck, fuck, fuck!

I was still shaking as the young blonde girl walked out the door without giving me another look. It had taken me only a minute to recognise her – it was Hit Girl! I remembered vividly that day in September 2013 – the girl on the van, what was her name?

Mindy – Mindy Macready.

I finally saw the envelope on the table – she had left it. I opened it – inside was a photo; it was the photo of a tattoo –

a raven tattoo. But not just any raven tattoo...

It was the one.

That night

"You sure about this?"

"Yes, Dave – I am... I know, we never go out alone; but this time I must and I saw something in that girl's eyes – she's safe. Only problem is, I see that same look that Chloe gets when she's after something – right before she fucks things up!"

Dave looked resigned to my actions – despite that fact that I knew he was unhappy; I knew my husband – so I had no need to worry.

..._...

I was out on my Panigale, cruising the Chicago streets. I knew where Raven was – we had planted a tracker on her motorcycle the other night. I had argued with Special Agent Gibbs, earlier that day. I knew that Raven wanted to get revenge, and I knew that she needed the closure. Gibbs understood, but he didn't want an investigation that might implicate his team, should things go wrong. Nor, could NCIS just walk away, leaving a murderer in the hands of vigilante justice.

We had agreed to disagree – for the moment!

Thirty minutes into my solo ride, I was annoyed to have my silence interrupted by a radio call from Hal.

"Worm would like an audience with your purpleness!" Hal said with a barely concealed snigger.

"Where is he?" I growled – then paused as a destination flashed up on the inside of my visor. "Oh, never mind!"

I ignored the laughter back at the Safehouse as I turned right, onto 50th Avenue and headed north. I then turned down an alley, just south of West 22nd Street.

There was Worm...

Stop shaking, she won't harm you... Bullshit!

Damn, she's got nice curves – she'd kill you out of hand for thinking that if she knew... Why do I risk my life seeing her? Because you are under her protection – nobody dares touch you, you dick! She didn't even climb off her purple Ducati – she just sat there, the engine idling smoothly.

She turned her head to follow my approach. I kept my hands visible at all times – I knew how the game was played, and I knew that Hit Girl liked her little games...

"Hi, Boss!" I tried.

No movement, just the blank stare of the helmet. I couldn't help it, but my eyes focussed on the pistol that hung on her left hip, the razor-sharp throwing knives on the same thigh – such lovely thighs. The twin swords on her back – I had seen her in action... I knew of men who had died at her own hands. Nobody knew her age, some said twelve – some said in her twenties. Me? I went with late teens.

Many played the game; was she blonde, brunette, red-haired? We spent many hours discussing Hit girl. I had a bet in place that she shaved her... Not that we would ever find out – pity... There were other bets: 'Hit Girl and Kick-Ass were shagging', 'Wildcat was their offspring', 'Kick-Ass was fucking Shadow', 'Petra and Mist were an item'. Unfortunately, so far, there had been no confirmations nor denials.

For some strange reason, we just could not find anybody brave enough to go up to Shadow and ask her if she was being poked by Kick-Ass!

..._...

"You had something for me?"

She growled – sent a shiver down my spine! Don't ask...

"You lookin' for the raven tattoo?"

The silence could have meant anything... To me though, it meant continue or die!

"He's here – in Chicago, I mean – he has a thing for killing, more particularly, he has a hard-on for killing Marines..."

"I hate to say it..." Hit Girl growled. "... But you done good, Worm..."

Thank God!

Hit Girl kicked her motorcycle into gear.

"There's more!" I called out.

The blank look and silence meant 'get to it – or else...'

"He's been seen working at the CTA place on 54th Avenue..."

Hit Girl nodded and threw me something before speeding off. It was a roll of bills – it was a roll of singles! But then I smiled, only the top five were dollar bills; the remaining twelve were Benjamins!

She did love her little jokes!

The night was still young, so I thought that I might just enjoy myself for a minute or two...

I hit the McDonald's on West Cermak Road, which caused a bit of a stir, I can tell you... It was not every day that a fully-armed vigilante walked in and calmly queued for a quarter-pounder with cheese! I tried to be nonchalant about the whole thing – maybe it was the pistols, blades and swords – or it could have been the laughter back at the Command Centre, whatever it was, I felt a little uncomfortable...

"Welcome to McDonald's, err... Hit Girl..."

"Quarter-pounder with cheese..."

"Would you like fries with that?"

"Yeah... I'll take a Dr Pepper too, please."

"Will you be eating in?"

"Yeah, why not..."

..._...

Surprisingly quickly, I had my tray and I sat down in a distant corner – not that it made a difference... I was being watched, actually 'stalked' was probably more like it! Despite it being after eight at night, there were still some kids in the restaurant. One, a few inches short of four-foot and with short blonde hair, was watching me and she was steadily getting closer. I was half way through my burger when a little face appeared beside my table.

"May I help you, little lady?"

"Are you the real, Hit Girl?" She demanded.

"How could you tell?" I countered.

"I don't know..."

"Well, I 'ain't gonna kill anybody in here!"

Just then, there was a lot of shouting and several youths poured into the restaurant, shouting and swearing. I placed my burger down on the table and glared at the youths.

"You dare disturb these diners or me..." I growled loudly, leaving the rest unsaid, but very clear.

All seven stopped dead and went very silent and very white.

"Time to leave – wrong place..." One said and they all bolted for the door.

I lifted my burger back up for another bite.

"You're the real Hit Girl, all right!" The girl stated loudly.

Just for some peace and quiet, I gave her one of my cards.

"Mommy, mommy, look what Hit Girl gave me..."

..._...

"Please tell me you did not just give a little girl one of those damn cards..." Kick-Ass growled from the Safehouse.

"Am I that obvious?"

"I'm afraid so..."

"Why do I put up with your shit?"

"Because nobody gets you off better..."

It suddenly felt very hot under my mask and the laughter over the comms was not helping! I finished my burger, fries and Dr Pepper, then waved goodbye to my fans... I had barely pulled on my helmet, when I saw the indicator showing where Raven was – she was not far off.

Time for some more fun!

I turned left out of the McDonald's before heading east along West Cermak Road.

There was a tense moment as I drove past the Cicero Police Department – they were not as pro-vigilante as the CPD, but I just received the odd nod from the cops present. At South Cicero Avenue, I made a right turn, heading south. Raven was stationary, only a short distance ahead, on West Ogden Avenue. Half a mile later, I took a right and then another right onto West Ogden Avenue. That was when the whole evening went to shit...

I could see Raven – she was off her motorcycle and standing in the road, just before the junction with West 25th Place and West 26th Street. She had her pistol out and aimed at a man on the ground. As far as I could tell, she had hauled the man out of his car and he was lying on his back, arguing with the New York vigilante.

Then I saw the flash followed by the sound of the crack as Raven shot the man in the head.

Safehouse F

"Holy fuck!"

Battle Guy suddenly sat up straighter as he saw the blatant murder before him. The full colour, high-definition image was being sent directly from the camera on the front of Hit Girl's Ducati Panigale motorcycle.

"Snuff film!" Psyche commented.

"Nobody kills in my City!" Hit Girl growled.

As we watched, the car – a yellow Mustang – bolted forwards with the rear wheels spinning on the blacktop before gripping and sending the car down West 26th Street at speed. Raven seemed oblivious to anything around her and she did not seem to have seen Hit Girl as she swung herself smoothly onto her Yamaha Super Ténéré.

She took off after the Mustang. For a moment the camera wobbled as Hit Girl applied power and the Panigale shot forwards in pursuit, rapidly passing through 20mph, 30mph, 40mph and on to 70mph.

"What the fuck is going on?" Psyche enquired.

"No idea, kid, but I'm sending their position to Kick-Ass and his team..." Battle Guy replied.

West 26th Street

The Mustang was snaking through traffic with Raven glued to its ass...

I hoped the kid was good, otherwise she was going to die at the speeds that we were riding. What was so important about that dead man? Who was he and who was in that Mustang?

"Battle Guy – get Rhino up to find out who that dead guy is..."

"Psyche's talking to him now..."

All covered as usual! I had to concentrate on avoiding obstacles – I had to stop her before she killed herself and... Oh fuck! I almost T-boned a bus at the junction of South Pulaski Road... I lost precious time as I was forced to come to a snatch clenching stop before accelerating away again. At least I had no need to keep the bitch in sight – the tracker provided her position for me.

The only good thing to say for the entire chase was that West 26th Street was very straight... We raced for three miles before the road angled from its easterly course towards northeast and became South Blue Island Avenue at South Western Avenue. By that time, I was level with Raven and I tried to wave her down, but she ignored me, or she just plain did not see me. She seemed very intent on finishing the chase.

..._...

I was getting more and more concerned by the chase – hey I loved speed too, but I was not stupid! By this time, the CPD had become involved and a car tried to head off the Mustang, but it was smashed off to one side by the driver. As I flashed past, I was glad to see that the two officers were unhurt.

The South Ashland Avenue junction with West Cermak Road and South Blue Island Avenue was a five-point junction and busy at most times of the day. The Mustang driver leant on his horn and swerved through the traffic attracting similar horn blasts from the other drivers. He narrowly avoided colliding with a CTA bus and was forced onto the grounds of Juarez High School, where he took off through the park heading for West 21st Street.

Raven weaved in between the cars and I tried to cut her off, but she turned and looked directly at me, but then accelerated away.

"I'm gonna fucking kill her!" I growled.

"Let's just try and find out what's goin' on first..." Kick-Ass cut in quite reasonably.

"The way she's going she'll kill herself, Hit Girl..." Battle Guy reasoned.

The Mustang blazed out of the park and straight over West 21st Street narrowly avoiding passing cars. Raven slowed, as did I, as we continued up South Blue Island Avenue in a north-easterly direction.

..._...

At West 18th Street, Raven's luck began to run out as she swerved and skidded into the side of a CTA bus, but she seemed uninjured and she continued her pursuit after the bus had moved out of the way. The Mustang's luck also seemed to running out as it was driving slower than before and I could see steam coming from under the bonnet and there was an oil trail on the road – which I was doing my best to avoid.

Raven was close to the Mustang's tail and I was close behind her as we blazed under the railroad at West 16th Street. The sound of our exhausts echoed and reverberated around as we shot through the underpass. On the other side, I received a warning.

"District 12 has a stop-stick deployed ahead of you!" Battle Guy called.

The District 12 Headquarters was approaching on the left and I could see flashing blue lights as the Mustang approached. I saw the cop with the stop-stick and he caught the Mustang on the front left tyre by the looks of things. The same cop rapidly pulled the stop-stick out of the way when he recognised me approaching and he waved... he had also pulled it away before Raven was caught.

..._...

Everything in my brain kept saying: 'Danger, Hit Girl, Danger!' For once, I was going to listen to my own instincts before the wrong people died.

"Standby for lights out!" I called, seeing that both Jackal and Shadow were in place.

As expected the Mustang turned right onto West Roosevelt Road, losing speed as it struggled to steer with one destroyed tyre. We were approaching the 'University of Illinois at Chicago' campus when I accelerated ahead of Raven and cut in front, forcing her to slam on her brakes. Jackal and Shadow moved to box her in.

"Lights out!" I growled and several miles away a button was pushed at the Safehouse.

What the fuck was she playing at?

She cut me up! Two more motorcycles appeared and every time I swerved to get around Hit Girl and her purple motorcycle, I was blocked by Jackal or Shadow. Then all of a sudden the dash before me cut out and then the engine began to surge and cough before dying and nothing happened when I hit the starter. I coasted to a stop on the median of West Roosevelt Road – it was them – they fucking did this!

"What the fuck did you do?" I yelled, pulling out my pistol and pointing it directly at Hit Girl.

She did not even look at me, she just looked at Jackal.

"Sort your bitch out!"

With that, Hit Girl was gone in a squeal of rubber and I turned my pistol on Shadow.

..._...

I climbed off my motorcycle and placed it onto its stand. Jackal and Shadow did the same.

"Cut it the fuck out!" Shadow growled and she ripped the pistol from my hands. "You'll get it back when you learn to behave and grow the fuck up!"

"Fuck you!" I retorted.

I was beyond angry – this fucking Fusion had lost me my fucking trail! I reached for my sword.

"Don't..." Jackal said with a shake of his canine head.

I punched him, hard in the chest and he almost fell backwards but he braced himself. That was when Shadow flipped me over and I crashed to the ground on my back.

"Hey, Raven – calm the fuck down..." She hissed.

Jackal made to help me up, but I ignored his offered hand.

"Stay the fuck away from me, Jackal – why the hell should I trust you?"

..._...

I saw Jackal hang his head for a moment and then he reached up to the base of his mask before speaking again, only this time the electronically altered voice was gone.

"Because... Because, I'm somebody who cares for you... I know who you are Raven; I have for a while now..."

Joshua! I stared at him for a moment before replying. He knew who I was – no big deal and he had given away his own identity to help me. I reached out with my gloved hand and allowed him to pull me to my feet.

Just then, Shadow came into my line of sight and I studied the slim figure in the combat suit – it had to be Chloe.

The Mustang had managed to travel another two-thirds of a mile before expiring.

I found the car at the side of the street, near to the South Branch of Chicago River. I stopped and parked my Ducati, removing my helmet. A large man appeared from the Mustang. He seemed pissed some reason!

"Who the fuck are you and why is Raven after you?" I growled angrily.

"How would I know – she killed my partner..."

"You are coming with me – dead or alive, but preferably alive; I like to play with my food before I kill it..."

"Fuck that!" The man said loudly.

He turned to run, but his jaw came into contact with a very ridged gauntlet.

"Oops!" Kick-Ass commented as he gazed down at the unconscious man.

"Is my motorcycle fucked?"

"Nah..." Jackal replied. "It'll be back to normal in a few minutes."

He was right – within five minutes the engine was running as if nothing had happened.

"Neat trick!" I growled as I pulled on my helmet.

Shadow and Jackal did the same. My mind was reeling as I considered what had just happened. I had lost that man, but I had discovered a big secret. What would my Aunt and Uncle say? Maybe, they would not have to know...

"Okay," Jackal said as he started the engine on his Triumph motorcycle. "Time to see inside your Safehouse – you leading, or am I?"

"I'll lead!"

A half hour later

Raven Nest

I led the two vigilantes into the warehouse and parked alongside the RV.

I saw my Uncle appear with a pump-action shotgun in his hands and aim the weapon directly at Jackal. I quickly stood directly in the line of fire and raised my hands. My Uncle looked pissed, but he lowered the weapon.

"You had better have a damn good reason for this..."

"I do," I said as I pulled off my helmet, wig and domino mask.

My Uncle's eyes went wide as I exposed my identity to the two vigilantes who after a moment's hesitation did the same, removing their own helmets and masks. Aunt Em appeared beside her husband with obvious concern etched into her expression.

"Uncle John, Aunt Em – please meet Joshua and Chloe..."

"That Joshua?" Aunt Em enquired.

"Yes, the Joshua from New York..."

"The one you used to talk about in your sleep?" Aunt Em persisted.

"Yes – that one – can we change the subject, please?"

"You are Shadow and Jackal," Uncle John stated.

"We are – Marcus said that we could trust you both," Josh said conversationally.

..._...

After handshakes were exchanged, I took a moment to examine the Fusion body armour up close, including the weapons.

"You two are awesome vigilantes..." I commented and I was surprised to see Chloe blush.

"I don't know about awesome..." She muttered.

"Mr Newton, our boss has invited you to bring your, err..."

"... Raven Nest..." I interjected and Chloe chuckled.

"... Raven Nest, to a more secure location. We should leave it for another half-hour and then move out – can you pack up that quickly?" Josh finished.

"Yes, we can."

Chapter 256*: Raven Resolute

Wednesday Night

Safehouse D

The large door slid shut behind us as we followed the two motorcycles into the darkness.

For a moment, I felt panic rising, but I pushed the feeling down – I trusted Josh explicitly. After a short pause, the lights came up and I immediately recognised the enormous bulk of Titan and several other vehicles including a big-rig and a trailer. I also recognised two people standing beside another armoured vehicle – neither were wearing body armour, but they were both very familiar. I climbed down from Raven Nest and walked forward, conscious of the enormous form of Kick-Ass standing off to one side, a wicked looking assault rifle in his hands.

"Hello, Mindy – good to see you again," I said receiving a smile in return before turning to the man beside her. "You too, Mr Williams."

"Call me Marcus, Morgan."

"Christ!" Uncle John said as he walked over to his friend. "This kind of explains a few things..."

"A lot to take in, John – you too, Emily."

"Thank you for protecting our wayward girl," Aunt Em said.

"Oh, I'm used to wayward girls!" Marcus chuckled and I saw Mindy scowl.

Kick-Ass lowered his rifle and he removed his mask.

"Dave, Dave Lizewski," he said as he held out his hand. "Otherwise known as Kick-Ass!"

I saw Mindy roll her eyes and mutter, "Dumbass".

"Morgan, Morgan Hella – otherwise known as Red Raven."

I took his hand and shook it.

I found myself being led down a long corridor.

My Aunt and Uncle were back with Marcus and I was following Mindy, Dave, Josh and Chloe. I had no idea where I was going, but I had been told to bring my mask. Finally, we emerged into a corridor beside an elevator.

"Welcome to Safehouse F, Morgan!" Josh said as a door released and we passed into a glass enclosure.

"Oh, wow..." Was all I could say.

Chloe placed her hand against a glass panel and a glass door clicked opened. I walked through into a large area that had been literally cut from the rock beneath Chicago. I took in everything I could but struggled with information overload. Then I found Mindy in my face; the smile was gone – she looked pissed.

"Now the touchy-feely happy moment is over, I want to kick your fucking ass!"

With that, Mindy seized my arm and all but dragged me up some steel stairs. It never occurred to me to struggle, or to reach for my weapons.

Mindy was Hit Girl – I had no defence against her!

..._...

I was pulled along a catwalk and thrown onto a couch in a large open room.

"Where the fuck, do you get off killing in my city?"

It was not quite a yell, but it was still scary – especially as I was being yelled at by somebody with no obvious weapons on show, while I was fully armed and in body armour.

"I held out a hand of friendship to you, but then you tore up Chicago and shot a man dead!"

"He refused to answer my questions..."

"You mean you lost control of the situation?" Mindy asked, calming down slightly.

"Yeah..."

"You could have killed yourself, too. How's your arm – I saw you collide with that bus?"

"Bruised – I've not had a chance to check it yet..."

"There's a bathroom over there, go check yourself out and then we can talk about that cunt you were chasing."

"Did you get him?" I asked excitedly.

"Go sort yourself out and then I'll bring you up to date..."

..._...

When I emerged from the bathroom, I found Chloe waiting for me.

"You okay?" She asked with a tone of genuine concern.

"Just some wicked bruising, but I've had worse!"

"Hit Girl wants us down below..." Chloe advised ominously as she pulled on her mask.

I did the same and followed her, noticing for the first time a very young girl, maybe eight or nine, watching me. What was a little girl doing in the Safehouse? I also noticed that the girl had a small pistol in a holster clipped to the belt of her jeans. I was watched all the way down the first set of stairs and then again as we went down another set of stairs.

"Don't mind her – she's British!" Shadow commented as if it explained everything...

We passed a large glazed in exercise area and then passed through a door with an ominous sign: 'Interrogation and Holding'.

Raven went for the door handle, but I caught her and waved her to the side.

"No weapons inside – leave it all in a locker," I advised, pointing at several large lockers mounted outside the door.

I stowed my own weapons, as Raven stowed hers. Next, I placed my hand on the adjacent scanner, the door released and I waved Raven inside.

..._...

Raven stopped dead as I closed the door behind her.

"You got him!" She growled.

On the far side of the room was a small six-foot by ten-foot cell. The cell had a concrete bed built into the wall on one side, a steel toilet and a steel sink. The front of the cell was formed by steel bars, with a door to the left which was locked. The door could only be released from the Control Centre.

"Oh, great, it's the little girl!" The man growled from the other side of the bars.

"Shut the fuck up, cunt!" Hit Girl growled and the man went silent.

"Raven – meet Harry Stewart."

"I don't wanna meet him – I wanna kill him..." Raven hissed.

"All in good time, my dear Raven," Hit Girl replied. "All in good time..."

"Let's start things right," Hit Girl began. "You are going to answer some questions..."

"Fuck you, bitches!" Stewart growled "That is precisely what I am gonna do to each and every one of you three – I'm gonna fuck you till you fucking eyes pop out and then..."

"Original, very original..." Hit Girl drawled, cutting him off.

Then Stewart spa through the bars, his effluent landing on Hit Girl's armoured chest. Hit Girl just looked up at the camera, nodded, and there was a dull click from the door to the cell, which slid open soundlessly.

..._...

Before the man could react, Hit Girl reached in and using her considerable strength, she dragged the man out and smacked his head down hard on the top of the wooden table outside of the cell. The unfortunate man yelled out in pain. Hit Girl leant down so her mouth was only inches from his left ear.

"You listen and you listen good. Answer the questions, and I won't kill you. Don't answer the questions..."

Harry Stewart screamed as Hit Girl drove a small throwing knife through the back of his hand into the top of the table.

"Let me tell you a story..." Shadow began. "There was a twelve-year-old-girl and she was tucked up safely in her bed at home. That night, some bad men broke in and they attacked her parents before trying to rape that little girl. However, that little girl was very, very brave and she fought back..."

I felt a little embarrassed by Shadow's comments, but I was pleased that she approved of what I had done all those years previously. I hated recalling that night, but I could understand Shadow's reasons for bringing it up.

"... She killed a man, but two others escaped – do you want to stand in the way of that girl's revenge for her dead parents?"

The man thought through his pain and I saw fear in his eyes. I had recognised it the moment Shadow had mentioned the two that had escaped – he was the second man.

I moved towards the man and he flinched.

The following morning
Thursday

North Park Elementary School

"Miss Lizewski!"

Huh, what?

"Miss Lizewski, are you on the same planet as the rest of us?"

There were giggles from some of the other fourth-grade girls and I could see some exaggerated eye-rolling from the boys.

"Err, yes, miss."

I scowled at the boys – they irked me! I also felt myself blushing in response to the giggling.

"I hope I am not boring you, young lady..."

"Steph, is not a lady, miss," a boy called out with a snigger, triggering some general laughter.

"Thank you, Mister Evans!"

"Yes – thanks, Jackson!" I growled.

Later that day, I sat down in the lunch room just as I had done at noon each day for the previous six weeks, since I had started at the school.

Fourth grade was boring, at least I thought so, which meant that my mind tended to drift off and it tried to fill itself with something much more exciting. I preferred to run through the intricacies of taking a Glock pistol to pieces rather than the Distributive Property of Multiplication in Maths – I, like Joshua, refused to call it 'Math'!

I was soon joined by four other kids – they seemed to have gravitated toward me over the past couple of weeks, no idea why. Each was in my grade and I quickly saw them as my friends.

I glared at Jackson Evans; a slim ten-year-old brown-haired boy.

"I can be a lady, thank you very much, Jackson!"

"I was only kidding, Steph..."

"We're still trying to figure you out, girl," nine-year-old Alison 'Ali' Johns commented.

"You're a British kid in an American city – you're an oddity," Ali explained.

"Okay... Oh, hi Megan," I called out as Megan walked past with her friends – she nodded and smiled at me.

"You know her?" Craig James asked.

"She's my Aunt," I explained to the blond-haired kid.

"Wow – she's violent; you know that, don't you?" Katherine 'Katy' Evans asked.

"Yes – I do," I laughed. "But, what can I say..."

"I've seen you with that girl, the one in second grade who keeps getting into fights – what's her name?" Ali asked.

I laughed.

"That would be Anne-Marie – she's my little sister and she has a twin – Danny."

"You're nice, Steph – just a little strange!" Jackson commented and I smiled.

"Jeez – just tell him you fancy him, Steph..."

"What?" I growled at Anne-Marie as she walked past. "Second graders are not allowed in this part of the lunch room – so get!"

Anne-Marie smirked as she walked away.

"She says your name in her sleep, Jackson!" She called out as she then ran back to her table.

Safehouse D
Raven Nest

I paced backwards and forwards and I had done since I had woken up that morning.

"Problem?"

I turned to see Mindy coming towards me from the direction of the tunnel that led to Safehouse F. I was alone – my Aunt and Uncle were with Marcus and a guy called Jack Bay. My mind was troubled – between my information and that of Mindy, I had captured the second man and we knew where the killer of my parents was.

I wanted to kill them both, but a part of me said that I should hand them both over to Special Agent Gibbs.

"What do I do, Mindy – my heart says kill them both..."

"I know this one – your brain says hand them over to justice; a difficult choice and one that I have fought with many times over the years."

"So...?"

Mindy sighed.

"I can't make the decision for you, Morgan – that is for you to decide... I know, it's a lot for a sixteen-year-old girl to cope with," Mindy replied after a minute's thought. "I had to make these decisions on my own, after my Daddy died; I had nobody else – at least until Dave appeared on the scene."

"Thanks for nothing!" I groused with a forced smile.

The following morning
Friday

Glenview

"You sure about this, Steph?"

"Yeah, Mum – I want to fit in..."

"If you say so – it's up to you."

"Oh – this is good..." Anne-Marie laughed as she entered the kitchen. "What are you wearing?"

"A skirt – what about it?" I responded, feeling a little shy. "I'm a girl..."

I was wearing a navy blue skirt that fell to just below my knees, plus tights of the same colour.

"I keep forgetting that..." Anne-Marie commented. "It's only when I see you in the shower that I notice you are, in fact, a girl!"

"Get back to your cereal, you terrible tike!" Mindy laughed as I blushed.

Anne-Marie did just that.

"I bet Jackson will like the skirt..." Danny cut in and I felt my face explode into flames and I tried to hide my face from Dave and Mindy.

"Tell us more, Stephanie," Dave chuckled.

I scowled.

"He's a boy in my class – and we are just friends..."

"So were Mindy and I..." Dave chuckled.

"I will kick your little bottom so hard, Anne-Marie!"

Safehouse F

"Where's Marty?"

"He's in the Data Core, next door," Abby commented.

I headed through to Safehouse E and meandered through the corridors and then down two levels until I reached a steel door. I placed the palm of my right hand onto an adjacent scanner and the door released. I found myself facing a glass door beyond which was a mass of flickering lights and my master technology expert. He released the lock on the glass door and I entered the Fusion Data Core.

On my left were several racks, all loaded with servers and storage devices. This was the Primary Data Core – we had three others. The Secondary Data Core was in New York, the Tertiary Data Core was in Gotham, while the fourth was in the UK. Marty and Abby called them, Alfa, Bravo, Charlie and Delta respectively.

To the right, Marty had a large work area. All around him were new servers and a multitude of spare parts, including some items awaiting repair. However, directly ahead lay a steel cage, within which Marty was currently working. You entered via a mesh 'air lock'. The cage was designed to prevent all signals from any devices getting out to the outside world. That would be very difficult as we were over a hundred feet below tonnes of rock, steel and concrete, but we took no chance's!

"Having fun?" I asked.

"Rebuilding the RAID array was not easy, but the hard drives we seized from the CIA Safehouse should provide us with some decent intelligence – once decrypted of course."

That evening

Glenview

"I hate her!"

"Hate who, honey?" Dave asked.

"Her!"

I turned to see Stephanie pointing at Anne-Marie who froze, her eyes wide at Stephanie's expression of loathing. Anne-Marie looked like the proverbial rabbit in the headlights. What could the girl have done to her sister?

"The bitch humiliated me – in front of my friends. I am never wearing this damn skirt again!"

"If you hate her so much, kill her..." I suggested, smirking at Dave who just shook his head slowly.

"What!" Anne-Marie exclaimed as she dropped her school bag and bolted for the stairs.

Stephanie calmed down and looked up at me. She smiled before she spoke.

"That was nasty – you know that I would never hurt that girl..." she began then stopped. "... Oh very good – love the psychology there..."

"Just scare her a bit – but don't go too far... The skirt suits you; don't let the little scamp get to you," I advised.

..._...

I found her in her bedroom.

"What are you going to do to me?"

"What do you think I should do to you?"

Anne-Marie was squirming and looked worried.

"I'm sorry – I couldn't help it... You know I have a cruel streak and I saw you blushing when Jackson commented on how he liked your skirt..."

"You will be very sorry," I replied, doing my best to suppress a smile.

Now, the girl looked scared – I could not do it...

"Just fucking with you... I know you didn't mean it and I know that you know I would never hurt you."

"You do look good in the skirt, Steph – I mean that."

"But you still have to pay for humiliating me..."

By the time I reached the top of the stairs, I heard laughter.

I found Anne-Marie being tickled by her big sister and Stephanie was relentless. Danny had been attracted by the noise and he was laughing as his twin wriggled and screamed on the floor. He did not have his twin sister's cruel streak, but he enjoyed seeing her suffering in ways that would not hurt her.

Life in the Lizewski household was never dull!

Synopsis: Stephanie, aka Psyche, was part of a US Government experiment, codenamed Urban Predator. The aim of the experiment was to produce assassins and educate them from a very young age. The experiment was compromised and ultimately abandoned, leaving the last two victims alone to deal with their altered minds. One of the victims was Miranda Swedlow, aka Night-Bitch, aka Aurora. She knew that only one person could help her and that person was Dave Lizewski, aka Kick-Ass. On hearing about Stephanie and her lost childhood, Mindy Lizewski, aka Hit Girl, began another crusade, this time to destroy those responsible for destroying yet another young girl's childhood.

"Alexander Cartwright. You fought his team the other day – just got facial recognition on him. Turns out the guy is on Mindy's watch list..."

...+..._...+..._...+...

"I can't go into detail . . . I need to brief you in person . . . I'm coming to see you..."

...+..._...+..._...+...

With that, I ran over the bridge and elbowed the first man in the face – he carried what looked suspiciously like a four-foot long fence post!

...+..._...+..._...+...

"No more?" Jackal enquired enthusiastically.

"Wait until the pubs turn out, then you'll have plenty..."

...+..._...+..._...+...

"Eight against twenty-seven – hardly seems fair . . . for them."

...+..._...+..._...+...

I quickly severed both hands on the up-swing and stabbed him through the heart with my Tanto. I turned to take down the third man, but he was already falling – strangely his head seemed to hover before following the rest of his body.

...+..._...+..._...+...

...the situation quickly escalates...

...+..._...+..._...+...

"Waterloo Station, south entrance, thirty minutes..."

"Who is this?"

"They call me Hit Girl..."

...+..._...+..._...+...

"We're safe, Dad . . . Mindy's driving..."

"Do I hear sirens? Are you being chased?"

"Not exactly... Mindy's driving a Police car and we're doing fifty towards Marylebone and Paddington with blues and twos..."

...+..._...+..._...+...

The pair of red-painted BMW X5 Police SUVs appeared out of nowhere, just as we reached a fairly clear section of road, both SUVs heading directly towards us.

...+..._...+..._...+...

...and then after a member of their team is kidnapped...

...+..._...+..._...+...

"I don't know who you are, I don't know what you want. If you are looking for ransom, I can tell you I don't have money. But what I do have are a very particular set of skills, skills I have acquired over a very long career. Skills that make me a nightmare for people like you. If you let the girl go now, that'll be the end of it. I will not look for you; I will not pursue you. But if you don't, I will look for you, I will find you, and I will kill you."

...+..._...+..._...+...

...they travel to continental Europe where they meet new vigilantes...

...+..._...+..._...+...

As of 2016, real vigilantes existed in Chicago, New York City, Gotham and Star City. As for Europe, there was a new vigilante organisation growing in Scotland, while on the main continent, there was just one known real vigilante – and she was in Paris...

"Bonne soirée, Hit Girl!"

I turned slowly to see a slim figure crouched on the rooftop, not twenty feet away. I smiled on recognising one of the very few other, serious, vigilantes that operated in the world.

...+..._...+..._...+...

...and tour (actually, fight across) Europe, beginning with France...

...+..._...+..._...+...

"You hungry, Steph?"

"Hell, yeah!"

"Killing gives you an appetite, doesn't it?"

...+..._...+..._...+...

The Audi RS6 executed a perfect power slide as it hit the Place Charles de Gaulle that encircled the Arc de Triomphe. The red RS3 promptly followed suit, determined not to be out-done. But before the blue RS3 could follow, an unmarked grey Citroen C5 with blue lights appeared.

...+..._...+..._...+...

We came around a corner and found eight French National Police RAID Officers and they instantly raised their rifles toward us.

"Arrêtez! Levez vos mains!"

...+..._...+..._...+...

...they race to recover their kidnapped colleague...

...+..._...+..._...+...

The girl hung from the ceiling in the centre of the room. Her once beautiful, naked body, all five-feet-seven-inches of it, was now covered in bruises and blood from head to toe. She was unconscious, her long brown hair hanging free, her skin covered in sweat from her ordeal. The room stank, from the pool of urine at the young girl's feet as well as from the sweat and blood.

...+..._...+..._...+...

...before it is too late...

...+..._...+..._...+...

The man held up a piece of copper rod, about two-foot-long and two inches in diameter with a wooden handle. There was a length of electrical cable attached to the rod and it seemed very obvious where the rod was going to be inserted.

...+..._...+..._...+...

...no limits are set to finding her...

...+..._...+..._...+...

"We need some questions answered. You cooperate and we all go home – you don't cooperate; I get to have some fun. So please, don't cooperate..."

...+..._...+..._...+...

The drill span up to speed and rapidly cut through the flesh of the man's thigh. He screamed, as the blood streamed from the wound and there was a grating noise as the drill bit found the bone and easily cut through and continued until the chuck was half an inch from the man's bruised skin.

...+..._...+..._...+...

"Now, what many people don't know is that it takes skill to electrocute somebody, where only pain is inflicted, but not death. Well, not immediately anyway..."

...+..._...+..._...+...

...the team visit other countries: Germany...

...+..._...+..._...+...

"Dad?"

"Yeah, honey?"

"Why is Mom smirking like that – it's scaring me..."

Mindy began to put her foot down . . . she held it there. We flashed past a blue Audi RS3 as we approached 152 kilometres-per-hour. We were rapidly passing 200kph and advancing on 250kph . . . I studied the fuel gauge as we slowed.

"After that gas guzzling exercise, we had better stop for gas, sweetheart, or we're walking!"

...+..._...+..._...+...

It was red from hood to trunk and it somehow made a Mustang look like a Model-T Ford in comparison. The car had a 6.2-litre supercharged V8 engine and could rocket past 155 mph, reaching sixty in 4.2 seconds. Sitting on black 20-inch alloy wheels, I was getting wet just staring at the subtle curves and muscular shape of the hood and flared wheel arches...

...+..._...+..._...+...

...Switzerland and Italy...

...+..._...+..._...+...

Stephanie screamed as several bullets struck her chest. I pulled out my pistol and emptied the magazine into the man as he came towards us. As the man fell to the tarmac, I switched out the empty magazine for a loaded one and turned to Stephanie who was writhing in pain.

...+..._...+..._...+...

"You're forgetting who your mother is!" I chuckled.

Mindy walked over to the RS3, calmly opened the passenger door and pulled the pins from a pair of grenades before dumping both of them inside the car. She casually closed the door, locked the RS3, walked around to the other side of the RS6 and calmly climbed in.

"Better move, Dave!"

...+..._...+..._...+...

"Orange juice for the lady, and a medium-dry vodka Martini for myself, shaken – not stirred..."

"You must be Mindy; Harm was nowhere near the mark when he told me how beautiful you are . . . Deputy Director Clayton Webb . . . Mindy Lizewski, please meet MI6's best agent..."

...+..._...+..._...+...

Abby was standing astride a man.

"You want to assimilate my data?" She yelled as she drew her pistol. "Assimilate this!"

...+..._...+..._...+...

...Fusion goes back to sea...

...+..._...+..._...+...

Chloe watched the large yacht departing with their prey.

The yacht was huge!

"We'll catch 'em..." Mindy said confidently.

"You know, Mindy, if we're gonna be chasing that thing – you're gonna need a bigger boat!"

Mindy smirked and Chloe groaned, "What have you done...?"

As if on cue, Mindy turned seaward and Chloe stared as a behemoth came around the headland at speed. Within two minutes, it had passed through the breakwater and was soon backing down hard as it spun and slowly came alongside the dock.

"No fucking way!"

...+..._...+..._...+...

Once free of the shore, we increased speed to thirty-five knots . . . the pursuit had begun...

...+..._...+..._...+...

"Okay, people – this is not a pleasure cruise . . . I want you all familiar with this vessel, her electronic systems and her weapons systems..."

...+..._...+..._...+...

Stephanie and Megan screamed as they flew backwards and fell the ten feet to the water.

...+..._...+..._...+...

"Get the fuck off me!" I growled. "What's going on?"

I tried to scramble towards the door as Dave responded.

"Damned if I know, but I think we're sinking!"

..+..._...+..._...+...

The forward M134 mini-guns ripped out... After several bursts there was a large explosion...

..+..._...+..._...+...

...reinforcements are required...

...+..._...+..._...+...

I saw four people advancing towards me down the sidewalk.

"Mindy!" Curtis called out and he hugged me tightly.

"Hi, Mindy," Morgan said with a grin.

"How's the family?" I asked the third person.

"Doing well, Mindy," Kim replied, giving me a hug.

The fourth person seemed much more apprehensive.

"Hi, SD – welcome to Gibraltar."

...+..._...+..._...+...

Leaning against the glacier white Clio RenaultSport, was a stunning young woman. Her hair was black, with pale blue highlights and hung loosely across her shoulders.

"Nice!" Joshua commented.

"The car or the French tart?" Chloe enquired with menace in her tone.

"The car – definitely the car..."

"Bonjour mes amis!"

...+..._...+..._...+...

...there is tragedy...

...+..._...+..._...+...

"I'm so sorry Mindy – she was thrown... Her neck's broken."

...+..._...+..._...+...

"Grenade!"

Trojan's yell caused all heads to turn in his direction. The explosive device flew through the air. Trojan was moving, running hard towards Wildcat – he shoved her out of the way hard, sending her rolling across the road.

...+..._...+..._...+...

My gaze fixed on the point of the blade, but then his left hand came up and he punched me in the right breast. The pain was immense and I screamed out and struggled to breathe. He followed up with a punch to my stomach, which caused me to struggle to breathe and I coughed for a few minutes before the pain and sensation went away.

...+..._...+..._...+...

"Yes, she'll be fine."

"She saved our lives, didn't she...?"

"Yes, she did – I am very proud of her."

...+..._...+..._...+...

"Why?"

"I had to protect you..."

"No – you can't die..."

"It happens and you know that..."

...+..._...+..._...+...

Mindy and Dave stopped at what was obviously a fresh grave. I froze as I saw the gravestone.

"When did...? How did...?"

"After she died, I used my contacts to have her body recovered and repatriated."

"Thank you."

...+..._...+..._...+...

...there is happiness...

...+..._...+..._...+...

I was being carried and as I looked up, opening my eyes I suddenly became overcome with relief as I recognised Kick-Ass. The dam broke and I sobbed, tears streaming down my face and my body wracked with pain as I sobbed. They had come for me – Fusion had come for me. I pushed my face into his armoured chest, savouring the comfort.

...+..._...+..._...+...

I felt immense relief as two of the four most important people in my life climbed down from the bullet-riddled vehicle. I ran forwards and grasped both of them into an enormous hug, gripping them tightly. I felt two more people joining the hug, which seemed to go on for ever.

...+..._...+..._...+...

...there is pleasure...

...+..._...+..._...+...

"In the past three weeks, I've had sex in six countries..."

...+..._...+..._...+...

...there is revenge...

...+..._...+..._...+...

Both girls were out of control, and I knew it – but I did nothing to stop them. They needed the outlet and they needed the closure. The woman looked towards me for help, but I just stared at her, showing no emotion, except maybe hate. There were still the sounds of sporadic gunfire in the corridors as the final few were routed.

...+..._...+..._...+...

"You made me kill my family..." Stephanie growled angrily, her face contorted and red with rage.

...+..._...+..._...+...

...there is closure...

...+..._...+..._...+...

"You made me what I am... You made me a killer... Now, I am going to kill you... Poetic, isn't it!"

...+..._...+..._...+...

...Hit Girl, Kick-Ass, and Fusion race to take down the worst criminal scum, as that very same criminal scum try desperately to defend themselves and take down Fusion while keeping the furious and vengeful Hit Girl and her lethal team at arm's length.

"What the fuck, is 'The Fusion Ultimatum'?"

"Damned if I know, Steph!"

"We going on a trip to Europe, Dave?"

"Sure looks like it..."

"Mindy drives a Police Car – that sounds dangerous!"

"Hey! I'm a good driver..."

"Ooh – somebody gets kidnapped; doesn't say who, though... There's a French vigilante?"

"Don't look at me, Steph – I don't write this shit; probably some British nut!"

"Torture and Abby gets pissed – awesome!"

"Our daughter is a tad violent, Dave!"

"Ha – point proven; you hit high speed and scare the shit out of Anne-Marie..."

"Oh dear, Steph – you seem to be in for a lot of pain!" Mindy retorted with a smirk.

"Unlike you, Hit Wimp, I can take it... Another boat?"

"Yacht, Steph, get it right," Dave corrected his daughter.

"Mega-yacht – get it right - Dave!" Mindy insisted.

"Sorry, Mum! Looks like you sink us, too... On no, somebody dies; maybe more than one... You have a lot of sex – let me be the first to say: ewww!"

"You get revenge..."

"Where?"

"France, I think..."

"No – in the story..."

"Down there, near the end... probably around Chapter 30 or so."

"Cool – I can live with revenge . . . and closure – I like the sound of that."

"Sounds a lot of fun..."

"Sounds expensive, Mindy..."

"Always the voice of defiance, Dave – we've got Stephanie's swear jar..."

"Fucking bitch!"

"Stephanie! Dollar, jar..."

. . . and back to the real story . . .

Saturday morning

Safehouse F

I glared at the three youngsters who stood defiantly before me – two seven-year-olds and a thirteen-year-old.

We were standing in the armoury at the Safehouse. I smiled over at my new trainer before speaking.

"Welcome to Vigilante Elementary School!" I began. "I am going to leave you three in the very capable hands of my new instructor – you will follow all her instructions, to the letter! Any violations and you will not be allowed to train... All three of you will start at the bottom and work your way up, understand?"

"Yes, Mindy," Nightmare replied.

"Yes, Mom," Ravage added.

"Yes, Hit Girl!" The other one offered.

"I'll pass you over to your instructor, then – they are all yours, Foxtail!"

The fourteen-year-old girl was perfect for the task. She had an enormous amount of knowledge stashed away in her head and I had three fresh minds that needed filling. I wanted to show Saoirse that I trusted her and what better way to do that, than placing her in charge of my very own kids!

..._...

"Okay, shitheads – time for some work! Nightmare, Rogue and Ravage – forget any pre-conceptions you may have had about becoming a vigilante, an assassin, or some superhero. I will teach you the easy way and if that doesn't work – then it will be the hard way and you won't like the hard way. Hit Girl says that as long as you can walk and breathe when it is time for you little kiddies to go home, any other injuries are allowed!"

"What?" Rogue exclaimed.

"Rogue – one lap of the Safehouse – I did not say you could talk!"

Rogue did not move.

"Maybe two laps will remind you to keep your big trap shut and to follow orders!"

"Mom!"

I smirked and walked out of the armoury, ignoring Anne-Marie.

"Three laps..." Came Saoirse's Irish lilt.

"Jeez!"

My daughter ran past, throwing a dirty look over her shoulder, directly at me – I stuck out my tongue and laughed.

..._...

"You sure you want people like Saoirse and me training those three?" Stephanie asked as I climbed the steel steps. "Our training methods may be a little severe..."

"You forget, I had you training with real bombs next door and butt naked!" I reminded Stephanie as we both watched Anne-Marie on her second lap around the Safehouse. She was being jeered by those on the mat – Megan, Curtis and Tommy.

"Put that finger away and do a fourth lap!" I called down to my youngest daughter and grinned at the scowl which formed on her face.

"So, how did the first morning go?" I asked the three kids.

"I don't really know – I spent most of the morning doing laps around the goddamn Safehouse!" Rogue growled.

"I know," I replied with an evil smirk. "Sixteen wasn't it?"

"Fifteen!"

"Well, you still have one more to do then..."

Rogue was learning fast, as she said nothing but just turned around dejectedly and began jogging around the Safehouse.

"Ravage managed two laps and Nightmare managed six," Foxtail reported.

"Anybody ready to quit?" I enquired.

"No chance!" Nightmare replied and I could see fire burning in her eyes – good.

"I'll let you know..." Ravage added.

After lunch, they had another session.

Anne-Marie had calmed down and was not misbehaving so much. I was impressed by Saoirse and her teaching; she was very good at it. I took a moment to sit in on the lesson that she was giving in the briefing room.

A not-very-amused Joshua was standing before the three younger kids. Megan and Stephanie were smirking at the back of the room and giggling quietly as Saoirse lectured away, using Joshua for her demonstrations.

"... There are certain points on the body – both male and female – which you can use as targets: the groin..."

Even I laughed when Saoirse smacked her hand against Joshua's crotch – without warning!

"... Works with the girls too... Stand up you damn idiot! The kneecap can be stomped on, or kicked sideways to disable the legs..."

Joshua was kicked, gently, in the side of his left knee, causing him to sink to the carpet. I saw him grimacing, but he gamely continued to play the game. Stephanie and Megan were almost unable to control their laughter, which was also getting louder.

"... Punch here..."

Joshua was struck in the armpit and he yelled out in pain.

"... Hit the nose..."

"Fuck off, bitch!" Joshua growled, fending off the inbound punch.

"You can also slap the ears..." Josh growled, slapping Saoirse around her ears, which then provoked a swift response.

"A quick strike into the adam's apple is debilitating too..." Saoirse added with a grin as Josh coughed gently and rubbed his throat. "Poke out the eyes – very painful... The instep of the foot and toes are also good targets..."

Saoirse grabbed Joshua's left leg, again without warning and he fell to the carpet with a thud and a foul stream of oaths. I was certain that Megan and Stephanie were going to piss themselves by this point, they were laughing so hard.

Mind you, I was a little more concerned with controlling my own bladder as I laughed.

I had not had such a fun day in a long time.

I was grateful to Mindy for giving me the chance and being placed in charge of training her kids had not gone unnoticed. Rogue was just that – rogue! She submitted to her punishments though and I knew from experience that she would always cause trouble, never mind; I had plenty of punishments available. Mindy had told me to be harsh, not soft – they had to learn that what they were getting into was both dangerous and unforgiving.

Stephanie and I had talked about how far we could go – Stephanie had simply suggested no visible bruising!

Joshua was a laugh and he had gamely volunteered to be humiliated by me, but as I understood it, that was what the Brit was like. Were all Brits nuts? Stephanie and Megan had been a minor distraction, pissing themselves with laughter, but I had managed to ignore them – even Mindy had laughed at Joshua's antics!

"I need the bathroom!" Megan yelled out and jumped off the chair before she ran towards the bathroom on the other side of the Safehouse – she giggled most of the way over there!

"Me, too!" Stephanie added and followed Megan.

It was a very different atmosphere than I was used to – even school had been strict. I was able to learn to laugh again, something I had not done much of for many months. They were all friendly towards me, despite knowing what I had almost done to Stephanie and Anne-Marie. After a private conversation with my former enemy, Stephanie had confided in me that she also had been stunned by how welcome she had been made by everybody.

I had a feeling that I would be happy working with Fusion.

"I'm sorry about this – it's kind of tradition in Fusion!"

"What is?" Foxtail enquired, looking up at Dave as he handed her an armoured vest.

"I don't like the look of this..." Nightmare added.

"Mom would never hurt us!" Anne-Marie smiled.

"I don't know about that..." Danny commented. "Why are you grinning, big sister?"

"This is gonna be fun!" Stephanie growled as she helped Danny and Anne-Marie with their armoured vests.

"You're gonna love it!" Mindy growled as she walked out of the armoury, her hands behind her back.

She strode out and faced off against the four kids.

"I'd love to say that I hated doing this, but I would be lying!"

With that, Mindy revealed her hands and the pair of .38-calibre pistols they held. She rattled off four rapid shots, two from each hand and the air was punctuated by four gunshots, followed closely by four screams and then four thuds.

"That was evil!" Saoirse laughed as she rubbed her chest.

"It was fun!" Lauren added.

"I hate you so much right now..." Anne-Marie growled as she sat up, rubbing her own chest.

"Awesome!" Danny said with a smile. "Again!"

That evening

Glenview

"I hate to do this, Stephanie, but it is for the good of everybody, as well as yourself."

"It's not fair; everything was going so well, and I thought you loved me!"

"That is why it must be done... I know it will be hard, very hard, believe me, I know."

"It's fucking child abuse!"

"I'd go so far as to agree that while you are a child, you are not a normal child – believe me, I know, I was nine once – and therefore different rules apply to you."

"That isn't fair... But well-reasoned – damn it..."

"Life is not fair, live with it!" Mindy persisted.

"Okay... I'll do it, if only for a peaceful life..."

"We'll ignore your most recent outbursts... But from now on, it'll cost you a dollar – two for the compound ones..."
Dave added.

My life would never be the same, I thought, as I glared at the jar on the kitchen side. Why the cunt-fuck did I need a goddamn mother-fucking swear jar, anyway?

Bollocks to it!

"You know, Dave, what she's thinking right now would probably add twenty bucks to the jar..." Mindy chuckled to Dave.

I was tempted to respond, but I decided that my limited cash flow would not allow it.

"Night, sis!"

"I hate her!" Anne-Marie growled from under her quilt.

You could always tell when she was in a bad mood, because she would hide under her quilt with just a small opening for her eyes.

"She's just teaching you to follow instructions..."

"Maybe, but I still hate her!"

I ignored her and headed for my bedroom.

"Anne-Marie hates you, SD..."

Saoirse chuckled.

The following morning Sunday

"If nothing else, she's gonna be very fit!"

I did not reply, but chuckled to myself as a certain young girl began yet another lap of the Safehouse. Marty grinned and shook his head as he headed back to the Control Centre. It was Stephanie's turn to take charge and I had to admit, she seemed to know what she was doing...

"Quit the little girl giggling – you are here to learn some serious shit, Rogue. If you're too much of a fucking pussy to cope with that, then you can just fuck off..."

"Hey... You can't talk to me like that!"

Anne-Marie was smirking, which seemed to touch a nerve with Stephanie who strode toward her younger sister, who quickly realised that she may have gone too far... Stephanie grabbed her sister by the t-shirt and lifted her off the mat – Stephanie had strong arms, despite her limited stature.

"I'm trying to keep you alive, you little fuck!" She growled. "If you can't handle it, then being a vigilante ain't for you, kiddie... Six laps."

Stephanie dropped Anne-Marie who began to run around the Safehouse, this time with tears of humiliation streaming down her cheeks.

"Faster!" Stephanie called nastily.

..._...

During the break, I found Stephanie brooding in the galley and I knew why.

"You did nothing wrong, Steph."

"I hated doing it, but I knew that it had to be done, Mindy..."

"I know."

"She hates me..."

"Probably."

"She's avoiding me..."

"Probably – meet me in the Command Centre in a few minutes..."

..._...

I found Anne-Marie sulking over by the shield. I held out a hand to her, but she ignored me.

"Come on – we need to talk..."

"Why?"

"Come with me..."

"I'm not talking to that bitch."

I gave up and just picked the girl up – she struggled furiously, but I pinned her and carried her to the Command Centre where Abby released the door for me.

"What's she doing here?" Anne-Marie spat when she saw Stephanie.

"Go ahead, Stephanie."

"I won't apologise for how I treated you, Anne-Marie – not if it will keep you alive. You know what I was. You know what SD was. I know how the game is played and it is not a game... People die. People get hurt. You want to be a part of what we do – you have to take the good with the bad. Pussy footing around will not keep you alive. I love you and that is why I am being so harsh. You go out there unprepared..."

Stephanie stopped and I could see tears in her eyes. Anne-Marie noticed them too and I saw her expression soften and she looked ashamed by her behaviour.

"Sorry, Steph. Sorry, Mom."

"It's not your fault, Anne-Marie – you're not even eight yet. This is a lot to take in for anybody and you are very young."

"But so were you!"

"So I know what I'm talking about and so does Stephanie."

It had finally struck home.

That afternoon

Glenview

My cell rang – it was Trudy Platt.

"Hi, Trudy!"

There was a pause.

"Mindy, you have a problem..."

Chicago Police Department
District 21

I walked in the main entrance and I saw Sergeant Trudy Platt behind the desk – she nodded to her left, behind me.

I turned to come face to face with two very familiar young girls – both were handcuffed to the bench by their right hands. I turned back to Trudy with a confused expression on my face.

"Assaulting a Police Officer and interfering with an arrest."

"Which one?"

"Both charges, for both of 'em," Trudy replied.

"Mindy! Good of you to come down..."

I turned to come face to face with Hank Voight – he did not look very happy.

"What have Chloe and Megan done, now?" I asked.

"They tried to prevent the arrest of another girl..."

I instantly went on guard...

"Not Stephanie..."

I saw Chloe grimace.

"What's going on? Why wasn't I contacted? Where is she?" I was raging.

"The FBI and ATF are interested in her – it seems she's done something very bad..."

"What could she have done?" I demanded. "She's nine-years-old!"

"We have witnesses that have her purchasing weapons – illegal weapons."

"Can I see her?"

..._...

Hank led me to the holding area where I found Stephanie sitting quietly in a cell. She looked upset, but she was not crying. She jumped up as I came into view.

"Mindy!"

"What's going on, Stephanie?"

"I've been framed – it was not me."

I believed her – I had no reason not to.

"Is this the mother?" A new voice asked.

I turned to see two people walking towards Hank and me. One, a man, wore a trench coat. The other, a woman, wore a smart jacket. They both showed their credentials as they approached.

"Special Agent Fornell, FBI."

"Special Agent Keates, ATF."

"Mindy Lizewski, Mother of Stephanie Lizewski."

"Lieutenant Hank Voight, CPD – now we've all been introduced, let's get down to business and you can tell us why you are chasing a nine-year-old girl!"

"I could ask the same thing, Tobias..."

"Gibbs? What are you doing in Chicago?"

Chapter 259*: Sadness

Sunday Evening

Chicago Police Department District 21

"Okay – it's obvious that the little girl has been framed... She obviously couldn't operate a gun, let alone have contacts to go buy a dozen of 'em."

"Hey, old guy, I am not little!"

"Who are you calling old?" Special Agent Fornell growled as Special Agent Gibbs smirked.

"For the sake of argument; Fornell – you aren't old, Miss Lizewski – you ain't little," Special Agent Gibbs chuckled before he turned to Voight. "Can the girl get bail?"

"Of course," Lieutenant Voight confirmed and he waved for the cell to be opened.

Stephanie ran straight out and gave me a hug.

Glenview

"So you finally made it to jail . . . not surprised, really."

"Hey, it was not my fucking..."

"Stop it, you two – Anne-Marie, leave your sister alone; she's done nothing wrong!" I growled, making my point very clear and the younger girl flinched, then ran for the stairs.

I then turned on the other two girls who physically stepped backwards away from me.

"As for you two... I applaud you both for wanting to protect the nine-year-old gunrunner..."

"Hey!" Stephanie exclaimed indignantly.

I ignored her.

"You two know better than to attack the Police . . . yes?"

"Yes, Mindy – I'm sorry," Chloe said and she did not look sorry.

"We just reacted," Megan explained. "Sorry..."

"You're both lucky that we have friends at the 21st and I hate to think what Marcus is gonna say when he finds out that his daughter was arrested for attacking a cop..."

Megan grimaced at the thought of her impending fate.

Ramada Hotel

"What you got, Abbs?" Special Agent Gibbs asked as he looked into his laptop's camera.

"The video is an obvious fake . . . but I think you already knew that – somebody put together a remarkably good scam. It was almost impossible to identify the gaps between frames, but impossible is what I do and if I can save an innocent life..."

"Abby!"

"Sorry, Gibbs – it's a classic frame up; no more, no less."

"Thanks, Abby."

"Abby seems happy, now she's back in her lab, in Washington," Special Agent DiNozzo commented.

"Forgot to mention, DiNozzo – I saw a friend of yours, earlier, Special Agent Keates, ATF; ring a bell?"

DiNozzo frowned at the name and there was a brief look of pain which came and went surprisingly quickly.

"Not funny, Boss..."

Safehouse F

"What you got, Abby?" I asked as I entered the Command Centre.

"The video is a fake . . . but I think you already knew that – somebody put together a remarkably good edit. It had almost unidentifiable gaps between frames, but I'm Hal – nothing gets past me!"

"You better be careful girl, or your head and ego won't both fit in the elevator!" I laughed.

"It has to be your friends."

"My friends – the fucking CIA are not my friends!"

"Hey, just winding up Hit Girl..."

"Not a wise idea, Hal!"

"You're just a big softy at heart..."

"Moving on..." I growled as I watched the video again as it was the core piece of evidence. "Stop it, right there..."

I recognised Stephanie, but she seemed younger, from way before Dave had found her. The CIA had obviously used footage from some previous mission or something. However, what had caught my eye was a later scene, after the key section – there were a pair of young kids and the way they stood and carried themselves reminded me of two other kids – Stephanie and Saoirse...

Then it occurred to me – why was the scene in there anyway?

Oh, shit!

"Abby – get me the locations on Stephanie and Saoirse..."

Abby tapped away and then two dots appeared on the large screen as the map of Chicago zoomed in to a part of the City, close to the Naval Pier.

"Did the girls see this?"

"Yeah – they were both down here, earlier, and then they took off..."

"Oh, shit!" Abby groaned as realisation hit her.

"Who's close?"

"Dave and Kim are just down the road..."

"Scramble them!" I yelled as I ran to get suited up.

Navy Pier

We were both off the reservation – well off the reservation.

Nobody knew where we were, and I was well outside the usual bounds set out for me by Dave and Mindy. Saoirse, of course, had no bounds but Mindy would still be pissed with her. We had both agreed to go after the two kids – what we would do with them when we found them, we had not decided. It would depend on how they both reacted.

We had split up and we were searching the area; the video clip was a plant and it most probably a trap, but I wanted to see an end to the crap that had been the last few years of my life.

..._...

I noticed SD heading back towards me and she tipped her head to her left, indicating that she had seen something. I followed the nod and saw two kids talking – only to my trained eyes, they were not ordinary kids; they were Urban Predator. The boy was about a year or so older than me, maybe eleven. The girl was a little older, maybe twelve. Both were dark haired and could easily pass as siblings, which was probably the idea.

To a normal person, they were just normal kids having a day out by the Lake – however, to a pair of CIA trained assassins, they were a pair of CIA trained assassins...

..._...

As easily as we had identified them, they would have identified us just as easily, too. There was not much point in continuing with the charade, so I moved towards them.

"Hi, I'm Stephanie – you looking for me?"

"Brazen bitch, isn't she," The girl said with a grin as she approached me.

The boy kept a distance from his partner; their training was good – but so was my own.

"So, how is this going to play out?"

The girl smirked.

"Catch us – if you think you can?"

"Huh?"

The two kids took off running, heading west away from the pier. I looked over at Saoirse, who just shrugged and we both bolted after them.

..._...

They were fast, too.

We were a dozen or so yards behind them as they ran. They took a left underneath Lower North Lake Shore Drive. After crossing the water and running another hundred odd yards, both kids jumped over the railing into Dusable Park.

"In for a penny, in for a pound..." I commented to Saoirse as I followed.

I dropped a dozen feet onto the grass below and I was quickly joined by Saoirse a moment later. We all drew our pistols at the same time. The two ex-products of Urban Predator faced the two active products. It was a no-win situation between us four youngsters as four pistols were in play. The only outcome was mutually assured destruction. Maybe there could be another outcome...

"Look at us," Saoirse said, indicating herself, Stephanie and them. "Look at what they make you give... Do you really want to be a cold-blooded killer, or do you want to make something of your life?"

"Talk about a rip off!" Stephanie growled.

"Hey – it worked on me, right?" Saoirse replied.

I noticed a change to the boy's eyes first – he was listening and taking in what was being said. I could almost hear the cogs whirring in his brain.

"We have no choice but to obey."

"He's right," the girl added.

"No – look at us, we're free," I stated.

The boy smiled and pointed his pistol at the ground. As the boy began to lower his pistol, the girl did the same – there was hope growing in their eyes. It was working – not only had I freed Saoirse, but I had rescued two more from those bastards...

Out of nowhere, there was the crack of a gunshot; the boy's head exploded. Another crack and the girl's head exploded and I felt wetness on my face. Everything seemed to slow down as Saoirse reacted first, throwing me into cover. I saw the two almost headless young bodies drop to the ground.

I could feel myself screaming, but I heard nothing.

I could hear the bullets striking the ground around our cover as I quickly came back to reality.

Saoirse was returning fire with her pistol, aiming high toward the top of a building, but she was well out of range. I heard the squeal of brakes as Hound screeched to a halt beside us. I heard feet running and heavy gunfire as Kick-Ass fired off his H&K MG5 A2 machinegun toward the sniper. I felt hands seize me very roughly under my arms and then throw me into the backseat of Hound – almost immediately, Saoirse was thrown on top of me and Kick-Ass climbed into the front passenger seat. I looked past Saoirse to see a pissed off looking Hit Girl climbing in.

"Go!" She growled at Hawk, who was driving.

Safehouse F

The trip back had been almost silent and we were both dragged out of Hound and then almost thrown onto the mat.

I knew the look – Hit Girl was almost speechless with rage. For a moment I almost laughed at the thought that the last time I was in so much shit, Foxtail had been involved then, too. Almost – if I had laughed, Hit Girl would have probably ripped my head off right there and then!

"I am not going to say anything right now – let's move on and I hope you both learnt something from today," Hit Girl said quietly before she stalked off toward the armoury.

"I thought my life was about to end..." Saoirse commented and I could see her shaking.

"So did I," I replied.

The following morning Monday

Glenview

Nobody said a word to either of us over breakfast, so we just ate and got ready for school.

Neither of us had slept well, my mind kept replaying the boy's head coming apart. I had spent quite a while in the shower, cleaning off the girl's blood from my face and it had been in my hair too. Were Saoirse and me going to be the only survivors of Urban Predator?

It was going to be a difficult day.

That night

Glenview

As I did each night, I went to check on the kids.

Danny was fast asleep, sprawled across the bed as he usually was. I tucked him back under his duvet before I walked through the bathroom and into Anne-Marie's room. The young girl was asleep, tucked deep down under her duvet, only the top of her hair was visible. Her breathing was steady and she was safe, so I moved on.

Across the landing, I pushed open the door to the girl's room.

"Stephanie!" I growled.

The young girl was asleep at her desk, her head resting on her arms on top of piles of books and paper. Some of the books were her math – sorry maths – homework and the rest were various books on firearms. I had warned her about burning the candle from both ends – but it was partially my fault.

When she was not running around protecting the streets of Chicago as Psyche, she was busy with several other activities. There was training; at the house, at D-JAK or at Safehouse F. There was also her training of the newer potential vigilantes, namely Danny, Anne-Marie and Lauren. Finally, there was her school homework. The girl was simply exhausted and no matter what I said, she would still push herself to get everything done – like me, she would never allow anything to get the better of her. I knew from bitter experience what it was like to push yourself till you collapsed.

I turned around to find the other girl, this one teenaged. Saoirse was asleep on the bed, books and paper beside her. She was the same as Stephanie – she would push herself all day long. She had her 9th grade homework to do, as well as her training for Fusion.

The girls were in their pyjamas, which for both was just an overlarge t-shirt. I cleared away the books and paper from the bed and carefully shifted Saoirse under the duvet. She was obviously tired as she did nothing more than moan as I moved her. If it were me being moved, I would have leapt up and attempted to strangle the person moving me! Next, I manoeuvred Stephanie into the bed too. She opened her eyes for a moment and smiled at me.

"Night, mum..."

Then her eyes closed again.

The next evening
Tuesday

54th and Cermack

He was tired.

It had been a very long day, which had dulled his senses and he never noticed the Police cruiser until it was too late. The lights came on, followed by the siren, so he slowed. Then all hell broke loose as vehicles seemed to appear from every direction.

Everybody was yelling and he heard half the alphabet being shouted at him.

"CPD!"

"FBI!"

"ATF!"

"NCIS!"

He was hauled out of his car by two plain-clothed Federal Agents with 'NCIS' on their body armour.

"What's going on?"

"Hank Myers, you are under arrest..." Special Agent DiNozzo replied and continued with the Miranda rights.

"I've done nothing..."

"Murder – multiple counts..." Special Agent Gibbs commented.

"More murder – across state lines..." Special Agent Fornell added.

"We also have a case of a dozen M4 Assault Rifles..." Special Agent Keates finished.

"I know nothing about any guns..." Myers bleated.

"Gotcha! You never denied the murders..." Special Agent DiNozzo commented.

Glenview

Morgan, along with her Aunt Emily and Uncle John, were over for dinner when my cell rang.

"Special Agent Gibbs . . . you have news?" I growled.

"We have him."

"That's very good to know. May we see him?"

"Yes, you and Miss Hella, or should I say, Raven, can see him if you promise not to kill him."

I was silent for a moment. I had expected Gibbs to work out the connection – how much more had he worked out? After a brief talk about a time and place, I dropped the call and saw Morgan looking at me expectantly.

"Raven and Hit Girl have an appointment," I said simply.

Chicago Police Department District 21

I was nervous.

I had never expected the day to arrive when I would have to actually confront the man who killed my parents and who had almost killed me. I was going into the room as Morgan Hella, not as Raven; I wanted him to see my face. Mindy would be with me as Hit Girl. I had promised not to kill the man and as such, I was unarmed.

Hit Girl pulled open the door and I went in. Then man looked up at me. I froze as that night played again in my mind and I saw him again, I saw my parents...

"You fucking bastard," I growled.

The man grinned.

"So you are the girl I missed..."

"I'll be right back..." Special Agent Gibbs said as he walked out of the room and the man's smile vanished as the door click shut.

Fifteen minutes later

"I miss something?" Special Agent Gibbs asked as he came through the door and took in the man's swollen and bloody face.

"He slipped," I said as innocently as I could.

"Fair enough."

The man was more scared than he had ever been in his life.

"You said they would not kill me..."

"I did – they will not kill you," Special Agent Gibbs confirmed with a grin. "I said nothing about roughing you up a bit..."

Chapter 260*: Foxtail the Vigilante

Tuesday night

I was having difficulty getting my mind in order.

I was in the enormous Jaguar that Mindy drove and we were on our way back to her place. My mind reeled with the events that had closed off the most horrific part of my life.

"It feels weird doesn't it?"

"Huh?"

"Your purpose for being who you are – that purpose is taken away from you once you complete your mission."

"You been there?" I asked.

"I became Hit Girl to avenge the death of my Mom. Then my Daddy was killed and I almost died avenging him. But, with help, I killed that bastard who had fucked up my life. Then I had a void; my reason for being was gone. I stopped being Hit Girl for a while and looking back, I regret that now."

"I only became Raven because of what happened to me – now it is in the past, maybe I can stop being Raven now..."

"Is that what you want?"

"I don't know..."

"Talk to Stephanie and Saoirse, they are in a similar position – their reason for being is gone too."

"Thanks, Mindy, and thank you for putting up with my shit. I owe you, big time."

"Anytime, Morgan."

The following afternoon

Safehouse F

I picked up Stephanie and Saoirse from school and took them directly to the Safehouse.

There was plenty to do, as I wanted to talk with Morgan among other things. The past few days had been hectic. I had almost lost Stephanie and SD to the CIA, yet again. At least Morgan had some closure; I knew what that was like.

While I went to see Morgan, I sent Saoirse with Stephanie who would show her new friend, Foxtail's new combat suit.

Once in the bedroom, I turned to SD.

"Strip!"

SD smirked at me.

"I never knew you were like that, Stephanie!"

I scowled and glared, feeling my face warming up.

"Do you want a slap?" I demanded. "Because I will slap you, so hard... Strip to your underwear – now!"

SD started to laugh.

"What's so fucking funny, Foxtail?"

"I've never known so much attitude come from such a small package..."

"I prefer: compact, if you don't mind..."

"Whatever!" I laughed as I began to pull off my clothes.

I felt strange when I pulled on the combat suit, piece by piece, as Stephanie handed the items to me.

The suit was comfortable and not as heavy as I had thought that it might be. I quite liked the colour scheme too, not to mention the weapons. Normally, when I had fought, I only wore a Kevlar vest and maybe a mask, but nothing as hi-tech as the combat suit that I was now pulling on. The suit also gave me a sense of belonging – I was to be part of something.

"I've been advised by those with tits that wearing a comfortable sports bra and a t-shirt is best."

I smirked and laughed at Stephanie's expression as she spoke.

"Sorry, Steph – couldn't resist!"

"Cheap shot, Foxy..."

"Stop calling me that..."

"Whatever you say . . . Foxy!"

"Little brat, I ought a..."

"Yeah, yeah – I can handle a bitch like you..."

"One day, we'll have a proper fight, just you and me..."

"Bring it on, Foxy...!"

The little bitch bolted out the door.

I heard giggling and I turned to see Stephanie running out of the bedroom.

I laughed – what had she done? My question was answered very quickly.

"I'll fucking kill you!" Foxtail yelled after the rapidly retreating Psyche.

"What's up, Foxtail?" I asked.

"She has a big mouth and I want to shut it . . . firmly!"

"You'll have to take a ticket on that one... How does it feel?"

"Awesome – very comfortable and my swords sit perfectly – I like the pistols, too, thanks."

"Thought you might – you seemed like a Beretta kind of girl."

I had bought the girl a pair of Beretta Px4 Storm Compact Type G pistols in .40-calibre Smith & Wesson. I had seen her shooting with .40-calibre rounds in a Glock and she was very good; she could also handle the extra fire-power too.

One of the nice things about being a vigilante and having your older daughter being a vigilante, was that you could kick her fucking arse!

It was not often that we sparred together – physically at least. There was a nine-year age gap for a start, not to mention more than a few inches and pounds! However, she was a trained assassin, so I did not pull my punches as she most definitely did not pull hers!

Joshua was taking bets on how long the fight would last.

The times on the board varied from ten seconds to eight minutes – I'd bet on under two... They were good, but eight minutes? Fuck off!

"Vigilantes – standby!" Dave shouted.

I was standing in the centre of the mat facing the briefing room and I was enjoying all the attention. At the far end of the mat to my left, stood Psyche in her full combat suit. At the opposite end of the mat, to my right, stood Foxtail, in her new combat suit. The dark browns and light orange highlights looked good on her slim teenage figure.

"Jackal – standby on the clock!" Dave continued.

I allowed my body to steady itself . . . I closed my eyes and listened for my two eager opponents.

"Three – two – one..."

A whistle blew and I heard the pounding of two pairs of boots and then silence. It was very obvious that they had both taken off, flying in for a kick – I took a deep breath, measuring the distances and then I back flipped out of the way, leaving the two younger vigilantes to collide on the mat.

"Thirty seconds gone!"

I didn't rest or pause, nor did I give either of them a chance to recover. I reached out and seized both vigilantes by the arms and flipped them over. Psyche caught herself and landed lightly but Foxtail lost her footing and she sprawled onto the mat in a very undignified manner. I kicked her hard in the stomach, causing her to double up in pain. Psyche yelled out angrily and I caught her leg as it flew in towards my head and I proceeded to dump her on top of her former enemy, face down. To keep her down, I drove a fist into her kidney followed up by a foot between her legs – she screamed out in pain.

"Stop the clock!" I yelled and then looked up at Joshua.

"Ninety-seven seconds – Hit Girl wins!"

The next afternoon
Thursday

Glenview

"Hi, Morgan – come in."

"Thanks, Mindy – is Saoirse about?"

"Upstairs," Stephanie cut in as she came down the stairs and then headed into the kitchen.

I headed up the stairs, turned left to follow the passageway and then turned right into 'The British Sector' – I loved the sign! I could hear music playing – Meat Loaf: Modern Girl; I liked Meat Loaf. I pushed open the door and was shocked to find Saoirse on the bed, sobbing her heart out into a pillow. Maybe she hated Meat Loaf... I walked closer and she looked up at me.

"Go away . . . please..."

That was not the usual, eat shit and die, Foxtail – it was just a normal, very upset, fourteen-year-old girl.

"What's going on, SD?"

"Leave me..."

"Not happening – we're friends, aren't we?" I asked, pulling the girl up into a sitting position and hugging her tightly.

"I remember them..."

Huh?

"Who?"

"I killed them both... Then I forgot about them..."

"What are you talking about, girl – you ain't making sense."

"I killed my parents – I remember now, a bullet in each head – an easy shot, simple, just a gentle squeeze of the trigger – once, twice..."

"Oh, fuck!" Came a voice from the door – it was Stephanie.

"She's rambling – I found her sobbing into her pillow..."

"She's remembering shit from soon after she was taken – she went through eight years of conditioning... I've been remembering horrible shit over the past several weeks and she has a lot more crap to remember than I do," Stephanie explained with a pained expression on her face.

"It was their favourite song..."

Stephanie looked up at me and scowled.

"The fucking song – it triggered a buried memory... Look after her; I need to tell Mindy."

"Go – I'll keep her safe."

"Mindy!"

I turned as I heard footsteps pounding down the stairs – she may have been compact, but she had a heavy foot fall.

"Mindy – it's SD..."

I ran past Stephanie and up the stairs, going straight to the bedroom. There I found Saoirse in tears, being cuddled by Morgan.

"The music set her off," Stephanie said as she caught up.

"I'm sorry," Saoirse apologised. "It was the memories; they were a shock to me – I had completely blanked out their murder."

"It's okay – the same thing happened to Stephanie one night; she had total recall of the event and it really scared her too – Anne-Marie too as she witnessed it."

"You are not alone, SD – you have friends now; friends that care for you," Stephanie said and I saw Saoirse smile.

"I'll help you, SD – I have demons in my life too, all of which resurfaced over the past few weeks as I hunted that bastard. I can relate and . . ."

". . . I know you're needing a home, SD – would you come live with me?" I asked slowly.

"You don't want me – I'm..."

"... A killer? Damaged?" I laughed. "That makes two of us..."

"I..."

"We can help each other and you'd have to put up with a very bossy older sister..."

Saoirse smiled for a moment.

"You'd have to put up with a pretty annoying younger sister."

"I could always kick your fucking ass!"

"You could always try!"

Friday night

Safehouse F Command Centre

"What is this?"

"Mindy! Just in time for the first viewing of something very special..."

I was not buying it!

"Will I want to kill you after I have watched it?"

Marty considered the question for a moment before smirking.

"Probably..."

He reached over and pressed a button. The enormous screen flickered and an image appeared – it was in black and white, but otherwise it was good quality. I recognised it instantly and Dave's eyes went wide. Both our memories flew back six years, five months and eight days . . . not that I was counting... There was no sound, which made it all the creepier – but I could remember every damn word...

...+...

"You okay sweetheart?"

"I, err, I lost my mommy and daddy..."

"She lost her mommy and daddy... You want to use my cell phone...mmm? Now, can you remember the number?"

Bang! Bang! Bang! Four men were dead – well almost – Bang!

...+...

"Fucking hell!" Chloe exclaimed for most present. "You put down four men with three bullets!"

"You cold fucking bitch!" Josh added in awe.

"She's really cute!" Erika commented.

"Really?" Abby retorted. "Four men dead with four shots and you think she's cute?"

"I like the kilt, what can I say?"

All eyes turned to me and Dave. I said nothing, but I felt really uncomfortable.

"With no power comes no responsibility – except that wasn't true..." Dave muttered. "Kick-Ass came into his own that night..."

The screen flickered and changed just as the younger Mindy swiped a card in the elevator. Then she started to strip...

"Wow!" Curtis commented as first the kilt dropped to the floor revealing my rather plain pink knickers.

I began to blush and considered getting Marty to stop the video when I remembered something...

On the video, I stopped unbuttoning my blouse and I stared up at the camera. I was seen to scowl and then pick up my pistol and put a bullet into the camera.

Curtis looked very annoyed...

..._...

The screen flickered and changed; it was another lobby – an elevator in the centre of the wall and two men. The doors slid open and...

"Bloody hell!" Stephanie said in awe as the rope dart flew.

It was over in just seconds and three men lay on the floor, very dead.

"Fuck she could move..." Chloe commented unnecessarily.

"She still can, Shadow!" I growled.

The camera view was not good, but you could just make out the eleven-year-old Hit Girl as she took cover behind the stand, hiding from the approaching men, her pistols raised. Then she burst out, firing the first pistol and she vanished from sight.

"My God that girl is hot!" Curtis said.

"Hey!" Megan growled.

"Thanks, Curtis!" My face was burning with what, pride?

"Stay away, kid – she's mine!" Dave quipped.

I was unhappy about the video – I thought it had all been wiped. There was very little evidence of Hit Girl's existence before that night, except for many corpses of course, but that video showed me unmasked and killing...

"The pigtails make you look so sweet, Mindy..." Josh chuckled.

"I had a thing for them, back then..." I replied quietly.

"She may look cute, but Mindy back then – well, she was wild!" Dave cautioned.

"Hey, Megan – how about you in pigtails and a sexy kilt?"

"Curtis... Maybe, we'll see..." Megan replied with a grin.

I groaned.

"Where the fuck did you get it?" I demanded, turning back to Marty.

"Short version – Damon's online backup expired and I grabbed the data before it was dumped. There's more... The NYPD disposed of some old evidence and luckily for us, this was sent to Marcus and he passed it onto me..."

"A teddy bear?" Chloe enquired.

"Not that thing?" Dave groaned.

Chapter 261*: Puppy Training

Author's Note: Please be warned that this chapter includes smut and behaviour that should be seen as indecent and salacious, including words or insinuations of a very dubious, unseemly or suggestive nature – oh, yeah!

March 5th, 2016
Saturday

It was about six weeks since the puppies were born and the training had begun.

We were also able to identify the pecking order in the 'nest'. Kiara, my bitch, appeared to be the leader, followed by Razor – Stephanie's dog. The runt of the litter appeared to be Piper, but not by much. All seven pups were firm friends and while they would play fight and there were regular yelps of pain, they would never hurt each other. Each animal had begun the bonding with their owner and their siblings early on and they all knew who they belonged to. They also accepted everybody else and knew who was part of their family and who was not.

We had also worked out their vigilante names.

Kiara was Loki, Hope was Dart, Josie was Kes, Layla was Ardent, Piper was Siren, Hercules was Sampson and Razor was Blade. The pups were encouraged to wear a mask, just as their mother did – that bit was relatively easy; when the pups saw their mother wearing her armoured mask, they followed suit. It took a while for them to get comfortable with the mask in place and to stop chewing each other's mask, but we got there – eventually!

I had to admit it was a lot of fun training the pups and everybody was taking part – even grumpy Marcus. We had also begun to expose the young pups to the outside world, other animals and the noises associated with the real world. They learnt to ride in the back of an SUV too, without too much travel sickness. We acclimatised them to sharp bangs and firecrackers long before we would start moving onto blanks and then real bullets.

Sophia herself was proving to be a hard task master and she often told the pups off with a simple growl, a bark, or a sharp swat with a paw. Once or twice she had waded into a play fight to break things up and all of the pups respected their mother and they never 'spoke' back. They all knew the meaning of 'NO' and 'GOOD' plus the consequences associated with misbehaving. The pups were 'kids', so they did misbehave, just as human kids did – so they also got punished for misbehaving.

There was also much fun with toilet training them!

That afternoon

Glenview

"Hi, kids!"

Dave, Danny and I had just returned from walking seven pups and their mother – what a task! It was like trying to herd cats – each pup constantly found something 'exciting' to go and look at, usually in the opposite direction of the others... At least once a giggling Danny had been overrun by excited canine's that tried to lick him to death and he had to be rescued by Sophia who would wade in and seize each pup by the scruff of the neck.

"Hi, Mom..." Anne-Marie replied.

I noticed that she was grinning fit to burst.

"You got something to say?" I enquired.

"Steph owes her jar twelve bucks..."

Stephanie glared at her traitorous younger sister before she strode forwards and then whispered something into Anne-Marie's ear.

"Better make that sixteen bucks!" Anne-Marie added, her eyes wide in shock as her big sister blushed and scowled.

"Can I write an IOU?"

"You just got your weekly allowance of nine dollars, plus a ten-dollar bonus – so you should have plenty."

"But, I wanted to..."

"Well, you'll just have to manage with the remaining three dollars..."

Anne-Marie was smirking and the cruel streak in her actually enjoyed seeing her sister get into trouble. Stephanie had noticed and she turned on her sister.

"You're a dirty little rat!" She growled.

"Mom!"

"What?" I asked innocently – Anne-Marie was not the only one with a cruel streak. "She never swore and she's actually perfectly accurate – to be honest, and fair – I think that Steph should pay the original twelve and you, should pay the remaining four!"

"WHAT?"

"Yeah, tell-tale-tit!" Stephanie laughed.

That evening

The Home of Abigail Hunt

It had to happen sometime.

When I had arrived home that afternoon, after school, I had found Mom looking really pissed and by 'pissed', I mean 'grounded for life' type pissed... It only took seconds to figure out why as I cast my eyes across the kitchen side. On the kitchen side were three very incriminating items: a custom Glock 19 Gen4 pistol in nine-millimetre, a six-inch carbon-fibre knife . . . and a mask... Mom had obviously been searching!

"I can explain everything..." I tried.

"Abigail Elizabeth Hunt, you are in big trouble – what can you possibly say that can explain these items?"

The truth was always the best...

"I'm a secret vigilante and I work for Fusion..."

Mom cut me off.

"Fusion – as in Kick-Ass and Hit Girl?" Mom laughed derisively. "Pull the other one; it's got bells on!"

"Honest – I go by 'Hal' – that's my identity with Fusion. I promise you – all that time you thought I was with friends; I've been supporting Fusion in their activities. I wasn't in New York, last year – I was in Gotham and I... I killed for the first time."

Mom studied my expression and I had a thought that she was beginning to believe me...

"Not buying it – I think I'm going to have to hand these into the Police..."

"No!" I almost screamed. "I'll call the Police..."

..._...

A very long and uncomfortable thirty-five minutes later, there was a knock on the door. Mom went to open it.

"Evening, ma'am – Sergeants Fellowes and Murphy – could you show us what you say that you found in your daughter's bedroom?"

Mom showed them the pistol, knife and mask.

"I see... Could you and your daughter come with us, please?"

..._...

Mom seemed worried, but I was not – obviously. Paul scooped up the offending items with a wink in my direction. I smiled as we were both led out of the house and then into a waiting unmarked SUV.

Forty minutes later, we turned into Safehouse D.

"Where are we? What is this?"

Mom was panicking as we drove through the doors into the darkness and then the doors closed behind us and the lights came on.

"Oh my God!" Mom exclaimed as Titan, Iron Hide and Hound came into view, closely followed by Hit Girl, Shadow and Medic.

..._...

"It's safe Mom," I promise.

"Good evening . . . Hal!" Hit Girl growled in a tone that showed she was not angry.

That was a relief, to say the least; I had expected Mindy to be really pissed.

"Hi, Mrs Hunt!" Shadow said cheerfully – she was not using her voice modulator.

Mom's expression changed to major confusion.

"Chloe?" Mom enquired – Mom had known Chloe ever since we had first met, over two years before.

Shadow removed her mask.

"Yes, it's Chloe!" Chloe replied with a smile.

"Does your mother know, Chloe?"

"Yes, Vera – she does..."

Mom was completely stunned as Cathy pulled off her own mask. She was followed by Hit Girl reaching up and removing her own mask. I turned to see Paul and Sam smirking as Mindy came into view.

"Mindy Lizewski, is Hit Girl?"

"Yes, Mrs Hunt, and your daughter is my tech wizard; she goes by the name: Hal."

"My... My daughter is a vigilante?"

"Yes, your daughter is a very brave and talented vigilante."

"How long?"

"Over two years, Mom..."

"Ever since she rumbled me..." Chloe admitted with an embarrassed grin.

Mindy walked over and she put her arm around my shoulders. I felt tense and a little ashamed.

"Don't worry about it, Abby, it had to happen one day; to be honest I'm surprised that it took this long – besides, we vetted your Mom a long time ago..."

The Home of Abigail Hunt

I was feeling decidedly uncomfortable as we returned home.

"You have some good friends, honey."

"Yes, Mom, I do."

"You say that you've killed..."

"Two men, in Gotham – we had to bail out of our Command Van; they had destroyed the rear axle. I scrambled out of the escape hatch in the roof and jumped down to the ground. Two men came around Lucille; I dropped them both with a double-tap to each chest..."

"Lucille?"

"That was our Command Van – before we destroyed her..."

"I'm proud of you, honey. You Chicago Vigilantes are all heroes and you do so much good in this city."

I felt myself blushing furiously.

"Thanks, Mom."

The following evening
Sunday

Glenview
The living room

We had the house to ourselves.

Marcus had picked up the three kids earlier that afternoon – brave soul that he was! We had a lot planned; just for the two of us...

"Are you ready for me, Dave?"

Her tone was silky and seductive, so I turned to look and I couldn't say anything as Mindy leant tantalisingly against the door frame. Every ounce of blood flowed south and within seconds, I was ready for launch. She was dressed in just a white cotton shirt, one of mine, and nothing else – I could see everything through the soft cotton. She walked over to the fireplace then stood and looked out of the windows. I went over to my wife, stood behind her and began running my hands up her silky soft thighs.

As my hands moved up to her waist, the shirt moved upwards as Mindy pushed back against me, rubbing her soft, curved buttocks into my very hard, straight... The buttons came undone and the shirt existed only around her neck as I gently kissed my way across her left shoulder blade and over to her neck. Her nipples were hard, pointy and her breathing was growing laboured as she savoured every touch on her sensitive and perfect skin.

I continued to kiss her neck as my hands wandered from around her thighs to her waist and then across her stomach and down through her soft, but thick, pubic hair. I was in my own world, one where only me and Mindy existed – the whole house could have exploded around us and we would never have noticed...

Mindy's curves and her skin felt like an aphrodisiac beneath my fingers. I was playing her like a musical instrument; each touch of a finger elicited a groan, or a whisper, or just increased breathing. I enjoyed the sweet smell of her soft blonde hair as it moved across my face. She turned her head to the left, to kiss me, as my hands moved up to her small, but firm breasts with their very sensitive nipples that caused Mindy to gasp as my fingers gently toyed with the tips in passing.

Her full lips touched mine and they felt charged with electricity as I kissed my wife back, enjoying the sweet taste of her as she melted into me. Her eyes were closed as she sank into the nether world of erogenous stimulation as I gently caressed every erogenous zone I could get my hands on – the external ones at any rate...

The kitchen

"Oh, fuck me – they're fucking at it, literally!"

"Oh, my...!" Chloe acknowledged her hand over her mouth.

We had come over to say hello, knowing that the kids were elsewhere. Despite us being overt nymphomaniacs, it had never actually occurred to us that Dave and Mindy might be... Dave was caressing Mindy who was all but naked in the living room. They both seemed oblivious to us as we stood in the kitchen unable to draw our eyes away from the scene before us. Then I saw Mindy turn toward us so we both dived flat on the floor, but we still stared into the living room. The lights were off in both rooms but there was minor lighting from the library above the living room and it spilled over and down into the living room where it illuminated Mindy's pale skin.

I had never witnessed anybody behaving like Dave and Mindy were. The love emanating between them was obvious and it was also intoxicating. I crawled over to Chloe; she was lying on her stomach, gazing intently at the goings on in the living room. Chloe was wearing joggers which I seized around the waist and yanked down to her ankles. She giggled as her slightly damp knickers quickly joined the trousers – she kicked them and her trainers off as I ran my hands up her long legs to her waist.

Chloe's thighs were strong and muscular, thanks to her training and I loved them. Her backside was just as strong and I ran my hands over and then around her waist, she willingly lifted her pelvic region so that I could run the tips of my fingers through her soft pubic hair. I quickly wriggled out of my trousers and underwear, rolling Chloe onto her back and pushing her top further up her chest. I roughly pushed Chloe's bra upwards so her compact breasts became available and I teased the two very prominent nipples causing my girlfriend to giggle and her breathing to catch and increase at each touch.

I became oblivious to everything around me as I caressed Chloe's perfect body.

The living room

Finally, she turned to me and wrapped her hands around my neck, her tantalisingly beautiful body, naked but for the loose shirt; she kissed me and I kissed her back, her right leg rose up my body and I seized hold of it, pulling her in close, feeling the warmth emanating from her crotch as if I was leaning against a fiery furnace.

Damn, if I wasn't feeling the heat building up in my groin – I pushed Mindy backwards and I kicked off my shoes as Mindy attacked my belt with barely concealed gusto, quickly followed by my trousers and then my shorts. Her soft skin against my aching cock felt like heaven as we continued to kiss. The wetness that I could feel told me that she was very ready for what was to come next.

..._...

We moved out of the living room and into the foyer and by the time we had reached the curved staircase, we were both completely naked. I loved the touch of Mindy's hardened nipples on my chest as I rubbed up against her. She was moaning each time I touched a sensitive area and I could tell that she was getting desperate.

"Oh, God . . . I need you . . . fucking fuck me!"

Mindy pulled me backwards – you can guess with what – then she lay back on the fourth step up and I lowered myself onto her and then moved inside my wife. She was hot, in every possible way; a nuclear explosion could have been no hotter. I felt her warmth and her moisture as I pushed in deeply; I felt her opening for me and she groaned loudly as I slid inside as smoothly as a .50-calibre round slid into a Browning's well-oiled breech . . . damn, I was starting to think like Mindy!

I was locked and loaded, so I thrust and thrust, oblivious to everything going on around me.

The foyer

The stairs kind of dug into my butt, but I did not care as bolt after bolt of sensation coursed through my body every time that my husband thrust himself inside me, touching every erogenous point as he went.

I had never felt anything like it. I felt loved – oh, my God, I felt loved. My body tingled all over and I loved it. His hands moved gently, but firmly and purposefully, over my very sensitive nipples which caused my breath to hitch each time they were touched and I struggled to breathe as my clit was trapped between our pelvic bones which caused an unending burst of sheer unbearable ecstasy.

I screamed and I screamed. The rush made all my senses hyper-active; around me I heard noises – I could hear Sophia barking and I could have sworn that I could hear another scream – maybe it was just me? Who gave a fucking shit... My legs locked as the orgasm came full force and I continued to scream through the overpowering surge of sheer exhilaration as Dave filled me up with his searing fluid.

..._...

I whimpered as Dave pulled out of me and I felt unbelievably empty all of a sudden. Dave was panting as he fell back against the wall. We both lay there for several minutes before I finally thought that I was able to move.

"I need a fucking drink..." I growled and struggled to my feet.

I felt Dave's strong arms pulling me up and I felt a little weird and unsteady, but I wrapped an arm around Dave and he supported me as we made our way back into the living room and on towards the kitchen.

"What the fuck?"

There were clothes scattered on the floor around the arch from the living room. I recognised the knickers – Chloe! I hit the light switch and saw two pairs of legs vanish behind the kitchen counter.

"Come out!" I growled.

Chloe and Joshua stood up and I saw that they were both very naked, as were we.

"Sorry," Chloe began. "We came over to see you guys and well, you seemed busy, so we..."

I laughed.

"Did you have fun?" I asked.

"Fuck, yeah!" Chloe giggled.

"Well, that's all that matters..." I replied and grabbed some towels from a pile by the door to the swimming pool.

We sat in the kitchen and enjoyed a coffee.

Mindy and Dave showed no embarrassment whatsoever at having been seen fucking by us. We were friends and that was all that mattered.

"You ready for more?" I teased Josh.

"I don't know..." Josh replied as he finished his coffee.

I do not know what came over me, but I stood up and dropped my towel.

"Does this help...?"

Josh's eyes told me that it did help! Then Mindy shocked me...

"What about you, got any of that hot Kick-Ass juice left?"

Dave's eyes went wide as his wife dropped her own towel. Dave and Josh exchanged a look and both just shrugged before dropping their own towels – both were very, very ready for more...

Chapter 262*: The Bully

The following morning
Monday

Glenview
The kitchen

"Oh – my – God!" Stephanie groaned.

"I have a bad feeling about this..." Anne-Marie added.

"Is that a pair of knickers on the kitchen floor?" Danny enquired.

"A bra over there..." Paige commented with a grimace.

"Those clothes scattered about the kitchen belong to Chloe," Stephanie said.

"I think we should run away!" Megan growled, fearful of what else might be discovered.

They all turned as Sophia appeared at the top of the stairs to the basement. She lay down and whined, covering her eyes with her paws – even the dog was freaked out!

"What's this?" Danny asked as he inspected some gloop that dripped from one of the steps on the stairs.

Megan's eyes went wide and she looked like she wanted to be sick.

"Don't touch it!" She warned.

"Found 'em!" Anne-Marie shouted.

The master suite

"Okay..." Paige commented as we entered Dave and Mindy's room to find four people asleep in the enormous bed.

There was movement and Chloe sat up from between Joshua and Mindy. She was topless, but she rapidly pulled the duvet up to cover herself when she discovered that she had an audience.

"Err, morning, Paige, err, kids!" She said as she blushed furiously and nudged Mindy who was asleep on her front, but it was obvious that she was topless too.

"Fuck off Chloe – I'm fucked out..." Mindy growled, but then she looked up and followed Chloe's furtive glance towards the foot of the bed.

"Oh great!" She growled.

"We'll just leave you all to get showered and dressed," Paige said delicately and she pushed the four eager-eyed kids out of the bedroom.

"Well, that was embarrassing!" Chloe commented.

"Ya think!" I groaned – poking Dave hard in the ribs as Chloe did the same with Joshua.

"I need a shower," Dave groaned as he regained consciousness.

"I'm first!" I yelled, jumping out of the bed and I ran naked into the bathroom.

Not surprisingly, an equally naked Chloe soon joined me in the shower and we quickly cleaned ourselves off.

"That was a fun night..." Chloe said with a laugh and a quick giggle.

"It was a first, I can say..." I replied with a devious smile.

We had enjoyed a great night together.

A short while later...

The kitchen

"Morning, kids!"

"Hi, Mom!" Danny and Anne-Marie said as they ran over for a hug.

"It's disgusting, that's what it is!" Stephanie growled as she reluctantly gave me a hug.

"Sorry, Paige – we kinda got carried away last night, and..."

"Don't apologise for being human, Mindy – Marcus and I have fun when Megan's away too..."

"Ewww... I did not want to hear that!" Megan exclaimed looking horrified.

"Me neither – how long now?" I enquired, ignoring my little sister's horrified expression.

"Eight to ten weeks left – I hope!" Paige commented, running a hand over her very visible bump.

"You still 'have fun' even with that in the way?" I asked, winking at the horrified Megan.

"Oh yeah; I was still having sex until about a week before Megan was born..."

"I... Yuck... Ewww... I'm going to check on Piper!" Megan growled and the girl ran out of the kitchen.

Later that day

Lake View High School

It was a normal Monday, but boy was it gonna be a doozy, as my Dad would put it.

Life was normal for me – well, as normal as it ever got for the twelve-year-old son of a CPD cop. I also kept a secret; one of the most awesome secrets ever. Forget Roswell, or who shot JFK, I knew a much better secret; I knew the secret identity of Hit Girl and Kick-Ass, not to mention many others. It killed me not to be able to tell anyone but I knew the consequences of that, besides I had integrity.

Bradley Murphy was doing well, I thought.

..._...

I was dragged out of my reverie by the sounds of crying. In the next corridor, down beside some lockers, I found a girl sobbing her heart out. I paused and then my heart skipped a beat – it was Lauren Edwards; I had fancied her ever since I had started at the school. The girl had had a particularly turbulent couple of months, if the rumours were right. I knelt down beside the girl.

"Lauren?"

She looked up at me from red eyes and her beautiful looks were marred by the tears that streamed down her cheeks.

"Hi, err, Brad isn't it?"

"Yeah."

Wow, she actually knew my name! She was in eighth grade while I was only in seventh...

"What happened?"

"I'm a fucking slut..."

What?

"Woah, there – no you are not, Lauren..."

"She said that I was a slut for allowing it to happen..."

"That's rubbish, and you know it."

We were interrupted by another voice.

"He's usually full of shit, but for once he's speaking the truth, Lauren."

I turned to see Chloe standing directly behind me – damn; that girl could move like a shadow.

"Who was it?" I persisted.

"That Grant bitch..."

I saw anger in Chloe's face and I knew what that meant. Chloe was a tenth-grader and guys in seventh grade rarely even talked to girls three grades higher.

"Chloe, I know what you're thinking – you can't..."

She turned and glared at me.

"You little fuck; you do not tell me what to do..."

"I didn't mean it like that, honest."

"Sorry, Brad – me and that Grant bitch have a history – but no. While I would like nothing more than to punch that fucking lesbian in the..." Chloe calmed down slightly. "I think that Lauren should have a go..."

"What can she do?"

"She's spent time at D-JAK, Brad; she can look after herself.

"If you're sure, Chloe – I trust you, but Lauren's not like you..."

"You'd be surprised!" Chloe replied with a wink.

I thought back over a year to that fateful Friday night in February.

She had landed a fair few punches on me as her minions had pinned me to the wall of a cinema. Those punches had hurt, brushing me badly and putting me out of action. I never did get my own back on her, but Joshua had considered killing her once he had found out what had happened. I had been saved by Kyle that night.

Now, she was getting her claws into somebody else and that had to stop. The only reason that the bitch was still breathing was because I was better than her and I knew when not to kill – if only the ugly snapdragon knew how close she had come... Lauren had to face her; it was the only way for Lauren to get past her problems.

While I supported Lauren; I would never want to be in her shoes.

"Where are you going?"

Chloe just stalked off – I checked my watch; Juno Grant would probably still be in lunch. I grabbed Lauren off the floor and we both ran after Chloe, towards the dining room. What exactly did the devious Chloe have in mind? I was actually glad that Chloe was not going to do the need...

If she did, then there was going to be a blood bath and Chloe would be exposed as Shadow.

The dining room

I knew trouble when I saw it

I nudged Josh and pointed over to the doors that led into the dining room.

"Oh, fuck!" Josh groaned.

We had both recognised the expression on Chloe's face, not to mention the force that she had used on the doors – she was going to kill, literally. She made a bee-line for the table, two over – it was not a great leap of intelligence to figure out that Juno Grant was her target.

"Kyle – we gotta stop her..." Josh warned.

It was a strange relationship really; I had dated Chloe for a while, before Josh had come onto the scene. Then I had stepped back once I had seen where Chloe's true feelings lay. Despite that, Josh and I were firm friends and we both enjoyed teasing the hell out of Chloe; an act, which while potentially very dangerous, was great fun!

However, we both knew the girl intimately, including her expressions and we both knew what she was capable of when she was angry.

Something was happening.

I went to the same school as Chloe and Josh – although they were both in tenth grade, but I was only in the ninth. My first day at the school had been daunting to say the least... Something new, meant something dangerous – at least it did to me; a new environment needed checking and all my senses operated automatically as I walked into the school. Chloe had offered to come in with me, but I had politely declined the kind offer; I had to manage on my own.

My eyes took in the cliques and the bullies, the jocks and the geeks – the usual groups found in the average high school. I kinda wished somebody would try to rip off my dinner money, but no, the school had little problems with bullying; certain people had stamped that out... My previous school had been very similar, but it had been much more rigid, which was why the CIA had chosen it for me.

My eyes also took in the entrances and exits... Places where I could hide in an emergency... Locations of alternative weapons... I couldn't stop myself; it was an automatic impulse, wherever I went.

At least I would know other kids at the school; mind you there was also Lauren in eighth grade, too. That felt a little strange, considering that I was training her to become a vigilante... I saw Lauren enter the dining room and I saw the tears on her face. She was being helped by a boy that I recognised from the seventh grade.

I had seen Chloe storm into the dining room and I had read her eyes – she was on a mission and somebody was about to get hurt – badly. I saw Josh jump up from his own seat along with another boy that I was acquainted with, Kyle. That kind confirmed my suspicions.

I decided to get closer so I could help my friends.

..._...

"SD!"

It was Lauren and she sank into my arms, sobbing. I looked at the boy, begging for an explanation.

"Somebody accused her of asking to be . . . you know..."

Naturally, I knew all about Lauren – and what had happened to her. I was incensed that somebody would use that against her.

"Who?"

"Juno Grant – Chloe's about to kill her..."

I had no idea who the boy was, but I sensed that he knew more than he was letting on – did he know about Chloe being Shadow? He used the word 'kill' like he knew that she could actually kill the girl. As I watched, I saw Josh and Kyle intercept Chloe. Oh, shit – she floored Kyle as he tried to restrain her! The Grant girl jumped up from her seat and tried to escape; I saw the fear in her eyes as she backed away.

Then Lauren pulled out of my arms and she bolted forwards. The Grant girl had backed away towards Lauren . . . I smiled – it was a fucking setup! Lauren struck Grant in the cheek with her right fist causing the older girl to crash into another table. Another boy jumped up – this one an eleventh-grader. I saw some resemblance to the girl – a big brother? Oh, wow – Chloe flattened him, too. Josh was trying to grab hold of his girlfriend, but she kept pushing away from him as she guarded Lauren's back.

I moved towards Lauren and Chloe.

..._...

As I got there, Lauren smacked Juno Grant hard across the face. The thirteen-year-old girl then seized the fifteen-year-old girl by the jaw and she stared into her eyes. Lauren was no longer crying, nor was she shaking, she was ice-cold.

"Don't – you – ever fuck with me again; you hear me, bitch?"

Juno just stared at Lauren – her face red and beginning to swell from the onslaught. She was angry, but I detected a trace of fear – and that trace was growing. I heard movement from my right and I turned to see two large girls pushing through the other kids – I had a feeling that they usually protected their boss. As they passed by me, both girls... How should I put it...? They banged heads and hit the floor rather hard... I noticed a boy from tenth-grade watching me; he smiled and nodded approvingly – I blushed, much to my annoyance and turned back to Lauren.

"You fucking hear me!" Lauren growled "Or are you deaf as well as fucking retarded?"

Lauren slapped Juno hard across the face. Like most bullies, Juno had very quickly had enough.

"I hear you..." She muttered.

"Louder – so your friends can hear you..."

Juno scowled as she raised her voice.

"I will not fuck with you, anymore... I'm sorry..."

The fifteen-year-old girl was suitably humiliated at the hands of a girl two-years her junior. Lauren released the girl and let her fall to the floor of the dining room. Then she turned and walked out of the dining room to a round of applause from the other kids. Chloe made to kick Juno in the side, but I looked at Josh and we both seized an arm and pulled her back, which was not easy... Josh used his considerable strength to hold her while I put my mouth to her ear.

"Are you fucking stupid? Stop this, now!"

Chloe growled as she looked at me – but she nodded.

"You going to behave?" A very pissed off Josh demanded.

"Yeah, sorry."

Later that afternoon

Cathy was not happy!

Neither was Lauren's mother. Both had been called in to see the school Principal as their respective daughters had punched two boys' and one girl's lights out! I went with Cathy for moral support. There, I found two rather annoyed looking teenagers. I vividly remembered one of my very own visits to the Principal at the school in New York – Marcus had been very angry and I had been a grumpy bitch – much as Chloe was at that moment.

It was obvious that both girls were guilty as hell – they both kept their heads down and neither looked up when we arrived. Isaac was there also – thankfully. I had received a call from Joshua who had explained everything that had happened. It had all been in defence of Lauren – at least it had started out that way, but somebody had lit Chloe's fuse and there was no putting that out!

I had also learnt that Lauren had a fuse too – and a vicious streak...

..._...

They both escaped with a suspension – two weeks for Chloe, but only a week for Lauren. Chloe was also grounded for four weeks and Lauren for two. Their mothers were both incensed at their daughters' behaviour, however, they did allow for the reasons if not the actual actions. As both mothers worked; I offered to monitor both girls at the Safehouse during the day. I saw Chloe grimace at that suggestion, but Cathy smirked and Lauren looked a little worried.

That night

Safehouse F

"Kind of nice to see some others doing that for a change," Anne-Marie chuckled.

Down below, two girls were on their eighteenth lap of the Safehouse. For Chloe it was the ultimate humiliation, considering that she was the number three operative in Fusion and therefore a senior member. Now, she was being punished along with our newest member. There was no room for Fusion members to operate on their own and I was not happy with Chloe allowing Lauren to get involved, but I understood the reasons.

So, as far as Chloe was concerned, I was punishing her for not having better judgement concerning Lauren, but a brief humiliation for her was good enough for me. For Lauren, she needed to learn to control her temper, especially in public. Rape had a lot of stigma attached and others saw it differently, with not everybody showing compassion. I also had a sharp word with Saoirse as she had been involved to some extent and she had not stopped Lauren from attacking the other girl.

I intended keeping an eye on Lauren; Nightmare was working out just fine.

Chapter 263*: The Bear

One week later
Monday

Safehouse F

My life sucked!

Mom was not happy with my behaviour, nor with my 'the end justifies the means' argument! I was only obtaining justice for my friend. Mom did remind me that most of my solo 'hare-brained' schemes tended to go awry, which in that case had left Kyle with a bruised cheek . . . I was mortified!

Anyway, Kyle had forgiven me, considering the situation, and his bruises were healing. As for Joshua... I was pulled out of my worries by Mindy.

"What's wrong Chloe?"

"I haven't had sex in a fucking week!"

"Oh?" I looked over at Josh who said nothing.

"Josh says that sex is a privilege and should be earned!" Chloe growled, glaring at her boyfriend.

I held up the first two fingers of my right hand.

"My fucking fingers just aren't cutting it!"

"That was more information than we needed!" Dave grinned. "Why?"

Chloe looked acutely embarrassed and shook her head.

"I'm not saying..."

"She needs to learn some responsibility!" Josh commented.

"How long?" I asked.

"Maybe six months..." Josh replied.

"SIX MONTHS!" Chloe yelled. "You said two weeks, you fucking bastard!"

I noticed Joshua's grin behind Chloe's back as she stalked off to the armoury and I laughed.

..._...

There was one more entry that closed off the Juno Grant incident. When Chloe, Lauren et al had left her, Juno Grant had been hurt, but conscious. Somehow, on her route to the nurse's office she had managed to pick up quite a few more bruises and lose consciousness. In my own personal, expert opinion, the bruises and loss of consciousness may have been related to her 'falling' the stairs. Nobody claimed ownership of her new injuries, but Lauren did report seeing a big smile on Brad Murphy's face...

On a lighter note, the pups were now eight-weeks-old and full of life.

The training was going well and they could all 'sit', 'lay down' and 'stay' as requested. Although there were some mutinies amongst the trainees. Kiara and Piper were on strike! They insisted on rolling onto their backs and whining every time that we asked them to do something. However, once their mother caught onto what they were doing, they were soon sulking after a major tongue lashing from Sophia.

Have you ever seen a German Shepherd puppy sulking after being told off by its mother? It is the sweetest goddamn thing ever and that was the hardest part of training them – their cuteness! We all had to be hard on them to teach them, but it was so difficult; however, their discipline would keep them alive when they were fully trained.

That Night

Safehouse F

"So, what's with the damn bear?"

"It's one of those Nanny-Cam things – just don't ask what Frank D'Amico had on it before what we're about to watch. I'm pretty certain that Mindy has never seen this," Marty explained. "She also refused to pre-watch it, so..."

"Okay, thanks," Megan said.

I was nervous – Marty had said that it showed Daddy in action... Dave was sitting beside me and he held my hand. Megan was on the other side of me, next to Chloe. Josh sat behind me with Marty and Abby.

...+...

The video began – six men were standing in a warehouse and weapons were evident. Then one man received a phone call and the other men moved off to take up positions. We were left watching the one man... Then I jumped – I recognised Big Daddy as he cut the man's throat before he turned and kicked another man off his feet. Big Daddy held his Beretta in his hand ready to fire.

Another man made to attack him, but he was put down very quickly and stabbed in the chest for his trouble. Daddy fired several shots at the other men, taking bullets on his armour but shrugging them off. He used another man as a shield before punching him in the face and throwing him aside and into another man with a shotgun.

Daddy blasted his way up the staircase and shot another man before smashing the glass on a door and throwing in a grenade. He took cover as the grenade exploded before jumping back down to the main floor, taking out another man in the process. He took the man's shotgun and proceeded to kill him. Then came the destruction as Daddy used grenades and flares to set fire to the warehouse.

...+...

Everybody was looking at me as the video stopped. I smiled, ignoring the tears that ran down my cheeks.

"Your Daddy was fucking awesome, Mindy!" Megan announced as she hugged me.

"I agree," Josh added.

"Yeah, definitely," Chloe agreed.

"Is there more?" Dave asked.

Marty hesitated.

"Marty!" Dave growled.

"I don't think we wanna see it – for Mindy's sake..."

"Marty, just fucking play it," I growled.

...+...

The video began again – I braced up as I recognised Frank D'Amico's office in his penthouse. There was the bastard himself. Then that big guy walked in with the bazooka.

"A bazooka...? Okay!"

"We had a deal, Dad, we had a fucking deal that I would get you the guy who did it and all I'm asking is that you let Kick-Ass go; he didn't do anything wrong..."

"Chris, you gotta look at this from my point of view, okay – I gotta send a public service message to the people out there that being a super-hero is bad for your health and the big motherfucker? Nobody knows who he is..."

"Yeah, but that's not fair..."

"Life's not fair, kid – get over it..."

"What are you going to do to them?"

"You really want to be a part of my business?"

"Yeah?"

"Then sit down, shut up and watch."

...+...

"I removed a lot of dead space and worthless shit," Marty advised before the video flickered back to life. "Thought the bazooka was important..."

...+...

We were back in his office – all seemed peaceful. Then there was a single gunshot and Frank D'Amico scrambled for a piece and hid behind his desk with his worthless son. The big guy was at the door, a pistol in his hand. I knew what was happening outside in the corridor...

There was the sound of many gunshots and then silence... Then came panicked voices...

"Holy fuck, everybody's dead!"

Then Frank D'Amico sent the big guy to see if I was dead – the guy went somewhat reluctantly. There was the sound of many more gunshots... Then the big guy reappeared.

"It's only me boss – everything's under control..."

There was more gunfire... The big guy moved towards the bazooka...

"Under... Under control?" Chris D'Amico exclaimed. "You're grabbing a fucking bazooka, you dumbass!"

The big guy left the office... Lots of gunfire...

...+...

"Only my girl could cause so much shit and carnage!" Dave quipped as he squeezed my hand.

I could vividly remember every moment as I scrambled to stay alive as bullet after bullet punched through the kitchen and showered me with glass and God knew what.

...+...

Then there was a moment's silence before I heard the very distinctive roar of miniguns... Kick-Ass was coming to my rescue... Then silence again...

"That is one weird sounding bazooka – Stu!"

The door burst open and I appeared... Frank D'Amico tried to shoot me, but I took the Beretta out of his hand...

"Fuck!"

Then Kick-Ass made his entrance.

...+...

"Awesome entrance, Kick-Ass!" Chloe exclaimed.

"Yeah – you two look really pissed..." Megan added.

"You look very short, Mindy..." Josh finished.

...+...

"Get him!" Frank D'Amico growled to his son.

Chris D'Amico seemed very reluctant to fight Kick-Ass, but he went anyway. As I watched, we moved closer together, Frank D'Amico and I.

"Playtimes over, kid!"

"I never, play..."

"Oh, really..."

He spun around and he kicked me...

...+...

"Holy fuck!" Megan exclaimed as I went down.

...+...

D'Amico went to stamp on my head, but he missed... I jumped up and then over the corner of his desk, D'Amico chasing after me. I ran up the wall and flipped over backwards landing on the floor behind Frank. I jumped at him as he turned and began to punch him in the face – I bit him and he flung me against the shelves... I smacked him with a whiskey decanter in the side of his face. He threw me and I landed on the floor where I grabbed a letter opener and stabbed D'Amico.

Then came my downfall as he swung me upwards and then back down onto his desk so hard that the legs that supported the desk collapsed, and the shock paralysed me for a moment. I could hear myself as I struggled in pain.

...+...

"Oh my God!" Chloe muttered, her hand over her mouth in shock. Megan said nothing, but a hand was over her mouth too and her eyes had gone very wide.

Dave was holding me tightly and I was shaking.

...+...

Then D'Amico started to punch me.

"Ruin my business, huh?"

Smack!

"Kill every fucking guy on my payroll?"

Smack!

Frank D'Amico walked around to get his Beretta.

...+...

"Oh, Mindy – I..." Megan was almost speechless.

"That fucking bastard..." Abby breathed as she spoke for the first time.

I could remember the pain; it had been intense and I had not been able to move – I had thought that I was about to die, that I had failed to avenge my Daddy.

...+...

D'Amico walked back around to me...

"God, I wish I had a son like you..."

He pulled back the slide on his Beretta and released it as he stood over me. He aimed right between my eyes...

"Time for a family reunion!"

...+...

There was a collective intake of breath from everybody present; except of course for me and Dave. It was fairly obvious that I was not going to die... However, we had been there – I smiled and looked up at Dave; I knew what was coming...

...+...

"Hey, why don't you pick on someone your own size?"

It was Kick-Ass – I felt myself sobbing as he spoke and levelled the fucking bazooka at Frank D'Amico. Then Kick-Ass pulled the trigger and Frank D'Amico was no more... I saw my attempts to sit up and I remembered the pain. Kick-Ass dumped the spent bazooka and went over to my prone form.

"You okay?"

I could just make out my reply.

"Yeah..."

"Time to go home..." Kick-Ass said as he picked me up and carried me out the window.

I heard the roar of the jetpack's exhaust and the video ended just as Chris D'Amico ran in holding a Katana in his hand.

...+...

"Fuck, Dave – you really know how to make a fucking entrance!" Marty exclaimed as I hugged my saviour tightly.

I looked over to see tears on the faces of Chloe, Megan and Abby; I was crying too.

Two days later
Wednesday Night

Safehouse F

It was time for two of our number to meet another.

There were people aware of Fusion, but who were not a part of Fusion, if that made any sense. Brad Murphy was one of them and I really wanted to know about Juno and her 'little accident'! Brad had no idea that Saoirse and Lauren were part of Fusion and neither were the girls aware that Brad was fully aware of Fusion and our secret identities.

Therefore, I had arranged for both girls to arrive at the Safehouse, about a half hour after Brad.

..._...

I brought both girls upstairs into the Briefing Room, where both froze on seeing who was sitting there, enjoying a can of Pepsi Max.

"Hi, Lauren. Hi, SD!"

"Brad?" Lauren demanded.

"Mindy?" Saoirse asked.

"It's okay, girls; Brad has been aware of Fusion for a while now. Brad, please meet Foxtail and Nightmare – girls, please meet Rapier..."

"Thank you for helping me the other day, Brad..." Lauren commented, blushing a cute shade of pink.

"I had a vibe that you knew something," Saoirse added.

"Hey, why are called, SD, SD?"

Saoirse laughed.

"My proper name is spelt like this..." Saoirse explained as she bragged a marker pen and wrote her name 'Saoirse Doherty' on the white board.

"Jeez," Brad commented. "How the bloody hell are you supposed to pronounce that!"

"Try it..." Saoirse challenged.

"Say-oh-err..."

Brad tailed off looking embarrassed as Lauren burst out laughing and Saoirse rolled her eyes.

"My friends decided a long time ago to call me 'SD' to make things simpler. It's pronounced Saoirse, as in 'sir-sha' – like 'inertia'."

"Can I call you SD?" Brad asked carefully.

"Of course."

"So, Brad," I asked. "What happened to Juno...?"

Brad tried to look innocent but I saw through it instantly.

"Nobody is gonna judge you," Saoirse prompted.

"I thought that Juno got off too easily – no offence, Nightmare, but I thought she needed a bigger reminder not to fuck with you... I was passing the west stairs as she was heading down them . . . I kind of nudged her..."

Lauren laughed and then looked a little tongue-tied as she sat down beside Brad. I looked pointedly at SD and indicated it was time to leave. She smirked and we both headed to the Galley.

Chapter 264*: Eight

The following week Tuesday night

Getting the twins to bed had been a goddamned nightmare!

They were just too excited and I couldn't exactly blame them – the next day was to be a very special day for them both. Dave and I had spent a lot of time considering gifts for them both, but we had both come back to one very simple gift for each of them.

Plus, one slightly larger gift, each.

The next morning Wednesday

The dynamic duo was up at dawn!

We were way ahead of them, though and we were waiting as they pounded down the stairs like a herd of marauding elephants and surged into the living room. Behind them came a rather tired looking Stephanie.

"They woke me up!" She grumbled as the young girl dropped onto the couch and curled up into a ball.

"Happy birthday, kids!" Dave announced.

"We getting presents?" Danny asked casually.

"I've forgotten... How old are you two?" I asked innocently.

"Eight!" Anne-Marie retorted as she raised her voice. "We – are – EIGHT!"

"Oh – right..." I laughed. "Sit down, both of you."

Danny and Anne-Marie sat down on the couch rather roughly and ignored their big sister, Stephanie, who tried in vain to get back to sleep.

"You get your normal presents, this afternoon, after school – but these presents..." Dave indicated the four wrapped presents that I had just placed on the table. "These presents are very special and under no circumstances should they be discussed outside of Fusion – understand?"

"Yes, Dad..." The twins responded seriously.

..._...

I handed each child a small present each to unwrap. They were identical, with almost identical contents. The paper did not last long and soon the dozing Stephanie was covered in torn wrapping paper. Each child then held a small polished wooden box and both seemed a little apprehensive about opening the box.

"What?" I asked. "Open them already!"

Anne-Marie looked over at her brother and they both opened the boxes together.

"Wow!" Danny exclaimed.

"Awesome..." Anne-Marie added as she brought out the contents of her box.

It was a pattern called Pink Raindrop and the aluminium 4.25-inch handles in Pink Raindrop satin finish, enclosed a 3.25-inch hollow-grind, clip-point, steel blade. Anne-Marie looked stunned as she skilfully flipped the knife open.

"Okay, what is the proper name for that?" I asked.

"Balisong!" Anne-Marie announced.

"Otherwise known as...?" I asked Danny as he flipped open his own Blue Raindrop satin finish Balisong.

"A Butterfly knife!" He replied eagerly.

"You each hold a Bear Song IV Balisong – they are sharp and very deadly, so please be careful! You've both been shown how to use one of those and I want you both to train with those blades..." I began.

"... Only they will never leave this house without our express permission!" Dave finished.

"Open the other presents!" A now very wide-awake Stephanie insisted having abandoned all hope of getting back to sleep and having fought out from under the wrapping paper.

..._...

The other two presents were much larger and much heavier.

Stephanie seemed more excited than the twins and as the paper was ripped off; she looked up at me in surprise – she had recognised what was rapidly being revealed from under the wrapping paper. Even if the twins had not. Anne-Marie finished first and she frowned at what she found before her.

"Walt... Walter?" She tried, reading the markings on the top of the case.

"Walther..." Stephanie corrected from behind Anne-Marie.

The now eight-year-old young girl carefully opened the black resin case. I think she actually stopped breathing for a moment, her mouth hung open in shock and surprise.

"Fuck me!" Stephanie exclaimed as she saw the contents of both Anne-Marie's and Danny's cases.

..._...

I raised an eyebrow at Stephanie's profanity and the girl blushed, but I let it slide. Inside each box was a...

"Walther P22 Black in .22 long rifle calibre..." Stephanie lectured unable to restrain herself. "Polymer frame with diecast zinc slide. Two drop safeties and firing pin block. Integrated laser sight on a standard Picatinny rail. Weighs about seventeen ounces and has a magazine capacity of ten rounds."

"Thanks, Steph – very accurate!"

Stephanie smiled at the praise. Both pistols had the frame coloured to match the handles on the Balisong knives. The twins were stunned at what they held before them.

"Those are yours – same rules as the knives. Stephanie and Saoirse will teach you both to use them correctly and safely."

Both twins jumped up and hugged Dave and me very tightly.

..._...

"Give 'em mine..." Stephanie suggested.

I pulled out two more packages and passed them over to the twins, who attacked them excitedly.

"Cool – thanks, Steph!" Anne-Marie exclaimed.

With a swift flick of her wrist, she extended the 16-inch expandable baton from inside the pink rubber handle. The black, anodised steel baton would hurt anybody who was struck. Danny flicked open his own, keeping a secure grip on the blue rubber handle.

"I like it Steph, thanks."

Stephanie now blushed as her younger siblings hugged her and they both gave her a kiss.

Saoirse came over that night.

She had requested a chat with Anne-Marie – I knew what it was about, too.

"Hi, kid!" Saoirse said cheerfully.

"Hi, SD!" Anne-Marie replied.

"It wasn't Hit Girl that brought me down. It wasn't Psyche, either. It was you."

Anne-Marie looked apprehensively towards me. I smiled reassuringly.

"You were really brave, placing your cell phone under the saddle of my motorcycle."

Anne-Marie blushed with the compliment.

"Without you, Anne-Marie – Hit Girl would never have found me..."

"I'm sorry..."

"Don't be – I'm glad to be away from that; believe me!" Saoirse confirmed. "I want to reward your courage – Stephanie told me what happened to you in the Caribbean... You're gonna make a damn good vigilante – over time."

"Assuming I don't spend my days running around the damn Safehouse!" Anne-Marie replied sourly with a cheeky smirk.

"Rogue suits you!" Saoirse commented as she passed over a package.

..._...

It was long and thin.

Inside was a polished mahogany case with brass fittings.

"Wow!" Anne-Marie breathed as she lifted the wooden lid.

Inside were two identical butterfly swords. They were full tang and the blade made up 12-inches of the overall 17-inch length. The blades were highly polished and intended for chopping and stabbing. The grip or quillion was designed for easy reverse grip or flipping. The fuller, or blood-groove, was deep and would prove very useful.

"I'll personally train you to use those – they are as good as my own, maybe better..."

Anne-Marie did not know what to say and neither did I... I knew that Saoirse was giving Anne-Marie some swords, but I had not expected anything so special.

..._...

"They're amazing, Saoirse, thank you..." I said for the dumb-struck girl.

"They are both very special kids and Anne-Marie shows maturity beyond her tender years – at times..." Saoirse commented.

"Thank you."

Three days later
Saturday afternoon

Safehouse F

It was strange seeing two eight-year-olds, each with a pistol on their right hip.

Anne-Marie had actually developed a swagger to go with her pistol! They had driven Dave, me and Stephanie up the wall since Wednesday morning. Both of them wanted to use their new weapons as soon as possible – which to them meant right at that moment!

First came the pistols. Between Stephanie and Saoirse, both Anne-Marie and Danny learnt their pistols inside and out. Before they were allowed to fire them, they had to learn to strip and reassemble them, how to cope with a jam and how to operate the safety features.

Anne-Marie got cocky and ended up going for a run around the Safehouse; she only had to do two laps, but that was enough to keep her trap shut.

..._...

Two hours later, the twins were in the range and we started with Anne-Marie – well, she did have some shooting experience, after all. Stephanie stood slightly behind and to the left of her sister.

"Spread your legs – wider . . . raise the pistol, holding it in both hands. Now, keep that position..."

I felt like I was back on Buck Island.

I felt scared all over again as I wrapped my small hands around the butt of the small pistol – small it may have been, but the Walther P22 was still large in my hands. I was shaking from head to toe at the thought of the power that I held in my hands. Instead of there being a live man as my target, there was only a paper target two dozen feet away. My sister gently whispered encouraging words into my ear as her slightly larger hands helped to brace the pistol.

"Breathe in and out, in and out. Keep calm, both eyes open, aim the pistol at your target – centre mass – the chest is good..."

Unbidden, I saw an image of that man's eyes which had been wide with fear. What had shocked me back then, was that I had actually enjoyed the man's fear; I had been in control, instead of him – he had been at my mercy. Steph's gentle whispering continued as I focussed on my target.

"When you are ready, gently squeeze the trigger, again and again... All five rounds."

I focussed along the top of the weapon, keeping both eyes open. Then, as my breathing became slow and regular, I gently squeezed the trigger. The pistol jerked in my hand. My brain registered a flash, followed by a large bang and some smoke. I squeezed again, and again, and again – five times I squeezed before the slide locked back on the empty magazine.

"Don't move!" I was warned by Stephanie. "Safety on!"

I flipped the lever at the rear of the pistol downwards as instructed.

"Eject the magazine!"

I pressed the magazine catch and the magazine dropped free onto the counter.

"Check the pistol is clear!"

I kept the pistol pointed down the range and checked that the chamber was empty.

"Pistol is clear!" I reported.

"Check your magazine!"

Holding the pistol with one hand, I visually checked my magazine – it was empty.

"Clear the action!"

I inserted the empty magazine, thumbed forward the slide release and then, with Steph's help, I held the hammer and lightly squeezed the trigger and lowered the hammer forwards. The pistol was now safe.

"Action cleared!" I reported as I placed the pistol down onto the counter.

I turned to see several smiling faces and broke into a smile myself.

"Well done, Rogue!" Stephanie announced.

"Very good!" Mom added.

We took a break for some food and sat in the galley talking.

Saoirse was talking to the twins.

"Your mother has a reputation – a reputation that she has earned..." She said. "When I knew that I was going to face her; I had been so scared... Now, you can learn from your mother and gain a reputation like she has. There is an advantage to having a reputation; people don't want to fuck with you..."

"Wise words, kid!" Chloe commented.

..._...

True to her word, Saoirse began to teach Anne-Marie how to use the Butterfly Swords. Initially they remained in their covers as they were beyond lethal. As I watched, my daughter was taught to draw the swords from inverted scabbards on her back and bring them up into a fighting stance. She repeated the movements dozens of times until Saoirse was happy that Anne-Marie could do it in her sleep.

While that was happening, Danny was shooting and I had to admit, he was good. He could hold the pistol better and control it without too much outside assistance.

That night

The kids were happy but tired.

It had been great to be able to go out and just be a family for a change. Then, as per my usual luck, the night had started to go all to shit!

"Well, well – you look like you'd have a nice fat wallet!"

"I am going to warn you just once – don't go there!" Dave growled as the three men blocked our progress down the sidewalk.

I looked sideways at my husband and I winked, then I looked down at the kids – Stephanie was already moving a few steps away from me to give herself space to fight. Anne-Marie and Danny looked a little scared but they too braced up, game for some action.

The men took no notice of the warning and stepped forwards – they saw an easy mark... Their cockiness only lasted a few seconds as one of them laid a hand on my arm – he hit the sidewalk two seconds later and his nose exploded sending blood all over the place.

The other two hesitated, but they must have decided that my actions were a fluke... Then it all went to hell as Stephanie dove forwards and kicked a man in the leg. Dave punched out at the bigger of the two men and they fought while I defended the twins from the other man. They must have had a watcher as I saw another man appear and I was forced to leave the twins as the man brought out a pistol.

I caught his arm as it came up and disarmed him in a second – the pistol fell to the sidewalk – I struck the man in the throat and he went down, but kicked out and I went down beside him. As I got back to my feet, I took in the scene before me.

Three men were down and out. Stephanie was rubbing her left upper arm, but Dave was ready to explode. Then I saw what he was looking at. The other man had hold of Anne-Marie; an arm wrapped around her waist and the pistol to her head. Danny was behind Dave. I pushed down my anger and yes, I pushed down the fear. I spoke directly to my daughter, ignoring the man.

"Now, honey, don't be scared – just think it through and use what we taught you the other week," I said carefully and encouragingly.

I was scared, but I knew that I could get out of the situation.

The other week's training jumped into my mind and I worked out a plan of action. My arms were trying to pry the man's arm away from me, but I stopped; I was far too small and weak to move his arm but instead, I had skills!

Without warning, I flung my head back hard and it collided with something that made the man cry out in pain. At the same time, I dug my hand into the waistband of my skirt and pulled out my birthday present – I flicked open the ultra-sharp blade in a single fluid and smooth movement and drove the 3.25-inch blade into his side – not surprisingly, he dropped me and I spun around, then kicked him in the face as he reached for my Balisong which stuck out from his side.

The man bellowed and he tried to get back up, so I punched him in the nose.

"Stay the fuck down, bastard!" I yelled as the man fell back, blood pouring from his smashed nose.

"What have I told you about your language, Anne-Marie – that'll cost you two bucks for swearing in public!" Dad exclaimed as I reached down for my Balisong.

"WHAT!" I responded as I cleaned off my blade and after I had flicked the knife closed again, I stowed it back in the waistband of my skirt.

"Back to the car – move young lady!" Mom said sternly.

My life sucked!

"Yes, Mom!"

"Very good, Rogue, well done!" Dad whispered into my ear and I grinned with pride.

We left the four men on the sidewalk and continued with our evening as if nothing had happened.

Chapter 265*: Storm Clouds Building - Part I

Four days later
Wednesday evening

New York City

Access to executive jets had its benefits!

It had been seven years, but there we were, back to where it had all begun. Only this time, we were not happy with just roof-jumping – we wanted the full experience and we had received a tip that the same fucked up apartment was in use again...

I looked up at the building; it was the same, just shittier. I went in, climbed the stairs, just as I had all those years before and I strode confidently up to the corridor, only this time, I was in full body armour – no dorky wetsuit; I was a professional! Was every door guard a fat bastard? The current one was white, but he still looked like a dick. As I turned into the corridor and strode towards Rasul's old apartment, the guard moved away from the apartment door and he tried to pull out his pistol, but it jammed on his belt.

"You shouldn't be here – you stay in Chicago!" The man tried – completely shocked by my experience – before he hit the ground, mere seconds after my fist connected with his jaw.

"Doorman down – standby, my love!"

I kicked in the door – demolished, might have been a better description – and I made my way through the inner door, literally – it splintered as my body armour absorbed the impact.

"Knock, knock!"

There were five people present and collectively they all began to shit themselves as they dropped their drug paraphernalia and dived for their weapons. There was an explosion of glass as the window exploded behind them and she made her entrance, driving her bō-staff through one cunt's back and out his chest. Only, it didn't scare the shit out of me, not anymore; now I loved it! The body fell and there she was, in all her glory – Hit Girl herself. Only, this time, she was taller and she had tits . . . but her mouth was just as foul...

"Okay, you cunts; let's see what you can do now... Eeny . . . meeny . . . miny . . . mo..."

And it kicked off...

Oh, fuck, I was energised!

It felt like coming back home – damn I missed my bō-staff – I took the man's leg off below the knee and span onto the next man, driving my blade in and then I span again and drove the blade downwards and into the recently disabled man on the floor – he screamed. All my movements flowed, just as Daddy had taught me; not one step or muscle movement was wasted.

More men appeared at the doorway, they stepped over the downed doorman and around the wrecked doors...

"What the fuck?"

The face of one exploded as my husband drove his fist backwards into the unfortunate man's face. The other men attacked and I sat back to watch Kick-Ass go to work. A man made for me as I sat on the couch – he held a machete in his hand, I jumped up and separated my blades, spinning them around.

"So, you wanna play..."

For some reason, the man suddenly had second thoughts, but before he could move I had pinned him to the wall with a blade. I turned and looked around – nobody was alive but us.

"Hey, dude..." I began and then I turned as the bathroom door opened; the muzzle of a MAC-10 appeared.

"Hey, I've not got one of those – at least not here!"

I was about to dive for the ground when I saw something zip into the bathroom and then a man fell forward onto the floor and dropped the sub-machine gun; his body was twitching. I looked up at Kick-Ass as he lowered his weapon, disconnecting the thin wires.

"Ah, dude, that is one awesome looking Taser!"

Kick-Ass chuckled as he inserted a fresh cartridge.

"This place is smaller than I remember..."

"You were like ten and just a little bit shorter," he laughed as he turned for the door.

"Hey, green asshole, can't use the front door now..." I said as I hauled out my blade from the pinned corpse and allowed it to drop to the floor without a second glance. "Love you Daddy – nice shot by the way..."

We made our way out the window, up the fire escape and onto the rooftop.

"Wait, wait, wait..." I called out and she stopped on the rooftop before turning, a smirk on her face.

"What?"

"Who are you?"

She rolled her eyes before responding.

"Me? I'm Hit Girl . . . and I fucking love you, Kick-Ass – come on!"

She turned and she ran for the edge of the roof; I followed, my feet digging in as I ran hard after my wife. We leapt into the air together and we each made a perfect landing, just feet apart and then came up to our feet. Hit Girl turned to me and she stood on her tip-toes to kiss me – I returned the kiss.

The burnt-out shell was still there; the weapons mounts on the walls were still in evidence, but the weapons were long gone.

Kick-Ass held me tight as we stood in the centre of the room. I could see my Daddy, in my mind, as he planned his revenge on Frank D'Amico. Then that fateful night, six and a half years ago, when Daddy and I had left the Safehouse to go help Kick-Ass – Daddy for the very last time...

"I know – a lot of bad shit happened that night, but Chris is dead; he paid for what he did to your Dad and to you."

"That bastard shot me – three fucking times!"

"You still hanging onto that?" Kick-Ass chuckled. "Let it go! Let it go!"

"Oh, please – don't use those words; all I hear from that girl every day is: 'Let it go! Let it go! Can't hold it back anymore – Let it go! Let it go! Turn away and slam the door, I don't care, what they're going to say, let the storm rage on – the cold never bothered me anyway...' What?"

Kick-Ass was laughing.

"It's just a little bit weird hearing Hit Girl sing a song from Frozen!"

"I can't get the damn song out of my head..."

The sun was bright as it rose over the horizon.

I turned to Kick-Ass and smiled.

"The rest of my life began right here; I broke one of Daddy's biggest rules – and I half expected him to haunt me for doing it, but I have never regretted it – never!"

"I have – once or twice..."

"WHAT!"

"Just kidding, beautiful..."

We were interrupted by a text message.

"Kent Avenue – I'm waiting!"

"Impatient, bitch..." Mindy commented as she looked around my shoulder at the message.

"Let's see what a little birdy's nest looks like..." I chuckled.

..._...

Fifteen minutes later, we pulled into a very non-descript looking building.

"You call this a nest!" I laughed as the door closed behind us.

"Funny, Kick-Ass!" A scowling Morgan replied. "Your clothes are in that room, over there. I'm just packing the last of my weapons..."

"The Courier will be by in about three hours," Mindy advised as she pulled off her mask.

"What were you guys up to?" Morgan asked.

"I could tell you, but then I'd have to kill you..." I replied deadpan.

Morgan chuckled.

"Coffee?"

"Yeah, please – we had some time to kill, so we err, killed..." Mindy replied without a trace of guilt.

"Did they deserve it?" The fifteen-year-old girl asked.

"Definitely!"

"Cool!"

Kent Avenue

Half an hour later, I was showered and changed – I was back to Mindy Lizewski.

I walked out of the bathroom and into the Safehouse's gun-room. It had been mostly stripped and Dave was loading the final few weapons into crates. Morgan was busy gathering up magazines and other smaller items.

"I'm going for a drive."

"Behave!" Dave called over and I smiled my innocent smile in reply. "Not buying it..."

"It's broad daylight – I'm not some raging, psychotic, homicidal maniac, you know!"

As I climbed into the hired Range Rover, I ignored the laughter coming from Dave and Morgan.

Brooklyn

The day had started slowly, but I had a feeling we'd get a good mark soon.

"Can we go home; we've been out all night and I need some fucking sleep!"

"Quit the fucking moaning – all fucking night, you fucking moan!"

"Come on – we made two kays, last night..."

"One more score and then we can... Oh, look at this – rich bitch coming up!"

"Huh . . . oh, yeah – nice wheels; hundred-eighty kay easy..."

"Oh, fuck – welcome back to New York, Mindy!"

The two idiots stepped out into the street and one raised a shotgun – a rather rough-looking Beretta over and under. I loved Brooklyn and while it would have been better to stick to the main streets, I was more used to sticking to the shadows. I could have just mowed the dumb asses down, but instead, I was in a good mood and I wanted to have some fun with those bozzos. I stopped and pretended to look worried. I was not armed, per se...

The one with the shotgun remained ahead, while his colleague pulled a pistol and walked around to beside my door, his pistol raised.

"Hands where we can see 'em, lady..."

Both my hands were already on the top of the steering wheel – I rolled my eyes and raised them into the air.

"Open the door and step out . . . slowly..."

I followed instructions, like a good girl and I stood in the street, my hands raised either side of my head. The one with the shotgun moved closer and he kept the weapon aimed at my head. His pal proceeded to frisk me – as he moved up my legs, I saw him smirk – enough was enough...

My left knee struck the idiot in the side of the head and he sprawled onto the blacktop. His partner came closer and quick as a flash I wrenched the shotgun out of hands and took the butt of it across the man's face – he went down with a yell of pain.

The other man was getting back up and he brought his pistol to bear...

"Stay the fuck down, cunt!" I growled as I kicked him in the side of the head and he crashed to the ground and moved no longer.

Well, that had been fun!

Kent Avenue

By the time I returned, all was packed and I could see Dave and Morgan talking as I pulled up.

Dave peered in at me and he groaned.

"What did you do?"

"Nothing!" I replied indignantly.

"Yeah..."

"It was only a pair of carjackers – they're still alive..."

"Can't leave her alone for a minute!" Dave chuckled.

Morgan grinned and nodded approvingly.

Two days later April 1st, Friday morning

Chicago Glenview

"I will kill you both in your sleep..." Stephanie growled in a very menacing tone as she entered the kitchen.

I just burst out laughing; her expression was just . . . so precious!

"I might join you..." Anne-Marie added as she joined her elder sister and Dave burst out laughing, unable to contain it anymore.

Both girls had used the shower in the changing rooms beside the pool... Now they were both standing in the kitchen wrapped only in a towel each and their skin was now tinted a light blue... It had been Dave's idea, while it had been me that had actually added the blueberry Kool-Aid to the shower heads.

"It brings out your eyes, Steph," Saoirse laughed.

"Fuck you and the horse you rode in on; 'cause I'm gonna shoot it too!" Stephanie hissed as she pushed past us all, closely followed by a furious Anne-Marie.

"Awesome!" Danny laughed as he watched his sisters run up the stairs.

Chapter 266*: Storm Clouds Building - Part II

This is the continuation of the storyline from Chapter 1: The Chase Begins of The Fusion Ultimatum.

April 11th 2016
Monday morning

Glen Oak Drive

Something was going on; I could tell.

There was a lot of packing happening, which had started on the Saturday afternoon after Mindy had received a video call from some people in the United Kingdom, actually Scotland – was that part of the United Kingdom?

The day was special for a couple of reasons, as well as for being sad. First the happy things. It was Morgan's birthday; she had just turned sixteen – mind you, my own birthday was only two short weeks hence; I would be fifteen. That morning was to be my first day moving in with Morgan as her younger sister. I would have a home for the first time since... I would also have parents – well guardians – and a family.

..._...

At that moment, I stood in my new bedroom at Glen Oak Drive. I had the corner bedroom on the second floor. Morgan had the next bedroom and we had a shared bathroom between our two bedrooms. Morgan's Aunt and Uncle, they had the bedroom at the far end of the floor. Morgan and Stephanie had helped me to decorate the room – I had been very impressed by what Stephanie had accomplished with her own bedroom.

"Looks good," Stephanie commented.

Then the sad thing; I had noticed that Stephanie had been different, ever since it had been announced that I would be taken in by John and Emily Newton.

"Hey, kid – I'm moving a short walk away; it's barely a third of a mile by road..."

"It's not that . . . well, it is – I'm glad that you have a family; just as I have . . . I'm being silly..."

"No, Steph, you're just being human – maybe that's why you were able to keep your mind through all that conditioning; you're more in touch with your humanity than the rest of us..."

"Thanks – I'll miss you, even it does mean that I have my bed to myself..."

"We can still have sleepovers," I suggested and smiled at Stephanie's reaction.

That night

Glenview

"What's going on, Mindy?"

"Sit down, SD, next to Steph, and then we can talk."

I frowned – Mindy rarely called me 'SD' and only when there was trouble. Stephanie had noticed too... Mindy sat down across from us and beside her, sat Dave. I trusted Dave and I always felt safe in his presence.

"Fusion is going on a trip, well some of it is – to Stephanie's home turf, so to speak..."

"England?" I interrupted.

"Yes – we're headed for the UK; Scotland first and then England... Maybe further afield in Europe, but that depends on where the intel takes us."

"Considering that you're talking to me and Steph, I assume this involves Urban Predator," I stated.

"That would be a 'yes'," Dave replied.

"Are we going?" Stephanie asked.

"You are – but Saoirse is staying..."

"Hey! I have every..." I responded angrily.

"Saoirse – this has nothing to do with you, directly – you just haven't properly trained with us yet and this operation won't be a good place to start..."

"So you and your vigilantes are going to attack Urban Predator and leave me on the fucking side lines?"

I was raging, but I could see how unhappy Dave and Mindy were about what they were telling us, and I could tell that they had expected my outburst.

"We need to keep some forces in reserve, here in Chicago – something could blow up right here while we are gone. I need somebody capable to be here – we will bring you over for the final act, Saoirse, I promise you that."

For a moment, I saw it all as a giant smokescreen, but I had learnt that Mindy did not do that; she said exactly what she meant – even if it was a little insulting at times...

"I trust you, Mindy – I have no reason not to... I apologise for my outburst; it was out of line."

"I want you to keep training Lauren, please, as much as possible. When we get back, I want to get her suited up and out for a trial mission – but only if you say that she is ready. Please keep an eye out for her at school, if possible."

"Marty will be in charge of Fusion, until we get back. You will have Kim, Cathy, Curtis and Sophia to keep you company at the Safehouse," Dave added. "The pups will also need walking, too!"

"Oh great; seven sets of sharp teeth!" Saoirse laughed.

Four days later
Friday night

We were finally there.

It was time to jet off to wherever Mindy had in mind. Was I worried about what lay ahead? Of course, I was... Was I going to let it get to me? No . . . but I was leaving some very special people behind; would I ever see them again? Would I be able to see the mission through to the end? The end . . . the total destruction of the Urban Predator organisation and all those who had built it...

I would not let Mindy down. I would not let myself down. I would not let Saoirse down. I would not let Miranda down – wherever she was...

I looked up at my friend – the girl who had tried three times to kill me – as she spoke.

"Take care – I mean that..."

"You taking a shine to me, SD?"

Saoirse grinned and her cheeks went slightly pink.

"There are not many people who can really appreciate what I have been through – but you are one of them, Stephanie... A few weeks ago, I would have loved nothing less than to see your broken corpse torn to pieces as it lay bleeding in the street..."

"Nice image, thanks!"

Saoirse laughed.

"You have a heart, Steph, and right now I'm glad it's still beating..."

"You're being sappy, Saoirse – I'll survive; I survived the CIA's best, didn't I?"

Saoirse laughed and then she gave me a brief hug.

"Knock 'em dead!"

"Oh, I will – I never miss..."

I felt something inside me. Saoirse was right, we needed each other and now I was leaving my friend before flying thirty-six-hundred-miles across a giant puddle called the Atlantic Ocean.

"I'll keep any eye on her for you, Stephanie – have no fear," Morgan offered, correctly interpreting my expression.

"You do that, Morgan..."

As I looked around the Safehouse, I started to get a funny feeling.

When we had left for Gotham, I had been excited and I had looked forward to what lay before us all – now, I was what . . . scared? Wildcat was never scared . . . but that wasn't exactly true; Gotham had been a big wake-up experience for me and I had learnt that I had limitations – what eleven-year-old did not.

Josh said that that I had 'matured' and at first, I had thought that he was taking the piss out of me, but then I realised that he was speaking the truth. Mom had agreed when I had asked her about it. She said that it had nothing to do with growing boobs and hair in strange places; it was a mental thing and she agreed with Josh that my mind was maturing just as quickly as my body.

That 'maturity', as they put it, it told me that we were all heading into mortal danger and there was every possibility that some of us may never return at worst, or be badly wounded at best. I hoped it was just my inexperienced mind working overtime. Yes, Wildcat was inexperienced; she still had a lot to learn. I watched my new partner constantly; Psyche may have been almost two years younger than me, but she had many more years of experience over me.

I respected her for that, and as I watched her hug Saoirse and Morgan, I hoped that what we did over there would bring some closure to both her and Saoirse. They were both products of the organisation that we were about to destroy and we had to be successful; there was no other option.

..._...

I was rapidly hauled out of my thoughts as two large black hands seized me and dragged me over to my big sister where we were both grabbed and held tightly.

"You two come back alive and in one piece, okay?"

"Yes, Marcus – we promise..." We both replied together.

Marcus' expression was one of concern.

"We need Hit Girl and Wildcat back, you hear – so control your antics and look after each other. Megan, you look after this nut-job of a sister and do what you can to prevent her from doing anything stupid..."

"Mindy, you look after this nut-job of a sister and do what you can to prevent her from doing anything stupid..."

We both laughed at that, but the laughter faded quickly. Marcus was very concerned, as was Mom who stood beside him. I hugged her next while Mindy hugged Marcus. Everybody was saying their goodbyes as if they were to be the last. It was like we were going off to war . . . maybe we were.

Would I see my Mom again?

Saturday 16th April
Afternoon

Safehouse F

I felt lonely.

They had all gone flying off across the Atlantic Ocean and the Safehouse felt empty without the usual laughter and the sounds of sparring. I missed Stephanie and her crude sense of humour. I missed Megan's foul mouth, too, not to mention her funny antics. I missed Dave and Mindy; they made me feel safe. I also hated the fact that I had been sidelined while they all faced mortal danger.

I was fully aware of why I had been left behind; I had an important task ahead of me. That task was currently rubbing her arm where I had just kicked her.

"You've got to move quicker – much quicker. I need to see more nightmare and less wet dream..."

Lauren did not like that comment, nor the analogy, and her face darkened; I could see the anger – good, good...

"Good! Use your aggressive feelings, girl. Let the hate flow through you. Feel the anger, feel the hate..."

Lauren's expression changed and she smirked at me imitation.

"Darth Sidious, you ain't," she growled.

"They ain't half bad, are they?"

Curtis and Tommy leant on the steel rail and gazed down at the fight beneath them.

"Tommy, don't tell Megan this, but I love to watch girls fight, especially ones with nice boobs..."

"I have to agree with you... I just hope Stephanie gets tits like your Megan..."

"You fancy her, don't you?"

Tommy's blush answered the question.

"She's like ten, Tommy, and you are twelve..."

"So what; she'll get boobs in time and the other shit. I like her character, the way she talks – maybe it's 'cause she's English, I don't know. I just think she's an awesome girl . . . not to mention that she is able to stand up to me when we spar."

An hour later

"So, Lauren, what do you want your combat suit to look like?" Tommy asked.

"It has to be cool!"

"We need just a bit more info..." Curtis laughed.

"What colours do you like?" I asked.

"I like purple..."

"Taken..."

"I know that, Tommy..."

"How about something like this?"

I passed over a few pieces of material to Lauren.

"What pattern is that – tiger stripes?"

"No – that would be urban camouflage. Which colours do you like?"

"That one and that one..."

"Teal and dark grey? Nice choices... Next, the firearms..."

Arrayed before me was a stunning selection of pistols.

They varied from small ones to enormous ones, with various sizes in between. SD finished laying them out and a relieved Curtis was able to flex his aching arms after he had lugged two dozen pistols up from the armoury.

"Why couldn't we have just done this in the armoury?" He asked.

"We could have..." SD replied. "You should have mentioned that earlier..."

Curtis scowled.

"Okay..." SD replied. "No offence, Lauren, but you have small hands, so we are probably best going with a compact Glock or maybe a SIG . . . a Beretta might be good too..."

"That one looks awesome..."

"No way; that's a .45 – way too big..."

"Why is it hear then?"

"I was just jerking Curtis' chain!"

"You're taking the fuckers back to the armoury, SD!" Curtis growled.

Sunday 17th April
The following morning

Glen Oak Drive

"I've never been on a motorcycle before..."

"You'll love it, Lauren..."

The BMW motorcycle that had been provided by the CIA was long gone, but I loved motorcycles so much that I had obtained a new one – this time, though, it was not a BMW it was a KTM 1190 Adventure R in blue metallic... I had found Lauren a helmet and some leathers so that we could go for a ride.

"Keep a tight grip around my waist – I'm gonna go easy and ride slowly so that you can see how I manoeuvre the machine."

"Okay..."

The thirteen-year-old girl was nervous, but I could easily understand why. I could remember my own first time on a motorcycle – I had been about eight and I was on a small scrambler with my Dad watching... It was only a dim memory, buried under years of Urban Predator shit, but I could still see it... It had been about a month before I had been taken – snap out of it, Saoirse!

I drove down the street, slowly and then turned gently into the next road on the left.

Two hours later

The Farm

I climbed off the KTM and turned to help Lauren off the back.

She pulled off her helmet and I laughed, I couldn't help it – the girl was grinning like there was no tomorrow. I had taken her for a high-speed run up the I-94 towards The Farm. The giggles that had emanated over the comms had been disconcerting, but I was glad that the girl had enjoyed herself.

"Hi, girls!"

I waved at Jack Bay as he walked over to us. I had been introduced to the man only the week before. He was a very senior cop, which had concerned me, but Mindy had told me that he knew all about Fusion and that he supported us. I had never been to The Farm, so it was a first for me and Lauren, both.

Jack took us into the kitchen first and he gave us both some Coke.

"This thing is a pain to carry..."

Lauren dumped the SIG Sauer P230 Compact pistol onto the kitchen side. Jack laughed.

"I'm getting her used to carrying a concealed weapon – she only got it yesterday afternoon," I explained.

"It may save your life, one day, young lady; if you're gonna be a vigilante," Jack cautioned.

I noticed Lauren go a little pale; the thirteen-year-old girl was still struggling to cope with the changes in her life. She had never even handled a gun before a couple of weeks ago and now she was being trained to kill.

"Can she shoot it?"

"She's managed to get a few bullets in the vague direction of the target..." I teased.

"They all hit the target I'll have you know!" Lauren retorted indignantly.

An hour later

"Stop laughing!"

I couldn't see a thing; my visor was covered in mud and for some reason it felt really hot inside the helmet. SD was laughing her head off and it was embarrassing, to say the least. I knew that my butt would be sticking up in the air and that was probably what SD was laughing at...

"I'm sorry, Lauren, but that was one awesome dive you took..."

"Not funny – just help me up, would ya?"

I felt a pair of hands on my waist and I was pulled back onto my knees. I lifted my head and then I screamed as a whole load of water cascaded over me – but at least I could see! I saw Jack standing a few feet away with a large empty bucket.

"Thanks, Jack!"

"Get back on that motorcycle, young lady – keep on learnin'," Jack advised.

I grinned and climbed back onto the now rather muddy Honda that SD was holding ready for me. I could do it, I could ride that motorcycle; I was not going to let Mindy down, not after everything that she and Dave had done for me.

Two days later

Tuesday 19th April
Early morning

West Ridge

"What's that?"

"An alarm, honey, go back to sleep."

Marty gazed at the clock – two AM! He swung his legs around and onto the floor before he stood up, a little shakily – he had only been in bed two hours. I rubbed his tired eyes and picked up his tablet. After a few minutes' perusal he grimaced.

"We're being hacked – no more than usual, just the usual DoS attacks – but something looks hinky about one particular attack; it's forceful and is doing more than just being annoying..."

"In English, geek!" A tired Kim groaned.

"Somebody is making a concerted effort to get in; they know they have something – but probably not what – I need to find out if it's dangerous."

"I'll put the coffee on."

Whoever was hacking us; they weren't doing too much to cover their trail, which could mean a trap, or just a stupid hacker...

I was able to track down their IP address relatively easily. It had taken a while and it had involved several leaps around the country, but we had finally returned to Chicago. To be honest, I was more than a little surprised by the turn of events; I had expected to find the source of the hack in some disreputable Chinese University for example.

The hacking was quite complex, which indicated somebody highly skilled and possibly even a nation state which was why Chicago was not even on my list for potential sources of the hack.

That night

Lincolnwood

After we had gathered the team at the Safehouse, and left Matty in some very capable hands, we had then left the Safehouse in Hound.

As we approached the address, I began to get a strange feeling – something irked me. We were in a very good neighbourhood, with large houses and expensive cars parked on the driveways. I detected that my wife was a little unnerved too as we pulled up and stopped a couple of dozen yards from the target property. It was a large house, with five bedrooms, according to the schematics. Added information that I had obtained showed that there was also an advanced computer capability within the property as there were a pair of fibre data connections to the property, both of high bandwidth.

There were lights on downstairs in the house and also in two of the upstairs rooms. In the driveway were a pair of SUVs; a large Jeep and a BMW X3. Whomever lived there had money. According to the records held by Chicago and various other computer systems, Mr and Mrs Dade were both well paid members of the IT community and they both worked in the centre of Chicago as IT Managers. They had two teenage children, a boy and a girl.

They did not exactly fit the expected form of the 'hackers' that we were looking for...

..._...

Heat scans of the property had showed two people downstairs in the living room, but five in the rearmost bedroom, upstairs.

"You guys getting this?" Hawk asked.

"Yeah, Hawk – we have your image..." Trojan replied from the Safehouse.

"Sure that's the place?" Foxtail enquired from beside Trojan.

"That's where the IP address is registered..." I reminded them. "Murphy, Fellowes – you guys ready?"

"Aren't we always?" Murphy replied.

"Finished your doughnuts?" Hawk chuckled.

"Funny, coming from you!" Fellowes shot back good-naturedly.

"I'd like to go on record as saying that I did not stuff my face with doughnuts when on patrol..."

"Let's focus – Murphy, Fellowes; time for you two to do your thing."

As we watched, the unmarked CPD SUV pulled up outside the target property and we moved Hound up a dozen yards behind. Murphy and Fellowes climbed out and headed towards the front door of the house while Hawk and I headed around the rear of the property.

..._...

At the rear of the property was a large grassed backyard. The back of the building had a pair of balconies on the second floor – one of which had five people in the room beyond it.

"Let's move, my precious..."

"Move it, Geek!"

We both climbed up to the balcony and took up position on either side of the windows. There was a single door into the bedroom. We paused and listened.

We could hear voices – kids' voices...

Chapter 268*: Hackers

Author's Note: Please be warned that this chapter includes a small amount of smut and behaviour that could be seen as very indecent and salacious, including words or insinuations of a dubious, unseemly or suggestive nature.

This chapter is in line with Chapters 4 to 13 of The Fusion Ultimatum.

Tuesday 19th April
That night

Lincolnwood

Downstairs

"Good evening ma'am – I am Sergeant Fellowes, CPD and this is my colleague Sergeant Murphy..."

"What is this about, officers?" Mrs Dade enquired, concern evident in her voice.

"Who is it, honey?" A man's voice called from behind Mrs Dade.

"The Police."

"What?"

Mr Dade soon joined his wife and they invited us into the house.

"We have had a report of a hacking incident from this address, Mr and Mrs Dade," I began.

Upstairs

The door to the balcony was unlocked and the handle turned both easily and quietly.

The bedroom was large, with a pair of single beds, a large desk and the usual accoutrements that you might find in the bedroom of a teenage kid. The desk was the centre of attention, both for the five kids and for us. On that desk were a pair of twenty-three-inch computer monitors and beside them, a large Dell PC.

Of the five kids, two were girls and all were in their night attire. Nobody had made note of our entry and as our Heckler & Koch G36C assault rifles covered the kids, they continued chattering away as one of their number, a girl with black hair, typed away on the keyboard.

There was no way that Fusion was being hacked by a bunch of teenage geeks!

..._...

One of the boys happened to turn around; maybe he had felt the draft from the open doorway...

"Wow!"

Not the response that we had expected... All five sets of eyes turned to face us and they all went very wide.

"You're Hawk!" One of the boys blurted out as his eyes fell on my wife.

"You're Battle Guy!" The girl at the computer said in obvious awe.

"Hey!" Hawk growled. "Eyes up here – my face is not down there..."

The boy quickly moved his eyes from my wife's butt, but he paused at her chest before looking at her masked face. Damn... It was like looking at myself half a dozen or more years earlier!

"Ewww – Geeks!" Hawk wailed and she drew some dirty grins from the three boys.

..._...

"What would Fusion be doing in my bedroom?" The girl at the keyboard demanded as she stood up.

"You are one lucky hussy, Libby!" The other girl moaned.

Libby Dade was thirteen and tall for her age – I got the distinct impression that she was the leader of the small group of teenage hackers.

"Your IP address was used to hack into a firewall at our datacentre," I explained and we were instantly hit by a wall of indignant denials.

"We would never do that..."

"Hack into Fusion? No way!"

"That would be an awesomely dumb thing to do..."

"A quick way to be on Hit Girl's shit list!"

"Not cool..."

I looked over at Hawk; she just shrugged.

Libby sat back down at her computer and she opened up a command window before she commenced some rapid typing.

"Found it!" She declared after a couple of minutes. "There's an entry in the routing table – it takes incoming packets, rewrites their source and then sends them out again..."

"That might explain why you're being used... We need to..."

"Yeah – we should be able to use the logs to recreate the original packet headers..."

Libby pounded away at her keyboard – then she stopped typing for a moment and looked up at Battle Guy.

"What do you think – maybe another function or two..."

"Yeah – you could..."

"Like this?"

"Yeah; change that to a constant..."

"Is that better?"

"Yeah – compile it and let's see what the result is."

..._...

"You two geeks finished, yet?" I demanded.

"Almost – this program should track back the IP address..." Battle Guy replied.

"So – who are you friends, Libby?"

"This is my brother, Jesse – he uses the handle, Bloodwing. These are our friends, Kate Bradford – aka Psychotic Savage, Laurence Gray – aka Jolly Ox and Peter Savage – aka Atomic Machine. I, of course, am Poison Princess."

"Nice!" I commented sarcastically before turning to the comms. "Mist – you can move out..."

"Copy that – somebody's back in town and I've got an urge..."

I laughed and Battle Guy cringed.

..._...

"What the hell is going on in here?"

I turned to see Mr Dade standing in the doorway with his wife directly behind him. They were both followed by Murphy and Fellowes.

"We're helping Fusion, Dad – what does it look like!" Libby replied tartly.

"Elizabeth Dade, don't talk to your father like that!" Mrs Dade responded sharply.

Libby rolled her eyes.

"Less of the attitude, young lady!" Mr Dade added.

"She's telling the truth, Mr and Mrs Dade," I explained. "We tracked an attack to this property, but it appears that somebody is using them as the fall guy – we need your daughter's help to track them down.

"So you just broke into my daughter's bedroom?"

"You could try locking your doors?" Battle Guy hinted as he tipped his head towards the door that led outside to the balcony.

"What have we told you about that door, Elizabeth!"

"Sorry, Dad..."

Mrs Dade looked at her husband and shrugged.

"It's not like they're hacking the planet or a major corporation..." She mused.

"Yeah – things have moved on a bit since our day, Burn – like mother, like daughter."

"You got it there, Crash."

"It'll take a while for the back trace to run – we should have something tomorrow," Libby commented.

Later that night, across the city

Erika sat back onto her bare heels, her dark cherry nipples glistened with the saliva that coated them. She looked hungrily at Toni and kissed her on the lips, her tongue forced its way inside and Erika savoured the sweet taste of her friend. Toni pushed Erika back, away from her. Erika took a deep breath as Toni's hands touched her very hard and very sensitive nipples.

"I love your face, Erika, and I love the taste, but . . . don't take it the wrong way, but it's not your face I wanna see, nor are those the lips that I want to stick my tongue between..."

"You bad girl, Toni..." Erika groaned as she laid down on the ground, her head between Toni's legs.

Erika looked directly upwards into the very moist crotch of her girlfriend as Toni came down onto her knees and then laid down on top of her lover. Toni began to gently lick the shaven vulva before her and she yelped as she felt a tongue penetrate her own moist folds and two hands grasped her firm buttocks.

'Damn!' Toni's mind screamed. 'My girl's on form tonight!'

"God, I've missed you, Toni," Erika groaned as she took a breath from her munching.

"I was only gone five days..."

"Still, I missed you..."

Toni yelped as Erika's tongue began to work its way up her labia.

Wednesday 20th April

Glen Oak Drive

I crept across the landing, pushed open the door to the dark bedroom and stealthily slid inside – the bed was still occupied and the occupant was snoring.

I walked slowly past the bed and deftly pulled the curtains open to allow the morning sunlight to flood in. The sun quickly spread across the room and then directly into the face of the black haired girl who was still fast asleep. The girl grimaced and squinted as she slowly opened her dark blue eyes – she glared up at me.

"What do you want?"

"Time for little birdies to get up..."

"For your information, little sister, a raven is not a little birdie..."

"Still, it's time to stretch your wings and soar around the corner..."

"Enough with the bird metaphors, SD – I'm gettin' up, okay?"

"Yay!"

Forty-minutes later

Sunset Ridge Road

"You could have at least let me have a bigger breakfast..."

"Oh, Morgan, quit your moaning!"

"I... Oh never mind – let's get this over and done with..."

"Here we are, Burr Oak Drive – let's get those little fur balls."

A further forty-minutes later

Sunset Ridge Road

We had to rely on Sophia to help us sort out the pups as they were very excited.

It took twenty minutes to get them leashed and out onto the road – it was exhausting too.

"Josie, heel... Piper, this side of the damn light pole!"

"Razor – get your nose out of that bin... Kiara!"

Hope yelped as Kiara nipped her butt – Sophia rewarded Kiara with a paw that sent her flying, at least as far as the leash would allow. Layla and Hercules were actually behaving themselves for the moment.

"Razor – nose out of Piper's butt..."

Why did I sign up for this!

"This is so awesome!" Morgan giggled as she sat on the pavement and allowed Hercules to lick her face.

"Glad you're enjoying yourself..."

Safehouse F

"This is perfect – those kids did very well..."

"Your little geek pals came through?" Kim grinned.

"Yes, beautiful, they did – we have a target IP address – only there is still a lot more work to be done to find an exact location, but the location is not in the continental United States."

Indian Knoll Road

There was a knock on the door.

I answered it to find Marcus and Cathy. They both looked very grave – Hailee, something had happened to my daughter...

"No, please, no..."

"Vicky, Hailee has gone missing – she is alive; Mindy spoke with her – but we have no idea where she is..."

"My God..."

Friday 22nd April

Indian Knoll Road

When the phone rang, I was too scared to answer it.

But I pulled myself together and lifted the receiver.

"Vicky – it's Mindy . . . we've got her back..."

"Is she okay?"

"One or two bruises, nothing more..."

"Mindy, you can't lie worth a damn..."

"She's gonna be hurting for a long while, but she's alive, Vicky."

"Thank you for calling me, Mindy."

"We are all looking after her and she'll not be going out for a while..."

"She'll go bananas!"

"Tell me about it..." I replied.

Sunday 24th April

Safehouse F

Mindy and Stephanie were in trouble.

They thought that they had escaped their pursuers, but no, somehow the CIA had tracked them to Mâcon.

"Oh fuck!" Mindy exclaimed over the open comms.

We all heard the gunfire – AR-16 my brain told me – and then the wrenching of tortured metal as something hit something else. Then I heard the distinctive sound of bullets piercing glass and then a scream... I began to panic and I grabbed hold of Morgan for support – Stephanie had been hurt, maybe she had been killed...

Goddammit, I was crying!

Saoirse's hands gripped me tightly; she was strong and it was borderline painful.

Her face was a mask of horror and worry. Again the link to that other girl whom Saoirse had tried valiantly to kill in cold blood. I was shocked to see the tears, but I knew that hearing and not understanding what was going on was sheer torture for her.

I was going to be a good big sister and stay by her side.

Later that day

When Saoirse finally put down the phone her face was wet with tears but she was smiling.

"She's okay, just banged up a bit."

"I'm glad to hear it, SD, I really am."

"Thank you for staying with me, Morgan."

Tuesday 26th April

Glen Oak Drive

"So, what are you so damn happy about?"

I looked over at Morgan and I blushed.

"I found a boyfriend..."

"Which creep is it?"

"Ethan... Ethan Anderson..."

"Ethan Anderson!"

"He's cute..."

"He's a sophomore..."

"So..."

"Jeez, Saoirse... You fucked yet?"

The angry scowl told me otherwise!

I knew that Saoirse was not a virgin, but she was obviously biding her time. Ethan Anderson was a nice guy and I knew that he was a friend of Chloe and Josh, however, as far as I knew he was not aware of Fusion. Oh, well, it was up to her who she was seeing – as long as she stayed away from Mike...

I also knew that she was a little upset. Tomorrow was to be her fifteenth birthday – it was also to be Stephanie's tenth birthday. I knew that those two had a bond; I knew a lot of the story, but not everything. Mindy had told me that they had once been mortal enemies and that Saoirse had actually tried to kill Stephanie on three separate occasions.

Mindy and I had talked about tomorrow and I had made sure that Saoirse would not be alone.

Chapter 269*: The Phoenix At Sunset

Author's Note: This chapter is in line with Chapters 14 to 16 of The Fusion Ultimatum.

The following morning
Wednesday, 27th April 2016

I was awoken by a violent beeping sound – it was insistent.

The clock beside my bed said six in the morning. I buried my face into the pillow and groaned – but the beeping just got louder. I crawled out of bed and logged onto my laptop. I came awake almost instantly when I saw who it was.

"Happy Birthday, SD!"

It was a grinning Stephanie. I felt myself grinning too, despite the early hour.

"Hi, Steph – Happy Birthday to you, too!"

"Your hair sucks..."

"You just woke me up, bitch – it's not long after six in the goddamn morning!"

I could not be angry with her; I was actually over the moon that she had called.

"Where are you?"

"Innsbruck – that's in..."

"I know: Austria."

"It's really good to see you, SD..."

"You too, Steph . . . how's your bruising?"

"Despite Mindy's driving, I'm fine – it's mostly gone now..."

"You don't sound right..."

"You remember I mentioned Miranda?"

"Yeah, I do."

"She's dead."

Stephanie's voice was cold and devoid of all emotion. I knew that it was her way of keeping it together; it had nothing to do with her feeling, it was just her training.

"I'm so sorry, Steph."

"I'll get over it..."

"We'll talk about it next time we're together, okay?"

"Promise?"

"What are friends for?"

"Take care, SD!"

"Stay safe, Stephanie."

Later that morning

Safehouse F

I had no idea what was going on, but the atmosphere in the Safehouse was distinctly chilly and I was not referring to the air-conditioning either.

Everybody was concentrating on their tasks and supporting those in Europe. Marty had mentioned that reinforcements may be required, but not who might be going. In the meantime, I was trying to maintain Lauren's training regimen.

"Come on, Lauren, concentrate... The diameter of the bore in a Glock 22 is...?"

"Forty waffles..."

"Huh?" The girl was not concentrating. "What is Aiki-Jō?"

Lauren smiled.

"Aiki-Jō is the name given to the set of martial art pancakes practiced with a Jō..."

I blinked and stuck a finger in my left ear – had I heard her right?

"Who were Hit Girl and Kick-Ass fighting when they first joined forces?"

I hope she doesn't say Frank doughnut!

"Err, that would be Cereal D'Amico. Easy, or what!"

"Or what..." I muttered. "I've never heard answers so wrong . . . and so breakfast-related!"

Lauren's stomach rumbled quite audibly.

"Did you skip breakfast, this morning?"

"Maybe..."

Two days later Friday Night

Safehouse F

It was time for Lauren to learn how the Command Centre operated when operatives were out on the streets of Chicago.

Marty had spent an hour taking the young vigilante through all the systems and how we kept track of who were out in Chicago. The screens displayed location, status of the operatives and even the fuel load on their transport. Every Safehouse was listed along with their status.

"Why is Safehouse K greyed out?" Lauren asked.

"The CIA blew it up and it's currently being rebuilt."

"Oh."

"What's down there, in Safehouse W?"

Marty chuckled.

"That, Lauren, would be the Vigilante."

Marty punched some keys and the schematic of a sleek-hulled sports-yacht appeared on one of the screens.

"Wow!" I breathed and I had to admit, I was overawed by what Dave and Mindy had built.

"What is that?" I demanded as she pointed at the left-hand screen in the Control Centre.

I looked up at the indicated screen.

"That's something different..." Marty commented.

It was not easy to see on the image from the camera, but the colours stood out if nothing else.

"Nice colour scheme," I commented.

Marty chuckled as he directed Foxtail and Raven towards Chicago's newest whatever.

Junction of 64th and 50th

"What do you think?"

I looked over at my big sister. Despite the fact that she was my big sister, she knew that Foxtail was way more skilled than Raven ever was. Raven slowed her motorcycle and we stopped just behind the small crowd that had formed near the garish . . . what the hell was she? We climbed off the Yamaha Super Ténéré and moved closer. Several people moved out of our way as we approached – it was obvious to all that we were Fusion, even if we were new on the streets of Chicago.

..._...

She was clad from neck to ankle in a figure hugging suit that accentuated her slim but very feminine body. The usual key points of vulnerability were protected with extra armour for the joints and the chest while the young woman's hands were encased in slim gauntlets and her feet in lightweight, knee-length, high-heeled boots. Overall, the suit was black, with the boots and the backs of the gauntlets highlighted in purple pizzazz – a lighter, almost pink, shade of purple.

Above the neck, the woman's head was encased in a mask that covered all but her mouth and lower jaw. The mask was the same purple pizzazz, while the long wig that extended more than halfway down her back was primarily a venetian red, with lemon yellow highlights. On either thigh, she carried an eighteen-inch Tanto, each with a twelve-inch blade. Mounted over each Tanto was a holster from which a SIG Sauer SP2022 pistol in nine-millimetre calibre peeked out. On her back she carried a double-bladed ninja sword staff.

Behind her stood a beautiful Kawasaki Ninja ZX-10R in a dark red with neon orange highlights to the wheel rims and frame. The machine matched her flamboyant image to a T. She noticed us in the crowd.

"Ah, the mighty Fusion arrives..."

I just stood there, my arms folded across my chest. Raven took up an equally non-threatening position with her hands on her hips.

"I think it is time to introduce myself . . . I, am Sunset Phoenix," she said with a flourish.

Raven began to slow-clap.

"Welcome to Chicago, Sunset Phoenix..." She replied. "You here to cause us trouble?"

"Only time will tell, Raven . . . who is your little friend?"

I bristled at that!

"I, am Foxtail..."

"Nice – anyway..."

There was the roar of a powerful motorcycle engine and a Honda Fireblade Black Edition appeared behind the so-called Sunset Phoenix. Medic came to a rapid halt, dismounted and stood with her arms folded; she glared disapprovingly at the garish newcomer. My attention was momentarily taken by the awesome set of wheels – Medic was going through a mid-life crisis; I was certain of it...

Sunset looked at Medic for a moment, before she continued to speak.

"Welcome, Medic – nice wheels – get used to seeing me around, Fusion, we're gonna get to know each other so well..."

"Is that so?" Raven stated rhetorically.

"My time is up; a girl is very busy on Friday night..."

With that, the flamboyant vigilante swung a long leg over her Kawasaki and started the engine before pulling on a pink and black helmet. Then with a completely unnecessary amount of power, she sped off leaving a pungent smell of burnt rubber.

"Fucking lunatic!" Raven commented under her breath.

The crowd being to disperse and once they were mostly gone, we remounted our machines and the three of us headed off for a coffee.

Across Chicago

Sunset Phoenix slowed her Kawasaki and she pressed the button on a small remote.

A roller-shutter to her right opened and she turned her motorcycle into the concrete structure and then down a curved ramp that descended into the depths. After she had descended about forty feet, she entered a large cavernous concrete room which immediately erupted into light as she came off the ramp. Behind her, a steel door slid shut, closing off the ramp. She stopped her motorcycle in a space between two other motorcycles and killed the engine.

Off came the pink and black helmet which Sunset then placed gently onto a rack beside several other helmets after she had climbed off her motorcycle. She walked over towards a steel door set into the concrete, punched a code into an adjacent keypad and as the door clicked open, she vanished through it.

Forty minutes later, a young woman, with below shoulder-length light brown hair and brown eyes walked out of the same door. She walked over to a competition orange Shelby GT350 Mustang and climbed in. She pressed a button on the car's dashboard and the steel door covering the ramp slid to one side. With a roar the car accelerated up the ramp and out onto the streets of Chicago.

Saturday, 30th April 2016

Apparently, Stephanie and the others were in Germany – how did I know?

The wall to wall news coverage of a 'high-speed shootout at the Nürburgring' and 'carnage on the roads of Germany' gave me a small hint. There was no direct reference to Fusion, however, Mindy seemed to have her own ways of leaving trails of mass-destruction behind her as she went. It was really close as to what caused more mayhem and destruction: Hit Girl on a mission or a nuclear bomb...

I understood that Captain Williams was on the verge of a nervous breakdown; not surprising really when you considered what he had to put up with. As for Paige; she was struggling no end when you considered that she looked like she had just swallowed a whole water melon – people weren't kidding when they referred to pregnant women as beached whales. I was also struggling to work out how something so big could come out of somewhere that was actually relatively small... Note to self: never get pregnant!

Anyway, Foxtail had work to do – I was packing as apparently, I had been drafted to fight in Mindy's little war in Europe. I was not the only person packing; three others were packing their kit too. One of them was very eager to get into the action, wherever and whatever that might be.

Safehouse F

I picked up the phone almost absent-mindedly.

"6281," I offered.

"My name is Akuma and I work for a mutual friend..."

"I have no idea what you are talking about," I replied smoothly.

The caller had a strong French accent so I began to have an idea about what the caller was about to say.

"Miraculous."

A simple word but it was also a code challenge.

"Bonjour, Akuma – I am Battle Guy, how can I help you?"

Chapter 270*: Emergence

Author's Note: This chapter is the beginning of the post-Fusion Ultimatum storyline. We will see some new faces and will see some old friends return too. This new storyline will contain plenty of action and violence. We will see Fusion face their toughest foes yet as they are put through their paces in their home city. As well as the violence, there will be heartache and there will be sorrow . . . there will also be death – not to mention a real shocker later on...

My name is Adam Stockdale and I live with my paternal cousin, Adora.

Our lives were torn apart by the brutal murder of our parents at my home, one dark and stormy night, in 2011. My cousin and I, then spent the next two and a half years of our lives in comas brought on by our injuries that were sustained during the attack. A few days before our fifteenth birthday, we both awoke into a new and scary world. We were taken in by a friend of the family, Duncan Adams and his wife, Katelyn. Both of whom had stayed at our bedsides for the preceding two years.

It was Katelyn, who had broken the news to us both that we had been orphans for the past two years of our lives. Our new lives had begun, in a very different country in a very different part of the world. Once the initial sadness and horror had passed, we had both grown angry, bitter, and spiteful towards the outside world despite the love and care that we both received in copious amounts.

Under the guidance of Duncan and Katelyn, we gained new skills which we were told might help us to come to terms with our new lives – something to vent our anger on. We had put all our efforts into bettering ourselves at school – we had two whole years to catch up on – and we held a deep-seated hatred for the people that we believed were behind the deaths of our parents and the near deaths of ourselves.

Unknown to us, we were being secretly trained by Duncan and Katelyn – they had a background of which we were completely oblivious. Our plan had been to go after those who had destroyed our lives, ourselves. However, to do that, we would need money. We had been left a large amount of money by our respective parents, however, it was all tied up in a trust fund that neither of us could access until we reached our eighteenth birthdays. When that day came, we had both vowed to start actively planning to avenge our parents.

As cousins, we were very close. Our fathers had been brothers – twins in fact. They had been born together – they had even married together – they had also died together. In a quirk of biological fate, our mothers had both gone into labour on the same day and we had both been born within a minute of one another.

Then, after three years, 2016 had finally dawned and a month later, we had turned eighteen.

February 1st, 2016

On that day, as well as gaining access to a huge fortune, we were also given the keys to our former homes.

My family had lived to the northeast of a big city in North America while Adora's family had lived near a large lake to the north of the same city. We both returned to the United States of America with our adoptive family and we landed at Chicago O'Hare International Airport. It was only when Adora and I arrived at my former home that a big secret was unveiled. Duncan and Katelyn had been planning and building ever since we had both regained consciousness, three years previously.

Even though we had not been able to access our trust funds to start building our future, Duncan and Katelyn had transformed more than one part of my home that I had never known had even existed. There followed three months of intensive training to get used to our new equipment. It was a bit weird, just the two of us living in a nine-bedroom mansion but it had given us the space and privacy that we had craved to figure out our new lives.

Therefore, at the beginning of May, with our new skills and our new equipment, we soon found ourselves out on the dark streets of Chicago in search of assistance for our quest of retribution.

Despite us having worn our armoured suits before, somehow it felt different wearing them that night. We were going into harm's way, although it had been suggested to us that we try to avoid any trouble for our first few nights out on the town.

We each wore near identical suits – Adora's was black from head to toe and matched her Yamaha MT-10 motorcycle. Mine was black but it had vivid blue highlights that matched my own Yamaha MT-10 motorcycle's colour scheme. On each hip, we carried a SIG Sauer P2022 Threaded Barrel pistol and around our waists a utility belt that held communications equipment, spare magazines, medical supplies and some other equipment. On our left and right thighs, we carried three titanium throwing knives. A large combat knife lived on our left calves.

Our principal weapon was an Oneida Kestrel compound bow which we carried on a mount just forward of the motorcycle handlebars; on our backs we carried a slim quiver of arrows. The motorcycles also carried a heavier weapon in the form of a SIG Sauer MPX-K submachine gun plus several magazines.

Sunday, 1st May 2016

We were complete unknowns in the city and unlike the pink whatever that had recently appeared on the streets of Chicago only the previous week, we wanted to keep a low profile for as long as possible. Mind you, as far as we could tell, there had been no sign of Hit Girl, nor of any of the senior members of Fusion for a good couple of weeks. There had, however, been some interesting news reports from Europe...

Our weapons tended to blend in with our suits in darkness which made us seem like just any other pair of youngsters out for an evening ride. We had spent some of the past weeks combing the city and learning the streets and alleyways. We knew that until we were trusted, we might actually be hunted by Fusion, the CPD and God only knew who else. With that in mind, we had scouted out escape routes and studied places where we could hideout if needs be.

We had trained well, but we had not seen any actual 'action', so we needed to be careful and for the moment, there were only the two of us.

..._...

There was one other complication that I had not mentioned. Duncan and Katelyn had two kids: Paul and Rose who were eleven and nine respectively. Those two had absolutely no idea what myself and my cousin were now doing – apparently, the two kids had no idea that their own parents had a rather violent history.

That night, our first night out in Chicago as Apollo and Artemis, Paul called me on my mobile...

"Hi, Paul."

"Where are you? Are you out somewhere; you sound muffled?"

"I'm in Chicago with my cousin, why?"

"Just wanted to see if you wanted to come get me and we could go get a pizza..."

"Not tonight, Paul – got things to do. Gotta go, kid..."

"Bye, Adam."

That was all I needed! I was trying to concentrate on the night's plan but instead I was being distracted by an eleven-year-old who wanted pizza...

Coming out of a coma had been hard, not to mention the distressing news which had followed us coming back to life.

When we had been hurt, we had both been twelve. As for the events that had taken our parents from us, we could remember very little – we were advised that the traumatic memories would come back over time; neither of us were in any rush to regain those memories for obvious reasons...

Suddenly awaking to find yourselves aged fifteen after going to sleep as a twelve-year-old was weird, to be honest. During our comas, both my cousin and I had sailed through puberty for one and our bodies were very different from when we had previously seen them. We had actually taken the opportunity to examine each other to find out the changes...

...+...

"You've actually got a dick..." Adora noticed with a smirk.

"Thanks!" I replied sarcastically and I felt myself reddening on my cheeks. "You've actually got some tits..."

"Touché, mon ami!" Adora laughed. "My tits are huge!"

"Oh, no..." I moaned as I looked down at myself.

Adora was the first 'real' girl that I had actually seen naked and my brain had noticed...

"Nice, cuz, real nice..."

Adora was blushing as I bit my lip and closed my eyes, not that it made any difference as something just got harder.

...+...

I had to admit that after that episode I thought I'd never hear the end of it but then something much worse happened to Adora a week or two later. I had gone looking for my cousin one morning and I had found her in her bathroom, crouched down and with several fingers up herself.

...+...

"Err, I'll leave you alone..." I muttered as I turned to leave.

"I'm on my goddamn period, you dick, and I can't figure out these damn things..."

It was only then that I noticed the three or four bullet-shaped objects on the bathroom floor.

"Oh – I'm still leaving; ewww..."

"Thanks, asshole!" Adora growled. "I've never done this before – I barely had pubes before all this happened..."

...+...

Needless to say, neither of us had spoken about me getting a rise out of my cousin, nor about Adora's tampon problems...

South Clark Street and East 16th Street

We began to attract some unwanted attention by the time we reached South Clark Street and East 16th Street.

As we passed under the railroad tracks, northbound, we found ourselves with an escort. It was that pink whatever from the other night. Despite her garish colour scheme – Adora liked the purple pizzazz – she had a great body and an awesome taste in motorcycles.

We had no desire to be associated with her as she was a complete unknown and I had registered Fusion's reaction to her, which had been full of disdain. We accelerated but she kept pace with us as we roared through the tunnel beneath the West Roosevelt Road junction. We took a left at West Polk Street and crossed beneath the railroad tracks still with the purple pizzazz following us.

We stopped in the park beside the canal and we both turned to our new 'friend'.

..._...

"You must be Sunset Phoenix."

"Oh, new vigilantes – cool!"

"Why are you following us?"

"I was curious..."

"Well?" Artemis growled. "Is your curiosity satisfied?"

"Not really. What do you call yourselves?"

"We are not ready to reveal that information; not yet," I replied.

"But we'll let you know," Artemis added.

By her tone, I noticed that my cousin had taken an instant dislike to Sunset Phoenix.

"Okay; I know when I'm not welcome – see ya, wouldn't want to be ya!"

With that, Sunset Phoenix started her engine and accelerated away.

At the end of our 'eventful' night, we headed for East Monroe Street.

There, our families owned a condo. South Wabash Street which crossed East Monroe beside our building also bore the 'L' and as we passed beneath Madison/Wabash station, we peeled off into an alleyway where we quickly pulled off our weapons and stowed them in a previously cached holdall. In went our masks and out came a pair of dark leather jackets. The building had originally been selected by our families for the anonymity that it offered.

That anonymity allowed us to ride our motorcycles down into the subterranean parking lot and park them in a private container-type storage area. Our weapons were left with the motorcycles under lock and key before we made sure that the container was secure and we headed for one of the four elevators that serviced our floor.

We rocketed up to the 71st floor where our condo took up the entire floor.

Later that night

Winnetka

The Shelby GT530 Mustang turned left off Winnetka Road into the drive of a large property.

The gates slowly swung open as the driver pressed a button in the car. She pulled the car around and stopped directly in front of the stone steps that led up to the front door. Summer Frasier walked up to the door, unlocked it and walked straight inside before she closed and locked the door behind her.

After walking through to the kitchen and making herself a coffee, she headed downstairs into the basement. There she walked toward what she called her Resource Room. The door was steel and had a combination lock beside it.

She entered an eight-digit code and passed through the door which closed and locked itself behind her.

It had been seven years.

It had taken the lives of my parents and it had consumed me. It had made me what I was at that moment. I had intended to do good, to ensure that nobody else suffered the way my family had. But then, in the middle of December 2015, I had received a package delivered by an anonymous courier.

That package had contained a file. On opening the cover of the file, I was shocked by what I found.

..._...

There were three colour photos.

I recognised the girl in each photo, even though I had not seen her since around the time that the first photo had been taken. The girl was eight-years-old in the first photo, maybe ten in the second, and maybe twelve in the final photo.

Beneath the photos was a heavily redacted form. In between the blacked out portions I recognised the name: KARA NEWTON and then in another box: FRASIER. The date of birth was instantly recognisable: JUNE 18TH 2001. I hated the next box – DATE OF DEATH: 12TH OCTOBER 2014. There was a red stamp in the top right corner: DECEASED.

Somehow, it gave me closure – at least I knew what had happened to her all those years ago. She had lived another four years after she had gone missing and I had no idea what she had been doing during those years. I perused the next pages with shaking hands. There were multiple full-colour, glossy photos. They were horrible. They depicted a naked girl of around twelve-years-old. She lay on a coroner's table and one side of her head was visibly broken.

Even in death, I recognised the face.

Below the photos was a report, most of which was black out, I zeroed onto one piece of information, one phrase that contained a name: KILLED BY STEPHANIE WALKER. Finally, there were more photos – this time of a girl with long-blond hair. Then some un-redacted information which detailed one Stephanie Walker. I again zeroed onto some critical information: LAST KNOWN LOCATION: CHICAGO (SEE FUSION).

My sister would be avenged.

Chapter 271*: Upcoming Forsaken

Forsaken will be back in action, very soon. But for now, some upcoming Forsaken.

Please be advised that some of what you see below may not actually appear in the story, or may be changed considerably. Most of the below will be out of context (on purpose) and not necessarily in the right order. Also, the below spans approximately 80 chapters, so you may not see certain sections for quite a while.

...+...

I heard the sound of the explosions – four in all. I grabbed Anne-Marie and dragged her to the floor as the glass from the windows exploded into the room

...+...

Without any further hesitation, Megan reached forward and she pushed a button on the console.

"Hound, Sentinel, this is Wildcat – we have explosions, move in and assess the situation," she ordered smoothly as she took charge. "Petra – keep an eye on the situation here; Leon, let's gear up – we're taking Brute!"

Despite her tender age, Wildcat was the ranking Fusion operator present in the Safehouse that night.

...+...

The ten-year-old girl instantly braced up as the knife embedded itself an inch or two into the archway, a mere three inches from her left ear.

...+...

"What the hell is that racket?" Office Pete Howser exclaimed as his voice was all but drowned out by the sound of many powerful motorcycle engines.

...+...

It had been almost six months since her kidnap and attack – I refused to say that word; it scared me. Lauren had cried most nights for over a week after it had happened. I had tried to help her but Lauren would hug me on some occasions and on others, she would push me away – at times violently.

...+...

That had also been around the time that Chloe had been mysteriously wounded. Her explanation had been that she was mugged – bullshit! I would love to see the mugger that could better her – that girl could fight!

...+...

The thirteen-year-old girl grinned sheepishly as she grabbed her mask and we headed downstairs to the armoury. There, the young vigilante drew a SIG Sauer P239 Tactical pistol in 9-millimetre calibre and a 7-inch combat knife. After checking the weapons over, she picked up her utility belt and inserted the pistol into the holster on her right hip and the knife into the scabbard on her left thigh.

...+...

"Too much?" Foxtail asked as she dropped the man's body to the ground.

"It was great up until the point where you near enough ripped his damned head off!"

...+...

"Well, hello, Hit Girl..."

"What the fuck are you?"

"I – am – FEAR..."

...+...

"Oh, dear," FEAR laughed. "Did the little kitty's claws fail?"

...+...

"Why is everybody determined to kill me?" Psyche growled dejectedly.

"I'm not..." Wildcat replied supportively.

"She did – three fucking times – no offence..." Psyche said as she indicated Foxtail.

"None taken!" Foxtail growled back.

"Well, you do have a certain effect on people..." Kick-Ass chuckled.

"Not helping!"

...+...

"Woah, they're butt naked!" Wildcat commented inappropriately.

...+...

I just figured it all out – it was like a bright flash of light inside my head as everything became remarkably clear. Should I say something to her; would she kill me?

...+...

"I can't – she'd kill me..."

"Stop talking crap – what have you done?"

"I know who Shadow really is..."

...+...

There were noises all around us as we sat on bare concrete, the hood scared me even more. The only good thing was that I could feel Riley's hand as she gripped mine tightly. My face was wet with tears and I had been crying ever since we had been abducted. I had lost track of time but it didn't feel all that long since we had arrived where we had arrived.

...+...

This time the boots were dark grey with . . . with purple highlights... I was going to die.

...+...

"As most of you know, Paige has been lugging something around inside her, for the past nine months. Please raise your glasses to the newest member of our little community."

...+...

Saoirse went bright red and her eyes almost popped out of their sockets. Then she turned on Stephanie.

"Can't you keep your big gob shut?"

...+...

Stephanie instantly realised her mistake and tried to correct her error but to no avail as for about the third time that afternoon, she hit the mat.

...+...

"Does she get on well with her siblings?"

"Oh, yes," I replied as another image of Psyche appeared in my mind. "She'd kill for them..."

"Metaphorically speaking, of course..."

"Of course..."

...+...

"This one is a definite call for help: 'Fusion: Discord in trouble. Need extraction ASAP.'"

...+...

"Still – that was a very private moment..."

"Private?" Stephanie demanded incredulously.

"You ate each other out in front of two hundred people!"

...+...

My life was bothering me. We seemed to lurch from one crisis to another . . .

...+...

"You know, one problem with having Hit Girl as your mother, it gives new emphasis to that common expression: 'Mom's gonna kill you'..."

So I'm just gonna come out and say it: Mom's gonna kill you!"

...+...

"I had no choice – it just came out..." The wretched Stephanie replied.

"She tried to pull out my fingernails with pliers!"

...+...

I had never touched a real live girl before, let alone removed the bra of one – I was just glad it wasn't a real bra; I had no idea how they worked...

...+...

I knew what Marcus would have been thinking and I might have been on the same page to some extent. Marcus would have shot the man; I would have cut his balls off...

...+...

It was a pointless question as three kids suddenly exploded with joy as we walked to the car. It was a perfect day and I felt happier than I had in a long time. Maybe things were settling down and we could all enjoy life as a family – well, as a vigilante family.

...+...

However, that was not what had caught my attention; it was the spreading crimson stain that threatened to inundate...

...+...

"Thunder! Thunder! Thunder!"

The 'Thunder' codeword was reserved for a direct threat to Fusion and there was a special set of arrangements to be actioned when that codeword was triggered.

...+...

"Senior staff will go to Safehouse Zulu. We maintain a force here at Safehouse F and we send personnel to Safehouse W."

...+...

"Time to go..." Marcus announced as he drew his pistol.

...+...

"Stats are dropping..."

"No breath sounds on the left . . . no pulse; coding . . . milligram of epi..."

...+...

...blood-soaked clothing was in a pile on the floor along with several bloody wound dressings and bandages. I could hear some of what was being said and none of it sounded good.

...+...

"Welcome to Zulu!" Marty announced with a flourish.

...+...

For the first time in a real long time, I was scared.

...+...

I ran into the Command Centre and Abby looked upset.

"Shadow's been injured – she's on the way back in with Jackal..."

...+...

As Josh touched Mindy's arm he suddenly found himself on his knees as Mindy twisted his hand savagely and pinned him.

...+...

"Then let's go see Apollo and Artemis – I want to talk to those two..."

"Mindy," Dave cautioned. "Talk first, mutilate later. If they're guilty..."

...+...

Her paintwork gleamed as if it had only just been applied, which in all accuracy, it just had.

...+...

"Ocean Vigilante, you have a clear range for missile firing on bearing of two-four-zero..."

I turned from the chart and spoke to the helmsman.

"Helm, new course, one-seven-two, maintain eighteen knots."

"New course, one-seven-two," Hailee acknowledged.

I reached for the phone and pressed the button for ship-wide.

"All hands remain aft of the bridge and standby for missile launch..."

We were closed up at action stations and everybody was wearing a lifejacket and anti-flash hood with gauntlets.

Joshua turned a key from 'SAFE' to 'PERMIT' and a klaxon sounded. His finger hovered over a pulsing orange button.

"Missile one – shoot!" I ordered.

...+...

"Help me..."

"After what you have done?" I responded, coldly.

"She will kill me..."

"Maybe I should help her."

"I'll do anything..."

...+...

Titan was buried under tons of masonry and the last I saw of Foxtail was her motorcycle as it spun across the blacktop and smashed into a parked car.

...+...

"I am Stormtide – were you sent to kill me?"

I laughed. "No, I came to rescue you."

...+...

"You gotta help him – he is alone, please."

"Help who?"

"Rage – they'll kill him."

...+...

There were four kids to get up, showered, and dressed before breakfast.

...+...

She launched herself at Mindy and the younger girl shoved the older girl backwards so her mentor fell over and then she proceeded to punch Mindy in the face.

...+...

"I will not fight you... I know that you won't believe me, but I did not do it because I am cold hearted; I did it out of love – out of love for you."

...+...

"Damn; it's like fucking Baghdad!"

...+...

Wildcat, Hawk and Raven were using their armour and shields to protect the paramedics and their patients as they worked.

...+...

An RPG powered in and struck a bullet-riddled patrol car.

The car exploded and sent red hot shrapnel in all directions.

...+...

Raven screamed as the shrapnel dug into her armoured back and rapidly burnt through the armour.

...+...

Out of the blue, the 12.7x55-mm STs-130VPS 76-gram bullet cut its way through the air at over 300 metres-per-second. It tore through the armour like it was nothing and the lifeless body dropped.

...+...

'If you are reading this letter, then I am dead.'

Chapter 272*: Shit Storm - Part I

This is the continuation of the storyline from Chapter 29: Closure of The Fusion Ultimatum.

Wednesday, 11th May, 2016

Chicago, United States of America

We taxied into the cavernous hanger owned by Wayne Enterprises.

The main doors were closed and then the stairs lowered at the port side, forward hatch. There was a welcoming committee arrayed before us. Hailee made her way over to her Mother and I saw Hailee grimace with pain as she was hugged.

"What happened, Hailee?" Vicky demanded.

"Everything..." the poor girl replied before she burst into tears.

I saw Cathy looking at me.

"It was bad; let's just leave it at that for now," I suggested and the happiness quickly returned as everybody left the jet.

Cathy hugged Chloe and Curtis tightly; I could see the tears of both mother and daughter. Cathy had no idea, yet, what had happened to Curtis and I was not all that keen on telling her that her nephew had almost died.

Many of the team had grown in stature and maturity during our trip around Europe. Everybody had been hurt in some way and some had suffered serious injuries. But, we had all made it home in more or less one piece and with the mission completed successfully.

I was happy to leave it at that.

Two days later

Friday, 13th May

Maple and Ash Restaurant

8 West Maple Street, Chicago

I had hoped for some quiet time to cool down after our European 'vacation'.

It was Dave's twenty-third Birthday, so we had gone out for dinner – no expense spared. We had wanted to keep it intimate, so it was just Dave, myself, Stephanie, Anne-Marie, Danny, Chloe, Josh, Abby, Marty and Kim. Therefore, the ten of us met up outside the restaurant at seven that night.

"Hi, guys!" Kim exclaimed as she hugged the kids. "You look very smart, tonight, kids."

"Hi, Kim," the kids replied. "Thanks."

Stephanie and Anne-Marie blushed while Danny smiled sweetly. You'd never believe that just seventy-two or so hours previously, Anne-Marie and Danny had been fighting for their lives in a foreign country, 3,000 miles away. A few hours later, we had almost lost Stephanie. Seeing her now, clean and tidy – and in a dress, just like any other ten-year-old girl, it was difficult to see her as the girl in body armour with blood all over her face, hair, and body armour. However, she was the very same girl who had been rescued by Dave who then went to town on her attacker and killed him. Chloe and Josh, along with Kim had fought valiantly themselves, often two or more to one.

Marty and Abby had co-ordinated all the required support that had kept us all safe and informed during the complex assault. Apart from Stephanie, Anne-Marie, and Danny, the senior staff of Fusion were all represented that night. The next senior person in the Fusion hierarchy would be Hailee and then young Megan – in fact, she was in charge at the Safehouse at that moment. I grimaced at whether I would ever see my Safehouse in one piece again... I trusted Megan explicitly – well, to a point. She had a fiery temper and she had (inadvertently, apparently) shoved one of my senior staff off the roof of an eight-storey building!

Considering that most of us were covered in bruises, we had all opted for anything but bare legs. Stephanie and Anne-Marie wore thick tights, while the older girls wore long skirts – I hated wearing tights of any description; I left those to the more feminine around, such as Superman!

..._...

We were led inside by the maître d' and shown to our table on the third floor. The place was enormous and very smart. Neither Danny, Anne-Marie, nor Stephanie, had been in such a place before and their eyes went wide at the splendour that surrounded us. However, all three enjoyed the attention!

For the starter, we all ate a king crab salad each. Four weeks of fighting and near-death experiences could give you one hell of an appetite! For the main course, the boys went to town. Dave and Josh each ordered the $145, 'Eisenhower' 40-ounce+ steak. Anne-Marie was not amused about them eating 'Eisenhower', but Joshua insisted that she would not mind... Marty was not to be outdone and he went for the 22-ounce Ribeye.

'Greedy gits!' Chloe breathed.

She went and ordered the 'Bone in Cowgirl' steak which weighed in at a more decent 16-ounces – Stephanie thought the name was outrageously funny. I scowled and ignored Chloe's smile in Joshua's direction. The three kids chose to share an enormous $175, 'Roasted Seafood Tower'. That just left the three 'civilised' ladies. We ordered an enormous pile of Alaskan King Crab Legs, each.

..._...

There was a lot of munching, and not a lot of talking – except of course for Anne-Marie. We had only been back in the US, a few days. I still worried about what might have been as I gazed around at all the happy, smiling faces. I noticed Chloe giving me 'a look' – she knew what was going through my mind, so I just smiled and stuck my tongue out at my best friend.

Josh and Dave were operating a conveyor belt of enormous chunks of beef into their mouths – the steaks were fucking enormous. To be honest, they were ridiculous! I liked steak, just as much as any red-blooded American, only I ate them in smaller sizes.

"You two are gonna be in the bog for a week," Stephanie observed halfway through the meal.

"Trust you to lower the tone of the conversation," Abby laughed and Stephanie grinned.

By the end of the main course, I was surprised and annoyed, to find that both Dave and Josh had almost finished their half-cows and they were overtaking me!

..._...

It was approaching nine o'clock when it happened.

We had finished our main course and we were well into our dessert when the restaurant shook - violently.

"What the...?" Chloe asked with a worried expression on her face.

Then I heard the sound of the explosions – four in all. I grabbed hold of Anne-Marie and I dragged her to the floor just as the glass from the windows exploded into the restaurant. I saw that Chloe had grabbed Danny while Dave covered Stephanie. Marty, not surprisingly, had protected Kim and I saw that Joshua had sheltered Abby.

There was screaming and yelling from other diners as the glass fell all around us.

Safehouse F

Hailee bolted up from her seat in the Control Centre.

The screen before her had automatically zoomed into a part of Chicago and an alarm had sounded throughout the Safehouse. She was rapidly joined by Mathilda and Megan who ran in from where they had been exercising on the mat.

"There's been some explosions in North State Street..." Hailee explained as she examined the map.

"Oh, shit – that's right where Mindy and Dave are, with the others!" She exclaimed.

Without any further hesitation, Megan reached forward and she pushed a button on the console before her.

"Hound, Sentinel, this is Wildcat – explosions, North State Street – move in and assess the situation, prepare to extract the team," she ordered smoothly as she took charge. "Petra – keep an eye on the situation; Leon, let's gear up – we're taking Brute!"

Despite her tender age, Wildcat was the ranking Fusion operator present in the Safehouse, Hailee being on reduced duties.

"Wow..." Hailee chuckled. "She's a bossy bitch!"

Megan glared at Hailee.

"Move!" She growled as she ran out the door.

"Yes, ma'am!" Mathilda replied as she ran after the eleven-year-old vigilante.

Oak Street Beach

With so many senior Fusion members congregating in one place, it had been deemed prudent to provide overwatch – you know, just in case.

The two armoured GMC Yukon Denali SUVs had been parked up beside the beach until the order from Wildcat had come in. Sentinel had Mist behind the wheel and seated beside her was Foxtail, with Raven in the back. Hound was being driven by Medic and seated beside her was Splinter, with Trojan seated behind them.

As soon as Wildcat had declared the alert, everybody braced up and began to look around for danger.

Maple and Ash Restaurant

The shouting and screaming was still around us.

No more glass was falling and as far as I could tell, the building that we were in, was still intact. I looked over at Dave and he tilted his head towards the door. I nodded, just as my cell began to vibrate in one of several pockets that were hidden in the dress which I wore.

"Hello, dear, you destroyed my Safehouse yet?"

"I'll pretend you never said that and kill you later," Wildcat responded.

"You enjoying the big chair...?"

"Yes, and I hate to burst your bubble, but there's been four explosions – you might have heard them," Wildcat cut in dryly.

"One or two, or four..."

"I've ordered Sentinel and Hound to readiness and I'm heading out in Brute with Leon."

"See what you can do to help, but do not extract us until we call."

"Copy that. Stay safe."

"You're doing good."

"Always the tone of surprise!"

I disconnected the call and dropped the phone back into its secret pocket. I grabbed Anne-Marie and climbed to my feet, a hand close to my hidden pistol. Dave led us all towards the exit where there was the expected hoard of people desperate to escape.

Unlike most, our party was calm and collected.

Outside, there was pandemonium.

Glass was everywhere and I could see lots of injuries caused by flying glass. Strangely, I could see no more damage than shattered glass. I had expected to see downed buildings or something. Maybe that was just my overactive imagination. Megan had said that there had been four explosions, but there was little damage. Whomsoever had detonated the bombs – assuming they were bombs – had obviously taken the effort to minimise damage. In my mind, the bombs – and I was certain that they had been bombs – had been for psychological value.

Chicago was under attack.

Dave turned to me as we headed away from the restaurant to where we had parked our cars.

"Your mind is working away, I can see it," he commented with concern in his voice.

He knew me too damn well.

"Chicago is under attack, Dave. Again. Why does this shit keep happening?"

"It keeps happening because there are bad people in the world. That is why we do what we do. We will protect this city," Dave replied.

"From who? We need to find out who is doing this before somebody ends up with something much worse than just glass cuts."

"We'll just have to wait and see what the CPD find out."

Glenview

I kept quiet, the whole ride home.

The kids kept quiet too. They had sensed my mood and they had each been scared by the night's events.

"I'm sorry, I've not been very sociable, guys."

"Don't worry, Mum," Stephanie offered. "We know how you react to attacks on this city and we're with you every step along the way."

"Yeah, we're Fusion," Danny agreed. "Together, whatever."

Anne-Marie actually looked surprised by her twin's comment but then she nodded approvingly.

"I think he just about covered it."

The following morning Saturday

Glenview

"Mom..."

"Mom..."

"Mom..."

"WHAT!"

"I'm hungry..."

"Anne-Marie... You are trying my patience! Okay . . . plates are there . . . bread is there . . . the fridge is over there . . .

get a knife out of the goddamn drawer over there..."

Anne-Marie glared up at me.

"You thought I would make you a damn sandwich, or maybe you want me to cook..."

"No thanks, Mom; I'll make myself a sandwich. I have school on Monday and I don't want food poisoning..."

I heard a noise from behind me and I turned to see Stephanie giggling away in the archway to the living room. I smoothly swept up a knife from the kitchen side and the ten-year-old girl instantly braced up as the knife embedded itself an inch or two into the archway, a mere three inches from her left ear.

"I think I hear Dave calling me..." Stephanie muttered as she fled.

The seven bundles of fluff were now four months old.

However, they were no longer the cute little bundles of fluff – they were gangly legged canine's bent on attacking each other and having fun. Their training was going very well and they were very well behaved – well, as much as any kid, really! Sophia still thought nothing of striking them with a paw or tearing a strip off them with her bark or growl. The pups thoroughly respected their mother, and for good reason; she was hard on them and more than once her bark had caused a young pup to lose control of its bladder.

Saoirse and Morgan had been very happy to quit their dog-walking job – something about hyperactive canines. All the dogs had been very pleased to see their owners after almost a month and there had been lots of laughter and some happy tears.

I also got the impression that Sophia was itching to get back out onto the streets.

That evening

Safehouse F

Everybody was wearing their new, 'on duty' uniforms.

These were dark grey and lined with multiple layers of lightweight Kevlar. The pants were of a military design with quick-release straps for attaching holsters, pouches, and the like. Light-weight, light-grey, desert boots were worn as footwear. Fusion t-shirts, complete with logo on the right chest, were available in white, purple, and dark blue. For normal wear, a high neck long-sleeve top was worn. On the right-hand-side, at the top of the neck, rank insignia was worn.

Whilst ranks had existed on Fusion for a while, it was the first time that we had actually worn insignia. There were many reasons, but the main was that we seemed to be working more with external agencies, so a visible rank structure would be of use. As such, we could go out in the field in the 'on duty' uniforms – each set of pants had a pocket reserved for a full-face mask. We had opted to go for the standard US military insignia, but with different names.

Dave and I each wore a single silver star and carried the rank of Master. Marty was our lone Commander and wore a silver eagle. Chloe, Joshua and Cathy were Sub-Commanders and they each wore a silver oak leaf. A gold oak leaf was worn by Erika, Hailee, Abby, and Kim as Senior Operators. Megan, Saoirse, and Morgan were Operators and they wore twin, vertical silver bars. The junior Operators were Curtis, Tommy, and Stephanie. They each wore a single, vertical silver bar. Our three Trainee Operators, Lauren, Anne-Marie, and Danny, wore a single inverted yellow stripe.

That night, though, that was about to change.

"I hope everybody is well rested and ready for action. It seems that a long rest is not on the cards. After the past month, I cannot force any of you to go back into action so soon – Chloe, slap me and so help me God..."

Chloe raised her hands defensively and smiled.

"I know you will all volunteer no matter what, but I had to put the offer on the table. Anyway... Trojan, get you sorry ass out here."

Curtis looked a little concerned as Megan shoved him to his feet and he walked towards me.

"This young man here, put many of us older vigilantes to shame. While in Gibraltar, he selflessly put himself between a grenade and Wildcat. That act cannot go unrewarded – although I am sure Wildcat showed her appreciation back at the Safehouse..."

Everybody laughed as both Megan and Curtis blushed a deep purple. Abby came up and held out a small box to me. I took it. Without another word, I removed the single vertical bar on Curtis's collar and replaced it with the twin vertical bars from the small box.

"Trojan is now an Operator and I think Megan is very happy that Curtis is in one piece, especially certain parts..."

"Yep, all there and all working – I checked..."

Megan paused and clamped her hand over her mouth as she realised what she had just said in front of everybody. Her face went a very pleasant shade of bright red and she edged behind Saoirse to hide her embarrassment.

There were cheers and applause for the freshly promoted vigilante. Once that had died down, I turned to Abby.

"Somebody else also went above and beyond. She showed that she is somebody to be reckoned with and as a result, Hal is being prompted as well."

Abby looked stunned and more than a little embarrassed as Chloe stood up and handed me a small box very similar to that which Abby had handed me for Curtis. I removed the gold oak leaf from her collar and attached the silver oak leaf of Sub-Commander in its place.

After another round of cheering and applause, we all broke up and went off to our relevant duties.

"How come you made Operator?" Stephanie demanded as she looked up at her friend's collar.

"Phase 3, bitch!" Saoirse replied smugly as she held up three fingers.

"Phase 2, bitch!" Stephanie responded as she stuck two fingers up, in the shape of a V-sign, at Saoirse.

"Funny..." Saoirse growled back. "Right, time to get back to training, pal, let's go."

"Nightmare, Rogue, Ravage!" Stephanie yelled out as she headed onto the mat.

I smiled as I watched the three Trainee Operators make their way onto the mat. The uniforms suited them. Lauren was fairly tall and with the uniform she looked very smart. The twins looked cute, as they usually did.

"Thanks, Mindy."

I turned to see Abby standing beside me.

"You earned it, Abby. Without everything that you did..."

"I know."

Sunday morning

Lower Wacker Drive

If Fusion had wanted to make a high-profile return to the city of Chicago, then they had most definitely picked the right place.

"What the hell is that racket?" Office Pete Howser exclaimed as his voice was all but drowned out by the sound of many powerful motorcycle engines.

As he turned to stare at the . . . motorcycle motorcade – that was the only way to describe it – the first motorcycle, a purple Ducati 1200 Panigale R, came past, alongside a black and green Ducati Diavel Carbon. The two motorcycles were ridden by Hit Girl and Kick-Ass respectively. Behind them, came two more motorcycles in tandem, the nearest, a Kawasaki Ninja ZX-10R, was tan in colour. The furthest machine was a Ducati Superbike 899 Panigale in dark blue and the rider was the stunning female vigilante known as Shadow, while her partner Jackal rode the tan Kawasaki beside her.

The next group was generally made up of the younger vigilantes. Three identical machines, although with different colour schemes, rode side by side. The Ducati Hypermotard SP machines, all with silver frames were being ridden by the vigilantes known as Wildcat, Trojan and Splinter. Their machines were, respectively, brown, silver and black with silver trim. Behind them was a much smaller machine, with an equally smaller vigilante who was actually the shortest in the group. That vigilante was Psyche, and she rode on her red over blue Honda CRF250L motorcycle.

Behind her came several other machines. Petra rode her graphite black Honda CBR1000RR Fireblade motorcycle alongside Mist on her Ducati Streetfighter 848 in black with light blue highlights. Two more motorcycles completed the motorcade: The Honda Fireblade Black Edition was under the command of Medic and behind her came Raven on her Yamaha Super Ténéré with Foxtail on the back.

"Put that away, before you hurt yourself," Officer Howser ordered his much younger partner.

The younger officer sheepishly holstered his pistol.

A short distance ahead, the traffic had ground to a halt and the Fusion motorcade changed formation into single-file.

"Mommy, Mommy!"

"What honey?" The mother replied. "I'm on the phone..."

Both kids had their eyes glued to the rear window as an awesome sight bore down on them. Then came the roar as twelve motorcycles roared past only inches away.

"Wow..."

"Awesome... Mommy – I just saw vigilantes..."

"That's nice, dear..."

Fusion was home!

Chapter 273*: Shit Storm - Part II

The following morning
Monday, May 16th

Glenview

It was another morning on Planet Lizewski.

I came awake and looked over at the clock beside the bed.

05:59:57 . . . 05:59:58 . . . 05:59:59 . . . 06:00:00

It was time to move. I threw back the duvet and swung my legs out of the otherwise empty bed. I made my way over to the bathroom where the shower was raging. I studied the silhouette through the steamed up glass.

"Morning, sexy wife!" I called out as I emptied my bladder.

"Morning, stud!" came the reply from the shower.

As my naked wife slipped out of the shower, I slipped in – with a brief kiss on the lips and a gentle touch of her soft, damp skin.

..._...

By the time I returned to the bedroom, Mindy was dressed and putting her hair up into her customary ponytail. I preferred her blonde hair down, but I knew that Mindy hated it like that and it often got in the way.

"I'm off to sort out the mutts," Mindy said as she headed out the door.

Within a minute, I heard excited yapping, plus a booming bark from Sophia as Mindy entered the basement.

Once dressed, I headed upstairs where my first stop was the 'British Sector'.

As I descended into the basement, I was met by several barks and excited yaps.

Sophia added her own deep-bass bark to the others. I was really pleased to be back around the dogs; I loved them all very much. When we got back from Europe, we discovered that we had gained a lodger. Marcus had tried to explain it, but I gather the conversation between Marcus and Paige had gone something like this:

...+...

"So, what do we do with it?"

"Not much we can do – Sophia will tear apart anybody who goes near it."

"It is kinda funny?"

"Marcus, what will Mindy say?"

"Mindy's nuts enough to go along with it."

"I have to agree with that – it looks so sweet..."

"Is it a boy or a girl?"

"We have no idea as Sophia is being so overprotective."

"Let me try..."

Tentatively, Marcus reached out and patted Sophia on the head. Sophia licked his hand. Marcus moved his hand towards the new acquisition that lay curled up between Sophia's front legs. There was a tense moment when Sophia moved her snout down and sniffed at both the fur ball and Marcus's hand. Marcus continued to move his hand until it touched the soft, ginger fur and a head appeared. Two yellow eyes looked up at Marcus and the small mouth opened as a small mew was emitted.

"It's a boy," Marcus commented as he turned the kitten belly up.

The tiny feline had appeared a week or so previously. Sophia had taken custody of the little kitten and if a pup or a human went anywhere near it, they were growled at. The pups were mystified by the little ball of ginger fluff that their mother was apparently protecting from them. The kitten was only a few weeks old but it had learnt that nothing could hurt it – it seemed to enjoy hissing at the pups as they walked past.

"Bet he'll be given some ridiculous name..." Marcus groused as the kitten hissed at him and he placed it back down on the ground where Sophia proceeded to lick the kitten. "...Wildcat is taken, obviously..."

"...And so is Lynx..." Paige added with a grin. "Anyhow, did I hear you call Mindy a nut?"

"Well, she is a nut – and so is Megan."

"I have to agree with you there; Megan and Mindy are both nutty as a fruitcake with extra nuts!"

...+...

So, yeah, we had a kitten to look after.

I would also like to go on record as stating that I am not nutty as a fruitcake – and neither is my little sister. We may have a slightly different outlook on life to other people, but that just makes us unique. Marcus has other ideas about our 'differing outlook', but let's not go there.

Anyway, back to the kitten. Stephanie and Anne-Marie had instantly fallen in love with it. Even Danny had admitted it was cute. We had finally agreed on a name, after many appalling choices. Nobody liked my first choice: Shotgun. I had shot down any name that was related, even remotely, to a Disney Princess, or a Star Wars character. I knelt down to gently stroke the ginger kitten and the pair of yellow beacons looked up at me.

"Morning, Horatio, hungry?"

I poured out a good measure of kitty milk and Horatio dived into action. The pups knew not to touch the kitten's milk – Razor had already experienced the displeasure of his mother and he had served as a ready example to the others.

I carefully pushed open the door – no trip wires, I was pleased to see. My eldest daughter had been known to rig up an M81 Claymore when she was in a bad mood...

It was just possible to make out the spread of blonde hair on the pillow but very little else. Now, just like my wife, I was very careful about waking a psychotic killer. Waking either Mindy or Stephanie from a deep sleep and finding a knife, gun, or both shoved in my face, was getting a little bit old. Instead, I just yanked off the duvet and stood well back.

The viper uncurled herself, stretched, and I saw an eye open, then she smiled – I was safe.

"Morning!" Stephanie exclaimed as she jumped out of bed.

"Morning to you too, Steph."

Before I had made it to the door, Stephanie had pulled off the overlarge t-shirt that she slept in and then completely naked, she had headed for her bathroom. I was annoyed to see the obvious bruising still readily visible on her body. The girl would heal, just as Mindy always did after a beating.

...-...

I headed across the hall to where I found Anne-Marie grinning at me from under her duvet.

"Time to get up, kiddo."

"Morning, Dad!"

"Morning, Dad!" came another voice and I turned to see Danny peer in from the bathroom.

"Morning to both of you – hurry up and get washed, breakfast will be ready soon."

With that, I headed back downstairs to start cooking.

Thirty minutes later

"How is it that you can talk non-stop from the moment you sit down to eat to the moment that you get up again, and somehow the food still gets inside you?" Stephanie demanded of her younger sister as she dug into a stack of pancakes.

"It's a gift..." was the muffled response.

"She's been doing it from an early age," Danny explained.

"Where does she put it all – there's more meat on a spare rib!"

"You're one to talk, Stephanie," Mindy interjected. "You eat almost as much as Dave does and you are thin as a rake."

"It's a gift..." Stephanie replied with a wink at her younger sibling.

Later that morning North Park Elementary School

The place was buzzing about a certain show of force in the city, the evening before.

It made the morning immensely difficult, especially as four of us at the school had actually been a part of that 'show of force'. I had spent twenty minutes with Megan, Curtis and Tommy, mid-morning and they had all felt the same. At lunchtime, it only got worse...

"You saw those kids in that procession," Craig was saying. "It must be so awesome to be a vigilante on Hit Girl's crew – they're not much older than us..."

"It must be hard to keep something like that a secret," Ali mused. "Just think, it could be somebody in this lunch room..."

I grimaced at that...

"Take that Wildcat – she's awesome," Katy commented. "I'd do anything to be her..."

"You'd make a good vigilante, Steph," Jackson commented with a sly grin over towards me.

"Me?"

"Yeah – you have a fiery temper and I'd love to see you in a figure-hugging suit..."

There was general laughter and some giggles at that comment; I just felt my face warming up. Talk about being close to the mark!

"You just want to see Stephanie in skin-tight leather..." Katy giggled.

"So?" Jackson retorted innocently.

"I am so out of here!" I growled as I jumped up and ran out of the lunch room past a dour looking Lizzie Edwards.

I was worried about my big sister.

It had been almost six months since her kidnap and attack – I refused to say the true word for what had happened to her; it scared me. Lauren had cried most nights for over a week after it had happened. I had tried to help her but Lauren would hug me on some occasions and on others, she would push me away – sometimes violently.

I knew my sister was troubled. Mom just told me to give her space and to be there for when she needed me. I hated seeing and hearing her cry at night; that really hurt. Then, two weeks after the attack, she had suddenly seemed a lot happier. Strangely, she had stopped her pursuit of everything 'Fusion'. Maybe that had had something to do with the visit from Hit Girl, soon after the attack, Lauren would not elaborate on what happened when she had vanished that evening.

Lauren spent as much time as possible at D-JAK as well as time somewhere else with Mom. Neither of them would tell me where they went but Lauren had gained some extra bruises on her body, so I assumed that she had just been getting some extra time in at D-JAK.

Another problem was her change in character.

..._...

Lauren had always been outgoing and full of life. She always smiled and laughed. Since the attack, she had turned shy, especially around boys. I knew that she had faced torment from other kids at school about the attack – they blamed her for allowing herself to be raped. How they could do that, I had no idea. It was in no way my sister's fault and I could not comprehend what it must have felt like to be attacked like that.

The only people to have ever seen me naked were my Mom and my sister. I knew from Lauren's previous experience, back when she was kidnapped before Christmas, that she had been stripped to her underwear – she had told me that she had found that extremely embarrassing – but to be stripped naked by strange men and then...

I shuddered at the thought and I involuntarily squeezed my legs together.

Lake View High School

There was love in the air at the high school.

Our usual group of eight had grown to ten as we all gathered for lunch. As well as Josh and Chloe, there was Abby and Kyle, Ethan and Mike and then Riley and me. We had, over the past month, gained two more girls: Morgan and Saoirse – a weird name with an appalling spelling! I had begun to notice something: while Josh and Chloe were busy running their hands over each other's bodies, Ethan and Saoirse were busy eyeing each other up. No real issue, only Saoirse was a freshman, while the rest of us were sophomores although I had to admit that the girl had a very full figure and she looked older than she actually was.

Me? I was simply content to spend my time with Riley... I snapped out of my thoughts as somebody called my name.

"Avery!"

"Yeah? Sorry, Chloe..."

"You coming over for our girl's night on Friday?"

"Yeah, course."

I liked Chloe; she had been my best friend, other than Riley of course, for as long as she had been in Chicago. The girl was a bit of an enigma to be honest. I really liked her and we had enjoyed some stimulating sleep-overs over the past couple of years. Chloe was not scared about experimenting and neither was I for that matter...

Chloe had been upset for many months about losing her boyfriend, who had then miraculously reappeared out of thin air, alive, about eighteen months ago. He was every bit as hot as Chloe had described him to be. That had also been around the time that Chloe had been mysteriously wounded. Her explanation had been that she was mugged – bullshit! I would love to see the mugger that could better Chloe Bennett.

That girl could fight!

That night

South Kedzie Avenue

Maybe it was not really the best way for Nightmare to be exposed to the nastier side of Chicago.

We were out cruising on my new wheels. Mindy had given me free reign to get any machine that I wanted and after it had spent a couple of weeks in Gotham, it had arrived only the previous afternoon. Apparently, I had been a complete pain in the arse until tonight as I was so excited!

The Aprilia Caponord 1200 Rally motorcycle was painted in a colour-shifting paint that shifted between brown and orange depending on the light and point of view. The nose and tail of the machine was painted with a chrome-effect. At the back, on either side, were a pair of black and chrome-effect panniers which carried a strategic collection of equipment.

Most importantly, at the back, was the licence plate, which read: FOXTAIL.

Earlier that evening

Safehouse F

"Will you, please, calm down?"

"I'm sorry, SD – I'm just so nervous."

"That's to be expected, Lauren – let me do your hair; you're making a hash of it..."

Lauren was way beyond nervous – not her fault but it was about to be her first night out as Nightmare. She was so nervous that she was unable to put her long, light brown hair up so that it would fit under her mask.

"Thank you, SD..."

"Lauren, if I didn't help you, it would be sometime next week before we were actually ready..."

The thirteen-year-old girl grinned sheepishly as she grabbed her mask and we headed downstairs to the armoury. There, the young vigilante drew a SIG Sauer P239 Tactical pistol in 9-millimetre calibre and a 7-inch combat knife. After checking the weapons over, she picked up her utility belt and inserted the pistol into the holster on her right hip and the knife into the scabbard on her left thigh.

I double-checked every pouch on her belt, including her communications equipment. Lauren had spent a couple of hours that afternoon ensuring that her equipment worked and that it was all accounted for.

Finally, the mask was pulled on and Nightmare stood in all her glory. Her combat suit was of an urban camouflage design, with a tiger-stripe design in teal and dark grey.

Southern Chicago

Foxtail with Nightmare

It was just the two of us.

Mindy and I had discussed where might be best – Mindy had suggested dropping Nightmare in at the deep end. We had to know how Nightmare would react to what usually went on in Chicago after dark – if she could not hack it, then she would be finished as a vigilante before she even got started. It was cruel but I could see where Mindy was coming from; it was pointless putting effort into training somebody who could not get over what had happened to her.

Therefore, I was searching for a certain type of criminal...

..._...

We headed north and then in an easterly direction where my thoughts were interrupted by a voice in my ear.

"You cum all over your new wheels, yet?"

"Go fuck yourself, Psyche!"

"Now, what could I use?" Psyche mused. "What about that shiny new dildo in your locker with extra-strength batteries?"

"Stay out of my fucking locker, you Phase 2 reject!"

"Well, you could have set a more difficult combination than your Predator identification number."

"Where the fuck did you get that from?"

"From your CIA ID card."

"Same question."

"Found it."

"It was in my fucking locker!"

There was a pause as the ten-year-old considered the rather fucked-up circular argument that she had just created for herself.

"I'm gonna have to get back to you on that, Foxtail..."

"When we get back, I am going to take you into a very dark room..."

"I never knew you liked me in that way, Foxy..."

I was getting seriously pissed and Nightmare's giggling was not helping. But before I could respond, I heard a muffled slap and...

"That fucking hurt!" Psyche growled and then another voice came up on the circuit.

"Problem taken care of, Foxtail."

It was Mist, and she must have just slapped Psyche. I refocussed on where I was riding and Nightmare soon calmed down. I had to admit, Psyche had broken the tension for Nightmare – at my expense!

I had no idea where Foxtail was taking me, but the scenery did not look very appealing.

Maybe they were testing me. You know, see how I reacted to whatever we might come across. I should have known that Hit Girl could be devious. In fact, I knew she was. Foxtail was too. I knew some of her background and what I had heard, scared me. However, I trusted her.

I was dragged from my thoughts as we came to a very rapid stop beside a large expanse of open and very dark waste ground. I thought that it must have been a factory at some stage. Foxtail pulled off her helmet and brought up one finger of her left hand to her lips. I kept silent as I pulled off my own helmet and carefully slipped off the motorcycle. Foxtail followed, leaning her machine onto its stand. If I had not been armed and wearing body-armor, I might have started to panic. Foxtail headed off into the darkness and then she paused. She tapped her left ear and then drew her beautiful swords. I listened and I heard a voice. It was a man and he was goading somebody. I braced up as I heard a weak scream.

We moved forwards carefully as the ground was uneven and there was plenty of rubble strewn around. It felt weird, being out in my combat suit. I had a feeling of being invincible. I knew that was wrong but I felt so alive as we headed into the darkness, into the unknown.

..._...

My eyes had adjusted to the darkness and I could make out a shape on the ground. As we came closer, I saw that it was more than one shape. One shape was on top of the other. I instantly knew what was happening.

I froze.

Nothing I tried could make my limbs move.

I shook my head – it was to be expected.

The man had not noticed our approach, nor the frozen vigilante, I thought dryly. I moved forwards and the first the man knew of our presence was the feel of cold steel beneath his throat. He began to move.

"Don't..." I growled. "Nightmare!"

There was no response. She had to handle this or...

"Nightmare!"

"Right, yes . . . I'm here, Foxtail."

I heard her boots on the concrete as she approached.

"Take out your knife."

The young girl did so. I pushed up gently on my sword and the man began to stand. His pants were around his ankles and his cock stuck out, still partially erect. The woman beneath him had passed out, but she was still breathing. She also had her pants around her ankles and with her knees spread wide apart, it was obvious where the man had stuck his cock.

I saw Nightmare stare down at the man's waist and what stuck out there. I saw her shoulders begin to heave as the anger built within her. She was overcoming her initial horror at the scene before her. She took a step back and returned her blade to its scabbard. Oh, dear, she was bottling it.

But I was wrong.

She pulled her SIG Sauer P320 Compact pistol from her holster and stepped towards the man.

I felt anger like I had never felt before.

Initially, I had felt horror at the sight before me. Horrible visions flashed through my mind. I had been in that poor woman's position. I had felt that man force himself into me. I had... I pushed the thoughts out of mind – well, most of them. I saw the man's dick, drooping. He had to be punished. I could not let him do such a thing again. I could not let the fucking animal even breed. I pulled back the slide on my pistol and I then walked right up to the man.

"You sicken me. You will never hurt another woman as long as I walk on this earth. Your line will end here and now. You have a family?"

The man slowly shook his head.

"Good."

"Holy shit!"

After the crack of the pistol shot came the scream as the man tried to stem the blood which poured from his crotch. I could not believe it. Nightmare just blew the fucking cunt's cock off! One second, cock, the next second, no cock. The man sagged to his knees and he fell backwards while his unearthly scream echoed around the area.

The woman was beginning to stir. I called in a request for an ambulance and we waited for them to arrive. The man passed out quite quickly from loss of blood. By the time the ambulance arrived, the woman was sitting up and I had helped her pull her panties and pants back up.

The Paramedic approached and looked at the man, then at the sobbing woman.

"Was it him?" She asked simply.

I nodded.

"We will see to the woman first – he bleeds out before we get to him, tough," she told her subordinate.

We left the scene but hung about for a few minutes until the CPD arrived to secure the area.

Before we moved off, I spoke with Nightmare.

"You okay?"

"Yeah."

"We can call it a night..."

"No. I have to do this."

"Good girl."

Chapter 274*: FEAR

Monday, May 16th

Douglas Park
Foxtail with Nightmare

I had taken Nightmare away from the rape scene and towards some much nicer scenery.

It was dark, but the area was reasonably well lit. I parked my Aprilia in some trees and after we had removed our helmets, we went for a walk into the park. Our presence was soon noticed and we received some cheery hellos.

"Excuse me?"

I turned to see a girl of about my own age, with another girl and a boy.

"You, are Foxtail, I think . . . but I have no idea who you are."

"Yes, I am Foxtail."

"My name is Nightmare."

"Cool!" the girl replied. "I love the suit."

"Thanks," Nightmare mumbled in reply.

I grinned. Neither of us was used to the fans part of being in Fusion. Nightmare even less so. It felt strange having been a part of the CIA and thus encouraged to keep out of sight and not to stand out. I had to admit that I enjoyed being popular. Saoirse did not enjoy publicity, but Foxtail loved it!

..._...

Rather annoyingly, the pleasant night was destroyed as some drunken yobs drifted into the park. They were definitely intending to cause trouble. We covered the retreat of the sensible kids who had, up until that point, been enjoying a pleasant evening. I brought my arm up to ward off a flying beer bottle that had been aimed at a screaming girl as she ran for cover.

It was not a place for swords, so I pulled out an extendible billy club. The first pair were so drunk I could easily sweep their feet out from under them and they went down, laughing. The next pair were not as drunk but they were rather annoyed at their colleagues being put down. I knew full well that it would be useless trying to reason with a pair of angry drunks, so I did what I could to put them down without hurting them too much.

..._...

It was Nightmare that yelled out a warning and saved me from more than a little embarrassment. Taking advantage of the distraction that the drunken youths posed, several ne'er-do-wells approached through the darkness until they were in a position to attack.

I barely registered the weapon that was being pointed at my skull and I just reacted. The combat knife flew straight and true into the man's face. My mind clocked the weapon that the unfortunate individual had been carrying and a name popped into my mind: Qīngxíng Chōngfēng Qiāng, 2005 – quite literally: Light Assault Gun, 2005. The QCQ-05 was quite rare outside of mainland China. I filed away that little piece of information for later.

Nightmare continued to cover the escaping civilians as they ran. There was the rasp of machine gun fire and the screaming started in earnest. It was no most decidedly the time and place for swords. I drew them both and I slashed open the first stomach and once again, I relished the smell of freshly split blood. I faced off against a pair of cunts – they were of oriental decent, which would explain the Chinese weaponry, and they seemed pissed.

"Sǐle, biǎo zi!" one of the men spat. {Die, bitch!}

I was a little taken aback – it was most impolite; I was not ready to die, nor was I a bitch!

"Lái ba. Xiànzài shì shíhòu mǎnzú nǐ de zǔzōng!" I shot back, which actually seemed to knock the two men for six – I aced Chinese! {Bring it on. It's time for you to meet your ancestors!}

Before the cunts could recover from their surprise, I launched my attack. The first lost his left arm, just above the elbow. The second brought up his Dao (a kind of sword with a broad blade) and he was able to fend off my first strike, but not the follow up with my other blade. He fell as the blood erupted from his severed carotid artery.

The remaining cunt seemed to have a change of heart and he shot at me with his pistol, a Chinese Type 77, my mind told me. He tripped which sent his bullet wide of its intended mark. I ran forwards, reached down and grabbed the man by the head. I lifted him up slightly before I twisted his head savagely.

Nightmare screamed.

"Too much?" I asked as I dropped the man's body to the ground.

"It was great up until the point where you near enough ripped his damned head off!"

I gave her a sardonic look and smiled.

"Too violent for you? Less than an hour ago, you blew a guy's dick off!"

"That was different..."

As we ran back to our ride, I swept up the QCQ-05 sub-machine gun.

Wednesday, May 18th

Safehouse F

It was time for me to get out into the City of Chicago and reacquaint myself with the changes which had occurred while I had been in Europe.

Most importantly, I wanted to meet the new vigilantes and try to figure out what they were about. There was the female one, Sunset Phoenix, in her dazzling costume, and then there was the new duo who had appeared on the streets but had otherwise kept to the shadows. I was also more than a little worried by the 'gift' which Foxtail had brought me on Monday night.

The bitch just walked up to me in the galley and dumped the sub-machine gun onto the table! I was more than a little annoyed, but I understood the significance of the weapon instantly. I thanked the girl with a few choice words and while she and Lauren changed, I listened to what had occurred that night. I was impressed with Lauren, and with Saoirse's tactics for training Nightmare.

That night, I geared up with Erika and Megan for the night's activities. The three of us were quite speedy with our armour so that we could leave Saoirse and Stephanie to their decidedly animated discussion on locker privacy and the use of insecure lock combinations.

Those two were always bitching at each other, but the two of them were like sisters and they would never hurt one another – well, not seriously at least.

..._...

I checked in with the Command Centre and the three of us signed out for the night. Wildcat's motorcycle was down for the night, so she would ride with Mist on her Streetfighter 848. I was overjoyed as I swung my left leg over my pride and joy. The purple Panigale Superbike felt like home between my legs.

"Hit Girl is up."

"Mist is up."

"Wildcat is up."

"Good hunting, girls," Battle Guy acknowledged as the large vehicle access door opened.

Hit Girl with Mist and Wildcat

Apart from some friendly waves and beeping horns, we didn't find much in the first hour.

But then things began to warm up nicely. We were on South Archer Avenue and headed northeast when something caught my eye just as we crossed South Looms Street. I slammed on my brakes and came to a smoky halt, much to the enjoyment of some young boys on the street corner. Mist did the same and she followed me as I turned around and accelerated up West Fuller Street. We passed under the Stevenson Expressway and the railroad before we emerged into a quiet residential neighbourhood.

Up ahead, I saw a flash of pink vanish around a bend in the road. We followed but instead of finding the expected Sunset Phoenix, we found something completely different and very new. As I pulled up on my purple Ducati Panigale, Mist nodded to one side where there sat a large and very powerful motorcycle in metallic black and plasma blue.

..._...

The Kawasaki Z1000SX Tourer had been customised but it was otherwise easily recognisable as a beautiful piece of engineering. I pulled off my helmet and climbed off the Ducati as did Mist and Wildcat who was on the back of her Streetfighter.

We moved towards the Kawasaki just as a shape appeared out of the shadows.

"Well, hello, Hit Girl..."

The person who emerged from the shadows wore armour, just as we did. They were armed too. As they came closer, I identified the armoured individual as being female.

"What the fuck are you?" I asked with obvious and intended disdain in my tone.

"I – am – FEAR..."

Three simple words.

"What?"

"I am here to fuck up your life, Hit Girl."

"Forgive me if I don't shit myself..."

"You think you can fight me, right here, right now?" FEAR demanded. "Without your little friends..."

"I'll fuck her up!" Wildcat yelled.

FEAR turned towards the ever fearless younger vigilante.

"Control yourself, Wildcat; I'll be trimming your claws, next..."

"Bring it on..."

I raised my hand and Wildcat fell silent.

"What she said..." I growled.

FEAR reached over her left shoulder with her right hand and removed her melee weapon. The war sword was a little over three feet in length, with the blade being a little under two feet. It was a lethal weapon and from what I could see, she knew how to wield it.

I drew my own twin Katanas.

Mist with Wildcat

The two women attacked each other and Wildcat wisely jumped out of the way before she was trampled.

Hit Girl's black, dark grey, and purple armour complemented FEAR's black and red armour and it proved easy to track each of the women as they span. Their swords clashed in the darkness. We tried not to watch. Our job was to keep a good lookout out for anybody who might make an attempt to take advantage of the fight. Wildcat seethed over her cold put down. I soothed her with some words that I hoped might help. Otherwise, I prepared my Sai and chain whip for action and I advised Wildcat to do the same with her own weapons.

..._...

Hit Girl appeared to have no issues with fighting a woman a few inches taller than herself, as well as one that was bulkier. The war sword was also a heavier weapon, but Hit Girl had state of the art swords, herself, and they stood up to the abuse from the larger weapon quite well. I enjoyed watching sword play and it was rare for me to see two obvious professionals duelling it out. It was even rarer to see Hit Girl facing off against somebody who could fight almost as well as she could.

I kept an eye on the fight, the surrounding area, and of course, Wildcat. The tetchy eleven-year-old vigilante paced from side to side, her Wakizashi in her right hand and every now and then, she would deploy and retract the claws in her left gauntlet.

"Easy, young one," I said quietly. "It will be your turn, soon enough."

Wildcat just growled in response to my comment.

..._...

As was usual, Hit Girl used her agility to stay one step beyond the sharp tip of the war sword; jumping and flipping as required. FEAR, or whatever she called herself, was just as agile and she sidestepped or jumped out of the way of Hit Girl's twin Katana blades. The clang of steel upon steel had brought a small audience of Chicagoans from the nearby residential neighbourhood. Naturally, they yelled their support for Hit Girl.

FEAR did not seem to like that but she continued to fight as the duel moved steadily towards where Wildcat and I were waiting.

Hit Girl

The new girl in town certainly knew how to fight and we seemed to be fairly evenly matched.

I hated having an audience, but I could tolerate it. We both paused for a few seconds and circled each other as we caught our breaths.

"You having fun, yet?" I growled at the armour clad woman. She smiled from beneath her cowl-style mask.

"I suppose. Fighting the famous Hit Girl is a bit of a thrill. Mind you, I thought that she would have been better..."

"I'm not at my best, right now . . . or you would already be a corpse," I retorted evenly. "However, if you want me at 100%, I'm sure that I can ramp it up."

While we talked, I noticed Wildcat move closer, with Mist only a short distance behind. Wildcat took a swipe at FEAR with the claws of her left gauntlet . . . but to my surprise, they did little more than scratch FEAR's armour. Wildcat seemed stunned at the first ever failure of her claws.

"Oh, dear," FEAR laughed. "Did the little kitty's claws fail?"

..._...

FEAR struck out at the stunned vigilante and Wildcat received an armoured gauntlet to the head which sent her spinning to the ground. I moved in to cover the fallen Wildcat and I struck with both of my blades. One was blocked while the other connected with FEAR's armour on her shoulder. She grunted with the impact but she did not seem to be hurt in any way. I fought back what was probably the same feeling that Wildcat had had when her claws had failed to penetrate the bitch's armour.

Said bitch had obviously done her homework and she had been able to obtain armour that our weapons could not easily penetrate. There was a resounding crack as Mist's chain whip struck FEAR's armour near her left shoulder and the bitch lost her balance for a moment before she steadied herself and turned towards her attacker.

Mist struck again as an infuriated Wildcat struck with her Wakizashi.

Wildcat

I was livid and I was not about to let FEAR leave.

I wanted her hide and I was going to nail it to the proverbial barn door. I was incensed at the apparent failure of my claws. While Hit Girl attacked from one side and Mist pulled her whip back, I lunged at FEAR. I launched myself into the air where I struck her square in the upper back with the soles of both boots. At the same time as she fell forwards, I struck out with my Wakizashi and saw blood erupt from her left lower leg. FEAR turned her fall into a forward roll and she quickly regained her feet. She took the opportunity to very quickly disengage from the fight and she ran for her motorcycle.

"Let her go," Hit Girl ordered.

We did just that and the crowd exploded into cheers.

Forty minutes later

Safehouse F

Megan/Wildcat

Mindy did not look happy when she removed her mask.

However, she turned to me as I removed my own mask and she smiled.

"Well done, you did well," Mindy looked over at Erika. "You too, Erika."

"Loved the curtsy, Megan!" Erika chuckled.

"I had an audience..."

Joshua came running up to help us with our equipment. He smirked at Megan as he helped her remove her sword.

"That curtsy was very elegant, Megan. I thought only little girls and ladies curtsied. Surprised you even knew how."

"Oh, Megan used to do the cutest curtsies when she was little," Paige commented from the walkway.

"I am a girl; you know..."

"Yeah, those beautiful tits kinda give you away," Curtis laughed and there was much laughter at Megan's expense.

"Flattery is a girl's best friend..." Megan grinned before she gave Curtis a deep kiss.

"Was that a tongue?" Stephanie demanded of nobody in particular.

The next morning Thursday, 19th May

The home of Avery Lee

Holy fuck!

I just figured it all out – it was like a bright flash of light inside my head as everything became remarkably clear. Along with the revelation also came questions – disturbing questions.

Should I say something to her?

Would she kill me?

I could not wait to get to school...

Later that morning

Lake View High School

It took a while for me to get the nerve to ask.

"Chloe?"

"Yeah, Avery."

"We've been friends a long time, right?"

"Of course; the best."

"Would you ever, you know, hurt me?"

Chloe looked up from her magazine with confusion on her face and I bit my lip.

"Can we go somewhere a little more private..."

Chloe nodded and we walked outside where we found a quiet corner.

"I know what you are . . . please don't kill me." I said the last bit quickly.

Chloe blinked at me and raised an eyebrow.

"I have no idea what you are talking about..."

I leaned in close and whispered into her ear.

"I can't believe that I've slept with Shadow!"

It had to happen someday.

"For God's sake, Avery! You didn't sleep with me – we just played . . . we were barely thirteen, for fuck's sake."

"So . . . so you admit it?"

"I can neither confirm nor deny said accusation..."

"Horseshit, Chloe! I knew that was you at the bank and since..."

That was when Chloe scared the living daylights out of me . . . she growled.

"You say anything to anybody and a lot of people may die – including you... You understand me, Scout!"

I knew that Scout Avery Lee hated her given first name and by the fact that I had invoked it I hoped I would show how serious I was.

"Don't ever call me that!" she hissed angrily.

"Then I'd better not catch you calling me Shadow, ever – period!"

I trusted Avery, I had to – although her mouth tended to get her into trouble at times. As per protocol, I notified Mindy that somebody had figured out Shadow's secret identity.

That evening

Western Chicago

Hit Girl

After our little run in with FEAR, I was back out on the streets.

I wanted payback and so did my little friend.

"I am not little!" Wildcat had growled as Jackal had passed over her helmet.

It had been a while since it had just been Hit Girl and Wildcat. The younger vigilante was astride her Ducati Hypermotard SP and surprisingly, she was keeping very quiet. I knew that the young girl still silently seethed over her failed attack with her claws the previous evening. I had tried to assuage her worries but to no avail.

We stopped at a convenient doughnut shop and we chatted with the occupants of two CPD cruisers while they whiled away their nightshift. The CPD enjoyed chatting with Fusion, especially the younger members and they were very complimentary about Wildcat. I could tell by her stance that she was embarrassed but obviously thankful for her mask.

..._...

It was while we were there that we hit pay dirt. I saw pink! We both dived after the garishly clad vigilante – at least I assumed that she was a vigilante.

She was a fast runner but her suit and the hair which was primarily red with yellow highlights easily gave away her position in the semi-darkness. She ran towards a cheap motel a hundred yards or so away at the other end of the block. We both ran after the pink woman and easily kept pace with her. We followed her up a flight of stairs and she dived through a partially open door.

Wildcat paused at the door and we both went in together. It was a seedy hotel room of the sort that cockroaches would steer well clear of. A man was on the floor where Sunset Phoenix had obviously knocked him as she had burst through his door. She was just a couple of feet away as we both launched ourselves at her.

Our momentum rolled us backwards and into the wall behind her.

..._...

The wall exploded and the three of us fell into the next apartment.

I looked up to see two people on a bed – a man and a woman...

"Woah, they're butt naked!" Wildcat commented inappropriately.

"Sorry – chasing . . . err – criminals..." I mumbled as I averted my eyes and I made for the window where a pair of pink boots were vanishing.

"That is one enormous di..."

"Move it Wildcat!" I ordered as I seized the mesmerised Fusion Operator and dragged her to the window. "Get that man's dick out of your mind."

"Where else should I stick it?" Wildcat retorted as she climbed out of the window.

"You might just be a bit young for that, Wildcat!" I laughed as we landed on the fire escape beyond the window.

"That is not what I meant!" A flustered Wildcat replied.

Wildcat

I jumped the last half a dozen steps of the fire escape and then we both ran after the retreating Sunset Phoenix.

Despite my failure against the previous evening's adversary, Sunset fucking Phoenix was going down – period! I did not think much of her garish colour scheme. The purple pizzazz was waaaay over the top – honestly... I was not sure what the hair reminded me of, but there was something and I could not quite grasp it in my mind.

I did, however, approve of the Tanto she carried on each thigh. The bitch could do with losing a few pounds off of those too... On her back was a lethal looking double-bladed ninja sword staff which, assuming the bitch could handle it, would be a dangerous object to fight against. I struggled to figure out how old the girl was.

In my mind, she did not seem old enough to be an adult – mid to late teens I assumed.

Sunset Phoenix

They were closing on me and as I took another look behind me, I fell.

As I clambered back to my feet, I was kicked backwards and I fell onto my back. Why I had been trying to run away from Hit Girl and Wildcat, I had no idea! We were in a dark alleyway and all I could really make out were the eyes that bored into my soul. The shorter of the two had dull green eyes while the taller had dull purple ones. Seeing just the eyes and the almost invisible outline of their armour freaked me out and I began to panic.

It took all my will power to force that panic down inside me.

Hit Girl with Wildcat

I could almost smell the fear that emanated from the fallen pink object before me.

There was defiance there. I could read her body language easily enough. I still had no idea if she was friend or foe. I took a chance.

"You really think that you can take me?"

"Of course," came the brazenly indignant reply.

I almost laughed out loud but I had to give her kudos for the courage she was showing.

"Aw, come on – I don't mean to brag or to boast, but I'm a six course meal and, well . . . you're just burnt toast."

The look I received in response to my proclamation was not friendly!

"Be off with you. Stay out of our business and I will leave you alone. Do you understand?" I growled.

"Yes, Hit Girl, I understand."

The next day Friday, 20th May

Lake View High School

"Why are you so giggly all of a sudden, Avery?" Riley enquired. "You and Chloe been fucking again?"

"We never fucked and you know that as you were there..." Avery retorted.

"Just kidding... Anyway, who are you fangirling over? You look like you just met your hero..."

Avery bit her lip and Riley scowled.

"Spill!" Riley ordered.

"I can't – she'd kill me..."

"Stop talking crap – what have you done?"

"I know who Shadow really is..."

"Bullshit!"

"We both know her..."

Riley's eyes went wide.

"You mean..."

"Uh, huh..."

"Holy, shit!"

"I know..."

"Does she know you know?"

"She does..."

That afternoon

"It's so awesome..." Avery stated.

"Tell me about it – we know Shadow..." Riley replied with a barely concealed squeal. "What... Sssh – here she comes!"

Riley and Avery tried to look innocent but failed. All day they had done their best to avoid Chloe with the feeblest of excuses.

"What is it with you two, today?" Chloe demanded.

"Nothing!" Avery replied a little too quickly.

That evening

West 18th Street

"I think we've pissed off Chloe – you think she knows I told you?"

"Dunno," Riley replied uneasily.

"Well, we're about to find out when we get to D-JAK..."

"She won't be there; she'll be at the big D-JAK – going to the old one to avoid her is just lame..."

Neither teen noticed the black panel van with the open side door as it cruised down the street. Neither teen noticed the two hooded people who followed them down the street until it was too late and they found themselves being grabbed and shoved into the passing van which then accelerated away.

The last thing that both girls saw were the hoods as they were pulled over their heads.

Chapter 275*: Meeting Shadow

Friday, 20th May

An unknown location

Avery

I was shaking and I was very scared.

There were noises all around us as we sat on cold, bare concrete. The presence of the hood scared me even more. The only good thing was that I could feel Riley's hand as she gripped mine tightly. My face was wet with tears and I had been crying ever since we had been abducted. I had completely lost track of time but it didn't feel all that long since we had arrived wherever it was that we were at.

Then I froze as I heard footsteps and voices – only they weren't real voices; they were electronic and they scared me. Okay, lots of things scared me; I was a wimp! The hood was suddenly whipped off my head and I shut my eyes tight as bright lights hurt my eyes.

"What, are we going to do with you?" A voice growled.

I could not speak; I was so scared. Then my eyes began to focus and I could make out movement as somebody stepped into the light. The boots were dark blue with slate grey highlights and they were very familiar...

"You worked out my secret identity but you did not stop – you told Riley there. Who else did you tell?"

That last bit was full of malice.

"Nobody . . . I promise." I sobbed hard barely able to speak.

"Who else did you tell?" Shadow repeated with a growl that really scared me and I began to shake violently as another form entered the light.

This time, the boots were dark grey with . . . with purple highlights. I was going to die.

"Nobody – please . . . Don't kill us . . . please. I couldn't help it."

Riley

I was as scared as Avery sounded.

It took me a moment to adjust to the bright lights as the hood was yanked off. I knew who was in the dark blue suit – it was our best friend. The other one was Hit Girl and she had a reputation. I just shook with fear and I kept my eyes down as much as I could. Then I saw Shadow's feet come closer and she knelt down before me.

"Please..." I begged.

I felt the rough surface of a glove as fingers took hold of my chin and lifted it upwards. The mask was gone and in its place was the face of my best friend. My chin was in her left hand and Avery's was in her right. Chloe looked at us both and then she smiled – I felt so relieved...

"Avery, Riley – you are my best friends and I would never hurt either of you. Both of you have just entered the world of the vigilante. The door to that world only goes one way. The world has strict rules which govern our behaviour and strict rules that govern how we must protect ourselves. We wear these masks, not just to protect our own identity, but to protect the identity of those we love.

"In this case; that applies to the both of you. By hiding my identity, I protect you both from others who would harm you to get at me. I know what you both think of my world – it is not the fairy tale that you to believe it is. People die, and yes, I have killed many times. That fact may change how you both see me and it may also change our relationship . . . but this is me."

Hit Girl moved over to us and she smiled from behind her mask.

"Chloe is very serious about what she does and she is also very serious about protecting her friends who exist in the vigilante world. I am sure that you both know my reputation and how much thought I put into threats against me, my people, or my organisation. I have never killed a child, so don't give me an excuse to start..."

"Stand up, both of you," Chloe said and she pulled us both to our feet.

Hit Girl

Both of the girls looked very scared and that was the point.

I hated to do it and I was certain that Chloe did too. I had known Chloe for a long time but the two girls had known Chloe longer. It was Avery who lifted the mood at Safehouse D.

"Chloe – I think I pissed myself..." the unfortunate girl admitted.

Riley laughed out loud and so did Chloe, much to Avery's embarrassed consternation. Then Riley stopped.

"Oh – my – God..." She stammered. "Joshua!"

"Nobody ever said you were stupid, Riley..." Chloe commented, dryly.

The two of us then melted away into the darkness.

Twenty minutes later

An SUV pulled into the Safehouse and stopped beside the confused teens.

"Hi, girls!"

"Hi, Dr Bennett," Avery responded with a little surprise.

"There's a towel on the seat for you to sit on..." Dr Bennett offered and Avery blushed.

"Where are we going?" Riley asked.

"I've spoken with your mothers and you're spending the weekend with Chloe," Dr Bennett replied.

Once the SUV was in motion, Riley spoke.

"Dr Bennett...?"

"Yes, Riley – I know all about my wayward daughter..."

Half an hour later

South Cottage Grove Apartment 202

"Hi, girls!"

"Hi, Josh," Riley offered shyly.

"Hi – I need a shower; Chloe?" Avery asked.

"Go," Chloe replied.

I raised an eyebrow.

"I scared her a bit too much..." Chloe elaborated and she looked uncomfortable.

..._...

It turned out that Riley needed some freshening up too, so Chloe went to sort the two girls out while I 'chilled' with our other guest and ordered in some pizza. Almost half an hour later, the three girls reappeared in oversized T-shirts. I peeked under Chloe's and smirked...

"Abby!" Avery blurted out as she noticed the other person on the couch.

"I've come to join the weekend's fun," Abby replied with a smile. "Hope Chloe didn't scare you with our little stunt..."

"Huh?" Riley enquired.

"It was Josh and me who shoved you into that van..." Abby admitted.

"You're a part of Fusion?" Riley demanded.

"I'm Hal..."

"Have you, I mean..."

"Yes, Avery, I have killed people..."

"Oh – my – God!" Riley replied with her hand over her mouth.

"I can't believe that we are both sitting in an apartment and eating pizza with Shadow, Jackal, and Hal!" Avery breathed and then she stopped and took a deep breath. "Chloe, about earlier; we both love you and we think that what you do is so awesome and I know that you only kill when necessary – are we still best friends?"

"You are both in my apartment wearing nothing but one of my T-shirts – what do you think, silly bitch?" Chloe growled rhetorically.

"Err, Chloe..."

"Yes, Riley..."

"I know that you were injured a couple of summers ago and then Josh suddenly came onto the scene..."

I smiled. The questions were expected but how far should I take the answers? Joshua grimaced at the thought of what was going to come out, but both Avery and Riley looked very excited about what was soon to be revealed.

"Okay, just the one story before bed..."

The next morning
Saturday, 21st May

Indian Knoll Road

It had been a traumatic week, all in all.

Since my return from Europe, I had spent most of the time curled up on a bed, or on a couch, crying. Dr Bennett had made a thorough examination of my injuries, which had shocked my mother to the core. I had insisted that Mom remain with me for the examination and she had burst into tears at the sight of so many bruises. Dr Bennett controlled her emotions better, but she was still obviously mad at what she saw.

Mindy and Chloe had forced me onto reduced duties which basically meant that I was restricted to Safehouse F until I was fully healed. Neither girl was willing to take any chances with my health – I both hated and loved them for their decision. While in Europe, I had been able to push any thoughts of my attack and injuries to the back of my mind so that I could focus on the mission. Now that we were back in Chicago, I had no mission and nothing much to distract me from my body.

The first weekend back, I had stood in front of a full-length mirror for almost an hour as I had studied every square inch of my naked body. It was really the first opportunity that I had had to check myself over properly. I was stunned by what was still visible, weeks down the line. Dr Bennett had assured me that my body would heal one hundred percent. It was my mind that worried me. Would my mind fully recover from my experiences? I tried to explain what had occurred to Mom, but it was not easy and I found most of it incredibly humiliating to recount.

I had never cried as much as I had in the past week and I found that single fact totally depressing.

That afternoon

South Cottage Grove Apartment 202

We rarely got visitors of any sort, in our little apartment, let alone the one who stood outside our front door at that moment.

She had never come to visit us before; we tended not to get on all that well. Therefore, I was quite surprised when I answered the door to find Megan standing there and the eleven-year-old girl was looking rather awkward.

"Hi, Megan – come in."

"Thanks, Chloe. I'm not disturbing you? I heard that you had visitors."

Very polite – very unlike Megan, I thought. The younger girl followed me through into the living room.

"No – they've nipped out with Josh."

Megan seemed relieved.

"Nice place you have here, Chloe."

My mind went into overdrive – something was very wrong.

"Thanks, I think – why are you being so, err, un-Megan?"

"I need to talk, and well, after Mindy and Dave, it's you that I feel closest to..."

"Me?" I was astounded.

"I know that I wind you up and I make trouble for you, but you're a big sister to me and I look up to you. When I get older, I hope I can be like you; fearless and unstoppable."

Megan wanted to be like me? That was one hell of a compliment. I had never known.

"What's brought this on...?" I asked as I pointed Megan to the couch

"That last mission . . . it scared the hell out of me. Once, I thought that we were all invincible – then I was stabbed three times as a consequence of doing something stupid. Then I was wounded in Gotham. Even then, I still saw us as being able to battle through anything, but over the past month, many of my closest friends have been hurt. Hailee was beaten really badly; I saw her body in Italy and it looked horrible – she had suffered so badly. Stephanie was hurt too. Then Abby was put at risk and almost killed. The final straw was Curtis..."

I knew how she felt; I hated to see my friends hurt and seeing my cousin lying on the ground, not breathing...

"I was so scared of losing him..."

She broke down in tears. I sat down beside her and hugged the girl. I knew how she felt; I had been so scared of losing him too.

As I walked in the door, I heard talking and I instantly recognised the voice.

I had just been out with Avery and Riley to get some shopping. The two of them were a couple of blocks away picking out some pizza for tea. I dumped the bags onto the kitchen side and then I went into the living room. To say that I was stunned by the sight before me was an understatement. Seeing the two of them hugging was like seeing Palpatine hugging Yoda. However, I could see that something was troubling the both of them, so I dived into the kitchen and returned ten minutes later carrying three steaming cups of hot chocolate with marshmallows.

"Hit Girl's cure for anything!" I offered as I sat down.

Megan looked distinctly embarrassed. She hated anybody to see her cry. I could see tears on Chloe's face too.

"Curtis?"

Both girls nodded.

"It was a tough month," I admitted.

..._...

"I love you both and I'm sorry I'm such a bitch," Megan offered.

"Just be yourself, Megan," I replied. "That's why we love you."

"I hate to admit it, but Josh is right. I've always been impressed by your outgoing attitude, Megan. You never let anything get the better of you and you have courage that I wish I had at your age. You are way better than me when it comes to acrobatics and yes, I am jealous of your skills at times."

Megan looked dumbfounded.

"You – jealous of me?"

"I may be the amazing Shadow, but there are some things which you are much better at. I know we've had our differences. I know you once shoved me off the roof of a building..."

"I did not mean to do that!" Megan exclaimed.

"I know," I finished.

D-JAK Prime

As I watched my daughter assist Chloe with the class, I felt all sorts of emotions.

Megan had refused to speak about what had happened to her in Europe. I was overjoyed that she had returned without any new holes, as was Marcus. However, I had seen Hailee and I knew that bad things had occurred. Whatever had occurred had also brought Chloe and Megan closer together. They had always been a team within Fusion, but the two of them had never quite got on. Megan had been a perpetual thorn in Chloe's side.

It was good to see them both getting along and joking with each other but I so wanted to know what was troubling my little girl. Mindy had been just as tight-lipped, but that was nothing new. Cathy had tried to get information out of her daughter. Chloe had refused to say anything about events in Europe, other than that Megan would come forward when she was ready.

I smiled as my daughter looked over towards me. She seemed happy. I just hoped that she would not do anything stupid and survive till her twelfth birthday which was only a few months away. At least I had had Marcus. We were both in the same boat. But for the moment, I had a new child to think about. The enormous load that I had been lugging around for nine months was all but ready to appear in the next few days.

Megan had arrived a few days late – nothing unusual there. Marcus and I both knew the sex of the baby, but we had decided to keep it a secret from Mindy and Megan, as well as everybody else. We had a name too and we hoped that it would be accepted. I was very uncomfortable and very keen to have my body back with only one person in it. Baby Megan had been a handful – much as she was as a pre-teen.

Ow! That was another kick – I was certain that the little person inside me was listening to the classes and trying out a few of the movements inside my womb.

That night

Glenview

Dave and I sat cuddled up together on the couch in the living room.

One of our favourite movies was just about to start when Stephanie came into the room from the direction of the stairs. She walked directly towards us and then she pushed herself in between Dave and me. She pulled her legs up and cuddled into Dave – her favourite place. Then she began to cry.

I looked over at Dave who just shrugged.

"You okay?" I asked.

"You two are the most special people that I have in this world. You've taken in a broken girl who had lost her parents, her brother, and her mentor. You then turned her into somebody with both a purpose and a future. You both give your love without any thought of return. What you did for Miranda was beautiful and I can never repay either of you for your love and kindness. All I can do in return is to try and be a good daughter to you both plus a good sister to the two nightmares upstairs."

I hugged Stephanie tightly and then dried her tears.

"You're a lovely girl, Steph. You deserve to have a nice life after all the crap that you've endured. My life was not good until Dave arrived and with him by my side, life has got so much better. I am very happy to be able to pass on some of that happiness to somebody else."

Stephanie looked up at me and smiled.

"Thanks, Mum."

We were disturbed by a yell from the door.

"She's in here!"

Danny waited for his sister and then they both ran and jumped onto the couch. Anne-Marie took up her place on the other side of Dave and Danny squirmed in next to me. The movie began at that moment.

"What are we watching?" Danny asked.

"A sci-fi movie," Dave replied.

"Is it scary?" Anne-Marie wondered.

"Not really," I chipped in.

"What's it called?" Stephanie wanted to know.

"Aliens..." I replied with an enormous grin.

Monday, 23rd May

Evening

Lincolnwood

I was not one to leave people unrewarded.

With a small amount of pre-planning, I made a surprise visit to the hackers of Synthesis. Naturally, they had no idea that I was about to make my entrance that Monday night. Battle Guy was with me, as was Hal – she insisted on coming. Murphy and Fellowes arrived a minute or two before we did so as not to worry Mr and Mrs Dade. Mind you, who wouldn't be worried about a blood-thirsty vigilante paying a visit to their home.

"Good evening," I offered as I entered the house.

"Welcome, err, Hit Girl."

It was a normal Monday evening for us all.

The five of us were happily pounding away on our laptops when the door to my bedroom opened. I expected it to be Mom. It was a female alright, but...

"Holy fuck!" I spat out as I saw who now stood in my bedroom.

Each of the three masked individuals wore an almost identical dark grey uniform. The female to the left wore a silver oak leaf on her collar. The man on the right, a silver eagle. The woman in the centre had a single silver star on her collar. Her mask was trimmed in purple – she was Hit Girl. The other female, her mask trimmed in a pale blue, was slim and I had no idea who she was. The man wore a mask trimmed in dark blue and I knew that he would be Battle Guy.

"Are you, Hal?" Jesse asked in awe as he ran his eyes over the unknown female.

"Yes, I am Hal."

I saw the lower jaws of Peter and Laurence almost hit the floor at that proclamation. I knew exactly what the three of them got up to in bed each night and who was in their minds while they did it – ewww!

..._...

"You must be Libby Dade, the leader of this rabble," Hit Girl enquired and I nodded. "And the rest of you must be Synthesis."

"We are!" the others almost yelled.

"Thank you all for your assistance. While I was a little surprised to find that Fusion had a team of hackers, I was very pleased with what you all accomplished."

"We're just glad we could help," Kate offered meekly.

I could not believe that we were talking with the famous Hit Girl, right there in my fucking bedroom!

They all seemed genuine enough – young, but I could not hold that against any of them!

The bedroom was large and nicely decorated. My eyes locked onto one poster.

"Oh for..." I growled as I took in the six-foot by four-foot, glossy poster that showed yours truly in France, the middle finger of my left hand raised. I had to admit, it was an awesome poster and actually better than the SOMF one.

"Marker!"

A black marker pen was instantly thrust at me and I went over to the poster and I signed it: Hit Girl. The grins from the kids were very rewarding.

"Can we get one of those posters," Hal asked.

"Anything you want, Hal..." Jesse Dade fawned and I saw his sister roll her eyes in exasperation.

"Battle Guy?" I prompted.

Battle Guy dived out of the room for a moment.

I was enjoying the attention from the boys. I had had no idea that I had a fan base of any kind. It was a little bit creepy, but all in all . . . I loved it! Battle Guy returned with five large boxes in his arms. He gently placed them on the floor at the foot of Libby's bed. Each of the laptops had cost well over $3,000 and were among the best that money could buy. All five of the geeks just stared at the laptops as they instantly recognised the high-end electronics.

"Awesome..." Libby Dade whispered as she picked up one of the boxed laptops and she seemed to be in a daze as she sat back down on her bed.

"We customised them a bit – but I'm sure you guys can do the rest..." I said as they all began to open their new equipment.

"Holy crap!" Jesse breathed. "It's got everything!"

"They're bullet resistant too," I advised them. "Kevlar in the lid, carbon fibre case..."

Next, we handed out a Sony Z5 Android phone to each of them. Battle Guy demonstrated how to call for help if required.

"You guys are now a part of Fusion. That means you get our protection. Over time, we might let you in on more of our secrets, but for now, if you need us, you know where to find us," Hit Girl advised the enthralled kids. "I hope that I do not have to go into any detail concerning secrecy..."

"No way – our lips are sealed," Libby responded instantly. "Right, guys...?"

"Definitely."

"Of course."

"Goes without saying."

"That would be awesomely stupid!"

"Remember," Hit Girl growled. "You hack me..."

"We know," Kate muttered. "You'll eviscerate us and eat our guts in a sandwich."

"Actually, I prefer a good barbeque," the arch-vigilante laughed.

"God!" Hit Girl moaned as we climbed back into Hound. "Teenage geeks are so annoying!"

"According to Kick-Ass, you used to be pretty annoying, too," Battle Guy pointed out as he started the SUV.

"I was not!" Hit Girl replied defensively. "Well . . . maybe a little."

"Shadow used to find me really annoying at times," I admitted.

"Geeks like to be annoying," Battle Guy acknowledged.

"Don't I know it!" Hit Girl chuckled.

A few days later
Saturday, 28th May
Early afternoon

Glen View

It was party time again and not a minute too soon...

Everybody was exhausted and we needed to unwind. I decided to open the party up not just Fusion but for many of our friends too. Literally tonnes of food and drink had been delivered from an outside caterer. Most of the kids had arrived and they were upstairs changing for the pool. Dave was on patrol up there to ensure that the girls stayed in Stephanie's bedroom and the boys stayed in Danny's bedroom while they changed.

The first down the stairs was Chloe with her best friends, Abby, Avery, and Riley – Chloe had gone with a surprisingly discrete, one-piece swimsuit – maybe she remembered what Stephanie had done it her, back in London – as had Riley and Abby, but Avery had worn a daring two-piece bikini that did not actually cover very much at all. They were quickly followed by a younger group of giggling girls in the form of Megan with her best friend Nikki, Stephanie, Anne-Marie, Lauren with her sister Lizzie, and Stephanie's friends: Katherine and Alison. Another group followed which consisted of Joshua with his best friends, Mike and Ethan. Then came Kyle and Tommy, followed by Curtis with his best friends, Jake and Zach. Finally, there was Saoirse, Morgan, Cameron Fellowes, Brad Murphy and Stephanie's other friends, Craig and Jackson.

As if twenty-six teens and pre-teens was not enough, we also had the adults: Hailee, Mathilda, Marty and Kim with Matty, Marcus and Paige, Abby's mother Vera, Emily, the mother of Lauren and Lizzie, Tony and Shannon, and of course, Isaac Swanson. We were also joined by Fellowes and Murphy with their wives.

I was very nervous as I walked over to the side of the pool where the two boys stood talking.

The one on the right saw me as I approached and he whispered something to the other boy who blushed as his friend swam away.

"Hi, Brad."

"Hi, Lauren – you okay?"

"Yes, thanks..."

"Nice, err, costume..."

I felt my face getting very hot and my nervousness increased. Brad had really helped me get past the people who had seen me as tainted by what I had gone through. Brad had been there for me, even when I had burst into tears . . . and he had let me cry on his shoulder. Brad also had a very nice . . . body – did I just think that?

"Thanks for being there for me Brad – I've never really had the chance to say that..."

"No sweat, Lauren – I was just glad to be able to help..."

Crap! The conversation wasn't going very far, was it?

I edged closer to him and I felt my heart beating harder against my chest. Brad seemed much more nervous than I was if that were actually possible. I tentatively leaned forwards and kissed him on the lips – just once, and very quickly. Brad grinned sheepishly and I struggled not to giggle with embarrassment as I looked around and I found Megan and Stephanie staring back at me. They were both smiling, in a nice way, and they nodded to me before they turned away.

We both stood there, not talking until Brad reached out and he took my hand.

"They make a cute couple," Rachel Murphy commented from the far side of the pool.

"Your son has been a big help to Lauren," Emily Edwards replied.

"Brad can be very sensitive at times. He's not said much but he's really taken by Lauren – to be honest, she's his first real girlfriend. But I've warned him that if he hurts Lauren in any way..."

"Lauren hasn't had a real boyfriend yet; she's barely out of the 'boys, ewww' stage. I'm pleased that she has somebody to talk to and somebody who cares about her, despite..."

"A horrible thing to happen to a girl of any age."

There was a splash beside me as Megan appeared from under the water.

"Hi, lover boy," Megan said to Brad.

I noticed Brad running his eyes over Megan's curvaceous swimsuit-clad body and I scowled as that green-eyed monster reared up inside of me.

"Bradley – your eyes should be on me; not on her..."

Oh, my God, I could not believe that I had just said that!

"Jealous, much!" Megan grinned as she vanished back under the water and then reappeared a few yards away to annoy Chloe.

I had somehow joined an amazing group of people. They all cared for each other and no matter what they were always there when you needed them. They would also give you space when you needed it too.

"Hiya, Brad," my little sister called out. "Lauren's been talking about all week."

"I have not!" I blustered as I glared at Lizzie. "Go find your own boyfriend."

"Lauren's got a boyfriend! Lauren's got a boyfriend!" Lizzie sang as she swam away.

"Sorry about her," I muttered.

"She's not said anything that isn't true," Brad laughed as I felt myself going red again.

"Ladies and gentlemen, plus rabid kids!" Dave called out over all the noise. "Mindy and Megan would like a word."

I stood up and faced everybody as the noise died down and everybody looked over in our direction. Admittedly, the younger males had no problem looking in our direction as Megan stood beside me in just her swimsuit.

"As most of you know, Paige has been lugging something around inside her for the past nine months. Finally, Megan and I have great pleasure in welcoming our little brother to the world... Please raise your glasses to the newest member of our little community: Damon Williams."

Paige raised up the not-yet-a-week-old baby boy and everybody cheered and raised their glasses to the new child. Marcus himself looked very pleased with himself.

"Just one more thing..." I called out. "I kind of said that I would not announce this, but today is also Paige's birthday, so Happy Birthday Mom!"

More cheering erupted as Paige glared at me.

Later that afternoon

The British Sector

The four kids had got bored in the pool, so they had retreated upstairs to chat amongst themselves.

Initially, Lauren had been targeted for some light-hearted teasing about her and Brad, but the conversation had then moved onto what might happen beyond Lauren and Brad just kissing. Stephanie had come up with a few, rather crude, suggestions.

"You seem very well clued up for a ten-year-old, Stephanie..." Lauren commented and Stephanie blushed slightly as she looked around to see that the door to her bedroom was firmly shut.

"Sex education was a key part of Phase 1 training and the basics were taught – I knew what was what by the time I was eight and a half. The idea was that once we became operational as teenagers, we could use sex as a weapon – to compromise people for instance. Well, during Phase 2 they went into a bit more detail about not just basic sexual intercourse, but other sexual positions and methods..."

"Awesome!" Megan grinned.

"By Phase 3, they had moved from theory to practical applications... I picked up a lot, considering that I shared a dormitory with gobby teenagers who liked to talk about what they were doing with their bits when the lights were out... I never witnessed one, but there were live demonstrations by two unfortunate Phase 3 students to show what they had learned and to demonstrate the correct use of their bodies on each other..."

"That sounds creepy," Lauren commented.

..._...

At that point, the door opened and Saoirse slunk in with Morgan.

"Shut the door!" Tommy hissed and Morgan did so before she joined the others on the bed.

"What are you all talking about?" Saoirse asked.

"Sex," Megan stated simply.

"Oh..."

"SD?" Tommy asked.

"Yes, Tommy."

"You were Phase 3, right?"

"Yes, I was – I completed my training..." Saoirse replied as she threw a smirk in Stephanie's direction and not realising the trap that she had just dropped herself into.

"Does that mean that you witnessed one of the live sex demos that Steph just told us about?" Tommy persisted.

Saoirse went bright red and her eyes almost popped out of their sockets. Then she turned on Stephanie.

"Can't you keep your big gob shut?"

"They asked..." Stephanie replied apologetically as she realised her error; she had no desire to humiliate her friend.

"Well?" Megan pushed.

SD grimaced and she rolled her eyes, but her face remained flushed.

"Yes, I was at one of the 'demos' as you called it, Tommy. We all hated them and we dreaded being picked, but by then we were all well used to being naked in front of others, but to engage in a sex act before an audience of our peers was something else entirely!"

..._...

Saoirse hesitated for a moment, but then reluctantly she pushed on.

"A girl was called out – Sarah, I think her name was... She had no choice but to go up on stage where she was immediately ordered to strip – nobody disobeyed direct orders, nobody... The girl was naked within sixty seconds; she just stood there and hoped that she was going to be having sex with a boy – you never knew until the partner was picked. Then it happened; my name was called out!"

"You!" Stephanie blurted out.

Saoirse looked incredibly embarrassed at her revelation but she took a deep breath and responded to Stephanie's exclamation.

"Yes, I, Foxtail have had mad, passionate, lesbian sex, live on stage in front of hundreds – you happy now?"

"Not really; but I'm still listening..." Stephanie replied with an eager smirk.

"I felt so embarrassed as I walked down to the stage..."

"Embarrassed? You?" Megan inquired. "I thought your kind were into that sort of thing..."

Both Stephanie and Saoirse turned on Megan and gave her some very cold glares. Cold enough that Megan actually flinched slightly.

"For your information, Kitty-Kat, I was only thirteen. I had only had proper boobs for a year and just two weeks previously, I had finished off the indignities of my first ever period... It was just my luck for nature to intervene during a shower one afternoon – it was like that scene from Carrie. Only, I knew what was happening to my body; although, some clever bitches hammed it up and threw pads and tampons at me.

"It was not all that uncommon for girls to have their first periods in the shower but they all got laughed at; we were bitches and trained to be that way. Nobody showed you any compassion, so you showed nobody else compassion; everybody just bitched at each other and some poor girl bleeding all over the showers was fair game. Mind you, Stephanie found a very unique solution to that and found another way to dump some blood in the shower!"

..._...

It was Stephanie's turn to blush furiously but Saoirse continued.

"Getting back to the stage: everybody was cheering for us both – most of them were perverts; what teenagers aren't? Sarah was bright red from her hair line right down to her tits, by the time I got on stage. I was immediately ordered to strip, and I did so, without any hesitation. It felt weird removing your bra and knickers in front of hundreds of other teenagers but there I was, naked on stage with another equally naked girl and I was shaking like a leaf. We had sex – so much that I lost track of everything and we both passed out and awoke to find ourselves in our own beds, fast asleep."

"We want details, girl!" Lauren called out which surprised everyone.

Saoirse swore under her breath.

"According to the others who were there that afternoon, we began with foreplay – I could remember that bit 'cause I was feeling humiliated and I was shaking – we kissed and played with each other's tits and also down below . . . as we both became aroused, our nervousness seemed to fall away and we both sunk into our little show. That was when I started to lose track of everything that happened – apparently, Sarah went down on me before I then returned the favour and before we knew it, we had a full 69 on stage... I was so spent afterwards that I couldn't touch my clit for a week!"

"Wow!" Tommy growled as he sat there, his hands down his pants.

"That was awesome!" Stephanie added and Lauren nodded enthusiastically.

"Ewww!" Megan commented with a grimace.

Morgan just sat there with a thoughtful expression on her face.

Chapter 277*: Family Time

Two days later
Monday, May 30th

North Park Elementary School

"It was really awesome – her swimsuit was perfect."

"We noticed you staring at her all afternoon, Jackson," Ali commented with a roll of her eyes.

"He was lucky he was in the pool, nobody noticed the drooling!" Craig.

"I was not drooling!"

"Yes, you were," Katy reminded the blushing boy. "Your eyes were fixed on Stephanie's chest and other places."

"I..."

"Shh!" Craig hissed. "She's here..."

Stephanie sat down at her desk and glared at Jackson.

"Not . . . one . . . word!" she ordered.

"He loved your swimsuit – couldn't stop talking about it," Katy laughed.

"He wanted to know what you looked like out of it..." Craig said.

"You what!" Stephanie growled at Jackson.

"Stephanie enjoyed you watching her, Jackson," Anne-Marie commented loudly as she walked past the open door to the classroom.

Stephanie's eyes went wide and her face exploded into a deep pink hue.

"You're dead, girl!" Stephanie yelled after the giggling eight-year-old as she bolted.

That same time Lake View High School

"Ethan, you were a fucking animal on Saturday," Mike Taylor pointed out to his friend.

"I was not!"

"Come on, Ethan, you had your hands all over Saoirse," Morgan reminded the almost sixteen-year-old.

"She wasn't exactly complaining," Ethan threw back.

"She's a junior, too," Chloe commented.

"Was there any part of her body you didn't touch?" Avery asked.

"Yeah," Ethan replied as his face turned very red. "She said, and I quote, 'touch my snatch and I break your fucking fingers'."

Everybody laughed at that.

"Any comments on her body?" Riley enquired with a grin.

"Her boobs are bigger than yours," Ethan replied.

"Hey!" Riley retorted in an annoyed tone.

"Don't feel bad, Riley," Chloe offered. "Everybody's boobs are bigger than yours!"

There was more laughter and Riley scowled.

Chicago University

"You waiting for her again, cuz?"

"Yeah – I'll catch you later, Adora."

I hoped she would be there... The wait was worth it as the all black 2015 Kawasaki Ninja 1000 ABS swept into the parking lot. It came to a swift halt a few yards from where I stood. The lady astride the beautiful machine swung an equally beautiful leg over the frame and she removed her helmet. She shook out her below shoulder-length brown hair and stuffed her helmet into the right-hand pannier.

"Hi," I offered as she walked past me.

"Hi, yourself."

She smiled.

"I'm Adam Stockdale."

"Hailee Richards."

That afternoon

D-JAK

We were having some down time and I was spending some quality time down at D-JAK Prime.

It was great just to be able to work through my aches and pains with some Taekwondo or some Aikido. As was usual when I performed, I had an audience. Okay, my Gi was showing off my curves and there were several teenage boys who tried to get a good look at my nether regions. A few back flips usually had some of the older boys drooling...

"You are so awful, Mindy!" Paige laughed as she enjoyed a day of freedom while Cathy was looking after little Damon.

"It brings in the custom..." I reasoned as I drank some cold water.

"Mommy, mommy!"

I turned to see Anne-Marie running towards me; her face lit up with an enormous smile.

"I did it!"

I waited patiently for the rest of the explanation – it was like waiting for a grenade to explode...

"I did my first backflip!"

"Wow!" I replied and I was genuinely impressed.

I knew from personal experience how hard a backflip was to do. I was physically dragged by the eight-year-old over to the corner where I found Hailee and Saoirse. They both grinned at me and I stood to one side while Anne-Marie took up position on the mat and she looked over at me; I nodded and she took a deep breath...

The young girl was very flexible and she demonstrated this by performing a passable standing backflip in which she cleared the mat and only her feet touched down again. I clapped and so did many of the watching parents. Anne-Marie went pink and bowed to everybody. Then she turned to me.

"Your turn, Mom..."

She knew I found it really difficult to turn down a challenge and I had also warned her about getting me to show off my Hit Girl skills in public while I was Mindy Lizewski. Nevertheless, I had performed my patented backflip at D-JAK before. I decided to add something more to the movement and I did something that I had not done in many years. I took off at a run, directly at the wall and with a perfectly timed jump followed by two steady paces, I ran up the wall and flipped over backwards before I performed an added twist and landed back on my feet to face the astonished Anne-Marie.

Behind my stunned daughter, several of my male fans broke into raging cheers and I felt my face get very warm.

"Not bad, girl!" Saoirse commented and Hailee nodded her own approval.

Not to be outdone, my two black belt instructors began a routine to show off their own fighting skills as they tried to outdo each other and put the other down hard. The boys and girls loved it and so did the parents, especially the few dads present...

..._...

Anne-Marie, with the assistance of her big sister, showed off what else she had learnt over her months at D-JAK. Stephanie walked towards her younger sister, a soft plastic training knife in her right hand. As she came closer to Anne-Marie, the younger girl took up a fighting stance and when Stephanie made to 'stab' her sister, Anne-Marie expertly disarmed the bigger girl and we all heard the air forced out of Stephanie's lungs when she hit the mat. The sprightly Anne-Marie bowed and curtsied to the cheering watchers – she loved the attention. She then proceeded to put her brother down as he picked up the same knife and tried to attack his sister while she was busy with her adoring crowd.

Stephanie had, meantime, jumped back to her feet and she made her way towards Chloe who was talking to several kids about self-protection techniques. Stephanie's approach was perfect but Chloe had developed an awesome sixth sense that made Shadow a considerably more dangerous opponent. There in D-JAK, though, she would not kill her assailant but still, Stephanie found herself landing flat on her face as Chloe deftly kicked the younger girl's feet out from under her and without missing a beat, she went back to her instruction.

..._...

Stephanie was not beaten – she rarely was.

"I need a volunteer," she called out as she studied some of the kids that had come in for a look. "Anybody think they can take me?"

The challenge was taken up by a tall girl with long blonde hair. She wore a blouse, loose jeans and sneakers.

"Who are you?" Stephanie asked.

"My name is Kelly..."

"Age?"

"Seventeen..."

I watched as Stephanie grinned. They both took up a fighting stance – the girl obviously had some skills and I saw her eyes focus on Stephanie. Quick as a flash, Stephanie moved and put the much older girl down on the mat with her knee across Kelly's throat.

"Not bad . . . but you've left yourself open..." Kelly said as she twisted and wrapped her leg around Stephanie's neck.

Stephanie instantly realised her mistake and tried to correct her error but to no avail as for about the third time that afternoon, she hit the mat rather hard.

..._...

I noticed a tall woman who watched Kelly intently; she seemed far too young to be the girl's mother, she was about my age – a sister maybe? I walked over to her.

"Your sister?"

"Yes, Kelly is my younger sister. My name is Katrina, Katrina Wright."

The woman had long, flowing black hair and she had piercing eyes that seemed to radiate superiority as she looked down at me.

"Mindy, Mindy Lizewski," I said as I offered my hand.

"Good to meet you, Mindy Lizewski."

"Your sister is skilled. Where did she learn?"

"From me. Our parents died some time ago and I have taught her to be self-reliant."

"I applaud you for that decision," I replied.

"If you'll excuse us, we have another appointment..."

"We look forward to seeing you both again, sometime."

I watched as the two young women left. For some reason which I could not explain, I felt a nagging worry about the elder one.

That night

Glenview

"Why is it," Dave enquired of his eldest daughter as he observed the food around her mouth, "no matter what you eat, you still manage to get a good deal of it on your face and even some down your front?"

"I don't..." Stephanie began.

"Maybe we should have her eat naked – then we can just throw her in the bath rather than having to try and get the stains out of her clothes," Mindy suggested.

Stephanie scowled – Anne-Marie and Danny laughed.

"Little Lady doesn't like that idea," Dave chuckled.

"I am not little..." Stephanie retorted.

"...Nor a lady," Danny added.

"Good one, Danny!" Anne-Marie laughed.

While Stephanie glared at her younger siblings, Dave attacked her with a wet-wipe. Stephanie fought but Dave was stronger and two seconds later, Dave released a now much cleaner-faced Stephanie.

"Well," Anne-Marie teased, "that must have been humiliating for you."

"Well," Dave threw in, "you're about to find out just how humiliating."

Dave then attacked Anne-Marie's face with another wet-wipe. When he had finished the much cleaner Anne-Marie glowered at Stephanie who just glowered back.

"Dad, may I have a wipe too, please?"

"Of course, Daniel," Dave replied as he passed a fresh one over.

The two girls looked up at Dave and then at Danny while their mouths hung open.

"What?" Danny asked. "I'm old enough to wipe my own face . . . unlike you two little girls."

The looks Danny received were anything but friendly.

There was one downside to the puppies being house-trained.

We allowed them to wander around the house while we were home and that meant that I could be sitting on the toilet taking a pee when a muzzle would appear around the door – and not the muzzle that I was used to, either. The muzzle was usually furry and belonged to a rather ungainly young pup which tended to be Kiara or Razor. I had no real problem with them coming to visit – they would just sit there and stare, tongues hanging out – but I hated to have an audience while I peed.

More than once I had found no toilet paper on the holder and then subsequently discovered miles of it running around the house – that had usually resulted in a major telling off for the unfortunate culprit who was usually found half-buried in Andrex. If it were Razor, then Stephanie gained the unenviable job of putting the toilet paper back onto the roll – which usually resulted in Razor sulking even more because Stephanie would glower at him for the rest of the day!

It was also getting annoyingly regular to be taking a shower and then to find yourself with a pup or two at your feet, enjoying the rushing water; they all loved water and none of them would pass up any chance to get wet. Once, I had ended up with all seven in the shower with me, which was a squeeze, even in our giant shower! Effort was made to dissuade them as they grew, but they were very mischievous, especially Kiara who appeared to be the ring leader of any uprising.

It was almost time for the relevant pups to go to their respective homes. Hope would go to Marty and Kim. Josie would join Hailee. Piper would annoy Megan. Hercules would join Chloe and Joshua in their apartment – maybe they might just need a bigger place. Layla would make her home with Abby.

That would just leave us with four pets: Sophia, Kiara, Razor, and Horatio.

Later that night

"You playing with your pussy, again?"

"I find it relaxing," Mindy replied with a grin at the innuendo as her finger moved gently and rhythmically.

"I like stroking pussies, too."

"This one is softer and he purrs really loudly."

"He's got sharp claws, too."

"Only when he wants to play – or you make him mad."

"Well, I prefer my pussies to be moist..."

Mindy picked up Horatio and headed out of the living room.

"Time for little man to go to bed and then you can play with my other pussy."

Tuesday, May 31st Evening

Central Chicago

"You two have fun now. I'll be back about eight-thirty."

"Thanks, Dad," Brad called out as he helped his date out of the Jeep SUV.

"Your Dad's nice."

"Thanks, Lauren."

..._...

Two hours later, the two kids came out of the cinema hand-in-hand. They had enjoyed pizza and a movie. It was very close to the time when Brad's father would arrive to collect them and take them home. It had been a first for them both and very special to boot. Brad leant in and gave Lauren a swift peck on the cheek. Lauren blushed and she was about to return the sentiment when somebody shouted from very close by.

"What the bloody hell are you doing with my daughter?"

The yell came out of nowhere and Brad spun around very confused. He was instantly accosted by an angry looking man who pushed him back against the wall of the cinema. Lauren's eyes went wide for a moment before they narrowed.

"What do want, Dad?" she demanded.

"I want to know what the fuck you are doing with a boy? You're still thirteen, right?"

"You don't even know how old I am!" Lauren thundered back derisively. "Why can't you just stay out of my life?"

"You and Lizzie are my daughters and I care..."

"Care!" Lauren retorted angrily. "You don't care about us, or Mom."

"Well, she ain't exactly doing a good job if she lets you run around like a common hussy."

Brad jumped in to defend Lauren.

"Don't talk about Lauren like that."

Bill Edwards turned on the almost-thirteen-year-old boy and he raised his right hand...

..._...

The next few seconds were a blur for the man as his world seemed to rotate and then he found the hard concrete of the ground rushing towards him. He screamed in pain as his face hit the concrete and as he rolled onto his back, he looked up into the very angry face of his teenage daughter.

"What the hell?" he spat out as he got back to his feet a little shakily.

He had not taken more than two steps when he again hit concrete. Only it was the wall of the cinema as Bill Edwards felt cold steel on his left wrist as it was yanked behind him. He felt the same cold steel on his right wrist as he was secured and pushed down to the ground.

A very angry Sergeant Paul Murphy glared down at the man with blood on his face.

Chicago Police Department
District 21
Chicago

Sergeant Trudy Platt looked up as Murphy entered the precinct with a perp in cuffs.

"Thought it was your night off, Paul?" she queried as she took in the two kids, one of whom was Murphy's teenage son.

"Took my son and his girl to the movies – this asshole interfered," Paul explained.

"Was all that blood you, Paul?"

"It was me," the young girl replied. "He's my father and he went to hit Brad."

"Lauren put him down like he was nothing!" Brad commented.

"He is nothing – nothing to me," Lauren growled angrily.

The following morning
Wednesday, June 1st

North Park Elementary School

The door to the classroom burst open.

It was Jackson. Stephanie was about to comment about being disturbed during recess when she saw Jackson's worried expression.

"Steph, some quick – it's your sister!"

Stephanie bolted up from her seat and she left a confused Katy and Ali in her wake as she ran out of the room. She was quickly joined by an anxious-faced Megan. Jackson led them both to a classroom on the first floor and he stopped just inside the door. They had heard the crying and muted screams as they approached the classroom. The source was Anne-Marie and she lay on the floor in obvious pain. Tears streamed down her face as a teacher inspected her left arm which for some reason did not look right.

..._...

Stephanie and Megan both zeroed in on a young boy of eight who looked very guilty.

The boy also looked very scared as the two girls, both of whom were not just older but well-known for their tendency towards violence, moved towards him. He had hurt their sister/aunt and he knew that he was in big trouble. They were rapidly intercepted by Danny who stopped them in their vengeful tracks.

"Not his fault!" Danny said quickly. "Silly bitch was messing about and she fell – her fault, one hundred percent."

Megan did not look convinced, but neither she nor Stephanie continued their advance on the unfortunate boy.

An hour later

Northwestern Memorial Hospital

"Nothing bad, Mindy," Cathy offered soothingly.

"What were you doing?" Mindy demanded of her youngest daughter.

Anne-Marie knew that she was in trouble and she just stared at the floor as Cathy studied the X-Rays of her left forearm. The arm was very painful but nowhere near as painful as it had been an hour previously. The painkillers had taken care of that.

"Well?"

"I fell."

"Doing what?"

"Nothing."

"Do you think I enjoy receiving phone calls from Principals saying that my child has been hurt?" Mindy's tone dictated the correct answer.

"No."

"Tell me the truth."

"I was showing off," the eight-year-old muttered as she sobbed.

"I can't hear you."

"I was showing off and I tried a cartwheel. It worked fine the first time, but then I misjudged it and I fell against the teacher's desk..."

The sobbing then got worse and Mindy finally relented as she hugged the distraught little girl.

..._...

"It's a simple fracture and we can realign it easily. A cast will keep it secure until it heals fully. She's young, Mindy, so don't worry about any future problems."

"How long?"

"Could be six weeks in total – say three in the cast and then three weeks for the arm to regain its strength."

Once the arm was aligned securely, Cathy wrapped several layers of soft cotton over the lower arm. A little extra padding was applied around the thumb and then the outer layers were added. This was pink-coloured fibreglass and it was applied from just below the elbow all the way past the thumb to the knuckles of Anne-Marie's left hand. A thick cloth was wrapped around the cast to assist with the setting of the fibreglass.

Half an hour later, Anne-Marie was ready to leave the hospital.

Wednesday, June 1st, 2016
That evening

Glenview

The Kitchen

"Dave, you seen Sophia's spare collar? You know, the one I've been threatening Megan with."

"No, not since Chloe was here the other day... Oh, dear!"

I picked up my cell and dialled Chloe. She picked up, but all I heard was giggling. Then I froze as I heard Joshua's voice in the background.

"Here, girl, come on – there's a good bitch..."

Then I was certain I heard Chloe go 'woof'. I quickly killed the call and I felt really freaked the hell out. I put the phone down carefully and I walked away giving it a nasty scowl.

"Did she have it?" Dave asked with a grin.

"Let's just say that I think those two will be doing it doggy style tonight... Don't you get any ideas, either!"

"I never said a word – although you are the world's biggest bitch!"

"I am aren't I!" I laughed.

"Who's doing what, 'doggy style'?"

I put my head in my hands and I groaned. Why did they always overhear weird shit that I could not possibly explain?

"Err . . . nothing, Anne-Marie."

Dave just laughed – asshole!

An hour later

The Master Bedroom

"That's it – the twins are asleep and Stephanie's got her head buried in some internet shit."

"Just us?"

"Just you, me, and way too many clothes..." Mindy replied with a lustful grin.

Dave scooped Mindy up and she giggled as she wrapped her arms around the neck of her husband. Dave carried her over to the bed and he threw his wife, none too gently, onto the capacious bed where she issued a little scream as she landed and bounced a few times. She began to laugh as Dave crawled onto the bed and then astride Mindy's legs. He leant down and kissed his wife on the lips. He felt her tongue push between his lips and he enjoyed the tingling sensation on his lips.

Mindy moaned as she pulled him closer.

..._...

After almost two minutes, the couple came apart only slightly breathless. Dave slid backwards and reached behind him. He tickled Mindy's bare left foot – she giggled and she tried to pull her leg away but Dave held it firm.

"No!" she giggled.

Mindy was perfectly capable of getting out of Dave's grasp only she enjoyed being manipulated by her husband. She also didn't mind a little torture, nor a little pain.

"Dave – please..." she giggled as she writhed in vain.

"Oh, I've barely started, my love."

Dave attacked the belt buckle on Mindy's belt and he yanked the leather article out and then threw it across the room.

The Foyer

Stephanie was thirsty and a little hungry, so she headed down to the kitchen.

As she walked across the foyer en route for the kitchen, she heard loud giggling coming from the master bedroom over to her right. She grimaced at the thought of what was going on and she quickened her pace towards the kitchen.

Once there, she riffled through the fridge until she found what she was looking for: a large tub of strawberry yoghurt. She grabbed a spoon from a drawer, poured some milk into a large glass and she then headed back towards the stairs. The ten-year-old-girl jumped as something heavy hit the door to the master bedroom from the inside.

"Dirty fuckers!" Stephanie muttered as she ran up the stairs.

The Master Bedroom

Dave popped the buttons on Mindy's jeans.

Mindy made no attempt to prevent it. She just lay back on the bed and closed her eyes. She knew what was to come and the preceding foreplay was very important to the whole sexual encounter. Dave gently eased the jeans down her perfectly smooth thighs and revealed the dark purple panties beneath. He bent down and began to kiss the inner side of the thighs. Despite the knowledge that there was still a single layer of cotton covering her most intimate parts, just having her husband's mouth so tantalisingly close was almost unbearable.

Mindy moaned as Dave's tongue gently caressed the soft skin inside her thighs. Her skin tingled at his touch and mere inches away from that erotic touch, she could feel additional tingling in her labia as her vulva began to prepare itself for what was to come (pun intended).

Sometimes the sex was quick but still very satisfying.

At least once a month, where possible, Dave would go all out and he would torture me for what felt like hours. He would bring me to the brink of an orgasm, only to stop dead. I would feel so frustrated but I also enjoyed it. I so wanted my man inside of me. I so wanted him to touch every special part of me from my nipples to my clit.

Dave knew exactly what made me purr. He could make me moan and groan at a single touch. He could have me thrashing around like I was being electrocuted. He could have me pleading for the release of an orgasm. Some would probably have seen it as cruel, how Dave treated me as he withheld that all important orgasm, but I was Hit Girl, I enjoyed the torture . . . and believe me, the orgasm when it finally came; it was to die for.

I felt that frustration right then at that moment as Dave teased my inner thighs with his tongue and his lips. I so wanted those lips and that tongue on my labia and my clit, but both were still covered. I felt damp where it mattered and I could see the bulge in my man's pants – he looked decidedly uncomfortable. So, while he moved up my body to where he caressed my breasts through my blouse and my bra, I reached down and pulled open the buttons on his jeans. I reached in and pulled him out. The heat that his cock emitted was beaten only by the heat that I felt between my own legs.

I heard Dave moan as my fingers ran over the tip of his member and he trembled at my touch. I could play the game just as well as he could.

The jeans slid down Mindy's long, muscular legs.

Mindy's legs were perfectly smooth as she hated any hint of hair anywhere but on her head and vulva – she flatly refused to shave 'down there' although she did trim to keep things neat and orderly. The jeans followed the belt and Mindy squirmed as Dave ran his hands the full length of her legs from her feet all the way to her...

"God, this teasing's killing me!" Mindy moaned.

"It'll be well worth the wait, beautiful," Dave replied.

"It fucking better be!"

Dave ran his fingers over the purple panties. Mindy stiffened as his fingers caressed her labia. The panties were damp to the touch – a very good sign that Mindy was responding to Dave's gentle ministrations.

..._...

Tenderly, Dave pushed his fingers into the waistband of the purple panties either side of the slim waist. Mindy's skin was soft and she moaned at his touch. Slowly, he pulled the panties down, inch by tantalising inch. Mindy's dark pubic hair appeared follicle by follicle. Her more intimate secrets were hidden behind the thick, dark covering of hair on her vulva.

Dave pulled the panties all the way down the legs that seemed to go on for miles and miles. Once the rather damp, purple garment had passed both feet, it was sent after the belt and the jeans. Mindy now only wore a blouse and her bra – nothing else.

Dave gently spread her legs – Mindy made no effort to stop him.

Mindy was now wide open and very ready for my favourite part.

I could see the look of yearning on her face and I knew that she was struggling to hold out. I gently went back to licking her thighs but closer to her vulva. I would get close, so close that I could feel her pubic hair on my cheek but I would then pull back and Mindy would moan, groan, or even growl, in response. As I licked the sensitive place where her legs joined her pelvic region, she began to squirm slightly. Then I gently blew into her pubic hair and she shuddered from head to toe.

"Oh, God..." she muttered as the anticipation grew.

I moved in closer and I ran my lips over the slit that ran vertically between her labia. Mindy groaned as the arousal built within her. Mindy's hips bucked as she tried in vain to get me closer to her pleasure centre. I kissed her directly on the lips – the lower lips. I began gentle but only for a minute before I began to kiss her harder and harder in the same intimate location.

"Get the fuck in there!"

I pushed my tongue in between her labia and I tasted the sweetness of my wife – she was very, very, ready. I ran my tongue up and down her labia before I pushed in deeper as I gently eased Mindy's legs further apart. My tongue dug in as far as it would go and Mindy moaned. Her hands were balled up into fists which would pound the bed either side of her.

After a few more minutes, I decided to see how ready Mindy really was.

Dave was skilfully bringing my arousal to a peak.

I knew what that would mean and I was not to be disappointed, so to speak. Dave pulled away from my snatch and he looked up at me with an enormous grin. I noticed that he was still very hard and I licked my lips in eager anticipation of wrapping my lips around him. Then I yelped!

Dave had just licked my blood-engorged clit. The touch had sent a sharp shock through my body – and I loved it! Dave flicked his tongue repeatedly against the tip of my clit and my legs shuddered each time. I could do nothing to prevent it; I was beginning to lose control over my body as Dave continued to play me like a musical instrument.

Then it just got worse, or should that be better – oh, God, it was so much better...

Dave gently took Mindy's clit into his mouth and he gently sucked her closer to an earth-shattering orgasm.

As he sucked, Dave cast a wary eye up at his partner and he acknowledged the expression on her face. The expression was one of extreme ecstasy and her eyes were tightly closed, her head was thrust deep into the pillow. There was a definite curve to her back as she fought against the sensations that threatened her sanity.

Then Dave promptly began to suck harder and Mindy groaned, moaned, and rambled.

"Wow . . . oh, God . . . ooohh . . . bloody heeeell . . . ahhh . . . amazing . . . I'm gonna die!"

Dave began to ease off gently as Mindy bucked and thrashed, but then he felt some sharp nails digging through his t-shirt and a dangerous voice growled out a command.

"Stop, and I will fucking kill you."

Dave did his best to keep connected to the clit in his mouth despite the violent gyrations of Mindy's pelvic region.

The British Sector

I was tired, so as soon as I had finished the yoghurt and the glass of milk, I crawled under my duvet and closed my eyes.

Then I groaned. It had begun, just as I had expected it to. The screaming was getting louder and louder. I felt embarrassed by the screaming as I had a very good idea about what was causing it. They had these extended 'sequences' every few weeks and after the last one I had intended to get ear plugs, only I never knew which night they would do their 'thing'. God, it freaked me out! I dragged the duvet over my head and I did my best to block out the offensive noise from down the stairs.

Maybe I could get soundproofing for my room...

The Master Bedroom

Mindy was curled up in a very tight ball as she fought through the sensations that ripped through her body.

Dave sat close by in case he was needed but he otherwise kept out of the way. Finally, Mindy uncurled herself and she stretched out on the bed. As she lay on her back, she breathed heavily as she struggled to contain the arousal in her body. Dave teased his wife as he ran his hand over her vulva. She bit her bottom lip and moaned as he purposefully ran his fingers across her now-hooded clit.

"That is out of bounds for a while!" Mindy scolded as she giggled and came up onto her knees before her sitting husband. "I think we need to get you out of those clothes..."

With that, Mindy proceeded to pull Dave's T-shirt off over his head – she threw it in the vague general direction of the bathroom. She took a moment to take in the curves of his chest and his ripped stomach. His biceps bulged as he changed his position on the bed and knelt up before his wife. For about the millionth time, Mindy thanked fate for giving her Dave Lizewski in that apartment all those years before.

Dave kissed his wife as he carefully undid each and every button on her mauve blouse. Once all were clear, he eased the silky garment off his wife's equally silky smooth shoulders. Mindy shuddered at the touch of her husband's hands. Every square-inch of skin was still tender after her first orgasm of the evening.

Tenderly, Dave reached behind his wife's back with his right hand and with a swift twist of his fingers, her bra was released and Mindy shrugged it off and allowed it to fall to the bed between them. She was now completely naked and her body shone with the sweat of her earlier exertions. As far as Dave was concerned, she was the most beautiful thing that he had ever seen. Mindy could see that her husband was pleased with what he saw as his member began to throb in eager anticipation of the next step.

..._...

Mindy moved so she was sitting cross-legged. Nothing was hidden and she enjoyed her husband's very appreciative stares as he took in all of her body. Mindy worked quickly. Dave's belt joined her own within seconds and the jeans, along with the shorts were shoved down to his knees. Mindy moaned at the sight before her – Dave moaned too with his own reciprocal sight. Dave was as hard as he ever got and as she always did, she took a moment to wonder how the hell something so huge could actually fit inside of her.

He fitted alright and very snuggly too.

It was something that I enjoyed immensely.

I knew that some females hated it while some saw it as an act that was demeaning to women. Me? I was in full control and nobody forced me to do anything against my will. I willingly moved closer and tentatively gave Dave a lick – he shuddered at my touch. Dave could play me, but I could play him too, just as well. While I played, I felt a hand gently cupping my right breast followed by a thumb which rubbed the nipple... My heart was pounding harder only a few inches away from that same nipple and my breathing hitched at every twitch of that thumb.

I gently rubbed Dave's cock with my right hand and fondled his balls with the other. It had always occurred to me that I was very much in control as I held his most prized of bodily organs. No matter how macho a man was, having his balls in one hand and his penis in the other would always ensure instant and absolute obedience. I had no thoughts of harming Dave – his cock and his balls were just as important to me as they were to him!

I could tell by Dave's breathing and the fact that his eyes were closed that he was enjoying every second. His right hand still manipulated my nipple in a very precise and measured manner. To be honest, I had no idea who was going to cum first, him or me. I was fresh from a body wrenching orgasm but my nipples were connected directly to my snatch and...

"Oh, fuck!" I growled.

I took Dave into my mouth and ran my tongue around the tip – salty; I loved it. He was very warm and I could feel him tense up as I moved my lips up and down his shaft in a rhythmic fashion. As I built up the motion and heard Dave moaning above me, I released his balls and I began to play with my clit. I so needed to cum and I knew that Dave was mere seconds away from an explosive finish.

I was not to be disappointed.

Dave could not hold it any longer.

He might have had severed nerve endings all over his body which assisted his alter ego, Kick-Ass, but those nerve endings in his penis were very much intact and fully functional. Having such a hot girl sucking on his dick and fingering herself while she did so, all while he fondled her nipple was just too much. He tried his best to hold it but he could not.

..._...

Mindy struggled to simultaneously gag and absorb the impending orgasm. Dave's semen struck the back of her throat and it burned like hell. Mindy let go of her clit as she released Dave and sank to the bed. She swallowed the contents of her mouth as some of the sticky substance oozed from between her lips. Her knees were pulled up to her chest and she braced herself as the orgasm struck full force. Dave collapsed onto the bed beside his wife and he wrapped his hands around her naked shaking body.

They both lay there for a while as they came down from their joint orgasm. They enjoyed each other's warmth and the tender touch of skin on skin. Mindy still had her eyes closed but her body had eased and she now relaxed as Dave held her in his muscular arms.

"I love you, Dave."

"I love you two, my little pit viper."

Mindy giggled and she twisted her body around to face Dave.

"Still perky, I see..." Dave murmured as he gently teased an erect nipple with his finger. Mindy breathed in deeply and held her breath for a few seconds as the sensations coursed through her body.

"So are you..." Mindy replied as she reached down and gently caressed Dave's dick. The fleshy appendage rapidly grew in size in response to Mindy's hand and returned to its hard state. Dave kissed his wife on the neck, then nibbled her left earlobe. Mindy giggled at the seductive touch and she squirmed, but Dave held her firm.

Dave enjoyed the feeling of Mindy's breasts against his chest. They were very soft, as was most of Mindy's body. He ran a hand from her shoulder down to her firm buttock and squeezed. Mindy shuddered. Dave then slapped her playfully on the same buttock. The slap was loud and Mindy squealed at the slap. Then she purred.

"Again..."

Dave brought his hand down a little harder and Mindy groaned at the pain but she stared into her husband's loving blue eyes and she smiled. She had never felt more loved. All her worries and cares seemed to melt away as she sank into Dave's warm embrace, his rock hard cock nuzzled into her stomach as her hard but sensitive nipples burrowed into his awesomely curved chest.

..._...

After several minutes passed, Mindy had had enough – she wanted some more action. She roughly pushed Dave onto his back and she took up position astride his stomach. She eased her pelvic region backwards until she felt the tip of Dave's penis touching her very tender labia. Taking a short breath, she pushed back further and she gasped as Dave entered her. Gently she began to ride her partner while Dave reached up to caress the soft skin of her breasts and tease the erect nipples that stood out from the deep pink areola that surrounded the tender tips.

Mindy knew that she would not last long. She had not fully recovered from either of her previous orgasms and everything was still very tender. She did not dare touch her clit – that would have been like setting off a nuclear weapon inside of her – despite the fact that it was as hard as it ever got. Mindy teased Dave and herself by allowing him to slip in and out from between her labia – she found the feeling both erotic and tantalising.

Dave was not exactly complaining either as he lay back and watched Mindy's breasts jiggle as she rode his pelvic region. Mindy was like a cowgirl in a rodeo and she was riding him with the biggest smile that he had seen in a long time. They did not usually use that method of sex, but Dave knew that Mindy liked to be on top from time to time. She also enjoyed experiencing new and exciting sexual positions. The girl was sex crazed, that was the only way to describe it.

..._...

Ever since her very first time, on her sixteenth birthday, she had been all but insatiable. Mindy loved to feel hands other than her own on her body. Ever since puberty had begun to change her body, Mindy had 'explored' herself. However, she found that self-gratification never seemed to fulfil the urges that she felt after she had been out killing. It was only when Dave came on the scene and she found out that having another's hands roaming across her body was the biggest turn on ever.

Nobody, other than Dave, had ever laid hands on her body by her sixteenth birthday. She had never before experienced a full-on orgasm such as that which Dave had caused the very first time that he had touched her naked body in that hotel room. As far as Mindy was concerned at that moment, she was in sexual heaven. Between her legs, she had the most handsome being that she had ever laid eyes on. The man never ran out of love for her and she in return loved him more and more every day.

She owed everything to Dave. The guy had saved her from herself that night at the D'Amico penthouse. Dave had kept her sane during school and he had saved her life by following her all the way to Chicago and rescuing her from certain death. He either stayed with her because he loved her, or he was just fucking nuts! It was obvious which was his choice and he made sure that Mindy knew that he loved her without question.

As far as Dave was concerned, he was the luckiest man on earth. His cock was, right at that moment, lodged inside the cunt of the most dangerous female on the planet, if not the most dangerous being in the entire Solar System. He himself had been transformed from a laughed at comic-book hero wannabe, into a vigilante who was feared just as much as Hit Girl.

He was truly a man and he was determined to ensure that Mindy felt like the woman she was.

Mindy screamed as a wave of euphoria coursed through her and the orgasm hit like a tsunami after a volcanic eruption.

Indeed, something was erupting inside that tight tunnel which led towards her cervix. She could feel his pulsing and the hot fluid as it coated her insides. Dave moaned as he ejaculated his load inside of her and Mindy soon collapsed on top of her husband. She tensed as he slipped out of her and they both breathed heavily for a minute or two before either of them could speak coherently.

"I am fucked!" Mindy stated simply before she giggled.

"You and me, both," Dave added.

The following morning

"You dirty bastards!"

"Sorry if we kept you up, last night, Steph."

"Mindy, you are not fucking sorry..." Stephanie moaned. "Not one fucking bit!"

"Just trying to be nice."

"It's disgusting – at your age, you should know better."

"Our age? You trying to say that we are old?"

"Yes."

"Stephanie – for your information, I was your age just eight years ago."

"Eight years is a long time – it's eighty-percent of my goddamn life."

Chapter 279*: Shadow Play

That evening

Safehouse F

I hated to leave my little girl when she was hurt but Dave was with her and she was safely tucked up in bed when I left.

As I climbed out of the XJR, I noticed something new affixed to the glass barricade. I moved forwards and began to read the sign. I felt my anger rise as I read but then it subsided as I began to laugh.

"You funny fuckers!" I yelled out.

"Problem, Boss?" Abby asked from beside the open section of the barricade.

"Ha!!"

"See Marty..."

What had irked me so much? Marty had erected a warning sign – a sign warning everybody about Hit Girl!

...+...

I was annoyed, but I knew that it was only meant in jest – at least I hoped so...

Either way, I changed into my combat suit and drew my weapons from the armoury. My partner for the evening was Shadow. We were both riding our Panigale Superbikes and it was not long before we broke out into the fresh night air and we headed east into Chicago.

I needed some action, something to get my teeth into.

East McFetridge Drive

I had no idea why we were there, only Battle Guy had been following Chicago's newest vigilantes.

As we rode east, we found nothing much to attract our attention or our wrath, which was a little disappointing, to say the least. I knew that Shadow was just as keen for some action as I was. She had not been out much since our return from Europe, so she was eager for anything that they could find. Just as I thought the night might be a bust, we found them.

The two vigilantes were engaged in a fist fight with what looked like some drunks. There were three men and a woman. Everyone appeared decidedly inebriated. On closer inspection, I saw two prone forms on the ground – the two kids were two up and going strong. Neither used their weapons; it was just a good old fist fight. Neither of the two vigilantes appeared to have noticed our arrival, and I had no desire to interrupt their fight nor to show them up. Instead, Shadows and I checked out the two motorcycles parked up a few yards away.

Others had noticed our arrival and they looked on in awe as we ignored all the looks and the flashing cameras. I was very impressed with their motorcycles – very cutting edge. Their combat suits matched their machines which seemed to work really well. They were both very well armed as you might expect for a vigilante. We parked our motorcycles beside theirs, dismounted, and then removed our helmets.

While we examined their motorcycles, the entire evening changed.

Hit Girl

"Well, hello, Hit Girl!" Sunset Phoenix offered in way of greeting. "I see you've brought your Shadow."

I considered kicking the fuck out of the pink menace but I had an audience and to attack somebody who – so far – had not shown ill will towards anybody would, I decided, not be too good for my image... Yes, I was concerned about my image, what girl wasn't!

"Hello, Sunny – can we be of assistance?"

"Nah, just distracting you."

I spun around just in time to see a group of men racing towards the young vigilantes whose attention was still very much on the drunks. I turned to yell at Sunset Phoenix, but she was gone.

"Fuck!" I growled.

Shadow

"Goddamn, bitch!" I added as I bolted forwards to intercept the men.

The men were armed with large batons and they looked like they meant business. The bottom half of their faces were covered with masks and they wore black gloves on their hands. Three headed towards the male vigilante known as Apollo and two towards the female vigilante known as Artemis. The remaining three spread out to cover their colleagues.

"Apollo, Artemis – check your six!" I yelled as I closed. My way was blocked by one of the men.

He swung his baton towards me and I dove to avoid the end which on closer inspection was barbed. My bō-staff clashed with the baton as I rose to my feet – the man was strong and his eyes sparkled. He obviously thought that I might be a push over – he was thinking with his balls and not his brain. Not a surprise with most men, even my own.

While I had the attentions of one idiot, Hit Girl was attacking the other two.

Two miles to the east

Jackal

"Jackal, Hal. Hit Girl and Shadow have contact and may require assistance."

"Copy that. I'm on my way to rescue two beautiful ladies."

I caught the laugh as Hal dropped the connection. My girl was in trouble so I accelerated down the street and headed towards the Lake. Plenty of heads turned as I sped past. Despite our seemingly overt activities in the city, we were still a sight that people were surprised to see on the streets. As I approached the scene of the action, I was surprised to see an audience cheering on Fusion and the other guys.

Hit Girl was fighting two large men – no surprise. My girl was attacking another man a few yards away from Hit Girl. Five men were attacking the two new vigilantes. They both seemed to be struggling under the onslaught, so I headed in that direction first. I stayed on my Tiger and as I rode past the vigilante called Apollo, I kicked out and sent one of his attackers flying into a street light. The man remained on the ground after he fell.

I parked my motorcycle beside the others and joined the fray.

Shadow

I almost laughed out loud as Jackal dodged the body which I had flung in his vague direction. The unconscious man crumpled to the street.

"Hey! What did I do to deserve that?" he growled.

"Nothing..."

"Bloody women!"

"Be nice, or you'll join him."

"In your dreams, Shadow!"

"When you two have finished your lovers' tiff, could you actually do some work?" Hit Girl grouched as she floored the second of the two men she had been fighting. He joined his colleague on the ground.

"Yes, ma'am, Hit Girl!" Jackal replied sincerely.

I chuckled and ran beside him towards Artemis.

Artemis

Things had got slightly out of hand.

The drunks had been easy, but then out of nowhere I had heard our names being yelled and I had turned to see a large group of men heading directly at us both. I also saw Hit Girl and Shadow heading in our direction. When had they arrived? Situational awareness was not our forte – we would need to work on that. The two Fusion members were blocked by more men.

I braced myself for the onslaught as two men made directly for me – three headed for my cousin. I quickly realised that I was out-matched. Each man had a long baton with what appeared to be a barbed tip. I dodged one, but felt the other strike my butt – it stung. I kicked backwards and sent one man flying but he regained his feet very quickly.

Okay, things had got wildly out of hand!

Apollo

We were both in the fight of our lives.

How they hell had we managed to let things go so bad and so sodding quickly. I could tell from my cousin's voice that she was getting stressed and I knew that stress could lead to mistakes. I was not far off, to be honest with myself. The three men that I was fighting were very good. It was time to extricate ourselves and make our escape. I broke out of the fight with a swift kick to one masked opponents face. He yelled out in pain and I bolted for our motorcycles.

I made it and just had time to seize my bow from the motorcycle and nock an arrow as two men ran towards me.

Jackal

Why was everybody throwing bodies in my direction!

The male vigilante had just shot an arrow into one of the black-clad men and the body had narrowly missed me as it had fallen backwards with an arrow embedded firmly in the forehead.

"Nice!" I commented as I flipped a knife into the other cunt's back and he fell inches away from the overwhelmed vigilante.

"Thank you, err, Jackal."

"No problem, Apollo."

I turned and ran after Shadow. She was pursuing another man who had decided it was better to run. Hit Girl was also in pursuit of her own man. Before I could close on Hit Girl, a third man made to intercept me but he seemed to have second thoughts as he got closer and he bolted after his colleagues with me a few feet behind.

Hit Girl

We were headed down past the docks when the men made a sharp left towards the docks.

We chased them down onto the piers. As we ran, I noticed the sign – 'PIER E' – I groaned as we ran past and between the boats moored on either side. I had a feeling that the bastards either had no idea where they were headed, or they had a boat waiting for them. Either way, they were going down.

Numerous boat owners poked their heads out to see what was going on, only to rapidly vanish the moment that they caught sight of little old purple me.

The men skidded to a halt, suddenly aware that they had taken a wrong turn.

There, right ahead of them at the end of the dock lay a large, sixty-five-foot yacht in white and light grey. They turned to find themselves faced with three very angry vigilantes. The vigilantes went at the men.

"What sick person would call a boat, 'Salty Swallow!'" Jackal demanded, his statement dripping sarcasm as he smacked one cunt's head against a convenient cleat.

"I have no idea..." Hit Girl growled back.

She angrily punched out another cunt's lights.

"They gotta be a bit fucked up!" Shadow laughed as she dodged a kick and shoved her man hard against the hull of the yacht.

"Careful, bitch!"

The tone of the growl was ominous. Shadow grimaced and she dragged the man further down the dock before she pounded him into unconsciousness. Hit Girl walked up to Shadow and she stopped with her face just inches away from that of her lieutenant.

"If there is a single goddamn mark on that hull in the morning, you are polishing the whole goddamn boat from stem to stern!"

Shadow grinned.

That night

Glen Oak Drive

"You seemed to be having the time of your life, last Saturday."

"Give it a rest, Morgan," Saoirse replied firmly.

"Ethan seemed very hungry – I saw a few marks on your neck and you've been wearing high-necked tops since Sunday morning."

"Ethan's nice... He likes me."

"He sure liked squeezing your boobs – but then you seemed to like it too..." Morgan laughed.

"Why are you torturing your poor little sister?"

"Just looking out for my little sister."

"Okay," Saoirse admitted reluctantly as her face went very red. "He was rather good with his hands..."

The next evening Friday, June 3rd

Safehouse F

The CPD Lab had got back about the bombings.

It had taken a lot longer than expected due to what they had discovered. The forensic guys had found plenty of explosive residue which was not a surprise. But what was a surprise, was that the explosive residue had been extremely difficult to identify. They had been unable to find the expected chemical marker or taggant. Since 1988, almost all explosives carried a marker to aid in the identification of explosive batches. The lack of a marker had actually aided in the identification of the explosives. The explosive was identified as Semtex, a Czechoslovakian explosive much-favoured in the past by terrorists.

To be honest, Daddy had favoured Semtex and I still did to some extent. It could be used over a better range of temperatures than other plastic explosives and it was also waterproof. There was another problem with the detected explosive – it was old. All plastic explosives and most other explosives had a 'shelf life'. Past a certain duration from date of manufacture the explosive would start to deteriorate. The effects could vary from the explosive becoming unstable and prone to accidental explosion, to not detonating when required.

The forensic guys had identified that the explosion could have been much worse, however, they also hinted at the precision that had gone into the siting of the explosives. No major damage was caused, just plenty of broken windows and shock value from the sound. In my own mind I had come to the conclusion that somebody had been trying to send a signal, a warning.

But warning of what?

The Briefing Room

Megan did not seem overly happy as Saoirse led her into the Briefing Room.

"We'll go easy on you," Stephanie offered.

"No," Megan replied forcefully. "They need to learn."

Saoirse turned to face the three Trainee Operators and she glared at each of them. Lauren looked worried, as did Danny. Anne-Marie seemed uncertain of how to react.

"Okay," Saoirse began. "Fusion is a paramilitary organisation – what does that mean?"

The two eight-year-olds and the thirteen-year-old all looked blank.

"Your sodding education is shit!" Saoirse growled. "A paramilitary organisation is an organisation that is organised along the lines of a military force. Can you give me an example of that?"

Lauren brightened her expression as she replied.

"We have rank?"

"Well done, Nightmare!"

Lauren blushed but she smiled hugely as Anne-Marie clapped her on the back.

"Yes, we each wear rank on our uniforms. You three are Trainee Operators, Stephanie is a Junior Operator, while Megan and I are Operators. Those ranks create a structure of who gives orders and who obeys them without question. Why do we have a well-defined structure?"

This time Danny spoke up.

"Somebody has to make the decisions, otherwise nothing would get done."

"Very good, Ravage."

"Who is in charge of Fusion, right up at the top?"

"Mom!" Anne-Marie exclaimed happily with a smile in my direction. I rolled my eyes and tried to hide my smirk.

"What about Dad?" Saoirse pushed.

"He always does what Mom says," Anne-Marie replied.

"Always?"

"Yep."

"Why?"

"I heard him say that he likes Mom to be on top."

My mouth dropped open and I felt really hot all of a sudden. Stephanie groaned and Megan laughed.

"More information than I was looking for, Rogue, but thanks," Saoirse said quickly with a smirk in my direction. "Back to the lesson... Okay. We need a defined-structure to give clear orders. What might happen if somebody disobeyed orders?"

"They might get hurt a bit?" Lauren ventured.

"Exactly. Wildcat, if you please..."

Saoirse stepped back and she allowed Megan to step forwards. Megan was wearing a blue Fusion t-shirt and a pair of shorts. She held out her left arm with the inside of her elbow showing. Plainly visible to all was a pale white scar. She showed it to each of the trainees. Then, she proceeded to lift up her t-shirt and she showed them another pale white scar to the left of her belly-button. Finally, she pushed down the left side of her shorts to reveal yet another pale white scar on her left thigh.

"What were those?" Anne-Marie asked. She sounded worried – a sentiment seemingly shared by the other two kids.

"Those scars are the direct result of what happens when somebody disobey orders," Megan said with all seriousness. She then pressed play on a remote control and sounds could be heard from the speakers in the briefing room.

...+...

'She's running!' It was the voice of Hit Girl.

There was a short pause during which some scuffling could be heard.

'Stop!' It was Wildcat.

'Wildcat, no!' Hit Girl again.

Several gunshots were heard, then a short scream – the scream of a young girl. Megan went very pale. Another pause.

'Wildcat is down!'

...+...

"That was almost exactly one year ago," I explained as I stepped forwards. "I held the unconscious Wildcat in the back of Beast as we sped back here. Blood soaked her clothing and she had three knives embedded just where you saw those scars."

"So that was what you meant about waking up in that bed in the Medical Center," Stephanie said quietly.

"Yeah," Megan replied. She had looked pained during the entire playback. She looked ashamed too.

Chloe walked into the briefing room.

"Mindy said Megan's recording would be enough. I disagree, so here's mine."

With that she grabbed the remote from Megan and punched in a number. More sounds played.

...+...

'You!' It was a man's voice.

'Yeah, and you have something of mine, you bastard!' It was Shadow.

'Come and fucking get it!' The man's voice again.

'You D'Amico's are fucking scum and you are the last of that line of evil villainy!' Shadow again.

A short pause with sounds of action.

'Kick-Ass, D'Amico has run back towards the apartment block, with three of his men.' Hit Girl.

Another pause, and then the voice of Hit Girl.

'Shadow, stop!'

'No, I'm gonna get that bastard!' Shadow replied angrily.

'Wait for me. You can't take him alone.'

'Fuck you, Hit Girl! He shot me and almost killed him... I want the bastard!'

'Shadow...'

'Shadow...'

Finally, after a short gap, there was a scream. A girl's scream.

...+...

Lauren and Stephanie had their hands over their mouths in stunned disbelief. Saoirse was wide-eyed and so were the twins. Chloe looked over at me soberly and I smiled back at her. I vividly remembered the events that followed.

"Any questions on obeying orders?" Saoirse enquired of the very sober trainees.

There were none.

The following afternoon
Saturday, June 4th

Northwestern Memorial Hospital

I hated hospitals at the best of times.

I also hated to see kids in hospital. Only this time, it was my team that had put them there. Or more precisely it was the morose teenager walking alongside of me down the long corridor. I knew that my best friend had had no choice at the time but she still hated herself for having had to put the two girls down.

I trained my operators to know the best places to strike on the human body to put an opponent down quickly and permanently. Chloe had used that training to help her avoid anything vital. She had done her very best not to mortally wound them both and thankfully for all concerned, she had succeeded. We paused outside the private room in the east wing and I turned to Chloe.

"Chloe, they have no idea that we were even there. They are both alive and that is all that matters."

"I suppose..."

..._...

I pushed open the door and we both walked into the room. There were two beds evident and they were placed side by side with a two-foot gap in between. In each bed lay a girl – at first glance, it appeared as if the same girl lay in each bed, but I knew better. They were twins.

"Good afternoon, my name is Mindy and this is Chloe. We represent the Central Intelligence Agency," I said as we both offered our CIA credentials.

Yes, Chloe and I were official CIA Contractors as were other members of Fusion. The identity cards had arrived the previous week. In the case of the two girls, it would allow us to talk with them without exposing ourselves as Fusion.

"Okay," the girl on the left offered dubiously.

"Sky, isn't it?" I enquired and the girl nodded.

"Which makes you, Christina," I said looking at the other girl.

"I prefer Chrissy, if you don't mind."

"Okay, Chrissy. We are not the part of the CIA who did this to you."

"It was that Fusion bitch that did this to us," Chrissy commented savagely. "Not the CIA."

I felt Chloe tense up and I rested a hand on her arm.

"That Fusion 'bitch', as you call her, did everything that she could to stop you both without killing you. Would you have preferred to have died?" I demanded.

Sky looked at her sister before she replied.

"No . . . of course not. We just want a chance to get our lives back."

"I know. That is why we are here. You were both with Urban Predator for many years. It will be difficult to get used to life in the real world, but that is what we want to help you with. As I understand it, you will both need another couple of weeks in the hospital and then we can move you to somewhere a little more comfortable for the rest of recuperation."

"What will happen to us?" Chrissy asked.

"Once you are both deemed one-hundred percent fit, then whatever you want."

"We can go anywhere?" Sky pushed.

"Within reason. You are both almost sixteen, so you would still need adult supervision. We'll figure something out for that in due course."

"Thank you. We were kinda thinking that we had been abandoned," Sky commented.

"You are not alone. Any problems, you give me a call."

That evening

Safehouse F

"Nightmare, Rogue, Ravage! Front and centre!"

None of the kids had any idea about what was about to happen, so naturally they looked very worried as they approached the notoriously unpredictable Hit Girl. She smiled at them as they stood before her in an attempt to put them at ease. She raised her right hand and fanned out three dark blue access cards. All three kids smiled at the sight of those cards. They were finally getting their much coveted access cards. To that point, none of them had been able to go very far within the Safehouse without escort.

"Let's begin with the most infuriating one of the three," Hit Girl began and Rogue smiled enormously. "Rogue. While you are still very much a Trainee Operator, Foxtail, Psyche, and the Senior Staff have all had a lapse of sanity and they have decided that you deserve your own access card. It won't get you very far, but at least it should stop your persistent nagging."

Rogue grinned and her face went pink with embarrassment as Hit Girl pushed the access card into the young girl's shaking hand and everybody cheered. Once the noise had died down, Hit Girl turned to Ravage.

"Congratulations, Ravage. Despite the antics of your sister, you have excelled in everything that Foxtail and Psyche have thrown at you. You kept a level head in France, despite your having never been in such a situation before. Well done, Ravage."

Another wave of applause accompanied the access card as Ravage beamed his happiness around the room. Then, as silence once again descended on the room, Hit Girl turned her attention to the taller and older Trainee Operator.

"What are we going to do about you, young lady?" Hit Girl mused. "You've accomplished much since you've been with us, Nightmare."

Nightmare seemed very unsure of herself and she looked a little worried as Hit Girl handed her the blue card. Nightmare looked down at the card and then she frowned.

"Is there a problem, Nightmare?" Hit Girl enquired gently.

"Why is my card different?"

"Athena, might you step forward and advise your daughter as to why her card is different."

Athena, otherwise known as Nightmare's mother, stepped forwards with a big grin on her face. She stopped beside Hit Girl and then smirked at her worried daughter.

"You seem to have made waves, Nightmare. You seem to have impressed Foxtail and Psyche – no easy feat, I understand. You are being promoted to Senior Trainee Operator."

Nightmare looked stunned at the news. Athena proceeded to remove the inverted 'V' insignia from her daughter's collar and she replaced it with a single vertical brass bar which matched that on her access card.

That Night

Up until that point in my life, I had never actually laid hands on the body of a naked girl, at least not the more private parts.

Now, I was standing completely naked and facing another equally naked thirteen-year-old. She was about the same height as me, with a similar figure. Neither of us had much to see on our bodies; our breasts were minimal, to say the least, and down below there was only a sparse amount of dark pubic hair.

Sarah seemed very nervous and I assumed I must have looked the same but we both knew that neither of us had any choice in what we were about to do. Tentatively, I reached out and touched her stomach – Sarah almost jumped back but she smiled – her skin was silky smooth and very soft to the touch. Sarah reached out with her own hand and she touched my left nipple – it was my turn to jump; nobody had ever touched me there.

I heard approving murmurs from the rapt audience to my left.

I allowed the sensations to wash over me and I moved my hand up her body to her left nipple and I gently caressed the tip with my thumb and forefinger – Sarah groaned and she let out a barely stifled moan.

Glen Oak Drive

I came awake with a start from a decidedly lurid dream.

As I lay there and walked my way through what I could remember of the dream, my hands wandered and I found that my knickers were soaked. I always thought that it was only boys who had wet dreams but there I was: I had had a dream and I was most definitely very wet...

I began to play with myself and I found that I was very aroused, which explained certain things. Then I heard my door open and somebody pad across the carpet – the silhouette was familiar. I yanked my hand out of my knickers and I sat up in the bed.

"SD?"

"Morgan?"

"I heard you scream out and thought that something might be wrong," my big sister explained as she sat on the end of my bed.

"It was a nightmare..."

"Like hell it was!" Morgan retorted. "That was not a scared scream – more like an 'I've just had the time of my life' scream."

"Christ!" I growled. "I was dreaming about Sarah and our whatever together..."

"SD..."

"What is it, Morgan?"

"You've been with a boy, yes?"

"Yeah, I'm no virgin."

"What's it like...?"

"Huh – you've never been with a boy?" I asked a bit surprised.

"Well, you know about what happened when I was twelve..."

"Yes, you told me..."

I had never paid much attention to it but it now started to fit in. Morgan never changed in front of anybody and I had never seen her in anything less than fully clothed.

"I want to be able to . . . you know..."

"Lie with a boy and have sex?"

"Yeah..."

Morgan's voice trailed off into an embarrassed silence.

"You want me to help?" I asked.

"I know this is asking a lot but could you help me . . . get used to..."

"You want me to have sex with you?" I asked, slightly incredulous.

"Not exactly; just help me be comfortable with my body...?"

I thought about it and came to a decision.

"Okay – go close the door and you'd better lock it..."

Morgan did so and she walked back over to the bed. I was able to see her by the light of the moon that filtered in through the windows.

"Just stand there and close your eyes..."

Morgan was wearing pyjamas as usual – me, I just wore an overlarge T-shirt and knickers. I sat on the edge of the bed and I gently pulled Morgan towards me – she was so nervous that she was shaking. I gently lifted up her pyjama top and raised it up her body.

"You're gonna have to lift your arms..."

"Sorry..."

I stood to remove the pyjama top and sat back down again. Morgan covered her breasts with her arms. I coughed and she shyly moved her arms back to her sides. Morgan had a pair of nicely formed breasts, probably a B-cup and her nipples were sticking out from the dark areolas that surrounded them.

Next, I pulled down her pyjama pants and let them fall to the floor where Morgan stepped out of them. The only item that remained on her body were her knickers. I gently eased them down and they followed the pyjama pants. I stopped in surprise once her pubic hair was revealed.

"Morgan – do you dye your hair?" I asked as I noticed the blonde pubic hair which was the total opposite to that on her head.

"Err, yeah, I do – I started doing it when I was eleven; I was going through a strange time and after the attack..."

"You'd look better as a blonde you know..."

"You sure?"

Morgan did not sound too convinced.

"What have you got to lose?" I countered reasonably.

..._...

I reached up and with a single finger-tip, I touched her left nipple... She jumped a fucking mile and then she giggled as she quickly regained her composure. I tried not to laugh.

"This is ridiculous – I'm standing here in your bedroom stark naked and..."

"Hold on..."

I quickly pulled my T-shirt over my head and shoved my still damp knickers to the floor. I wrapped my arms around Morgan and I hugged her.

"That better?" I asked tentatively and I felt her warmth engulf me as she noticeably relaxed – slightly.

"Your nipples are poking me..." Morgan commented with another giggle.

Then she shocked me as she kissed me on the lips. In the darkness, I had no need to see that she was blushing; I could feel the heat which emanated from her face as she bit her lip. How far was I going to take this? How far did Morgan want to take this? Oh well, she had allowed me to strip her naked; maybe, metaphorically, I was stripping her of her inhibitions too...

I kept my eyes locked on Morgan's and I moved away enough for me to look down at her breasts as her nipples touched my own. We both seemed to shudder together as if an electric charge had just flowed through us. I wondered if she was turned on by what we were doing – instead of asking her, I reached down and placed a finger against her labia and gently pushed through.

Morgan squealed and I felt her thighs instinctively come together but then she relaxed as I moved my finger through the thoroughly damp pubic hair and up to her clit... She jumped again and I heard another squeal. Okay, Morgan was a squealer!

Morgan was obviously getting into the spirit of things as she pushed me backwards and we both landed in a giggling heap on the bed.

Sunday, June 5th

"I've come to a conclusion," Morgan said to her Aunt and Uncle the next morning.

"Oh, yeah," Saoirse added. "That word, come, is very accurate!"

Morgan blushed red and glared at Saoirse who just smirked back at her elder sister. Morgan ignored Saoirse and continued.

"I'm ditching this hair and going back to my natural colour. I also want to change my 'other name'."

"What brought this on?" her Uncle asked.

"Saoirse. She showed me that I needed to leave the past in the past."

"So that was what all the squealing was about," Emily Newton chuckled and both teenagers blushed wildly.

City of Joliet

Thirty miles, south-west of Chicago

Everybody wore a mask.

But it was not a free for all – every masked person wore the same mask and the same body armour. Each man and woman in the space wore a light grey body armour that covered their head and face. Additional panels covered the upper chest, upper arms and back. Similar armour covered the lower arms while lighter armour covered the lower torso, thighs, knees, and the lower legs.

Various pistols were visible on the thighs of each warrior, each of large calibre. Many pouches were mounted for additional magazines. No heavy weapons were present but they all carried at least one knife mounted on a belt or on an ankle.

Before them stood a woman clad in very different armour. She waved one of her minions forwards. It was her way of maintaining her fitness and fighting skills as well as ensuring that her minions were fighting fit themselves. Her minions had learnt long ago that when they were fighting the boss, they had to fight the boss – there was no alternative. FEAR instilled fear within her own warriors and she maintained this by ensuring that she remained in full control of each of them.

They were a mixture of men and women; many of whom ex-military from around the world. There were ex-members of the British Army, US Army, Russian Army amongst many others. The number of warriors currently numbered sixty-five and the number was growing every day as more signed up to the mini-army that FEAR was assembling.

The army had just one, not so simple task: the downfall of Fusion.

That night

The night began like any other night, only it would not end as peacefully as many had before it.

It began with a routine call to the CPD. A woman was missing and she had last been seen near the abandoned silos off of I-55. Two CPD units were dispatched and the four officers began to search the darkened site. Unbeknownst to them, they were headed into an ambush. It had all been very carefully planned and executed with precision. Across the city at the very same time, SWAT was careering through north-eastern Chicago towards an armed disturbance pertaining to masked men.

Fusion were out on the streets, just as they were on most nights. Wildcat and Jackal were to the south of Chicago. Psyche and Hawk were out in Hound, to the west of the city. Shadow and Foxtail were entertaining the male population of northern Chicago. Hal and Raven were on duty at Safehouse F with Medic while Mist and Petra were in reserve. Hit Girl was at Safehouse K with Nightmare. Kick-Ass was on roving patrol in Brute with Splinter and Trojan.

The terrible tikes were with Marcus and Paige for the evening while Marty was with little Matty.

Safehouse K

"Wow!"

"Nice isn't it," Hit Girl replied to her Senior Trainee Operator.

"It looks almost new."

"It is – the fucking CIA blew the place up a few months back."

"Oh."

"Now – it's better than ever! Would you like a tour, Nightmare?"

"Yes, please, Hit Girl!"

Damen Silos

The ambush was sprung on the unsuspecting police officers.

Gunshots began to echo around the abandoned concrete structures as the police officers dove for cover and reported in. None of the officers were targeted directly but their rides were quickly disabled to prevent their escape. It did not take long for the upper echelons of the Chicago Police Department to discover that SWAT was miles away and they were in no position to break away any time soon.

Anyway, the disturbance seemed minor so more officers were sent...

Safehouse F

Hal studied the police radio band which was automatically transcribed on the left side of her screen.

Certain words and phrases were flagged by the computer:

'Officers pinned down'

'SWAT unavailable'

'Additional support sent but pinned down too'

"Fusion, stand to!" Hal ordered over the master voice circuit.

Raven looked over.

"Trouble?"

"Looking like it."

Raven checked the large screen with the map before she continued.

"Send in Jackal and his sidekick. Best notify her purpleness that she might be needed. Put Mist and Petra on standby."

"Good call!" Hal replied as she began to send out orders.

Safehouse K Lower Level

Hit Girl with Nightmare

Nightmare braced up as the radio call came in and she looked over at Hit Girl.

Hit Girl lowered her cup of coffee and pondered the information before she came to a decision.

"Let's go for a ride."

With that, the two vigilantes pulled on their masks and headed up to where Hit Girl's Panigale sat with two helmets on the seat. Nightmare grinned as she grabbed her helmet. Sixty seconds later the Panigale was accelerating up South Iron Street. Their route was displayed on the inside of their visors and the information included speed. Nightmare gripped Hit Girl's waist tighter as they passed sixty-miles-per-hour.

Hit Girl just laughed as she felt the arms tighten around her slim waist and she twisted the throttle open a bit more.

Safehouse F

"Speed freak is out of her cage..."

"She's never obeyed a speed limit in her life; why start now?" Hal chuckled in response before studying the changing symbols on the large map displayed on the screen. "Jackal and Wildcat are two minutes out. Kick-Ass and the boys are sixty seconds behind them heading south."

"We're ready," Mist called from the door with Petra peering over her shoulder.

"We'll let Jackal decide if reinforcements are required."

I-55

I noticed two headlights blazing behind me and then seconds later, two motorcycles roared past.

Jackal and Wildcat!

Something was going down. I floored the accelerator and followed close behind. I also thumbed the steering wheel controls and selected 'Tony's Pizzeria' from the saved contacts.

"Tony's Pizzeria, how may I help you this fine night?"

"Funny!" I growled as I recognised Abby's voice. "What's going down?"

"Firefight at Damon Silos – no idea how big it's gonna get; intel is zero."

"I've just been buzzed by the Kitty and her friend. I'm close behind. I'll find a position for overwatch."

"Copy that, Mathilda."

Damen Silos

Jackal with Wildcat

"Oh, wow!" Wildcat commented as she slithered to a halt a dozen yards or so from the four CPD units that blocked the access road from the overpass on South Damen Avenue. More blue flashing lights could be seen about 350 yards down 29th Street where the CPD had blocked off the street. Additional wrecked units along 29th Street showed what happened to anything which approached the abandoned silos.

"Not good..." Jackal added as he dismounted and pulled out his P90 from the rear of his Tiger 800 XCA. Beside him, Wildcat pulled out a SIG Sauer MPX-K sub-machine gun from the rear of her own Ducati.

They both studied the muzzle flashes which appeared to light up the silos in many places. They took in the six disabled CPD vehicles and the officers desperately trying to not get shot. The officers were responding to the gunfire with pistols and shotguns but they had to be low on ammunition. Both motorcycles were pointed at the action so that Hal could use their high-definition cameras to study the scene.

"We need backup!" Jackal commented as they both headed towards the action.

The officers blocking the road all stood back as the armoured vigilantes strode past.

Damen Silos

Atop the main tower

"Boss – Fusion have arrived and are inbound."

"Perfect!" came the reply over the radio.

Overwatch

Leon

The location sucked.

I was atop the display board adjacent to South Damen Avenue. About the only good news was that I was less than four-hundred yards from the battle zone – best description for it! Part of the site was blocked from my vision by the main tower, but I could readily see the trapped officers in my night-vision scope.

Something did not seem right. Nobody was making any attempt to go after the officers. It was like the dozen officers were being herded into position – why?

West Columbia

"Fuck me!"

"Anne-Marie!"

"Sorry, Paige."

"For an eight-year-old girl to come out with that is very bad. Five dollars."

"WHAT!"

"Six dollars for complaining."

"Sis – shut your trap!" Danny advised.

"Good advice!" Marcus chuckled as the young girl stuck her tongue out at her brother who just grinned.

"So, little one, what's got your panties in a twist?" Paige inquired.

"They're on the TV."

Marcus took one look at the screen and he dove for his phone. Paige grimaced as she saw her eleven-year-old daughter clad in her combat suit running beside Jackal, a submachine gun in her hands. Marcus was losing his temper on the phone.

"I said let me know about anything important – I think a goddamn firefight is classified as important, don't you?"

Paige pitied the poor individual being chewed out by her husband.

Damen Silos

Hit Girl with Nightmare

I was stunned as I came along 29th Street from the east.

Ahead of us was an array of blue flashing lights and strobes. The brief flashes as bullets erupted from muzzles. The silos were an imposing structure with the main tower which at fifteen stories was quite a size. It was the tallest structure for quite a distance and as I studied it, I got a really bad feeling about the site.

"Fusion, Overwatch: take evasive action! Jackal, Wildcat, stay close to cover."

"Hit Girl!" Nightmare almost yelled from behind me. "We have enemy coming from the left."

I looked to my left and I felt myself going cold.

"It's a trap!" I yelled.

South Blue Island Avenue and West 19th Street

It had been a tiring evening and Ambulance 51 was a little over half a mile from Firehouse 51.

"I need a coffee and just a second to rest my aching feet," Paramedic Sylvie Brett announced to her colleague Jimmy Borrelli.

"A coffee would really..."

"Firehouse 51, Ambulance 61. Gun battle underway. Damen and 29th"

"You gotta be kiddin' me!" Sylvie yelled as she hit the lights and siren while Jimmy cranked the large Ford truck around to head back the way they had come.

Overwatch

Leon

It was a worst case scenario.

Nothing could have prepared me for it. It was a classic ambush in every sense. From the ground south of the silos a dozen shapes arose. They must have been covered in heat-deadening blankets as my thermal scope had not seen them hiding. More came from beneath the underpass below South Damen Avenue just as Hound passed through the police cordon.

"Hit Girl, a dozen coming from the south. Maybe ten coming from the west."

..._...

The unknown assailants' strategy suddenly changed dramatically.

Gunfire was now raining down on the even dozen CPD officers who were pinned down behind their bullet-riddled patrol vehicles. First one, then another, then another. Three were down and screaming out in agony.

Ambulance 61 which had been waiting patiently at the top of the road now headed in with Hound providing escort. '61' skidded to a halt after barely a hundred yards as the front tyres were shredded by bullets fired from a medium-calibre machine gun mounted high up on the silos. The crew bailed out at the urging of Hawk and Psyche. The two paramedics, Sylvie and Jimmy, grabbed what they could of their equipment and they quickly scrambled into the armoured body shell of Hound.

Hawk stomped on the gas and Hound accelerated backwards away from the carnage.

Safehouse D

A klaxon sounded three times and the coarse sound reverberated around the Safehouse followed by the sound of Hal's voice over a set of speakers.

"All operators! Scramble! Scramble! Scramble!"

Chapter 281*: Ambush of FEAR

Sunday, June 5th, 2016

The Edwards Apartment

"Mom! It's Fusion again!"

Emily Edwards rushed through from the kitchen in response to Lizzie's yell. She went very pale as she took in the 'breaking news' announcement on the TV.

She readily recognised her eldest child diving for cover as men seemed to appear out of nowhere and open fire on Hit Girl and Nightmare – it was very clearly an ambush.

"Lizzie – you're going next door to stay with Mrs Taylor. I need to go out."

"Mom?"

"Get your stuff together – move!"

Lizzie was more than a little stunned by her mother's behaviour but she followed instructions and ran upstairs to grab her 'stuff'.

Safehouse D

With the sound of the klaxon and Hal's announcement still echoing around the cavernous subterranean facility, Raven, Petra, Mist, and Medic ran for their transports.

Medic and Petra dived aboard Titan while Raven and Mist climbed inside Iron Hide. Both armoured vehicles accelerated out of the Safehouse and then headed east. Their occupants were desperate to get on site in time to help their comrades in arms.

Everything had gone to shit so fast.

Damen Silos

Hit Girl and Nightmare

We were in shit – again!

I yelled to Nightmare to dive to her right and I followed. I cringed at the sound of my Panigale crashing to the blacktop but we had more important problems. Bullets flew in our direction and I felt more than one bullet strike my armour. Nightmare screamed out in pain as bullets struck her own armour. It was the first battle for Nightmare and it was far too soon for the young vigilante. I pushed her down behind the Panigale and I began to send .40-calibre bullets towards the advancing attackers from the south.

I heard the sharp cracks of a P90 and the duller cracks of a nine-millimetre MPX. Jackal and Wildcat were engaging the attackers coming from the west.

Overwatch Leon

I steadied my rifle and controlled my breathing.

As I squeezed the trigger, a large calibre bullet struck the billboard a few inches to my right. I rolled to my left and scanned the only high point, looking for a sniper – I saw nothing.

"Leon is compromised – they have a counter-sniper!"

It wasn't exactly difficult to find me – I was occupying the only high point, other than the silos for quite a distance. I was just lucky that their sniper was shit! I quickly packed up my kit and then scrambled down the billboard back to the ground. My SUV was parked a hundred yards away but I was seen almost the instant I hit the ground.

I drew my Beretta and opened fire the moment my prone body hit the ground.

Shadow with Foxtail

We had both been miles away when the call had come in.

Foxtail had been showing some teenage boys her curves – okay, I had allowed them to study mine too. Josh said I was an attention seeker. Maybe he was right about that. Either way, we had both been cheered as we had remounted our machines and headed southwest at speed.

The display in our visors showed Fusion converging on a single point in Chicago. We could hear the radio chatter as our friends were engaging some unknown enemy. We were all veterans but I knew that one of our number out that night, was not.

I worried about Nightmare.

Nightmare with Hit Girl

I had never been more frightened.

Not even during the Amber Alert and not even during the rape. Having bullets fly all around me and hit me – they were really, really, painful despite the combat suit. Hit Girl was doing her best to defend us both but that was not right. I was a vigilante too.

I pushed myself out from under Hit Girl and I drew my SIG Sauer pistol. Hit Girl moved away from me so we created two targets and we both advanced a few yards apart. I had thought that I was a good shot but my bullets did not seem to be doing anything. Then I realised the problem – they were wearing armour. I adjusted my aim and fired centre mass and kept firing. The man I was targeting went down under the onslaught and I quickly swapped out my magazine.

Hit Girl dropped two more before they got too close and I found myself standing side-by-side with Hit Girl against nine men.

"Remember – keep control of your surroundings. You have the skills you need."

Hit Girl's words were soothing, despite the fact that I was fucking terrified. I prayed that I wouldn't embarrass myself. The first target came at me – faceless behind the armour. I ducked the first punch and then dodged away from the kick which followed. I kicked out and struck the man in the armoured left thigh. He barely felt my strike as he struck me in the left shoulder with his lower arm. I went down but as I went, I grabbed a hold of his armour and took him down with me.

He must have been shocked as he fell. I only had a small window to push my attack which I did.

Leon

Cops on South Damen Avenue were shooting down at the men and I was soon able to scramble back to my SUV under the covering fire.

I had to find a highpoint – a real high, highpoint and as I accelerated out, I noticed a flashing red light, many feet in the air about a kilometre or so to the east. I pushed the needle way past eighty as I took turns on two wheels.

I skidded to a halt beside my destination, gathered my equipment and I began to climb.

Foxtail with Shadow

It was a full-scale battle.

The enemy appeared formidable and they were clad in body armour from head to toe. As we came up 29th, I noticed a fight underway to our left. Hit Girl and Nightmare. They were up to their necks in it. I saw Nightmare go down with one of the armour-clad attackers and two others making directly for the thirteen-year-old vigilante. I jumped the curb on my Aprilia Caponord and dived off the machine as it cannoned into the two men. I rolled and came back up instantly, a pistol in each hand. Both cunts were double-tapped to the head and I ran over to Nightmare.

I had to pull the girl off the corpse. She had stabbed the man in the neck beneath his face mask – and she had continued to stab him.

"He's dead, Nightmare – take some of that anger and dish it out on the other cunts," I advised the angry girl. Nightmare nodded and she ran beside me as we made for another pair of cunts.

Shadow joined up with Hit Girl and the pair went hand-to-hand in close quarters combat.

South Damen

As Iron Hide pulled up at the CPD roadblock, it was waved through and then met by Kick-Ass who immediately jumped up into the flatbed where he spun up the mini-gun.

Splinter, Trojan, Psyche, and Medic loaded medical supplies into Titan. Along with the two paramedics, Hawk drove the armoured truck towards the action with Kick-Ass, on the back of Iron Hide providing covering fire with the mini-gun as Mist drove. Raven and Petra provided reconnaissance of the area looking for any more ambushes.

Titan came under fire almost immediately, despite Kick-Ass sending a stream of bullets towards the twinkling muzzle flashes.

Titan

I was silently shitting myself.

We were both wearing body armour provided by the CPD but I was still worried despite our heavily armed escort. At least three members of the escort were kids – that was obvious. I tried to focus on the task ahead. There were wounded officers awaiting our medical help. Having '61' blasted out from under us had been one hell of a shock – even in Chicago. It was not unknown for emergency vehicles to come under fire, but this was just ridiculous!

I screamed as we bounced over something with a bang and more and more bullets struck the side of the monster truck. I looked over at my partner, Jimmy – he looked scared too.

"Twenty seconds!" came a shout from the front.

I closed my eyes and I took a deep breath as we entered the silo site and the gunfire became more intense. I felt a hand on mine and I looked up to see a young girl grinning at me from behind her mask.

"Stick with us – you'll be fine."

I looked to my other side and I saw another kid, this one a boy, with an armoured shield held ready. Jimmy had his own escort and he looked very apprehensive as the truck swung to the left and then lurched to a stop. The rear hatch was opened and the noise and stench of battle entered our armoured citadel.

Wildcat with Jackal

I was scared.

Anybody would be – expect maybe for Hit Girl and Psyche; they just weren't wired right. I was very glad to have Jackal close by. I always felt safe with him close to me. Mind you, with all the bullets flying in every which direction, it was only a matter of time. We had done our best to cover the stranded CPD officers but three were in a bad way and my back was bruised to fuck with crawling to help one of the wounded officers. The bullets had rained down during the few seconds that I had been out in the open.

"Titan inbound – thirty seconds..."

You could hear the enormous diesel engine as the truck sped towards us. Then the diesel was drowned out by the chainsaw sound of Kick-Ass' M134 mini-gun on Iron Hide. The stream of bullets was aimed upwards at the tops of the silos which was where most the gunmen were located. Naturally, Kick-Ass drew much of the fire which spared Titan and its precious cargo.

Titan slithered to a halt in the mud and the rear hatch opened. First out was Psyche and Trojan with a paramedic close behind. They each dived down into cover and made for the nearest wounded officer. Next out were Splinter and Hawk, followed by another paramedic and Medic. Each vigilante had a ballistic shield to provide cover for the paramedics as they worked.

It was not easy for the three medics to work in the appalling conditions but there was no choice. I heard a loud supersonic crack, then another, followed by two bodies which dropped from the top of the silos.

"Overwatch is back in play!"

Overwatch Leon

The climb had been a killer, but there I was, almost three hundred feet in the air.

The tower crane was in the perfect position for me to rain lead down on the bastards. I had to support the medical evacuation of the wounded personnel and then we could get down to what Fusion did best.

"Not bad," Medic commented over the comms. "Kind of reminds me of that old song: 'It's Raining Men!'"

The Silos

"You're showing your age, ma'am!" Sylvie laughed as she finished patching up the last officer.

Medic chuckled and advised Hal that they were ready to move. Sylvie and Jimmy each took hold of an injured officer while Hawk grabbed the third. As Sylvie followed last, Medic caught sight of movement and turned to face an armour-clad man. Sylvie froze as the man brought his pistol up and three loud bangs rang out.

..._...

The man fell to the ground as Medic lowered her own pistol.

"Let's move people!"

Once the injured were aboard Titan with the paramedics, the other officers were brought in behind the shields and armour of the vigilantes. Unsurprisingly, they were all mightily relieved to be in relative safety. Once the last person was aboard Titan, Hawk pulled away.

Splinter, Psyche, Jackal, and Wildcat remained behind ready for the main assault.

Hit Girl with Shadow

The men were almost gone as we put down the last few with coordinated strikes.

As well as fighting our own targets, we had to provide cover for Nightmare – the attack was way beyond anything that she was prepared for. Foxtail was using our attacks to disengage herself and Nightmare but between them they still managed to put down three more men. Next, we had to join up with the rest of the team so that we could form a coordinated attack on the silos.

"CPD is clear!"

I was never so happy to hear those words from Hal. I had heard the roar of Titan's engine. It meant that all non-combatants were out of the combat zone and presumably safe.

Nightmare with Foxtail

I had never been so scared, but I had never felt so alive.

Adrenalin coursed through me and I wasted no time thinking about whom I might have killed. My knife dripped blood as I slashed at anything that came within reach. Foxtail had her beautiful butterfly swords out and she used them to devastating effect. Her fighting style was . . . ferocious, I suppose. The men did not seem to stand a chance as she dissected them the moment they came within reach. I felt a yearning to be as good as her – one day.

Those men had wanted to hurt me; they had wanted to kill me. They deserved no quarter and I gave them none.

Hit Girl

With the first attack thwarted, we joined up with Jackal, Wildcat, Psyche, and Splinter.

I was very pleased to see that they were all still alive. Everyone was tired, but they still had plenty of fight left in them. Psyche gave me a very reassuring smile as I studied each one of them for injuries. Just as I hoped that we might just have a simple assault up the silos, Wildcat yelled out a warning. There was a roar of sound as more cunts came out from the base of the silos yelling at the tops of their voices. Another roar and more cunts came from the left where a corrugated iron shed had kept them out of sight.

FEAR, it seemed, had more fun laid on for us.

..._...

Kick-Ass was occupied with his monster gun as he kept the heavy weapons sited on the silos off us. Leon was dropping cunts that she could target, but most were now out of her range of vision.

"Wildcat, Psyche, Splinter, Foxtail – standby to advance under covering fire. Shadow, Jackal – provide covering fire. Nightmare, watch our backs."

"Advance!" I yelled out and I surged forwards with the three girls and Splinter. It was chaos as we each used our pistols to drop targets and then attempted to dodge the incoming fire from pistols and submachine guns.

Shadow and Jackal sent controlled bursts from their P90s into the maelstrom of cunts to our left and ahead.

Foxtail with Wildcat, Psyche, and Splinter

I smiled as I caught sight of the red and blue Psyche as she dodged bullets and ran headlong towards the enemy.

The girl was totally fearless. Despite having had very different training, Wildcat appeared just as fearless. I knew that once we closed the range she would relish drawing blood with her claws. Splinter was something different. He had been trained in a similar manner to us Predators. However, from what I had heard – we had had it easy! His ordeal had been horrible. But he had skills; he could shoot the dick off a gnat at twenty yards. Within Fusion, he was one of the few that I was not able to easily beat on a regular basis during sparring.

It did not take us long to empty our pistols, dropping several of the enemy. We holstered our pistols and drew our melee weapons. Claws, Sai, Ninja-To, and Butterfly Swords. Hit Girl was over to our left, covering us from the flanking manoeuvre. She waded in with her twin Wakizashi Swords.

Foxtail had come home. Home was fighting. Home was blood. Home was death.

Overwatch Leon

I kept up fire on those who occupied the tower at the top of the silos.

I would also keep watch on the lower zone to see if I could take out a target or two. On my regular cycle, I was stunned as Kick-Ass was struck by several large calibre rounds and he was knocked off the back of Iron Hide. I saw him land in the mud beside the truck and roll into cover. With relief, Titan roared back into the fight. Hawk stomped on the brakes and the eight-tonne truck slithered to a halt in the mud field a short distance behind Iron Hide. Petra dived out of the right-hand rear door, a tube on her shoulder and a control unit in her hands. Raven provided covering fire with her H&K G46C assault rifle from the main roof hatch as her colleague dived for cover behind Iron Hide.

Petra took a moment to aim her control unit upwards towards the top of the silos. She fixed the sights onto the machinegun nest at the southern portion of the tower. Seconds later, she yelled out a warning.

"Fire in the hole!" I heard over the comms.

Raven ducked as Petra squeezed the firing trigger and the FGM-148 Javelin missile exited its launch tube and powered upwards towards the top of the tower. It struck barely a second later. The warhead exploded and sections of reinforced concrete came crashing down, along with three men and a tripod-mounted machine gun.

Kick-Ass picked himself up and he climbed back aboard Iron Hide. His stance showed his anger as he opened fire again.

Hit Girl

Things weren't exactly going bad, but they weren't exactly going good either – however, that was when we shined.

The current cunts were of a higher calibre than those which we had fought earlier in the evening. FEAR was toying with us and that worried me. Had I misjudged her? What freakish activities might she have planned for my team? I absentmindedly slashed a cunt across the waist and then quickly jumped to my right to avoid the rushing flood of steaming bloody entrails and bodily fluids. I was jerked back to the moment as I heard a scream over to my left.

I turned to see Wildcat being attacked by upwards of five cunts. Two of them had hold of the eleven-years-old vigilante's right arm to prevent that set of lethal claws from catching any of them. Two more, women by the looks of things, were punching her and narrowly avoiding her other set of claws with which she was lashing out at anything close by.

"Let me the fuck go, you bastards . . . I'll fucking cut you to pieces and feed you to your cock-sucking, ass-stabbing pussy friends... I'll ram my claws up your dripping cunts, you fucking lesbian whore bitches!"

I had to give points to Wildcat for creative insults! Mere feet away, Psyche was battling to free her aunt. While Wildcat and Psyche were strong, agile, and highly skilled, they both had an Achilles heel – their size. Psyche was especially vulnerable as she weighed next to nothing and the cunts had obviously figured that out. Psyche had been lifted off the ground and then bodily thrown through the air – but not before she had stabbed out and left a Sai embedded in the side of some unfortunate cunt's head.

I ran towards Psyche – I wanted to help them both but I had to choose. I knew that Wildcat would understand.

Splinter

I had heard some laughter as I had advanced on the enemy – it had been directed at me.

That laughter soon vanished when I separated some legs. I ignored the bullets that struck my armour and pushed on. My limited stature assisted me in stabbing upwards, beneath their armour. Evisceration was the name of the game as I dumped dozens of feet of intestines onto the ground. A sharp stab into the armpit had proved successful too.

I heard a scream and I looked up to see Wildcat being singled out. Then Psyche was actually thrown by a pair of cunts. I had no idea where she had landed, but I ran after her. En route, I saw the familiar hilt of a Sai embedded in the head of a fallen corpse. With some doing, I yanked it out and stuck it into my utility belt. I caught up with Hit Girl who was going after Psyche.

"Go for Wildcat; I'll get Psyche!" I yelled out and Hit Girl nodded as she dived into the maelstrom.

Shadow with Jackal and Nightmare

It was getting more and more difficult to fire on the pervading army in case we hit our own people.

All we could do was take out what we could and watch for anybody making for our own side. Nightmare suddenly yelled out and she pointed into the melee. I saw Wildcat surrounded by hoards of the enemy. I smirked as I heard her epithets which she spat out to all who were listening.

"Bloody hell!" Jackal breathed as we both saw Psyche physically thrown quite a few feet before the girl crashed down into the advancing cunts.

"Oh, God!" Nightmare exclaimed in horror.

Splinter

I was determined to get to my friend.

She was one of the very few people who could understand what I had gone through. There were a couple of years between us, but I could relate to Stephanie and she to me, or so it seemed. I slashed my way through the armoured men and women until I saw some red and blue down low.

I found Psyche on the ground; two guys were kicking her – at least until I chopped their backbones in two just above the tailbone. Both men fell and I dropped to the ground beside my friend. I quickly ran my hands over her combat suit, checking for injuries.

"Hey! Hands off the merchandise – you're getting a bit personal there, boy; those parts are private for a reason!"

I laughed as Psyche sat up and got to her feet. I handed her the Sai from my belt.

"Here. Next time, try not to lose it."

"Thanks, pal... Get down!"

Psyche drew a pistol and she double-tapped the man who had tried to come up behind me. I rolled to my right and sent a throwing knife at the next target. The blade entered at the base of the man's jaw and severed his carotid artery. He sank to the ground as blood spattered all around him.

"Nice!" Psyche growled as she ran back into the action.

Wildcat

I could not believe what was happening to me.

The bastards held one arm and some bitches were kicking and punching the fuck out of me. One of them had a foot on my other arm. I struggled and swore at the bastards – but to no avail. As the punches rained down, I began to feel the faint tinges of fear but I pushed them down deep. I was Wildcat; I did not feel fear. I had never felt so helpless, not even when I had been taken with Joshua.

"Fusion, Wildcat – I need some help here!"

"Hey, little kitty – I'll be with you in a few cunts time."

I laughed at Hit Girl's comment.

"You fuckers are so gonna get it!" I growled.

"Oh, yeah? You're just a fucked up psychotic wretch," one of the women growled back.

"She's not the psychotic one – that would be me."

I tilted my head around and grinned as I saw the vigilante that matched the voice. The woman never had a chance to react as the sharp tip of a Wakizashi appeared out of her throat. Her colleague turned but another, identical blade hacked her down.

"You want to fuck with my team?" Hit Girl growled at the three men who had literally dropped me to the ground. "You fuck with me."

I stood up and rammed my right fist in the stomach of the man to my left. My claws plunged through his armour and as I pulled my claws out, he fell to his knees before he collapsed to the ground. A head rolled onto the ground beside the man. I was so incensed by my treatment that I grabbed hold of the head by the helmet and smashed it into the face of another cunt. If he was surprised at being attacked by the severed head of his colleague, he did not show it.

The head proved to be an excellent weapon, if a heavy weapon – I'd never realised a head weighed so much!

Hit Girl

Wildcat was safe and so was Psyche.

The teamwork was like second nature to all. As I rejoined the action alongside my sister, we were joined by Psyche and Splinter who seemed to be marking Psyche and protecting her back. The boy was very protective of my daughter; not that I was complaining. It was hard work but the cunts were losing cohesion and despite command and control from the silos, their attack was coming apart.

Had they stayed together, we might have struggled, but now they were breaking into smaller groups they were easy prey for Jackal and Shadow with their P90s and it seemed, Nightmare, who had acquired a P90 herself and she was taking pot-shots as she guarded the two senior operators. A little further over, Foxtail was in her own world. From what I could see, the cunts were giving her and her swords and wide birth so she had to chase after them.

..._...

I looked upwards, towards the top of the silos. There she was. Her black and red armour was visible against the grey background. It was a fleeting glance as something exploded but at least I was certain that she was there.

It was time to move the fight to her doorstep.

I broke off from the action and I made my way towards the base of the main silos and the tower.

"Can I come?"

It was Nightmare. After a moment's thought, I nodded.

"In Iron Hide, mounted behind the passenger seat, you will find a black and purple backpack with a harness; bring it."

Nightmare ran off, jumping over dead and wounded as she went. Petra came up to me with Nightmare close behind.

"We're ready," Petra announced.

"Let's go, girls!"

..._...

The route to the roof of the silos was not an easy one and it involved going via the basement – no idea why! Hal was guiding us while Battle Guy provided support for the rest. Almost every step was an effort as we made our way down stone staircases and onto steel walkways. It was dark and we relied on our NVGs to assist us in identifying our targets.

I went first with Nightmare behind while Petra took up the rear. We each had pistols out and raised, searching for targets. The left sector was for me, the right for Petra while Nightmare had the centre. I was impressed when then younger girl never hesitated when a target came into her sector. I figured that it was only the adrenalin and focus that was keeping the girl going.

After dropping several cunts, we reached the main stairway to the tower roof. It was a steel staircase and we would be easy targets as we made our way up almost ten stories – yes ten, the rest of the way would be up an external steel staircase!

..._...

"Pop smoke! Pop Strobes!"

Petra and Nightmare pulled the pins on two smoke grenades. Purple smoke gushed out to fill the staircase. Both girls then threw two spherical objects which landed on the next landing. Both devices began to emit ultra-bright strobing effects. Combined with the smoke, it would be impossible for anybody above to see where we were as we advanced.

"Shields!"

We each pulled a shield off our backs and held it above us as we prepared ourselves to run the gauntlet.

Chapter 282*: Atop The Silos

Sunday, June 5th, 2016

The Damen Silos

Nightmare with Hit Girl and Petra

We began our dash to the top of the silos.

Bullets pinged off our shields as we climbed the steel stairs. I had thought I was quite fit – at least after the times I had spent running around the goddamn Safehouse. Now, I was tiring and holding a heavy shield above my head while climbing stairs at the rush was no easy task.

"You can do it."

"Keep it going."

"Just think you're on a leisurely workout."

Petra's comments were a big help and they kept me focused on the task at hand: climbing the stairs and ignoring the bullets pelting down on us.

..._...

We reached the tenth floor and excited onto a broad gallery which stretched over the silos. Before emerging from the smoke, we had each rolled a pair of grenades ahead of us. After the six crumps, we followed, spitting death from our pistols as we went. The screams of dying men and women soon faded as the smoke began to dissipate. I glanced out of an unglazed window and was stunned by the view and the sight of the fighting beneath us.

"Time to go up, Nightmare," Hit Girl chuckled. "You okay?"

"Scared shitless, but yeah – let's finish this."

"Kick-Ass! You ready?" Hit Girl called.

"Yes, my queen – I'm always ready; you tell me when you want me to let rip."

I saw the smirk on Hit Girl's face and I felt myself blushing at the innuendo. I knew from the plan that Kick-Ass and Iron Hide had relocated to cover our ascent up the western face of the tower. We headed out onto a very rickety set of steel steps. I had never suffered from vertigo, but right at that moment, I felt twinges of fear as I looked out and down.

"Kick-Ass! Let rip!" Hit Girl ordered.

Hit Girl

The mini-gun let rip and we began our climb.

We had four sets of steps to climb and then eight feet of vertical ladder. It did not help that there were missing steps and a two hundred foot drop to instant death awaiting us if we slipped. Several bullets screamed past us as we climbed. Two cunts came down the steps towards us. I punched the first between the legs and threw him off the tower. The next cunt kicked out, missed my head, overbalanced and then quickly joined his pal below.

"Fucking doofus!" Nightmare yelled after the second cunt as he fell past.

I laughed as we continued to the final staging point at the top of the final flight of steel steps. I stopped just below the top and then lobbed a pair of grenades into the space at the top of the tower.

"Fire in the hole!" I yelled.

As the grenades exploded, I bolted for the vertical steel ladder to take me the final eight feet onto the roof of the tower.

..._...

The top of the tower was about 1,700 square feet and very exposed. There was a breeze blowing which just added to the danger. Nobody had bothered with a safety rail around the rooftop which I thought would make things fun. I lobbed a pair of grenades and awaited the double crump as both exploded.

I heard screaming and poked my head over the rooftop again. I could see nobody moving and no sign of FEAR as I climbed onto the roof and was soon flanked by Nightmare and Petra. Then I saw movement, at the far end of the rooftop behind the remains of a ventilator. Three shapes arose and we each brought our SIG SAUER MPX-K submachine guns around.

The centre shape was FEAR and she had an armoured henchman to either side.

..._...

"Well, hello," FEAR called out.

"This is the end for you," I yelled back.

"I don't think so, Hit Girl."

With that comment, FEAR ran at me. I ran forwards firing off a magazine of nine-millimetre rounds. FEAR battered them away and ignored the sting of each bullet. I should have carried something bigger! I saw the two henchmen go down under a hail of bullets from Nightmare and Petra.

Obviously, FEAR spent less on their body armour.

Nightmare

I was stunned that Hit Girl was going to fight it out in a space that was only slightly larger than the sparring mat at Safehouse F.

If Hit Girl misjudged, she would go down – and I meant down! They collided and both fell down onto the loose gravelly surface of the roof. Hit Girl kicked FEAR away and she received a return punch into her left thigh which obviously stung but did not incapacitate her in any way. I wondered if I should help Hit Girl but I felt the reassuring hand of Petra on my arm and I just watched.

"Overwatch does not have a shot. Repeat: Overwatch does not have a shot!"

It was up to Hit Girl to end it, one way or another. The fight was rapid as both armoured individuals span, kicked, and punched each other. It was fairly obvious that both were evenly matched but while I could care less about FEAR diving over the edge, I prayed that Hit Girl would not take any of her notoriously dangerous risks.

That was when FEAR must have decided to bug out as she dived for the far end of the roof, seized a rope, attached it to a carabiner on her belt and then dived off the end of the tower.

"Fuck!" I yelled.

"The bitch is coming down, fast!" Hit Girl called out over the comms. "Hit Girl is airborne!"

"What the hell?" I yelled out as Hit Girl sprinted for the far end of the roof, clipped a rope onto the same mounting as FEAR and then . . . HOLY FUCK!

The mad bitch dived off the fucking end of the tower!

Kick-Ass

From the back of Iron Hide, I saw my partner; the most important thing in my life, dive off the top of the two-hundred-foot plus tower.

My heart almost stopped for a moment as she plummeted towards the ground until the large purple ram-air parachute billowed out above her. Seconds later, she touched down softly and dumped her parachute. Foxtail and Psyche were there to back her up as she landed and they gunned down several cunts who were protecting their leader as she completed her fast-rope down the side of the main tower.

I was very relieved that she had survived the jump – fucking crazy purple bitch!

Psyche with Foxtail

I was stunned – she would get a piece of my mind later for doing something so blatantly dangerous and so bloody stupid!

Nonetheless, I protected her as she landed and dumped her parachute. I liked the colour choice; not really a surprise to be honest! Foxtail was there to back me up and I knew that I could rely on her one hundred percent. We had FEAR on the run and we were going to get her and end her, one way or another.

Hit Girl glanced down at me and nodded before she bolted after FEAR with myself and Foxtail in pursuit.

Hit Girl

FEAR ran northeast between the two silos with six of her men.

Beyond the silos was a grassy area and the three of us pursued FEAR and her men. Psyche went down on one knee and levelled her MPX-K and dropped two of FEAR's men. As Psyche ran forwards, Foxtail repeated her friend's feat and dropped two more with her own MPX-K. The odds were now even and, I believed, very much in our favour.

"FEAR is mine. Nobody touches her. Understood?"

"Understood, Hit Girl!" both girls responded as they split up and they each headed for one of FEAR's underlings.

..._...

FEAR stopped and she turned to face me.

"I bet you hate having a rival..."

"Hit Girl has no rival. I am the Queen Vigilante and I am the Protector of this city. You are nothing but an insignificant piece of shit on the heel of my boot. I destroyed your army tonight; I am now going to destroy you."

"Wishful thinking, Hit Girl. I am going to be around for a lot longer than you want. I can drag this out for months, or even years. By the time I'm finished, you will be begging me to help you die."

"Kill her!" Psyche growled.

"Do I need to teach you a lesson too, young one?" FEAR chuckled.

"Fuck you!" Psyche responded.

"What she said," I added.

..._...

During the verbal sparring, Foxtail and Psyche had closed on FEAR's men. Foxtail struck first, attacking her man and the fighting began. FEAR did not seem to care that she was on the verge of defeat. Her morale appeared high and her skills were just as good as they ever were. The War Sword was out and I attacked with my Katanas.

Cold steel clanged on cold steel.

Safehouse F

The fight was on the big screen.

A news crew had been able to get themselves close and into a good enough position to catch the fight on film. The fight was being broadcast live on most news channels as well as being beamed across the world.

Paige, Marcus, Marty, and Abby looked on stunned at the fast-moving action.

Central Chicago

Seventeen-year-old Kelly Wright looked up from her homework to see a 'breaking news' banner appear on the TV and then some amazing footage.

At the bottom of the screen was the usual scrolling text: '... Hit Girl is currently engaged in a sword fight with FEAR, the latest super-criminal to make Chicago their home. The fight began...' which continued on with the story of the night's action.

Kelly scowled at the images. While she was no stranger to violence, she abhorred the sort which FEAR seemed to enjoy inflicting on innocent people.

"Kill the bitch, Hit Girl!" she growled at the screen as she saw Hit Girl strike FEAR with her swords.

Wayne Manor Gotham

"Bruce!"

"What?" Bruce demanded as he ran into the kitchen.

"Chicago," Selina said as she pointed to the TV. "Go, Mindy!"

Hit Girl had just backflipped away from FEAR who was advancing on her. FEAR closed but Hit Girl kicked out and FEAR doubled over for a moment before she struck Hit Girl hard with the hilt of her enormous sword.

"Crap!" Bruce growled, incensed by FEAR's attack.

"Too bloody right, Master Bruce!" Alfred Pennyworth added.

Stirling United Kingdom

It was very late, actually early morning, but I had been unable to sleep.

I was on my way downstairs when I felt a hand on my arm.

"Quick!" my brother ordered as he dragged me towards his bedroom.

"Cam!"

"Look!" my brother persisted as he pointed at his widescreen TV.

"Holy shit!" I breathed.

I saw Psyche viciously beating the living daylights out of some man who wore body armour – not that the armour was helping him much. I grinned at the sight of Foxtail as she did the same to another unfortunate individual. You messed with Foxtail and Psyche; you would be very lucky to survive!

"Go Fusion!" Cameron yelled.

The Damen Silos

Psyche with Foxtail

Hit Girl was all business.

It was not often that I got to see a professional fight another professional. After having eviscerated my cunt – you fucking know 'which' cunt I mean – I found myself studying the movements of both Hit Girl and FEAR. Both were experts and I could learn much from watching them both.

"I wish we had popcorn," Foxtail commented as she came up beside me.

"Time and a place, Foxy!"

As I watched, FEAR backed away from Hit Girl, but she misjudged where she was going in the darkness and she fell off the remains of a wall. The drop was about eight to ten feet but FEAR was back on her feet in a few seconds. Hit Girl easily jumped down and she made for the hapless FEAR where they both went back to exchanging blows. I had a distinct feeling that the end was nigh for FEAR.

..._...

The show went on as Hit Girl dosed out her special and unique kind of punishment as only she could. I was proud to be a part of what Hit Girl represented.

Hit Girl span around, her left leg horizontal to the ground. She caught FEAR around the head and the woman fell backwards but she was able to keep her feet but only so that Hit Girl could kick her hard in the upper chest. FEAR staggered backwards and she teetered on the edge of the dock for just a moment before Hit Girl gave another swift and potent kick. The armour-clad anti-vigilante flew backwards into the darkness and there was a massive splash. Hit Girl ran forwards and shone her flashlight over the disturbed water.

There was no sign of FEAR.

An hour later

Safehouse F

Marcus, Paige, and Emily, along with the twins, were there to assist the exhausted and battle weary vigilantes into the Safehouse.

Almost to a vigilante, they struggled to remove their heavy armour and weaponry. Emily, in her role as Fusion armourer, retrieved utility belts, melee weapons, and firearms. She paused at her daughter and took in the blood-stained body armour and the bloody knife. Saoirse nodded grimly at Emily's unspoken question – yes, her daughter had killed. Marcus and Paige assisted with the removal of armour and boots while Cathy went from person to person checking for injuries.

As far as the kids were concerned, each was helped out of all their equipment and they were then guided towards a suitable spot in the briefing room where they were each provided with a pillow and a blanket by one of the twins. Each youngster was asleep within seconds of their heads hitting the pillows. The teenagers and adults drifted to the bunks once the kids were asleep.

Mindy was the very last to head for bed, but only when she was happy that each and every member of her team had been taken care of.

"At least nobody was hurt," Cathy mused.

Marcus took a moment to look around at the sleeping kids in the Briefing Room. There was his step-daughter, Megan. She was fast asleep and she looked just like any other eleven-year-old girl might when asleep. There was his granddaughter, Stephanie. She was angelic when asleep too. On the floor beside her were his other grandchildren, Danny and Anne-Marie. The twins had worked tirelessly to help the returning vigilantes and Marcus was as proud of them as he was of every one of his children and grandchildren.

"No and I am very thankful for that."

"A lot of bruises and their muscles will hurt like hell come the morning, but they are all used to that."

"They were all amazing. The CPD are extremely thankful for Fusion's help. I have a feeling that Hit Girl's speeding will be ignored for a few months!"

Cathy chuckled. She took a moment to look over at Curtis, fast asleep a few feet away from Megan. She was so proud of her nephew and her daughter.

The following morning
Monday, 6th June

Safehouse F

It was the smell of fresh coffee and cooking bacon that did it.

Slowly and in dribs and drabs, the tired vigilantes made their way towards the Galley. The first through the door were Stephanie and Megan. Both girls wore nothing more than the underwear in which they had slept. Both headed for a table and plonked themselves down in two adjacent chairs. Both girls then fell against each other on the table and went back to sleep.

"If I had not known what those two had been doing, last night, I'd have said they both looked cute," Paige commented.

"I know what you mean," Cathy replied with a chuckle.

Both women then laughed as one of the elder vigilantes appeared. Chloe grimaced as she entered the galley and sat down heavily next to Megan.

"You look rough!" Marcus chuckled as he placed two mugs of coffee and a mug of tea down before the three girls.

"Tea, thanks, Marcus," Stephanie muttered as she took a sip.

..._...

Mindy and Dave were next. Mindy was clad in just a sport's bra and knickers, as were Chloe and Megan. Dave wore joggers and a t-shirt. He gratefully received two mugs of steaming coffee and guided Mindy over to a seat at an empty table. He pushed aside the long blonde hair that covered her face and handed her a mug of coffee.

"You know, there's gotta be a joke here," Joshua commented as he saw all the half-naked females in the galley. "Got no energy for a joke though... Need some of that bacon!"

..._...

Within another ten minutes, all had appeared in various stages of undress and had sat down to breakfast. Most sported vicious bruises on their bodies but all were happy. After finishing her mug of coffee and taking more than a few bites out of her plate of bacon, Mindy stood up before everybody.

"Sorry about the lack of clothing but I could not be fucked to put anything else on!" Mindy began to general laughter.

"I'm not complaining," Dave quipped as Mindy blushed pink and laughter rang out in the galley.

"Well done!" Mindy continued. "You all fought better than anybody could have hoped. You all fought as a team and there was not a single fuck up. All of you went way beyond your normal comfort zones. I want to single out Nightmare, for extra praise. Last night went way beyond anything that I wanted you to experience at this point in your training, but you performed just as well as, if not better than, the more experienced vigilantes of Fusion. I know that you are going to have questions . . . certain feelings, after last night. We are all here for you."

Lauren blushed red and sank low in her seat as everybody clapped and cheered the thirteen-year-old. Emily smiled broadly as she looked with immense pride at her eldest daughter.

"It's time to take some time off, people. We all need to recover from our bruises and strained muscles. Enjoy a well-earned break and a peaceful holiday. Thank you, all of you. That's it – I need to pee!"

With that, Mindy vanished out of the door to more laughter from those in the galley.

Later that morning

"Fucking hell, Megan!"

"Huh?"

"Your back . . . it's black and blue."

"Is it that bad?"

"Yes, it is," Stephanie commented as she studied her aunt's back.

Megan was in the shower while Stephanie was brushing her teeth. Stephanie just wore her knickers, having already taken her shower just before Megan.

"You spoken with Lauren, yet?" Megan asked as she stepped out of the shower.

"No – been looking to pick the right moment," Stephanie replied as she pulled on a Fusion t-shirt and shorts.

"Well," Megan went on. "I think we should go look for her."

Once Megan had pulled on a sports bra and shorts, she and Stephanie headed out towards the galley. They found Tommy first.

"You seen Lauren?" Stephanie asked with a slight blush.

"I think I saw her heading down to Zero," he replied with a grin.

"Thanks," Megan replied with a smirk in Stephanie's direction.

..._...

Both girls headed down the steps and then down again to Level Zero. The lights were off in the Exercise Room which was strange – they were usually on dim when nobody was in there – somebody had turned them off. Megan placed her hand on the reader and the door released.

"Hey, Steph. Why does Santa Claus have such a big sack?"

"I don't know."

"He only comes once a year!"

Stephanie laughed out loud.

"Why does Dr Pepper come in a bottle?" Stephanie asked.

"No idea, Steph."

"Because his wife died!"

Megan laughed. There was also a giggle from somewhere in the darkness.

"Got another one," Stephanie said quickly. "What do you call the useless piece of skin on a dick?"

Megan groaned before she replied. "The man!"

"Okay, guys!" Lauren called out from the darkness and Megan hit the lights.

"You liked that?" Megan asked.

"Yes, thanks," Lauren replied with a grin, her cheeks colouring up.

..._...

"Your first battle, eh?" Stephanie said as she correctly understood the underlying anxiety in Lauren.

"Yeah..."

"You killed," Stephanie went on as she read Lauren's eyes.

"I did – but they deserved it. I tried to keep count... I'm scared of what I've done."

With that, Lauren began to cry – her eyes were red showing that it was not the first time. Megan and Stephanie sat down either side of the girl and held her while she cried. After a few minutes, Lauren had calmed down enough for Stephanie to talk to her.

"We've both been there, Lauren. Me, when I was eight, and Megan when she was ten. Mindy was right, it was way too early for you to be out there – but you did very well; you surprised the fuck out of me."

"Thanks," Lauren replied with the beginnings of a smile. "That's high praise from a Predator."

Stephanie grinned as Saoirse entered the Exercise Room.

"Hi. I was concerned about Lauren and I came to talk . . . I see it's already happened," she commented as she sat down on the floor in front of Lauren. "I'm sorry you had to go through last night. You did really well, though – only it was way too early for you, but you earned your stripes girl and that's a Predator talking."

"We are all here for you, Lauren," Megan reassured the elder girl.

A good shower had made me feel a lot better.

As I set foot out of my bedroom and made my way towards the galley, I heard a none too pleasant tone of voice call me.

"I want a word with you!"

I turned to see a very pissed off looking Stephanie advancing on me.

"Hi, Steph."

"Since when did Hit Girl take on bloody base jumping?"

Stephanie was furious and she pushed me into the bathroom before she locked the door behind her.

"I always wanted to do it."

"Of all the idiotic things that I have seen in my short life, that took the fucking biscuit! You could have died or been badly injured. I'm on my second mother, right now – I don't want to move onto a third, thank you very much! Nobody had the faintest fucking idea that you were going to do that. Did Dave know? You almost gave Lauren and Hailee a goddamn heart attack!"

"Dave knew. I've had a chute stowed in each vehicle 'just in case' and, well, it came in handy. I'm not apologising Stephanie. I am Hit Girl, whether you like it or not."

"I'll take that as an apology and I accept it. Please don't do anything like that again . . . I don't want to lose you, Mum."

The following evening
Tuesday, June 7th

Glenview

"Steph, what are you doing?"

"I'm answering an email."

"You're sitting there, naked!"

"I was on my way to the shower when my laptop pinged. It's an email from Cassie. I think they might be coming over very soon. Anyway – I've got a towel here."

"Still weird," Anne-Marie commented dryly. "Those bruises look horrible, Steph. I wish I could have been there with you."

Stephanie scowled.

"The silos were bad, Rogue. I'm glad you weren't there – you are not ready for any of that shit. To be honest, I don't think I was either."

"Stephanie, you remember what happened the last time you talked like a sap?"

"Punch me and I punch back," Stephanie grinned.

"I thought that I'd left all this madness back in Gotham. Now Chicago is tearing itself apart."

"I find it hard to take, when people run in circles it's a very, very, mad world."

"Sounds like a line from a song."

"It is – we'll make it better, Anne-Marie."

Chapter 283*: At Rest

Three days later
Friday, June 10th, 2016

The kids came out of school on the dot.

Could not think why they were so excited!

"You guys ready?"

"Yeah!" Megan declared happily.

"We going aboard that boat with the dirty name, now?" Anne-Marie asked.

"Yep," I replied happily.

Half an hour later

Burnham Harbor

"Can't you change the name; it's disgusting now I know what it means."

"It's bad luck to change the name of a boat," I explained to Anne-Marie. "Anyway, we have two other boats with us this time."

"What are they called?" Stephanie inquired. "USS Dripping Fanny and USS Cum Stain?"

Joshua laughed raucously. "Good one, Steph!" he said approvingly.

"No," I growled with a very unamused tone. "When I called the yacht, Salty Swallow, the youngest person aboard was the foul-mouthed Megan Wilson."

"You called!" Megan announced from a few yards down the dock.

"Am I going to survive this trip?" Anne-Marie demanded.

"Of course, why?"

"Well . . . on the first boat trip, I was seasick. The second, I was kidnapped. On the third boat trip, we were struck by missiles and almost blown up and sunk. Do ya see a pattern building here?"

I grinned.

"You were rescued the second time and you survived the other trips, too. Hey, you're with me!"

"Yeah..." Anne-Marie mused as she headed up the gangway. "I'm so dead."

It took a while for everything to be stowed correctly and for most to change out of their school uniforms into something a little more comfortable.

"What are you looking for?"

I had just spent several minutes watching Anne-Marie and Danny as they had searched every square inch of the main deck.

"Hidden weapons, missiles, explosives – that kind of thing," the not so innocent young-girl replied nonchalantly as if searching a boat for hidden weapons, missiles, and explosives was a perfectly normal occurrence.

"You'll never find them!"

"Is that a challenge?" the young girl asked with a broad grin.

"Just don't blow us all up if you do find anything."

"Can't promise that..."

I laughed as she vanished below followed by her brother; it was all one big adventure to those two. Our crew consisted of eight: myself, Dave, Danny, Anne-Marie, Josh, Chloe, Stephanie, and Lauren. We were going to have the most amazing time together. During the last cruise, we had headed up the west coast of Lake Michigan so this time, we were going up the east side of the lake.

Our first port of call would be Michigan City, a gentle thirty-two nautical-mile cruise to the southeast.

17:00

It was a totally awesome feeling as I pressed the starter buttons and the twin diesel engines thundered to life.

The view from the flying bridge of the Salty Swallow was just perfect as Dave and Joshua released the lines and we got underway on thrusters. Two slips away, another yacht was casting off her moorings. I pressed the button for the horn and sent a blast out across the marina. A hand was raised from the retracted roof of the Sea Ray 470 Sundancer with the pure white hull and dark blue horizontal stripe. The Sea Hunter was Marcus' wedding present and he had been itching to get out in her. With him, for the cruise were Paige, little Damon, Vicky, and Hailee. They all needed family vacations as did everybody.

In the next slip, was the other yacht of our little squadron. The Hurricane belonged to the Bennett family. She was another Sea Ray product, a 510 Fly. Her crew was made up of Ryan, Cathy, Curtis, Megan, Saoirse, and Morgan. I had a feeling that Ryan and Curtis were going to be a little outnumbered!

I sincerely hoped that Megan was not going to embarrass herself too badly but then, it was Megan.

Salty Swallow

As we headed east into the lake, the four girls aboard Salty Swallow stretched out on the sun pads.

In the bow was Chloe in her dark blue, two-piece bikini that covered . . . well – not very much, really. Not that Joshua seemed to mind what was being revealed for him as he sat on the bow seat with a large glass of ice-cold Coke. His eyes roamed almost constantly across his girlfriend's perfectly toned physique while she lay on her back and enjoyed the warm sun as it blazed down upon her. Chloe's breasts may not have been all that big but as far as Joshua was concerned, he was perfectly satisfied by the mounds on his partner's chest.

On the sun pad, immediately forward of the control station where I sat, the other three girls were laid out. A few feet in front of me was Lauren. She wore a very pink bikini and she sat drinking iced-tea through a straw from a large glass. It was her first time out on a boat and she was thoroughly enjoying herself. Across to starboard, on the other side of the sun pad, Anne-Marie and Stephanie lay in the sun. Both wore one-piece costumes – Stephanie's was a dark green and her sister's costume was a very appealing purple.

I, myself, wore a purple bikini with dark blue shorts. Dave and Danny wore yellow swim-shorts as they sat aft on the sundeck playing cards at the table and drinking Coke. Anne-Marie sat gazing over the bow and lapping up the sights and the sun while her elder sister lay on her back and dozed in the sun. Anne-Marie looked a little strange as she still wore the cast on her left forearm, it only having been a little over a week since her injury.

..._...

Thirty yards to starboard, Hurricane cruised on a parallel course.

On her bow sun pad lay a very scantily clad Saoirse and slightly more covered up, Morgan. Both girls lay on their fronts to allow their backs to tan evenly. Up on the sundeck, Ryan was at the wheel while a bikini-top-and-shorts-clad Cathy lounged on the adjacent seat to port. Curtis and Megan were down below in the cockpit at the stern of the yacht. Curtis wore a pair of grey swim shorts while Megan wore a very revealing and very daring green bikini that her mother did not approve of but since Paige was on another boat, Megan had chanced it.

Despite Megan only being within a few of months of turning twelve, her body was very much that of a developing young woman with feminine curves appearing in all the right places and she often attracted the glances of much older boys.

Thirty yards to port on an identical course was Sea Hunter.

Sea Hunter

"There's not enough material in that damn bikini to make a headband!" Paige growled to her friend.

"She's growing up, Paige, and she has a boyfriend to impress," Vicky challenged."

"It's taking me a little time to get used to her body changing so fast. Not all that long ago she was my little girl – now she's turning into a young woman with all the fixtures and fittings."

"Curtis sure likes the 'fixtures and fittings'!" Hailee laughed, much to Paige and her mother's displeasure.

"At that age, you did not even have any boobs, and if a boy so much as looked in your direction, you'd blush bright red and run away," Vicky countered with a nasty grin.

"That's low..." Hailee growled back.

Paige and Vicky were reclining on the bow sun pads in two-piece bikinis while Hailee, in a one-piece swimsuit, leaned against the port rail. Little Damon was nestled between the two adults. Marcus was at the helm and he was having the time of his life as the forty-seven-foot yacht cut through the waves like Hit Girl cut through ninjas.

Salty Swallow

To allow secure communications between each vessel, an encrypted communications channel was available via specially fitted equipment.

It was over this equipment that the day's fun began.

"Is it just me," the radio at the sundeck control station squawked, "or is Stephanie's chest not as flat as it used to be?"

I laughed and looked over to starboard. I could make out somebody with a large pair of binoculars pointed in our direction. Stephanie propped herself up on her elbows and she glared back at the other boat. She also turned a little bit pink as she turned onto her front and ignored the jibe from Curtis.

"Nice butt, too!" Curtis added and Stephanie screamed her humiliation and displeasure into the sun pad.

There was laughter from everybody in earshot of the radio much to the ten-year-old girl's chagrin. The radio came to life again.

"On pain of death, I have been directed to say that Megan has a much nicer butt . . . She also has much nicer tits and she yelps when you touch..."

The radio was cut off mid-sentence. However, the outraged exclamations from the eleven-year-old girl on the other boat could be easily heard across the open water between the two vessels. Next on the radio, came the voice of that eleven-year-old's mother.

"I have no idea who that girl is but suffice to say, she's a brazen hussy!"

Megan's yelling at Curtis stopped abruptly as she came onto the radio.

"Brazen and proud of it, Mom!"

'Finally – peace and quiet!' Stephanie thought as she shoved her shorts and knickers to the floor then sat down and began to pee her life away.

Stephanie growled to herself as somebody knocked on the door.

"Occupied!" Stephanie yelled.

The knocking continued. Stephanie grimaced.

"Anne-Marie, fuck off!"

The knocking stopped and there was a short pause.

"How'd you know it was me?"

"Who the fuck else would follow me to the damn toilet and annoy the fuck out of me?"

"Good reasoning."

"Can I wee in peace, now?"

"Nah – it's my job."

"Job?" Stephanie queried.

"My job is to annoy the hell outta my big sister."

"Can't you take a day off?"

"Nah – 24-7."

Stephanie closed her eyes for a moment to compose herself.

"There are days when becoming a big sister to you seems like a very bad idea..."

"Nah – you love me to bits."

"Anne-Marie – please go away."

"Okay..."

"Thank you."

"Don't forget to wipe!" The eight-year-old yelled as she ran giggling up the gangway to the main salon. The resultant torrent of verbal abuse from the toilet was audible to those two decks above.

..._...

"Where is she?" Stephanie demanded as she stormed up onto the sun deck.

Danny smirked.

"She's on the port sun pad," he whispered conspiratorially.

Stephanie grabbed a large glass from the small kitchen and she quickly filled it with chilled water from the fridge. Mindy chuckled as her eldest daughter tip-toed past her. Mindy could see a massive flaw in Stephanie's plan but once a bitch, always a bitch so Mindy kept quiet.

Stephanie launched the ice-cold contents of the glass over the port sun pad and there was a very loud piercing scream.

..._...

A very, very annoyed Lauren jumped up from the sun pad and the teenager glared at the very guilty younger girl who held a large and very empty glass in her right hand.

"Oh, shit!" Stephanie began. "I'm so sorry, Lauren." The angry ten-year-old turned towards the sound of snickering that came from the starboard sun pad and then to her younger brother. "You... Don't tell me – 'it's your job!'"

Danny nodded with an outrageous grin on his face. Stephanie looked over at Mindy for some help.

"Leave me out of it," the veteran vigilante muttered.

"Mum – wouldn't you find things so much easier with only one child in the house? Those two are dead meat once I think up some creative way to kill them." Stephanie turned back to Lauren. "I am really so very sorry, Lauren."

"Don't be, Steph. I'm a big girl; I can handle it," Lauren laughed but then she turned serious as she glared towards the twins who now stood by the gangway which led below. "However, should you need any help disposing of the bodies, you just let me know."

The twins fled as fast as their legs would take them.

Michigan City

We arrived off Michigan City at just before eight that evening.

Forty minutes later, we were tied up in the Outer Basin. Salty Swallow was at the tip of a pier while the other two yachts were moored just across the pier from us. Everybody gathered aboard Salty Swallow for dinner. It was a beautiful evening, so the bow sunshade was rigged while Paige, Cathy, and Lauren looked after the cooking.

Dinner was an awesome array of steaks, burgers, sausages, corn on the cob, and salad. With twenty people, things were crowded aboard so we each grabbed a plate, loaded it up, and went to find somewhere to sit. I found myself on the bow, under the sunshade. I was the first there, so took the starboard seat facing forwards. It was a lovely view over the harbour. I was soon joined by Chloe, Saoirse, Morgan, and Hailee.

..._...

"Your hair looks really good, Morgan," I commented.

The sixteen-year-old no longer had her usual black hair. She had removed the dye and had allowed her hair to go back to its natural blonde state.

"Thank you," the blushing Morgan responded.

"I think you look much better," Megan suggested as she came down to join us.

"I feel better, to be honest."

"You a natural blonde?" Megan enquired.

"Yes, she is," Saoirse commented with a smirk and Morgan blushed.

I quickly steered the conversation away to protect Morgan's modesty.

"You seem to be handling things well, Lauren."

"I am. This is fabulous, Mindy. You have all been so kind to me, despite what I have been through."

"All of us have had bad things happen in our lives, even the dirty Kitty at the end there, and it helps bond us all together."

Megan stopped dead in the act of licking mayonnaise off the end of her sausage and she smirked wickedly before she seductively pushed the sausage into her mouth. Lauren began to giggle uncontrollably, closely followed by Chloe and Saoirse.

"She's very multitalented, isn't she?" Morgan commented which then had me laughing.

Meanwhile...

Anne-Marie was working her way through her corn on the cob like an old typewriter and she was making quite a mess thanks to the copious amounts of butter that she had spread on the cob.

"She's like a machine," Danny commented in disgust as he swallowed a chunk of steak and then selected another suitable chunk for his fork.

"She's a growing girl," Stephanie commented. "She's got to be able to feed that massive gob of hers so she can talk shit."

"That's one," Dave chuckled.

"We're on holiday," Stephanie growled. "Can't the goddamn jar take one too?"

"That's two," Marcus muttered as Stephanie scowled and went back to her sausages.

"This is just perfect, eh, Ryan?" Dave commented as he heard the girls giggling and laughing on the bow and he looked up at the stars.

"Sure beats the last cruise!" I laughed.

"That still freaks me out," Stephanie commented between mouthfuls as Paige breast-fed little Damon.

"It's a perfectly natural thing to do," Cathy commented. "Chloe and Curtis were both breastfed."

"Just what I needed to hear!" Curtis complained.

"I have to agree with you there, pal," Joshua grimaced.

"So, you've never sucked on a nipple, then?" Ryan asked innocently and Joshua went very red.

"I never said that..."

"Chloe complained of very sore nipples at her last medical," Cathy commented and Anne-Marie almost choked on her corn as everybody roared with laughter.

"I get carried away..." Joshua tried.

"I have to admit that I do, too," Ryan conceded as he smirked at his pink-cheeked wife.

"This conversation is getting very creepy," Curtis growled.

"Megan said that you're a tit man," Joshua teased.

Curtis went red and took another bite of his steak.

"Can we please change the topic of conversation," Stephanie begged.

"Mindy gets sore nipples, too," Dave added which had Marcus almost choking on his own steak.

"You are all disgusting fuckers!" Stephanie growled as she grabbed her plate and glass of coke before she headed below followed by floods of laughter.

..._...

"Hi, Steph!"

"Hi, Mum."

"Problem?"

"Those disgusting fuckers keep talking about tits... Ewww, Megan, you are just as disgusting. You're supposed to eat the damn sausage not play with it!"

"Oh, Stephanie, stop being so . . . British!" Chloe laughed.

"Just because I have good manners and you Yanks – well you have no idea of the definition of the word 'manners'!"

Stephanie growled good-naturedly.

"Well, young lady," Chloe drawled in an appalling attempt at a British accent. "Us Yanks may be uncouth and ill-mannered, but at least we know how to have fun!"

"One is still able to have fun, without resorting to vulgar conversation and inappropriate behaviour," Stephanie retorted with a raised eyebrow.

Megan burst out laughing at Stephanie's deadpan expression.

"I have to agree with the Brit," Chloe acknowledged. "I have only ever seen Stephanie flustered, just the once and she had a damn good excuse for being flustered."

"I remember," Mindy commented with a nod. "The Willis Tower."

"What happened there?" Lauren asked.

"I'd like to hear about that, too," Saoirse added and there was a nod from Morgan."

"I'd rather not go into it – but Mindy could tell you."

"It was Psyche's first night out..."

"Mindy was like a damn mother hen!" Megan interrupted with a laugh.

"I was concerned for the girl is all," Mindy groused before she continued relating the events of that Sunday night before the previous Christmas. "By ten-thirty that night, Psyche was dangling over ninety stories above the city of Chicago. The night had gone well and I had witnessed Psyche in action for the first time – she was good, if a bit cold."

"I had gone after our target, Anthony Genovese," Stephanie interjected. "I ran after him, onto the roof of the 90th floor. He kicked me away from him and I stumbled over some rails. I plunged over the side of the tower. I screamed in terror."

Stephanie looked very uncomfortable as Mindy continued."

"I saw what was about to happen and I dived after Psyche. I was able to grab hold of her utility belt and I was lucky that Shadow grabbed my legs, or we might both have perished on the sidewalk ninety stories below. Kick-Ass supervised an operation to rescue us both with ropes. Stephanie was very shocked by her near miss. It was the first time that I really felt for the girl and I made the decision to keep her with me."

"Do you regret that decision?" Chloe asked.

"Every fucking minute!" Mindy laughed as Stephanie scowled.

"Do you think I should get one?" Morgan mused.

"What?" Saoirse replied.

"A tattoo, like your fox."

"It's painful," Saoirse warned her big sister.

"If you can take it, then so can I."

"What'll your Aunt say?"

"I'm old enough to make my own decisions about my own body. I need a change. The old Morgan Hella went with the black hair. I want to reinvent myself – I've begun that; only I want more."

"Fair enough – but I am not going behind your Aunt's back."

Sea Hunter

The morning was hot, just like the previous one.

The past year and a half had been a learning experience – to put it mildly! We had gone from having lost almost everything to cruising around Lake Michigan on a luxury yacht. I had been introduced to a fabulous young woman who was instrumental in giving myself and my daughter a new start in life. Months later, I had discovered that Mindy Macready was not your average young woman. I discovered that my boss was in fact, the notorious vigilante known as Hit Girl.

My daughter had taken to Mindy in no time and she could care less about her hero being a murderous vigilante. Megan worshipped the very ground that Hit Girl walked upon. Hit Girl was invincible as far as Megan was concerned. Somehow, the bullet wounds that Mindy had received never seemed to count! Our entry into the world of the Chicago Vigilante had been amazing and we had met some really wonderful people.

On the negative side, my daughter was involved with a boy – at ten-years-old! My daughter had also been wounded, more than once, so the boy issue was relatively minor in comparison. On the positive side, I had found a husband. Marcus Williams was a ruggedly handsome man who carried handcuffs and a pistol for his day job. The handcuffs also came in handy for the nighttime shift... That thought brought me back to Megan and that boy.

I had nothing against Curtis – he was a well-behaved and well-mannered child. I had no problem with him spending time with my daughter – they had hit it off right from the get go. Ever since their trip to Gotham, they had become closer and by closer, I meant that the boy had both seen my daughter naked and he had explored my daughter's naked body. Just as she had his, I believed.

So, what did I think about having my boss as my step-daughter? No problem, Mindy was a fabulous young woman and I loved her as a daughter. I was often concerned about what my two daughters got up to at night but I knew that I could trust Mindy – although trusting Megan was a stretch. She had always been a headstrong girl and always a struggle to control once she got some idea in her head. Somehow, Megan had gone from being a normal, but fiery, little girl to a nearly twelve-year-old vigilante that adult hardened criminals would run from for fear of being impaled on her super-sharp claws.

Megan loved to be Wildcat just as Mindy loved to be Hit Girl. Marcus and I had spoken at length about our wayward daughters. We both supported them one-hundred percent and I knew that Marcus loved Mindy more than anything else on the planet and I was happy with that. Marcus also loved Megan too. Now, I had another child – he was called Damon and he was a handful! Megan could kill a man with about as much compunction as any other person might swat a fly. But, you ask her to change a diaper and she runs a mile!

Mindy was not a lot better and it didn't help that Marcus would remind his eldest daughter that he had changed her diapers, some years before. As I lay on the foredeck of our yacht, my young son snoozing beneath a sunshade, I was the happiest woman on the planet. Apparently, so was my daughter! Megan was prancing about in a bikini so small that she might as well have been naked – not that Curtis was complaining.

Not one bit.

It hurt, seeing my daughter as she lay in the sun.

Her body still showed the signs of her beating. She still awoke at night, screaming. Hailee was now a very different eighteen-year-old girl to that which had left for Europe a few short weeks previously. I only knew a little of what had happened to her in France. Mindy had given me an idea of what they had seen on discovering my daughter. She had been hanging by her wrists . . . naked. She had been beaten, she had been tortured, she had been electrocuted.

I had seen the resultant cuts and bruises on her return to Chicago. At first, I had been horrified; every inch of her previously perfect body had been targeted and abused. As far as I knew, my daughter had not been raped. Hailee insisted that she was still a virgin – I doubted that (as far as France was concerned, at least), but I let it lie – at least for the moment.

I knew that Hailee was seeing another boy – some kid at the university. Hailee refused to say much and she avoided the subject as much as possible. As far as safe sex was concerned, I had always ensured that condoms were available and with the help of Cathy, I had given her the options for other forms of contraception.

Hailee was a very strong-willed young woman and I had always known that her life as a vigilante would be dangerous but alone, she could have been killed. At least she had friends and a team to rely on which I hoped would keep her alive for many decades to come. There were times that I felt our mother-daughter relationship to be strained but I knew that Hailee loved me as much as I loved her.

"Mom!"

"Yes, sweetie."

"I know what's going through your mind," Hailee said pointedly. "I'm okay – I am not facing this alone, and neither are you."

"Come on, Vicky," Marcus ordered. "The young lady is right – neither of you are alone."

I smiled and conceded defeat – it was a holiday after all!

Early afternoon

Position: 42.1234° N 86.5003° W
Three miles off Benton Harbor

For lunch, the three yachts were rafted together with Salty Swallow in the centre and Hurricane to starboard. While everybody dug into sandwiches and iced drinks, the conversation got very salty indeed!

"Nothing embarrasses or shocks me anymore," Chloe commented to Hailee as both munched their sandwiches.

Joshua grinned impishly, from a few yards away.

"Hey, Chloe!" he called.

"Yeah?"

"Fancy a fuck?"

Chloe's eyes almost popped out onto the deck and her face went pink and then moved steadily towards red before stopping at a pinky-red tinge. Everybody laughed at Chloe's discomfort.

"Would love one of those blow-jobs like the one last night," Josh called over and Chloe's mouth dropped open. "Not now, Chloe – later on!"

Chloe's mouth clamped tight shut.

"She must get that from you, dear," Ryan muttered to Cathy who almost choked on her iced tea as her face went crimson.

"That shut Chloe's big mouth!" Megan laughed not realising the trap she had set for herself.

"Megan?"

"Huh?" Megan replied as she turned to Curtis.

"You fancy a finger tonight?"

"Shit!" Megan growled in embarrassment.

"No, not there – a finger between those lips of yours," Curtis called back and the laughter increased while Megan fanned her very warm face.

"You wild kitty, you!" Paige laughed as her daughter wished for the deck to open up and swallow her.

"They're being disgusting again," Anne-Marie commented.

"Yeah – too salty for my ears, too," Stephanie growled as she glared at the older kids.

"I love it!" Danny grinned.

As I watched and listened to the crude banter, I realised how lucky I was to have found myself in such good company.

Maybe being kidnapped and held in a basement with the other kids was fate bringing Lauren Edwards into contact with Fusion. Maybe I had been destined to get caught taking photos – not that I would have ever hoped to be raped. I owed Fusion for my life on more than one occasion. Yes, they were coarse. Yes, they were extreme in the way they protected Chicago. Yes, they were killers. But then so was I.

I had embraced the life and I had killed without conscious thought. I never realised it, that night at the silos, but I just followed my training and I survived the night without injury – a few bruises, but that was part of the game. Only it was not a game, or was it? Was there anything wrong with seeing the killing as a game?

Everybody else seemed to enjoy what they did and they relished killing. I knew that Stephanie and Mindy were different to the others, Saoirse too, but Megan was ruthless when she was Wildcat and operated without quarter. Now I had tasted life as Nightmare, I wanted more, much more. I never wanted it to end. I wanted to learn everything that I could so that I could emulate Shadow.

Or ultimately, Hit Girl.

Just about everybody was in the water, swimming.

The 'adults' were relaxing in the Main Salon with a cool drink in the blissfully cool air-conditioning while the 'kids' splashed around in the equally cool water near to the rafted yachts.

"I think they have all matured a lot in the past few months and they carry themselves with an air of well-earned dignity," Ryan commented to mutual agreement.

"Chloe has grown up a lot. She keeps herself out of trouble and away from behaviour beneath her age and status," Paige added.

Just then, there was some loud giggling and the doors flew open at the after end of the Main Salon and two girls ran into the space. They rapidly skidded to a halt with a joint, "Eeep!" as they saw the assembled adults. Both girls were already pink in the face but they both went very red and then they ran the length of the Main Salon to the gangway which led below deck.

"I withdraw my recent statement," Ryan grinned.

"Me too," Paige added with a laugh.

"Don't know about you three, but I had no idea who those two naked girls were – I feel very sorry for their parents, though!" Cathy chuckled.

"Fucking, fucked up, super hero club!" Marcus growled good-naturedly.

"Well, that was fucked up!" Megan grinned as she slammed the cabin door.

"That really got the blood flowing!" Chloe giggled as she lay on her bed.

"Just because we're both naked, Chloe, does not mean that I want to . . . you know . . ."

Megan lapsed into silence and Chloe laughed. Megan felt a little uncomfortable as Chloe sat up without making any effort to cover herself.

"I love you, Megan, but not like that and you are way too young!" Chloe commented with a grin.

Megan looked very relieved.

"You have a wonderful body, Megan, and one which I would have killed for at your age; I bet Curtis loves that playground!"

Megan blushed at the compliment and was about to reply when there was a knocking from the overhead skylight. Curtis and Danny were grinning down at the two girls.

"You two gonna make out, or what?" Curtis demanded.

..._...

Megan would never know what possessed her to do it, but she jumped forwards and landed on top of Chloe before giving her a kiss on the lips. The shocked fifteen-year-old was too stunned to resist and she just lay there as Megan kissed her.

"What the fuck was that?" Chloe demanded as Megan pulled her lips away.

"Dunno – thought I'd tease the boys," Megan responded with a worried expression.

"Spur of the moment – those lips were good; Curtis is very lucky."

Megan grinned as she grabbed a towel and wrapped it around her body. Chloe did the same and reached up to close the blind over the skylight.

"That was so hot!" Curtis yelled.

"Chloe, Megan – that was awesome!" Curtis blurted out as he and Joshua entered the Main Salon.

Both girls were clad in towels as they both returned to the open space and both were distinctly embarrassed by their impromptu naked dash and 'romp'. The girls ignored their parents' presence and instead, they enjoyed Curtis' compliments on their actions. Curtis handed Megan her bikini and smiled hugely.

"Did you enjoy that, Curtis?" Megan asked coyly.

"Hell, yeah!"

"Did you get a hard-on?"

"Oh, yeah!"

Megan stepped forwards and without a thought to the audience, she plunged her right hand inside Curtis' shorts.

"He's hard," Megan confirmed with a smirk. "Very hard!"

"And I thought Chloe was the dirty one!" Joshua commented.

"Chloe, may we?" Megan asked with a nod at the gangway below.

"Of course, our stateroom is all yours," Chloe replied with a grin.

"Come, Curtis – time to come . . ." Megan announced as she dropped the towel and the bikini to the deck and dragged Curtis below.

"What was that you called your daughter, the other day, Paige?" Chloe enquired. "A brazen hussy?"

"Clearly, it was a major understatement," Paige commented dryly as the four adults laughed.

"Give me that!" Chloe growled as she seized her own bikini from Joshua's hand.

That evening

At anchor, two nautical miles due west of Grand Haven

Salty Swallow

"Mindy?"

"What's up, Lauren?"

"There's something out there."

Mindy scooped up a night-scope and peered in the direction of the thirteen-year-old's pointing finger. There was a boat, a few miles distant. It showed on the radar, as a medium sized vessel. What was odd about it was the lack of lighting and no navigation lights. Mindy grinned.

"Fancy a nighttime reconnaissance?"

Lauren's face lit up.

..._...

"Seriously!"

Dave's reaction was not exactly unexpected. Mindy simply gave her husband a kiss and ignored Lauren's grimaces.

"It's just reconnaissance, Dave."

Dave was not convinced but he knew that there was no point pushing the fact so he nodded reluctantly.

"You keep an open channel, understand me?"

"Yes, hunky husband!"

"I feel ill!" Lauren groaned as she headed aft from the control station.

Always Wet

Lauren was not amused by the name!

"Stupid question, but are you both armed?" Dave asked.

Mindy pressed a hidden release and a cover popped off beside the helm of the rigid inflatable boat. Four MPX-K submachine gun butts were visible along with six Glock pistol butts. Mindy closed the cover. Lauren pulled up her top to reveal the butt of a small SIG Sauer P320 Compact pistol in the waistband of her shorts.

"Atta girl!" Mindy laughed.

"Lauren, you are really, really, starting to worry me!" Dave complained half-heartedly.

"I had a brilliant role-model," the thirteen-year-old commented with a glance at Mindy.

"There are times when Mindy is not the correct role-model," Dave commented.

"Humph!" Mindy growled.

"Get going, you pirates!" Dave chuckled. Inside he was very worried but there was not a great deal that he could do about it.

"This is not going to end well," Joshua commented as he joined Dave at the rail.

"I have faith in Mindy," Chloe added as she followed the receding RIB through a night scope.

Something was not right about the boat that was hove to, about seven nautical miles north-north-west of Grand Haven.

The boat was large, but mainly unlit. The navigation lights were not visible, although there was illumination around the aft of the boat and where there appeared to be activity of some kind. Now, I thought, what sort of people preferred to operate at night and keep to the shadows? The easy answer: Me! Well, other than me, it would be criminals.

As we approached within a mile of the craft, I cut the engine which allowed us to drift in silently towards the vessel.

"Mindy? I have a bad feeling about this."

"You might just be right, Lauren."

"You love this, don't you?"

"Going into the unknown?" Mindy replied. "Yes, I do."

"I like it too."

"Let's see what we can find out without being seen."

..._...

At a closer range, the vessel appeared to be a tug with a towering mast on top of which was a small structure – presumably a raised bridge. She was not a new vessel, not by any means but she had a very business-like appearance. Size wise, she was twice the length of the Salty Swallow and of maybe 300 tonnes displacement. The name was not visible on the vessel's stern – it appeared to be covered over which was yet another sign of nefarious activity.

On the open afterdeck, there was a lot of activity and as the RIB drifted closer, Mindy and Lauren were able to make out another, smaller, craft beyond the tug. It appeared to be a low profile workboat and cargo was being moved from the rear deck of the tug to the workboat's after deck. The packages were large and cuboid in shape. The contents of the packages were definitely not dense as a single man was able to handle each package with apparent ease.

"Drugs!" Lauren breathed before Mindy could say it.

"Oh, yeah!" Mindy replied.

"You going to go after them?"

"Maybe."

"How about we notify the authorities?"

"Where's the fun in that?" came Mindy's indignant reply.

"No wonder Dave's going grey!" Lauren laughed.

The Tug

Aboard the tug, four members of the eight-person crew were busy unloading the illegal cargo. Of the rest, one, a woman, was on the bridge on watch, a man was on the raised bridge, forty-five feet in the air, and two men were down in the engine room.

The Captain strode backwards and forwards on her bridge, eager to get underway and back to legal endeavours. Though being boarded by law enforcement was a rare occurrence, it was a constant threat. Apprehension by the Coasties with a large quantity of illegal marijuana aboard would spell the end to both her career and that of her crew.

"Captain! I have something – port quarter!"

The terse report over the intercom from the raised bridge was very unwelcome. The Captain swept up a set of binoculars and she ran out onto the port bridge wing where she aimed them towards the stern and over to port. There was definitely, something in the water – but what? The Captain's eyes went wide as she identified it as a RIB. Was it the US Coastguard or the DEA? She leant over the stern rail of the bridge wing.

"Let's get a goddamn move on!" she yelled.

"Last few, Captain!" came the response from the stern deck.

Forty-two minutes later

Salty Swallow

Dave's head snapped around as the single gunshot carried over the still waters of Lake Michigan.

He grabbed up the secure radio, but before he could press the 'transmit' key, he heard Mindy's voice through the speaker.

"Calm down, Dave – they missed!"

..._...

Four minutes later, Always Wet pulled up to the stern platform and Lauren threw over the painter.

"Find anything?" Dave inquired as Lauren stepped aboard.

Lauren grinned and the young girl looked over towards Mindy who was expressionless.

"Pretty boring, really," Lauren replied.

"I'll bet!" Dave growled as he scrutinised his wife's expression.

The following morning

Salty Swallow

Marcus was not a happy man when he came aboard for breakfast. Ryan looked grim, also. Both men walked up to Mindy and looked down at her.

"What did you do?" Marcus asked and Mindy scowled.

"Why is it that when something goes to shit, everybody thinks that I've got something to do with it?" Mindy demanded.

"Well, if it wasn't you, then it must have been Lauren," Chloe said casually; a twinkle in her eye.

Lauren raised her hands defensively.

"I'm only partially responsible – maybe five . . . ten percent . . ."

Mindy growled.

"Twenty-five?"

Mindy cleared her throat in an exaggerated fashion.

"Fifty-fifty?"

"I'll go along with that," Mindy conceded.

"The Coastguard found a boat, drifting, not a mile from us, early this morning," Ryan commented. "Eight people were aboard – three were dead; two shot and one, err, mutilated."

"They needed a little persuasion to spill their guts," Mindy replied and Lauren nodded.

"That last guy sure spilled his guts!" Marcus growled. "Did we mention the hundreds of thousands of dollars of Marijuana?"

"Is that what it was?" Mindy replied with an attempt at innocence.

"Innocence is not your strong suit, Mindy!"

"Okay!" Mindy growled. "We caught them shipping drugs – we boarded and questioned them. No harm, no foul."

"Mindy, honey – your idea of 'no harm, no foul' differs greatly from that of every other human being on the planet," Marcus said slowly.

Mindy just shrugged and Lauren smiled sweetly.

"It was a dark and not so stormy night," Mindy began.

"I saw something strange out on the water, so Mindy and I went to investigate," Lauren put in.

"Piracy?" Marcus inquired.

"Not exactly," Mindy replied tartly.

...+...

The tug had departed, heading in a north-westerly direction at six knots leaving the smaller vessel to search for the intruding RIB and its occupants.

"There it is – a few dozen yards off to starboard!" the Mate yelled to the Captain.

"Stop engines," the Captain ordered his helmsman.

The Lakes Lynes lost way quickly once the propeller was stopped and the sixty-five-foot vessel drifted to a halt. A couple of yards away, the RIB rocked in the larger vessel's bow wave. The Captain looked down into the RIB and he saw two shapes lying on the bottom boards of the RIB as it was swept past and then grappled by two men near to the stern.

"Get aboard and see who they are – see if they are alive. If they are – ensure that they are not!"

...-...

Two men jumped down into the 4.3-metre Avon Seasport Jet 430. The RIB was able to carry eight people comfortably but for the moment, only two were present. Both appeared to be female – one was very young. For some reason, their heads appeared to be covered, but that may have just been a trick of the darkness. As the first man laid a hand on the shoulder of the young girl in the bow, he felt a movement. He pulled the shoulder around and in the light of his flashlight, he saw that the girl wore a mask which covered her entire head. The mask was dark grey and trimmed in teal. His focus was on the mask and he never saw the fist as it struck his left temple.

The man in the stern was in the act of examining the woman near the helm. He missed the assault on his crewmate but he turned as he heard a splash when the man went overboard. Suddenly, his vision went hazy and he fell towards the bow and then darkness enveloped him.

..._...

Hit Girl jumped up and in two bounds, she reached up and grasped a short Jacobs ladder before racing up and over the bulwark. A man attracted to the splash found himself face to face with an apparition that arose before him. He tried to yell out, but instead he found himself kicked to the deck. He barely registered another shape slipping over the bulwark as he lost consciousness.

"Nightmare – starboard!"

The youngster dove for the starboard side of the bridge structure and made for the bridge hatch. Hit Girl did the same to port. As she approached the hatch, Hit Girl could make out the red-infused bridge and two forms – one at the wheel, to starboard and one nervously looking ahead out the bridge windows to port. As she passed through the port hatch, the closest man turned and his eyes went wide as he took in the slim, masked form that strode towards him.

"What the hell are you doing on my vessel?" the Captain demanded.

"Bringing hell down upon you!" Hit Girl growled.

"Stop!" the helmsman called as he raised a large pistol and aimed it at Hit Girl's chest.

"You should have fired, not hesitated," she growled.

The helmsman never saw the shadow emerge from the darkness at the starboard hatch, but he felt the arm as it wrapped around his neck and then the hand at the base of his skull as he was flipped over and thrown to the deck. He dropped the pistol and yelled out in agony as his right arm was wrenched up his back.

..._...

After a thorough search, eight men were lined up on the after deck, on their knees. The man in the water had been retrieved and he knelt on the steel deck dripping water. Of the rest, all had regained consciousness – at least enough to be interrogated. Hit Girl walked along the front of the eight crew and enjoyed the glares and angry looks. She could see it in their eyes, despite their obvious overt defiance; it was their – fear! They at least had an idea about who was pacing before them, even if they had not recognised the purple trim to the woman's mask.

Nightmare stood to one side and monitored the mean and covered Hit Girl as she began her interrogation. The thirteen-year-old was pumped full of adrenalin, and she was amazed at how the night's events had unfolded. She was partnered with Hit Girl, again; it was a dream come true. Hit Girl walked behind the men and then stopped behind the Captain, the third man from the port side.

"You are the Captain. You are responsible for that shit, below," Hit Girl growled.

"We have nothing below . . ." the Captain tried before Hit Girl whipped him hard with the muzzle of her pistol.

"Humour me – what is it?"

"Marijuana – for personal, medical use," another man growled.

"You must get through a lot!" Hit Girl growled back as she stepped behind the man who had spoken. "Only, I was not born yesterday . . ."

With that, Hit Girl shot the man in the back of the head.

Chapter 285*: The Tug

Saturday, June 11, 2016

Position: 43.0542° N 86.2998° W

At anchor, two nautical miles due west of Grand Haven

Salty Swallow

"You shot the man?"

"Yes, Marcus, I did – you wanna hear the rest of the story?"

"Sorry, Mindy! The floor is yours . . ."

Mindy took a deep breath and she continued with the tale.

...+...

With one man dead – shot in cold blood before them – the remaining seven crew members appeared to find their tongues.

Yes, it was Marijuana.

Yes, they had offloaded it from a tug that had brought in the cargo from Canada.

Yes, the drugs were destined for the United States of America.

Yes, the drugs were to be split with a portion going to Detroit, another portion to Chicago, and the rest to Philadelphia.

Apparently, the drugs were all paid for, too. Hit Girl wanted more, but the men began to clam up.

"Let me," Nightmare hissed at Hit Girl.

Hit Girl pondered that for a moment before she waved Nightmare before the crew.

..._...

Nightmare may have appeared slight in her appearance, but her electronically enhanced voice struck fear into the crew.

"I am Nightmare. I am your nightmare. I want to know the name of that tug," Nightmare said before she paused for effect. "I want to know NOW!"

The raised voice shook the men but they just glared at the young vigilante. Nightmare stepped towards a large man, two down from the corpse with the destroyed head. She pulled a very sharp, seven-inch blade from the back of her pants. Hit Girl grinned behind her mask as Nightmare brought it before the man's eyes.

"I like knives; they speak to me. This one wants to cut you. Only, I like to cut things off . . . a few weeks back I cut the penis off a rapist; I enjoyed it. I think I want to cut your dick off – assuming it isn't fucking tiny!"

Nightmare backed up her comment by holding the thumb and forefinger of her left hand about an inch apart. The man's rage was building and Hit Girl could tell that he was about to explode.

"Talk to me, cunt – or my blade talks to that pathetically tiny piece of flesh between your legs that you call a dick."

The man never moved but he scowled even deeper and I was about to intervene when Nightmare defused him – in quite a spectacular way! The man never expected it but he grunted as the blade plunged into his stomach and Nightmare heaved the blade to her right allowing copious amounts of intestine to spill out onto the deck.

"Well, he sure spilled his guts!" Nightmare laughed and Hit Girl winced.

The man did not die quickly but he was allowed to suffer as he thrashed around on the deck covering his mates in his still hot blood.

"Voyager . . . she's called the Voyager . . . for the love of God!" a man yelled out

Another man lunged towards Nightmare but he fell to the deck where he scrambled in the darkness before he turned and aimed a pistol at Nightmare. He fired off a round, just before Hit Girl shot him in the head with her suppressed Glock.

Hit Girl triggered her radio: "Calm down, Dave – they missed!"

...+...

"We secured the remainder and left them for the Coastguard," Mindy finished.

"It was my best night ever!" Lauren added with a huge grin.

Mindy noticed Stephanie's smile change to a scowl – the same with Saoirse. Nobody else appeared to have noticed anything wrong so Mindy kept quiet and she gently shook her head at the two girls.

"I have to admit that it's not exactly fair that you two get to have all the fun while we're sleeping," Saoirse commented with a grin.

"You snooze you lose!" Mindy replied snarkily and Saoirse scowled.

Saoirse and Stephanie descended on Mindy after breakfast that morning.

"We got the impression that you wanted to talk," Stephanie announced.

"Thanks, girls – yes, I do."

The three girls descended to Mindy's comfortable stateroom and once Mindy had closed the door, Saoirse spoke.

"You're worried about Lauren."

It was a statement, not a question.

"Yes, last night was exceptional and I saw a few things that concerned me. If it had been Megan, or either of you two, then it would have not been fairly normal . . ."

Stephanie grinned before she turned serious.

"Why us?" Stephanie asked. "Wouldn't you be better talking to Dave, Chloe, or Josh?"

Mindy looked directly at each girl in turn as she replied.

"I value your experience, girls. You both have unique knowledge and experiences that are unique within Fusion. I don't envy you those experiences, but I do value them."

"Talk about surreal!" Saoirse commented.

"Surreal?" Mindy queried.

"I'm still getting used to being close to the 'Main Enemy'," the fifteen-year-old replied. Having the famous Hit Girl value me, is still something very novel."

"I must admit, I agree with you," Stephanie commented. "I'm okay with it, but it has taken a while. Oh, SD? Please be careful – my Mum has an ego problem!"

"I do not!" Mindy growled without malice.

Stephanie just rolled her eyes in response.

"Saoirse, I know we began on rocky ground with you trying to kill a little girl that I cared about . . ."

"Less of the little!" Stephanie cut in.

"Young girl!" Mindy retorted. "You are a valued member of my team. Every person in Fusion plays to their strengths. You are one of my strengths and I will use your uniquely special skills when I believe they are needed – just like now."

"Thanks, Mindy. It's been a rough few months but I'm glad I made the change. Without you, Steph, and Morgan . . . you've all helped me cope with changing my life and as far as I am concerned, being shot in the chest by Steph was the best thing ever!"

"Does that mean I can do it again?" Stephanie enquired with an evil smirk.

"Just you fucking try it, bitch!" Saoirse replied with a friendly scowl.

"Back to Lauren," Mindy announced bringing the conversation back on track.

"She seems to enjoy being partnered with you, Hit Girl," Saoirse commented.

"Who wouldn't!"

Saoirse laughed and put her hand to her mouth to prevent any further amusement which might annoy Mindy.

"What's that about?"

"Stephanie said you had an ego, but wow!" Saoirse replied as she struggled not to laugh.

Stephanie laughed at Mindy's sour expression.

..._...

"So," Mindy said, pulling them all back to the original conversation. "You both saw it and understood it – spill!"

Stephanie turned serious and she looked over at her older counterpart before she spoke.

"She sees this as a big game. That girl's been through a lot and I think she's struggling to cope with it all. Her behaviour is extreme and she has a hatred for men. That in itself is not unexpected when you consider her past experiences," Stephanie replied. "Her father's a dick. She was kidnapped and humiliated by men. Then she was raped by a pair of arseholes. There is a pattern."

"I see myself, when I was younger," Mindy said. "That scares me. Daddy used to make a game of being Hit Girl; it was his way of training me . . . well, brainwashing me. I loved putting on the costume – what five-year-old girl wouldn't – it transformed me into somebody else and you could do anything in a game without worrying about the consequences. I never thought twice about what I did and looking back . . ."

"I know," Stephanie said as she looked up at her adoptive mother. "By the time you realise what they've done to you . . ."

"It's too late," Saoirse finished darkly.

"Nightmare has a problem. I won't keep her off the next mission – she'll want to see this through – but when we return to Chicago, I want to keep a close eye on her."

"We can do that," Saoirse commented with a glance at Stephanie who nodded her acceptance.

Later that morning

Salty Swallow

They were underway again, and heading north.

Dave and Mindy were sitting in the Main Salon. They were both in conversation with a grinning man on the large screen TV.

"Okay – looks like we have AIS for a tug around that position, but no other boat. The AIS is for the Voyager – she's Canadian registered; 293 gross tonnes, built in 1962, eight crew."

"Thanks, Marty."

"It is impossible for you to go anywhere, Mrs Lizewski!" Marty commented dryly. "The list of places you've visited and which are now off limits is growing by the day . . ."

"Funny!" Mindy growled as Dave laughed raucously.

"See you soon, guys – try not to cause an international incident with Canada!"

One deck above . . .

"What are you wearing?"

"Shorts . . ."

"Definitely the right word for them," Anne-Marie replied pointedly.

"So, they show my legs; big deal."

"Since when did you flaunt everything?" Dave chipped in as he came up the gangway from the deck below – the shorts were very short and they showed off every inch of Stephanie's long legs and muscular thighs.

"Since she streaked around the pool in London," Danny laughed.

Stephanie scowled and her face turned pink at the memory.

"I thought she was wearing a new swimsuit – she was almost completely scarlet," Anne-Marie laughed.

"I was embarrassed . . ." Stephanie growled as she advanced on the younger girl. "I am so going to hurt you."

Dave expected his daughter to run for safety, only she stayed absolutely still and she just smiled up at her big sister. Then the eight-year-old fluttered her eyebrows. Stephanie stopped her advance and her expression of anger changed to one of confusion.

"What's with the stupid look?" Stephanie enquired of her sister.

"You'd never hurt me; you love me too much."

"Where'd you get that idea from?"

"You risked your life to save my ass a few months back."

Stephanie deflated and she grinned.

"She annoys the hell out of me but I love her to bits," Stephanie complained bitterly and the cheeky eight-year-old grinned enormously as she hugged her big sister.

By four that afternoon, Mindy's plans were complete.

The three yachts had headed northwards at over twenty knots. They were closing steadily on the tug which was still moving on a northerly heading at a much more sedate six knots. There were several hours to kill before any action got underway, so everybody relaxed for a while. An hour later, the tug dropped anchor a half-mile off Ludington.

Each yacht dropped anchor off Pentwater, about ten nautical miles to the south. We rafted up for dinner and the relaxation seemed to turn X-rated.

Joshua looked around the Main Salon and he focussed on a boy and girl kissing like there was to be no tomorrow.

To be honest, with all the dubious activity aboard over the past day or so, Joshua decided that Mindy had picked the perfect name for her first yacht!

"Hey, Megan! You enjoy your 'salty swallow', yesterday?"

Megan glared daggers at Joshua but she smirked without a word and then went back to kissing a pink-faced Curtis. Even Anne-Marie, who detested the vessel's name, laughed. As was usual, Joshua had control of the music on board. He fiddled with the remote and selected a track. A decent beat came through the high-end speakers.

*Looking in your eyes I see a paradise
This world that I've found
Is too good to be true
Standing here beside you
Want so much to give you
This love in my heart that I'm feeling for you*

*Let 'em say we're crazy, I don't care about that Put your hand in my hand baby
Don't ever look back
Let the world around us just fall apart
Baby we can make it if we're heart to heart*

*And we can build this dream together
Standing strong forever
Nothing's gonna stop us now
And if this world runs out of lovers
We'll still have each other
Nothing's gonna stop us
Nothing's gonna stop us now*

Megan looked up and grinned and began to mouth the words to Curtis who made a good attempt at responding. Even the adults were getting in on it and smooching together: Ryan and Cathy, Marcus and Paige, Dave and Mindy. Mind you, Mindy kept glaring at Marcus as he kissed Paige, Megan didn't care what her mother was up to, she was way too busy. Joshua selected another track and the smooching just got worse as Chloe sunk her lips onto his.

*There's a calm surrender to the rush of day
When the heat of the rolling world can be turned away
An enchanted moment and it sees me through
It's enough for this restless warrior just to be with you*

*And can you feel the love tonight? It is where we are
It's enough for this wide-eyed wanderer that we got this far
And can you feel the love tonight? How it's laid to rest
It's enough to make kings and vagabonds believe the very best*

02:00

Position: 43.9423° N 86.5116° W
Two nautical miles due west of Ludington

Always Stealthy

The tender had assumed a new name to go along with its new colour scheme.

A custom-made, radar absorbent, camouflage cover had been fitted which turned the tender black with duck egg blue splodges. A Minimi machine-gun was even mounted on the bow. Five were aboard for the assault. Jackal was the coxswain at the helm with Psyche beside him. Forward of the helm was Wildcat with Nightmare. In the bow was Foxtail. The commander for the night was Wildcat.

Four nautical miles astern, Salty Swallow cruised at eighteen knots, keeping easy pace with her tender.

Voyager

The 120-foot, blue and white tug was rocking at a single anchor.

A single all-round white light was visible atop the main mast above the raised bridge. A dull red light was visible through the windows of the 01-deck bridge. Nobody was visible anywhere on deck as the tender drew close and approached the stern. Several portholes were illuminated on the main deck and music could be heard coming from an open watertight hatch on the same deck.

The stern had the lowest freeboard for boarding.

"Standby!" Wildcat growled and four affirmative responses were heard just as the bow of the tender kissed the Voyager's stern. "Away boarders!"

..._...

Foxtail, the tender's painter in her left hand, jumped onto the rubbing strake which ran around the tug's hull and she swung over the bulwark onto the after deck. Quickly, she secured the tender to a stanchion and took up a position where she could cover the port side of the tug as the other three members of the boarding team followed her example and landed on the deck before spreading out.

Wildcat and Psyche headed to the starboard side of the vessel while Foxtail and Nightmare made their way forward up the port side. Jackal remained in the tender on watch and less than a foot from the Minimi.

"Foxtrot, this is Alpha, boarding team is aboard."

"Foxtrot copies," came the voice of Hal from Safehouse F in Chicago.

Battle Guy and Hal were providing overwatch for the operation. Aboard Salty Swallow, many ears listened to the audio and many eyes watched the video from a camera aboard the tender, Always Stealthy.

Wildcat and Psyche

"When was the last time we paired off?"

"Now is not the time, Psyche!"

"Humour me?"

"To be honest, I have no idea – but I like to fight alongside you."

"Cool!"

Psyche indicated the ladder up to the bridge deck and she covered Wildcat as the older girl climbed up to the next deck before she followed. They both approached the starboard bridge door which was closed. Wildcat peered through the glass in the door and saw nobody. She pulled open the door and Psyche dived in.

"Bridge clear!" Psyche announced.

The two vigilantes left via the port bridge door and while Wildcat covered her, Psyche scampered up a vertical ladder to the upper conning position. The position was clear so Psyche continued upwards to the raised bridge which was also clear.

"Upper decks are clear!" Psyche reported as she descended back to the bridge deck to re-join Wildcat.

Foxtail and Nightmare

With the upper decks of the tug clear, they knew that they faced eight people below decks.

That was a strategic nightmare. Assaulting an enormous luxury yacht with large open areas and wide passageways was a relative breeze. The Voyager was over fifty years old and the corridors would be tight to manoeuvre through with weapons drawn. That meant some different tactics would be required.

Foxtail entered the superstructure first via the open hatchway and she was followed by Nightmare. Both had suppressed pistols raised before them.

Wildcat and Psyche

Psyche carefully moved down a ladder from inside the bridge into the deck below.

Voices could be heard coming from a compartment to the left. They both paused and Psyche took up a position to assault the compartment. Wildcat dived forwards and with Psyche covering her, she burst through the hatch.

The two men in the compartment were talking together as they watched a movie on a bulkhead mounted television set that looked almost as old as the tug. Both men jumped up and reached for concealed weapons. The first yelled out in agony as he was pistol-whipped by Wildcat and he fell backwards against a steel bulkhead. The next man, towering over six-feet tall, grinned as he found himself facing off against a slightly-built, four-foot-six midget in a semi-armoured suit and mask.

"Is this what pirates look like now?" he chuckled as he feinted left and then struck Psyche in the chest with his right fist.

Psyche yelled out in pain as she went down. She scrambled back to her feet and rammed a Sai into the man's right thigh. The man bellowed in pain but then went silent as Wildcat shot him in the heart.

"Fucking douche!" Psyche growled as she retrieved her Sai.

Foxtail and Nightmare

"You two having fun?"

"Always!" Psyche reported as she and Wildcat joined up with their colleagues. "Oh, shit!"

An alarm began to sound and they all heard pounding feet. Wildcat pulled Psyche to the deck as a man appeared at the far end of the corridor with a submachine gun in his hand and he sent a dozen rounds in their direction. Nightmare shoved Foxtail into an adjacent compartment and landed on top of the older girl.

"You heavy, bitch!" Foxtail complained as she shoved Nightmare off her.

"Contact!" Foxtail radioed.

Salty Swallow

"Contact!"

"I think things have gone to crap," Mindy commented unnecessarily.

"We have everything under control . . ." Wildcat radioed.

"Yeah, right!" Psyche cut in.

Mindy raised her night glasses and she focussed on the tug about two miles distant. She could make out Jackal in the tender and the flashes of gunfire on the tugs after deck, then the Minimi on the tender burst into life.

"Fast boat, inbound from the east – thirty-one knots – heading directly for the Voyager!" Ryan advised as he studied the state of the art radar aboard Mindy's yacht.

Wildcat with Psyche

Fucking shit intelligence!

There were way more than eight crew on board the damn tug. How did we know? Well, I had killed two, Psyche another two and we were fighting at least four while the other two were fighting about six. My Math came to at least fourteen men and we had not seen the captain yet; she was understood to be a woman.

It was every vigilante for themselves as we fought hand to hand in the contorted passageways. One thing in our favour was our physical size. The goons we faced were all men six-foot tall and about the same across. We had space to manoeuvre while they had very little available to them. Nonetheless, the team was fighting well, including our junior member, Nightmare.

I believed everything to be under control – my niece, it seemed, thought otherwise!

Foxtail with Nightmare

The fighting spilled out on deck just as I heard the tugs engines rumble to life.

I burst out of the starboard side main deck hatch and immediately, I came under fire from aft which I dutifully returned. Nightmare ran ahead, her pistol spitting fire and I followed, sending bullets back into the tug's superstructure. Something was badly wrong; there should only have been eight crew aboard and now there seemed to be well over a dozen, heading on for twenty. At least things couldn't get any worse . . .

"Alpha, this is Foxtrot. You have a fast-moving watercraft closing at thirty knots with unknown intentions; however, I don't think they're delivering pizza!"

It had just got worse and Hit Girl trying to be funny was not exactly helping.

Jackal

What a surprise; one of our operations had just gone to fuck!

I had to be careful where I aimed the Minimi so as not to cut down any of the girls – I decided that they might be a little put out by that act and they would probably come back to haunt me. The tug's diesel engine was thundering to life and I knew that I would have to cast off within minutes or face getting swamped.

I watched Wildcat burst out of the port hatch and after killing a man, she headed forward and then upwards to the bridge. She was followed by the ever-present Psyche. Both girls were dashing about with the energy of the ubiquitous Duracell Bunny but with the vicious streak of Rambo. It was hard to imagine the two female vigilantes as two normal-looking pre-teen girls who had been sunbathing and giggling earlier that afternoon.

I was quickly snapped back to reality as I heard the roaring of high-performance marine engines coming from the east.

The Voyager Bridge

Wildcat dove onto the bridge with Psyche close behind.

Psyche sent one of her Sais the length of the bridge and a submachine gun toting asshole died. The coxswain quickly followed as Wildcat put a bullet into his skull.

"Stop the fucking boat!" Wildcat ordered the Captain.

"Fuck you . . ."

Wildcat punched the woman hard in the face smashing her nose. The Captain screamed out in pain but she quickly regained her composure and she pulled back on the throttle till 'STOP' was selected.

"Now – who are your friends out there?" Wildcat demanded.

"Fuck you!"

"I really hate hurting people, you know," Wildcat went on. "But for druggies like you? Well, you ain't people!"

With that proclamation, the Captain screamed as a bullet blew her right knee-cap apart and she sank to the deck in agony.

"I hope you fucking . . ."

"Wrong answer!"

Another bullet later and another destroyed knee-cap sent waves of agony coursing through the Captain who writhed on the deck.

"I have six more rounds remaining – where'd you like 'em? I like to give people some choice in how I mutilate them. I see myself as an equal opportunity vigilante!"

Jackal

That girl was fucking nuts!

With the tug rapidly losing way, the immediate problem was resolved. However, the next problem was rapidly coming into sight. For a moment, I considered that the incoming craft might be a friendly but that thought rapidly vanished as a stream of gunfire was emitted from a machine gun aboard the vessel. I returned fire with short bursts while the team took cover behind the bulwarks and out of my line of fire.

The fast boat decided the fire was too heavy and they attempted a high-speed turn but the fuckers misjudged it and two men went over the side as they turned. I laughed – who wouldn't. The fast boat began to accelerate away but had only made it about a hundred yards when I caught a flash of orange out the corner of my left eye.

A second or two later the fast boat blossomed into a fiery cloud as it exploded.

Salty Swallow

"That was way cool!" Anne-Marie exploded.

"Thought you'd enjoy that," Mindy laughed as she lowered the Javelin control console to the foredeck.

"I love the smell of explosives in the night!" Anne-Marie quipped.

"We need to have words about what movies your mother lets you watch," Marcus commented dryly.

"All we need now are some marshmallows on very long sticks," Anne-Marie added.

"This is all your fault!" Marcus growled as he looked over at a grinning Mindy. "Like mother like daughter!"

We took the tender aboard and left the scene at speed before following a large looping course that brought us back to the other yachts from a very different heading.

There were the usual bruises, but nothing major and everybody was very tired. While we slept, the US Coastguard were up all night as they tried to figure out what had happened a few miles off the coast. Needless to say, if the USCG came to visit later that morning, all evidence would be long gone.

Salty Swallow

The next morning found us well away from anything illegal.

We were on the way home and the crews had got mixed up for the final few hours. I found Megan and Stephanie on the bow talking.

"Hi, girls!"

"Hi, Mom."

"Hi, Sis."

"Last night, Steph mentioned something about Wildcat 'going wild' . . ."

"Did you really have to use air quotes?" Megan groaned.

I shrugged in response and sat down. Stephanie and I both looked at Megan.

"All right! I was interrogating the bitch – you know, tell me what I want to know or I blow apart your limbs."

I raised an eyebrow at my daughter and she just shrugged noncommittedly.

"She was strong-willed and very brave – I'll give her that – but I needed answers. I blew apart her knees and had just destroyed an elbow when some cunt went and blew up the inbound fast boat."

"That was Anne-Marie – not bad for an eight-year-old with a broken arm," I commented.

"I suppose," Megan responded. "The Captain proved superfluous to my needs . . ."

"So, she put a bullet in the remaining elbow and then one in each lung. The woman drowned in her own blood – it was quite cool to watch," Stephanie cut in with a big grin.

"It was cool," Megan agreed.

I chuckled at the two evil bitches.

Somebody was missing . . . Stephanie . . . oh, and Saoirse.

Those two Urban Princesses could be up to anything! I headed below and made my way through the main salon and then below again to the staterooms and cabins. I heard sounds coming from the starboard side cabin. I knocked on the cabin door but I heard nothing other than what sounded like . . . sobbing? That was totally out of character so I had to be wrong. I pushed open the door to find two young girls sitting on one bunk crying their eyes out as they held hands.

"Sorry – I'll leave you two alone . . ."

"No," Stephanie called out quickly and I gently closed the door behind me and sat on the opposite bunk.

"Mindy, please stay – we're just relieving some rather nasty parts of our lives," Saoirse explained.

"You remember what happened to me at Christmas?" Stephanie asked.

I well remembered that night when Stephanie had told me and Dave about how she had killed her parents and brother. I nodded at Stephanie without a smile.

"Back in Toulouse, SD and I came across a similar room and . . . well, SD had never remembered what she did. She went to pieces on me and I thought she was going to lose it, just as I did that night. She's my best friend and I said I would take her through what happened."

"I never realised that I had done that," Saoirse explained as the tears flowed. "Murdered my own parents . . . I knew that we Predators were really bad people . . ."

Saoirse began to cry even harder. Stephanie held her hand firmly as her friend cried and she also cried. I felt so bad for them both. They had endured so much and been treated so badly. Urban Predator may have been over but it was in no way gone. The trauma would always be there, just as mine was.

"Saoirse . . . you are not bad anymore. You took a bullet for my daughter . . . that means a lot in Hit Girl's book. I owe you for that, no matter what your past actions."

Saoirse smiled through her tears.

"Both of you have done so much for me and without you both I would never have found people who loved and cared for me. I even have a sister – a sister who's a nutcase for sure; but you can't have everything, I suppose."

"We may not know what the future holds. But hear us when we say that our past does not define us. 'Cause our past is not today."

"Very nice, Stephanie," I commented. "Did you just paraphrase a My Little Pony song?"

"Maybe . . ."

"It fitted," Saoirse commented with a grin at Stephanie. "Besides, Sunset Shimmer rocks!"

"You Predators are so fucking strange!" I growled as I left the cabin.

All I could hear was laughing and giggling as I headed up a deck.

16:00

It was nearing late afternoon when we approached our docks at the Burnham Harbor Marina.

Thirty minutes later we were each tied up and all engines had been shut down. Marcus appeared weary from his trip but he smiled across the dock at us. Paige and little Damon were also very happy and I was glad that we could all have some good family fun. I did not spend as much time as I wanted with my little brother but Paige had forced him on me the previous afternoon. Maybe I was worried about hurting such a little thing. I was, after all, more used to breaking things than being gentle!

I suppose gaining kids at seven and nine had been a challenge but at least they fed themselves (usually), washed themselves (with a little persuasion) and they used the bathroom without incident. They also took knocks in their stride which helped. I also hated seeing Paige breast feeding – gave me the creeps for some reason. As I watched, Anne-Marie walked down the gangway slowly and then she tentatively placed a foot on the dock followed by the other one. Then . . . she began to cheer!

"I survived a boat trip with my Mom!" she yelled triumphantly. "I'm alive!"

Everybody laughed.

"Not funny!" I growled but, as was usual, nobody appeared to be listening to me.

The following morning Monday, 13th June

Glenview

The normal (abnormal to some) logistical nightmare of preparing three kids for school was underway.

I was in the kitchen preparing breakfast. Danny was just sitting down to his cereal when I heard yelling and screaming from upstairs. Then the noise came closer.

"Stephanie! Give me back my bag!"

The two girls burst into the kitchen with Stephanie holding a dark purple backpack over her head well out of her sister's reach.

"Say please," Stephanie advised.

"Give me my back . . . now, before I fucking . . ."

"Anne-Marie!" I said sharply and the girl froze. "Jar!"

I glared at Stephanie who smiled sweetly before she returned the backpack to her sister. Anne-Marie walked over to the jar and then turned to look at me.

"I've no money left."

"Then make out an IOU."

Anne-Marie muttered something under her breath as she tore the top sheet off the pad located beside the swear jar.

"I still can't believe you had a swear jar IOU pad printed up," Stephanie laughed. "It even has our names on it – including yours . . ."

I scowled.

"That was Dave – he had the printer alter it," I replied somewhat reluctantly.

Stephanie laughed as she grabbed herself a bowl from the cupboard. Then a loud bark was heard and a few seconds later a ginger ball of fluff flew into the kitchen and executed a perfect four-paw power slide on the stone floor before coming to rest beside my left foot. The ginger ball was hissing and spitting as Razor skidded to a very rapid halt in front of me. Kiara peered inquisitively around the doorframe.

"What have I told you about chasing Horatio?" I lectured Razor. "Last time, he scratched you."

Razor whined and gave Horatio a big lick. Horatio meowed and then rubbed up against Razor's left paw. The kitten then began to purr – loudly. Stephanie glared at her dog. Razor walked over and licked her hand in apology for his actions. Horatio followed him. The two were the best of friends, despite their antics together. Horatio's favourite sleeping location was cuddled up with the five-month-old German Shepherd.

Kiara just shook her head in disgust, wandered over to her bowl and took a noisy gulp of water.

Two days later
Wednesday, 15th June

North Park Elementary School

Stephanie was smiling, as always, and Danny was chatting to his friends as he came out of school. A certain eight-year-old girl, though, did not look happy!

"What's with sourpuss?" I asked.

Danny laughed.

"She got into trouble, today – lots of trouble."

I groaned.

"Do I need to see the Principal?"

"Nah!" Danny replied. "She just has a tonne of homework to catch up on."

"No swords. No Rogue." I directed once we were in the Jaguar. "Until the homework is completed."

"What? That's not fair!"

"Who makes the rules?"

"Dave?"

"Quit while you're ahead, would be my advice," Stephanie chipped in wisely.

That night

Safehouse F

"What's with misery guts," Joshua asked as he noticed Anne-Marie sitting in a corner of the galley with piles of books.

"She has mounds of homework to catch up on – her fault for getting behind," Stephanie replied.

Anne-Marie raised a single finger into the air and Joshua chuckled.

"Get back to your work, young lady!" Cathy growled from the kitchen. "You're lucky Mindy allowed you to change into uniform, despite you not actually doing anything other than your homework."

Anne-Marie grimaced and pouted at the rebuke but she went back to her homework.

"What are you grinning like a Cheshire Wildcat for, Megan?"

"Vengeance!" Stephanie grinned.

"Yes, you mad bitches; Vengeance will be here in a few days," Hit Girl growled in exasperation.

"We want Vengeance! We want Vengeance!" Both girls chanted to general amusement.

"Fucking mad bitches!" the exasperated vigilante yelled as she headed into the armoury for peace and quiet.

"Focus, Nightmare!" Foxtail growled as Hit Girl stormed off into the armoury.

Foxtail smirked but she turned back to her two charges: Nightmare and Ravage. They were each practicing with Ninja-To blades. A few yards away, Shadow and Mist were sparring. Despite the seven-year age difference, Mist held her own as she was taller than Shadow which gave her a slight edge.

Splinter and Trojan were heading to the lower level along with Psyche and Wildcat. They were each wearing shorts and t-shirts for some intensive sparring on the mat in the Exercise Room. Splinter was teaching Wildcat and Trojan the art of unconventional fighting. Psyche was already skilled but she was happy to learn anything new that Splinter may have picked up in his time with the Russians. Psyche wanted to be 'bad-ass' in every way possible, despite her tender age. The veteran Predator was very aware that she had never completed her training so she was determined to catch up with her best friend Saoirse.

And then overtake her.

An hour later

Hit Girl and Battle Guy had just returned from Safehouse E.

While Battle Guy headed back to his Command Center, Hit Girl decided to check on the kids below decks. She veered past Shadow and Mist who were still at it, sweat flying as both young women span across the mat. Foxtail was pointing out various factors that related to each of the women's unique fighting styles. One of the key training methods within Fusion was encouraging each member to develop their own way of fighting. As well as allowing each person to fight in a way which matched their size, abilities, and weapons, it also kept potential enemies guessing and made attacking Fusion a decidedly iffy proposition.

As she reached the bottom of the steel steps, Hit Girl could see four very active individuals engaged in a fight 'to the death' – well, to exhaustion if nothing else. Wildcat was just picking herself up off the mat. Her face was very red and sweat poured from the eleven-year-old. The twelve-year-old Splinter was smirking as he limbered up to reattack Wildcat. The ten-year-old Psyche was terrorising the almost twelve-year-old Trojan. As was usual, Psyche's clothing was soaked; she always went to one-hundred-and-ten percent when fighting, even when simply sparring. Trojan was maturing fast and he had strength in his arms and legs plus a weight and height advantage over the diminutive Psyche.

To get past that advantage, Psyche had her more advanced skill set. Trojan was very keen to learn anything which might make him a deadlier adversary in combat. After he had boy literally dived to Wildcat's rescue in Gibraltar and almost died, his kudos had leapt within Fusion. Together with his partner, Wildcat, he was a force to be reckoned with and Hit Girl would fight alongside him any day, just as she would with any member of Fusion.

Nobody got a free ride. Everybody earned their spurs in Fusion. In most cases, they earned them the hard way, in combat, against overriding odds. The fight at the Chicago Silos had shown the world what Fusion could accomplish against the most extreme odds. Some sites on the internet were even ranking Fusion among the world's elite special forces – now that was an accolade worth fighting for but Hit Girl would never put her organisation above the brave men and women who kept entire countries safe; Fusion only had a city to keep safe.

..._...

As Hit Girl entered the Exercise Room, she smiled at Wildcat's excessively vulgar language which was almost equally matched by the insults streaming from the ten-year-old's sewer of a mouth. The fighting was hard and I noticed a bruise on Megan's upper right arm. Trojan smiled in my direction but Psyche was ready and she took advantage of his momentary lapse of concentration and threw him down to the mat.

"Fucking bitch!" he breathed as he jumped straight back up and went for the younger girl but as he came close to Splinter he nudged his friend on the back.

The two boys swapped places and Psyche found herself facing off with Splinter while Wildcat smirked at her boyfriend. Trojan had long ago got over his aversion to hitting his girlfriend and he had no qualms in hitting her where it hurt! Conversely, Wildcat would rarely go near his lower regions – except, of course, when they were in bed . . . together.

Splinter towered over Psyche and he did have real muscle. He could snap Psyche in two if he so wished and Psyche knew it. Splinter would also fight dirty. He rarely fought dirty with his friends in case he hurt them. He reserved it mainly for Hit Girl, Psyche, and Foxtail. They were trained for it while the others were still learning.

From Hit Girl's point of view, she enjoyed watching the two expert streetfighters scrap. The fighting often got very wild and a referee was usually required to prevent serious injury.

..._...

Splinter and Psyche circled each other, neither taking their eyes off one another's eyes for even a second.

Both searched for a tell-tale which would telegraph their opponents next move. Both streetfighters were so advanced that neither could possibly guess which move or action might be selected from potentially hundreds.

"Make your move, dunderhead!" Psyche suggested.

"I'd say 'ladies first', but you are no fucking lady!" Splinter retorted.

"Okay, pussies first, eh, Splinter . . ."

"Off you go, then . . . or are you scared I might hurt the little girl?"

"The only scared bitch here, is you. Потеряли свои яички?"

"My testicles are fine, thanks. How are yours?"

"Hanging low, bitch!" Psyche chuckled as she drove forwards a fraction of a second before Splinter.

Psyche twisted and slid along the mat taking Splinter's feet from under him . . . only he was ready and he dived into a roll before coming back up behind Psyche. She scowled but quickly flipped over backwards and kicked Splinter in the chest – at least that was her plan. Splinter caught one ankle and then grabbed hold of Psyche's waistband and flung her across the mat where she crashed into Wildcat and both fell into a heap in the corner.

"Time out!" Hit Girl announced as Psyche pushed Wildcat off to one side. She was seething with anger.

"Go fuck yourself, ref – that fucker's going down!" Psyche growled and her gunmetal-blue eyes flashed dangerously.

Hit Girl just shrugged and she stood back, her hands raised in a 'have it your own way' position.

"Назад для получения дополнительной, маленькая девочка?" Splinter chuckled. {'Back for more, little girl?'}

"Я возьму все, что вы можете блюдо, вы чертовски киску!" Psyche retorted with venom in her voice. {'I'll take whatever you can dish out, you fucking pussy!'}

Psyche was pissed and that would probably be her downfall – possibly.

..._...

Wildcat was not happy as she watched her niece throw herself around the mat. She knew that Psyche never backed down and not against a boy. Splinter was provoking Psyche and Wildcat was worried that Psyche might take things too far. Psyche and Splinter were fairly evenly matched. Psyche had the advantage of better training, but Splinter had strength and brawn on his side. Both were also known to go too far in sparring.

Wildcat took a moment to glare at Hit Girl who just shrugged – 'what?'. Hit Girl should have stopped the fight, but no, she had to let it play out and somebody was going to get hurt . . . Wildcat looked over at Foxtail somewhat pointedly. Foxtail grimaced but otherwise did nothing to stop the fight. The hand to hand fighting was getting more and more advanced as the minutes passed. Both fighters were getting very close to exhaustion and that meant they would go to any lengths to end the fight.

Psyche allowed herself to be flipped over but she fainted and Splinter found himself in her 'kill zone' and he knew it.

"Sayonara, motherfucker!" Psyche growled as she kneed Splinter in the balls and followed through with a punch to the stomach.

Splinter went down, not knowing where to put his hands. He was breathing through the pain but he stayed down.

"Потеряли свои яички?" Psyche chuckled. {'How're your testicles?'}

"They . . . sore . . . ouch!" Splinter grimaced in response as Psyche helped him up off the mat and over to a chair where she handed him an icepack with a big smirk on her face.

The following morning
Thursday, 16th June

North Park Elementary School

Anne-Marie was in a big rush that morning.

She was late – gossiping with her friends and she scrambled to sort out her books at her locker. She pulled all her homework out of her bag and thrust it into her locker to be sorted later. Several items fell to the floor which she quickly swept up and stuffed into her locker before she slammed it shut and locked it.

She ran off to her first lesson of the day.

Later that morning

"You think it's real?"

"No idea . . ."

"It can't be real."

"But what if it is real?"

"If it is real then it means that somebody in this school is a member of Fusion."

"That would be so cool!"

"I've never heard of this one, though. Maybe it is a fake ID . . ."

"A new vigilante, maybe?"

"Let's see it again . . ."

The card was a dark blue all over and it was the normal size for an ID card. At the bottom left was a QR code. Above that, there was an inverted stripe like that worn by a Private First Class in the US Marine Corps. Over to the right and taking up most of the right half of the card was the easily recognisable symbol used by Fusion. To the right of that was a code: 'SC01'. Above the symbol was another code: 'FUSION-887436-9862-AHIU'. Finally, at the bottom right was a single word: 'ROGUE'.

"Where'd you say you found it?"

"By the lockers."

"What do we do with it?"

"I have no idea."

A little over five weeks previously

Toulouse, France

It was time to end it. Shadow kicked out and she caught the blonde girl in the left thigh; she staggered and Shadow brought the razor-sharp tip of her bō-staff around and she rammed the blade into the girl's chest, just below her left lung. The girl froze in shock at the invasion of her body and she dropped her weapon. It clattered to the floor as the girl quickly sank to her knees, her eyes wide with the pain as Shadow pulled her blade out and rammed the other end of the bō-staff into the red-haired girl's side.

That girl fell beside her fellow Predator in a pool of blood.

The Present

Friday, 17th June

Safehouse Q Chatham Road

No matter how much she tried, Chloe struggled to maintain a neutral expression around the girls who had just left the hospital that morning.

The guilt that she felt every time she saw them was palpable. Chloe had no idea if the girls had noticed her guilt and that just made things worse. Finally, it was Sky that voiced Chloe's worst fear that Friday afternoon.

"It was you, wasn't it?"

"Me, what?" Chloe asked defensively and way too obviously.

"You are Shadow; you did this," Sky said as she pulled up her t-shirt and exposed the slightly off vertical scar that was prominently visible on her left side and which was about six inches in length.

"Why would you think that?"

"Oh, come on! Neither you, Chloe, nor us are that stupid. We can almost touch the guilt that you're feeling and every day, since that day we met in the hospital, we see the remorse in your expressions."

"I did not want to do it . . . only, I had no choice."

Tears began to pour down Chloe's cheeks. Sky smiled and sat down beside Chloe, an arm around the distraught fifteen-year-old's shoulder. She was joined by her twin sister, Christina.

"We've had many weeks to think about what happened, ever since that night in France, and we've come to the only sensible conclusion: you had no other choice."

Chloe looked up at the two girls and smiled.

"Really?"

Sky looked up at Mindy who nodded.

"Chloe – I told you," Mindy explained. "Nobody blames you; there was nothing else that you could have done. These girls have forgiven you; you have given them a new life."

The twins now sported near identical long dark brown hair. Sky had been the one to sport fiery-red hair that day and her sister, Christina had had the blonde hair. The dye had been removed during their lengthy stay in hospital and they were both happy to remain their natural colour.

"So," Christina began. "What sort of new life can we expect?"

Mindy smiled at the two fifteen-year-olds knowing that they had already worked out that if Chloe was Shadow, then I would have to be . . .

"That is entirely up to you both."

"Considering our lack of any other skills, would we join you, Hit Girl, and your Fusion?" Sky asked with a grin.

"Only if you wanted."

"I, for one, aren't all that keen on Chicago . . ." Christina ventured.

"The place sucks," Sky admitted and Chloe laughed.

"Anywhere in particular?" Mindy asked tentatively.

"We have some ideas."

That evening

Glenview

"What are you watching?"

Anne-Marie was sprawled on the living room floor and the eight-year-old barely looked up from the TV.

"Dance Moms."

"What?"

"It's awesome!" Anne-Marie squealed. "You'd love it."

"You'd never get me dancing in next to nothing . . . like that – it's indecent!"

"You've worn a lot less!" Anne-Marie reminded her sister who blushed involuntarily.

"That is so not me," Stephanie persisted.

"Stranger things have happened," Anne-Marie commented with a giggle.

Chapter 287*: Vengeance

This is the continuation from Chapter 6: All Is Revealed of Vengeance.

Friday, 17th June, 2016

That night

Safehouse Q – Chatham Road, Glenview

After the fight, it was time for everybody to get some sleep ready for a big day on Saturday.

Apart from Natasha and Cameron pretending to not want to share a room together, and the three girls not wanting to sleep, everybody was finally settled down! The house was large and had five bedrooms. The youngsters were all very excited about everything that they had seen and heard over the previous few hours; their lives had changed in a very dramatic fashion.

The adults were all very tired and they were desperate for sleep, even if the overtired kids were not!

The following morning

Saturday, 18th June

Safehouse Q

Despite the previous late night and the intercontinental travelling, the three girls were full of energy when they awoke.

The adults, though, were not . . .

"Harper – if you want to live to see your tenth birthday, then you shall do an immediate about-turn and take your little friends out of this bedroom," Keira said calmly.

"What are you going to do?" Harper sneered.

Keira dug her hand beneath her pillow and produced a bright yellow device.

"A Taser!" Naomi exclaimed.

"That is so low!" Kaitlin added as she noticed that the Taser was the latest X3 model which could Taser three subjects before it required a reload.

"You win . . ." Harper hissed as she backed out of the bedroom with her friends. "For now!"

Later that morning

"Morning, guys!"

"Morning, Mindy – fancy some bacon and eggs?" Cameron asked.

"Don't worry – I ain't cooking!" Natasha commented dryly.

"Got enough for another five?" Dave enquired as he followed his wife into the Safehouse.

"Plenty, Dave," Cameron confirmed.

"Sarah, Keira, girls," Mindy said. "Please meet my other children, Anne-Marie and Danny."

Stephanie pointed each one out in turn to the three girls.

"I think they can tell us apart, doofus!" Anne-Marie growled as she said hello to Harper, Naomi, and Kaitlin. "You are all Predators?"

"Yes, we are," Naomi confirmed. "Are you two vigilantes . . . like Stephanie?"

"Kind of – still in training," Danny replied with a grin. "I'm Ravage, and my sister is Rogue."

"Nice!" Kaitlin commented.

"Does that mean we get cool names?" Harper asked with an excited grin.

"You do," Natasha advised the three girls. "Harper will be Polaris. Naomi will be Prowl. We considered something to do with destruction for Kaitlin . . ."

Kaitlin gave Natasha a 'we are not amused' glare and Natasha laughed.

"Kaitlin will be Glide."

"Cool!" Naomi grinned as she looked at her grinning cousin and the very pleased Harper.

..._...

After breakfast – the second that morning for Stephanie, Anne-Marie, and Danny – the kids ran off to 'play' together although Natasha decided to 'supervise' and prevent any intended or unintended destruction of building or body.

Mindy and Keira sat down in the living room.

"Why am I here?" Keira asked.

Mindy looked over from the other couch.

"You're a pilot, I understand."

"Yes. I fly naval helicopters."

"What are you qualified in?"

"I have been current in the Lynx HMA.8, the Wildcat HMA.2, and the Seaking HAS.6 – at least I was, until they got rid of them. I transitioned into the Merlin HM.2 helicopter and that is what I am presently current in."

"So you can fly almost any helicopter, from the smallest to the larger ones?"

"Yes."

"Could you fly either of these?"

Mindy passed over two photos.

"In a heartbeat," Keira replied with an approving expression but then her eyes narrowed. "Is this a job interview?"

"You want the job?" Mindy replied. "You've seen what Fusion and Vengeance do."

Keira turned as Harper came into the living room and she sat down next to her big sister. Harper looked imploringly up at Keira with irresistible puppy-dog eyes – one of the nine-year-olds little tricks – until Keira finally shrugged and smiled down at her sister.

"In for a penny, in for a pound."

Harper almost screamed with joy and she hugged her big sister.

"Would I get a cool name?" Keira asked as she winced with the strength of Harper's hug.

Mindy said nothing but she simply handed over a white-bordered, black woven patch with Velcro on the back. Keira recognised it instantly. It was very much like the patch worn on her own Royal Navy flight suit but instead of it reading 'ROYAL NAVY' and 'KEIRA SHARP' above and below the 'wings', it read 'VENGEANCE' and 'SCORPION'.

"But I can't fight – not hand to hand," Keira said dejectedly.

"I'll teach you, sis," Harper offered as she looked at the insignia in awe. "Give me a few weeks and you'll be able to kill a man with a single finger!"

Early that afternoon

Safehouse F

"Keira?"

"Yes, Naomi."

"It's Harper – she won't stop crying."

Keira got up from the couch in the Briefing Room and she followed Naomi around the walkways to a bedroom which Harper had occupied. Harper was sitting on the bed and her head was in her hands. She was sobbing. Beside her sat a worried looking Kaitlin.

Keira walked over and she sat down beside her sister.

"What's she crying for?"

"We don't know. She won't tell us."

"Okay – thanks, girls. Please leave us."

Once the door was shut, Keira pulled Harper's hands away from her face. Keira was shocked to see that they were real tears and there were a lot of them.

"Talk to me, Harper."

"I was really happy that you wanted to become a vigilante and join us, but then . . . on the ride over here, I started thinking. I realised that I was going to be the cause of you giving up the best thing in your life. I know that you love the Royal Navy and it was your biggest ambition to become an officer and then a helicopter pilot. Now I've destroyed it all for you."

Harper sobbed even harder and sank into Keira for comfort. Keira hugged her distraught sister tightly until the tears eased. Then she turned the nine-year-old's head upwards to look into her dark brown eyes. Keira gently smoothed away the remaining tears and smiled. Harper smiled back.

"The best thing in the entire world happened a few weeks back. You know what that was? It was something much better than becoming an officer. Much better than getting my wings. It was finding out that my little sister was alive. I cared for nothing else other than you. I will admit, it shocked the hell out of me to find out what you had become, but I didn't care. I had my Harper back. The Harper that I loved for so many years. You being born was the best thing ever. You are all I have and all I want, Harper."

"I love you, Keira."

"So, no more tears?"

Harper shook her head and looked a little sheepish.

"I love you too, Harper."

As I sat there hugging my sister, my mind drifted back to the final hours of my torture. It was both the scariest moment of my life and my happiest.

The day that Hit Girl had burst into Dormitory A and begun our wild ride to freedom would forever be seared into my memory. I could remember it like it was yesterday. Twelve of us had been herded into the dormitory by six guards. Nobody had told us anything. We could hear explosions and gunfire. Then those same explosions and gunfire had come closer and closer . . . until . . . the door to the dormitory was smashed open.

I actually felt a stab of fear as five very well-armed people burst in.

..._...

Nobody said anything for a whole minute as the atmosphere grew very tense.

If anybody opened fire, there would be a bloodbath. The guards seemed very jumpy but the invaders were rock solid and focussed. Each wore an identical dark grey uniform with integrated body armour, however, each suit had different coloured markings. I instantly recognised the insignia worn on the upper left chest of each suit – it was Fusion.

One of the shorter ones stepped forwards. She (I thought it looked like a she) had blue and red markings on her suit. The girl was short and thin which made me think that she was not much older than about ten-years-old. She looked directly at us kids as she spoke in a weird, electronically enhanced voice.

"Phase 1?" She asked as she looked directly at the younger kids, and they nodded.

"Phase 2?" She asked as she looked at us, the older kids, and we nodded. "I was Phase 2 – at least I was before I was terminated. You might have heard of me; I go by the name: Psyche."

There was a collective intake of breath as most of the kids, including me, recognised the name. There were also some scowls and quite a few muttered words – I heard 'traitor' and 'rat', among others. I had heard of Psyche. She was a Phase 2 Predator who had killed another Predator in a shower, apparently. Then the girl had apparently gone rogue.

"I saw the light; I am free – I kill when Psyche says to kill. Nobody, tells me to kill – not even Hit Girl; we are equals..."

A taller armoured individual stepped forwards; she had purple markings on her suit and it was pretty obvious who she was supposed to be.

"I am Hit Girl."

She paused for a few seconds to let that sink in.

"I see that you know my name . . ."

"How do we know it is really you?" I called out. It was too good to be true.

"Well, I could show you my Driver's Licence, but I didn't bring it with me. So, you'll just have to trust me – besides who else would have the balls to take on the CIA?"

There was a chuckle or too at that remark and I laughed too. We all began to whisper amongst ourselves and the guards were getting more jittery. We agreed to make a stand and fight – we had to; it was our only chance of a remotely normal life. We moved so that the Phase 2 kids were closer to the guards. The invaders took our cue and they distracted the guards as we moved.

..._...

I found myself behind a tall man, maybe six feet tall. I was on point and all were watching me for the cue to attack. I reached up and without warning, I wrenched the man's neck around. In the following scuffle his body took a while to hit the floor. Two minutes later, the guards were no more. We just stood there with absolutely no idea what to do next. I had just killed a man in a second without conscious thought on the matter. Had I done right? I damned well hoped so. It had been a first for us all. I was brought out of my thoughts as Hit Girl spoke again.

"You did well; very well – you all have my respect!" she assured us and her tone, while electronic, appeared genuine. To receive a compliment from somebody as famous as Hit Girl . . . well, I felt good inside and it pushed some of my reservations to one side.

"Seize a weapon," the traitorous Psyche ordered and almost immediately ten of us were armed – I grabbed up a pistol from the hand of a dead guard.

..._...

After that, everything else was a blur until French Police appeared and we were disarmed and taken away. We were kept separated as we were interviewed – I called it interrogated – by French and British security services. I was stripped, showered, medically inspected, and then dressed again in new clothes. I was provided with paperwork which identified who I was. Somehow, they knew who I really was – they knew that I was not Harper Brown. I had forgotten what my birth name was and I was surprised to be told that I was born Harper Sharp.

I was also surprised to be told that I had an older sister who would take care of me. Nobody would tell me what had happened to my parents and I eventually gave up asking. I had not recognised Keira for who she was and it had taken a day or two to remember her as Keira showed me photos of us growing up together.

Strangely, I was not shown any photos of our parents.

Safehouse F The Armoury

"One more thing, Mindy . . ." Keira asked as they headed into the Armoury.

"Oh?" Mindy enquired.

"The swearing – what can I do about it?"

"Yeah – me too," Cassie added with a glare at the three girls.

There was laughter as Harper, Naomi, and Kaitlin blushed. Mindy grinned.

"I have a perfect solution for that – in fact, I can personally vouch for its effectiveness."

"Oh, you three have had it!" Stephanie growled. "You all get pocket money?"

"When we're good," Kaitlin muttered grudgingly.

"Well, say goodbye to it," Stephanie warned in a slightly disgusted tone.

Mindy had vanished but she soon returned with a large tin in her hands. The tin jangled and clinked. Stephanie scowled at it and she backed away like it was something evil.

"The swear jar!" Mindy said proudly. "Rakes in hundreds a month, guaranteed. I keep one everywhere Stephanie goes. Marty is working on one that can take cards."

"Don't forget that you lost four-hundred and eighty bucks last month across various jars, mother dearest," Stephanie reminded Mindy with a sly grin.

"I like to set a good example," Mindy retorted sourly.

..._...

Everybody gathered around the large central steel table in the Armoury. The three girls stood at one side with Stephanie to their right and Cassie to their left. Mindy was opposite them, with Chloe beside her. Keira and Sarah stood together beside Chloe.

"Okay, girls. Don't worry about the questions. I just want to find out what you know and what you can do. Last night, we saw that you can all handle the hand-to-hand aspects; now for the firearms."

Mindy placed a pistol down before Harper.

"Beretta PX4 Storm," the young girl commented.

Another pistol was placed before Naomi.

"FN Five-seveN Mk2," Naomi yawned.

Mindy smirked at Kaitlin as she placed one before her. Kaitlin rolled her eyes.

"That the best you've got? A SIG Sauer P238 in Desert?"

Chloe chuckled. Mindy laughed.

"Which pistols did you prefer to shoot with, girls?"

"S&W M&P 22 Compact," Kaitlin offered.

Chloe walked over to the rack of pistols and selected a black pistol which replaced the P238.

"SIG Sauer P938 BRG," Naomi responded.

Chloe again walked over to the rack and she retrieved the mentioned pistol and swapped it for the FN.

"SIG Sauer P238 Combat," was Harper's selection.

Once Chloe had swapped the PX4 for the P238, Mindy instructed the girls to pick up their allocated weapons. Chloe, Stephanie, and Mindy watched very closely as each girl picked up the pistol, ejected the magazine, pulled back the slide and visually checked the breech before releasing the slide, reinserting the empty magazine and clearing the action.

"Thank you, girls, that was very well done. If any one of you had not cleared your weapon, I would have taken it from you and you would not touch a weapon until suitably trained."

The three girls smiled at the praise.

"Now, follow me to the range. Naomi, stay with Stephanie. Kaitlin, you're with Chloe. Harper, with me. Take your pistols with you."

The Range

"Okay, girls. I assume you each know how to behave with live ammunition on a range?"

"Yes, Mindy," the three girls replied together.

The demeanour of the three girls had changed dramatically once the firearms had come into play; they were all business and there had been no messing about or giggling. Joshua placed a box of the correct ammunition beside the first three firing points and the girls each placed their pistols down in front of them.

"I am the Range Safety Officer. Headsets on, please," Joshua ordered and everybody present picked up a set of ear defenders.

The headsets had built-in communications allowing everybody to converse despite the anticipated background noise.

"Girls, load your magazine with five rounds each, please. Do not insert the magazine. Raise your right hand once ready."

Within thirty seconds, three hands were raised in the air. There had been no rushing as each girl had carefully loaded five rounds into their previously ejected magazines.

"Err, Mindy?" Harper piped up. "Who's the guy on the target?"

Each target was a full colour, full scale, face on body form.

"Oh, that's a good friend of mine – Dave and I find that him being the target improves our aim. His name was Frank D'Amico."

"Oh – was he a bad guy?" Naomi asked.

"The worst," Mindy stated.

"Dead?" Kaitlin asked.

"Yes."

"Did you kill him?"

"No. Dave did – with a bazooka."

Three young heads and one older one snapped around and said in unison, "A bazooka?"

"Oh, yeah."

"Ladies, please insert your magazine, keeping your weapon pointed down range at all times and ensure that you are using the fitted safety devices," Joshua intoned as he watched the girls intently. "Five rounds . . . in your own time . . . commence firing!"

..._...

Each girl took up their preferred firing stance with their pistols pointed down the range. Naomi appeared to favour 'The Fighting Stance', while her younger cousin used the simpler 'Weaver Stance'. Harper stood facing the wall to her left, her right arm elevated horizontally and her right hand pointing at the target, her feet wide apart. She expertly controlled the recoil as she aimed and squeezed off five shots before the slide of her pistol locked back on an empty magazine. The two cousins were equally expert, although Kaitlin was a way behind the older girls but the quality of her shooting was high.

"Cease firing! Clear all weapons!" Joshua ordered and the girls did exactly that, clearing their weapons and placing them down in front of them with their hands in clear sight.

The targets came down the range on runners and stopped before each firer. Mindy walked behind each girl and checked the target. Kaitlin's shots were spaced out but all five were on the target and had scored.

"Well done, Kaitlin, we need to work on your spacing."

Next, was Naomi. Her target grouping was closer together and accurate. All five rounds were in the target's chest area.

"Nice grouping, Naomi."

Harper was last. Mindy grinned as she saw all five rounds, tightly grouped . . . in the man's groin.

"Nasty!" Joshua commented and everybody laughed.

"You appear to have issues, Harper, but your shooting is spot on!" Mindy commented as the girl blushed.

Mindy allowed the girls to shoot for another half-hour. The girls enjoyed themselves greatly and both Keira and Sarah got in a few magazines each. Both were qualified on pistols as per their Royal Navy training. The two Royal Navy officers were both trained in the use of the Glock 17 Gen4 pistol and both shot with the Glock very well.

One all were finished on the range, everybody retired to the Galley for some much-needed sustenance.

The Galley

"Why do the girls revere you so much, Stephanie?"

The ten-year-old looked up at Keira and smiled darkly.

"When I was eight, I killed a twelve-year-old girl in the shower. We were both naked at the time. She attacked me – so I killed her. The establishment rewarded me by giving me my codename early. Then I kind of left the program – I was marked as a traitor and marked for death. Saoirse? She was intended to be my nemesis. She tried to kill me three times. How she failed, I will never know?"

"You were too good for me, Steph," Saoirse chipped in.

"You're friends?" Keira asked slightly incredulously.

"We have to be. There's not many like us – Naomi, Kaitlin, and Harper; they have each other and I have Saoirse. Behind Mum and Dad, and my brother and sister, she's the most important person in my life."

Saoirse blushed at the compliment.

"I'm struggling to understand what all you girls went through. I just can't imagine the hardships . . ." Keira said with a pained expression.

"Thanks to Mindy and her team, that is all history. We can try and get back to a normal life. Only, that isn't possible. We are all damaged and we all have certain . . . urges, I suppose . . . that need to be fulfilled," Stephanie explained. "Being a vigilante helps to focus our skills down the correct track; using those skills for good, rather than for bad as was originally intended."

"I understand that Harper will never go back to the way she used to be before. But are there any chances of her going crazy; I understand Kaitlin went a little bit nuts one evening, back in Scotland."

Kaitlin growled and scowled as Cassie laughed.

"That's one way to put it!" she replied. "Kaitlin, just like the other girls, needed an outlet for her pent-up energy and rage. We never realised until Kaitlin wrecked that Police BMW. That was why we looked to arrange this visit. We had hoped that the girls could lead normal-ish lives, but that did not seem to be on the books, so we decided to show them Vengeance and Fusion."

"This is a kind of interview, I suppose," Mindy said as she looked at the three girls and Keira. "From what I have seen, so far, you three are perfect. But . . ."

"But?" Kaitlin asked.

"It is voluntary. Nobody can force any of you to risk your lives as vigilantes. However, there are rules to being a Vengeance or Fusion vigilante. You break the rules, or you ignore them, people die. Do you understand that?"

The three girls nodded seriously.

"How about some fun?" Mindy finished.

Chapter 288*: The Bunker

Saturday, 18th June
Mid-afternoon

Safehouse F

As the three girls filed out and headed down to the mat, I was talking with Keira when I was interrupted by a voice.

"Mommy!"

I looked up in surprise to see it was Stephanie – she was faking an appalling American accent. I knew that she was perfectly capable of producing a very convincing accent when required – she would often mimic Anne-Marie, much to the younger girl's annoyance.

"Could we have a Predator sleep over, please?"

"That sounds like a disaster waiting to happen!" I commented.

Stephanie grinned.

"I want to spend some time with the girls."

"Only 'cause they worship Psyche!" Saoirse commented.

"They do not!"

"Stephanie, your head has swelled along with your ego, ever since they arrived."

"It has not!"

"Stephanie, I know you. I know everything about you," Saoirse went on. "I know that you love the attention . . . you know something, Steph? You are so much like Mindy that you really could be her daughter."

Stephanie beamed with pride at the compliment and I had to admit that I was beaming too.

The Mat

"What 'fun' are we going to have?" Naomi asked.

"I suppose you could all try out my new Fusion Training Centre," I mused.

"What's that?" Stephanie asked in surprise.

"Something that the senior staff have been cooking up," Mindy commented with a sly grin towards Chloe.

"Where is it?" Stephanie continued.

"Saoirse will show you."

"She knows and I don't?" Stephanie bristled.

"I wanted it to be a surprise, Steph," I replied evenly.

"Phase 3!" Saoirse reminded her tetchy friend and the younger girls all snickered.

"One of these days, SD . . ." Stephanie warned and the older Predator just smirked.

"Steph, please take the three Brits with you. Get them changed and equipped for their baptism of fire," I ordered.

Stephanie smiled and she led the girls over to the changing rooms where she found Lauren and Megan awaiting them.

"Okay, girls," Megan announced. "Strip out of them clothes and we'll dress you for battle."

..._...

Forty minutes later, the four Predators reappeared from the changing rooms.

Each of the four girls was equipped with a flak jacket, integrated communications, an ASP, and a pistol loaded with blank rounds plus several spare magazines. The three younger girls each wore a plain mask while Stephanie wore her own, Psyche, mask.

The girls were led across the Safehouse towards the opposite corner, then through the shield and into the Engineering Store. They passed through a large steel hatchway and then down a long concrete corridor.

"Where, are we being taken?" Kaitlin asked.

"I dread to think," Stephanie complained.

Finally, they were stopped before a hatch and they found Abby waiting for them. She opened the hatch and waved them through.

"Welcome!" Abby grinned. "Welcome to Hit Girl's House of Horrors!"

Fusion Training Center

Beyond the hatch, they found a large space with a comfortable seating and a briefing area.

Mindy was there to greet them.

"Please sit down, girls, and you can remove your masks – you too, Steph. Harper, you will be team leader with Stephanie as your number two. Stephanie will stop you if anything dangerous occurs and you will defer to her in that situation, is that understood?"

"Yes, Mindy."

"I do so hate having to dispose of bodies . . ."

Kaitlin grinned.

"Who are we fighting and what is the mission?" she asked.

"This is not training," Mindy replied. "This is just to see what you can really do as a team. Show off your skills, if you like. Kaitlin, I know that you are younger and less experienced so defer to the other girls and enjoy yourself. I will not tell you what is ahead – I want to see how you respond to the unexpected. You will be attacked; I can promise you that. Now go and have some fun, girls!"

..._...

The four girls pulled on their masks and Mindy pointed them towards a red hatchway. Just before they passed through the door, Stephanie pulled the three girls to one side.

"A word of warning to each of you. Remember who set this place up and who is pulling the strings."

"It's just for fun, isn't it?" Kaitlin asked innocently.

Stephanie laughed sardonically.

"Hit Girl's idea of fun is very different than what even us Predators see as fun!" Stephanie pointed out.

"Such as . . ." Naomi hinted.

"Live bombs during training, for one . . . I also ended up stark naked during one little episode . . ."

"You gotta tell us that story!" Harper chuckled.

"If we're still alive after Hit Girl's had her fun, then I'll tell you tonight."

Harper breathed in deeply before she gave her first order of the day.

"Form up – keep in touch and cover each other's backs. Prowl, take point."

The four girls pulled out their pistols and stood in line with Prowl at the front of the line, Polaris behind, followed by Glide, and then Psyche. Prowl heaved open the door and the four girls moved into the dark void that was Hit Girl's personal hell . . .

Fusion Training Center Control Room

Once the four girls had vanished through the red hatch, Keira, Sarah, and Chloe appeared.

"Come and see what a Predator can really do, Keira. Sarah, come and see your sister in action."

Mindy led them through a secured hatch which required a swipe card to open. Inside was a large room with an array of large monitors. Abby was seated at a control console off to the right-hand side of the room.

"The training zone is spread over two levels and eighteen compartments. Every compartment is different depending on the scenario. We can have darkness, dazzling light, heat, cold . . . even rain. There are trap-doors, concealed hatch, hidden passageways. 'Enemy' can appear and disappear at will and we can raise hell wherever we wish," Mindy explained. "We call it 'The Bunker'."

"Is it dangerous?" Sarah asked as she watched the four girls moving through almost total darkness on a screen before her.

"Oh, yes – most definitely," Mindy replied with an evil grin.

Sarah grimaced, as did Keira.

The Bunker

"I don't like this . . ."

"Where's your fucking balls, Glide?" Polaris growled.

"I left them in my locker," Glide replied and Prowl giggled.

"Focus, people!" Psyche suggested.

The corridor they were in was a hundred yards long and bathed in dull green illumination. They kept a good eye ahead and behind, especially Psyche; she knew how much of an evil bitch Hit Girl was . . .

BANG! BANG! BANG!

The four girls ran for their lives as the three loud bangs were set off a few yards behind them filling the corridor with an opaque smoke. At the end of the corridor, to their left, they found a large steel hatch which was partially open. Ahead was a concrete wall. Prowl raised her left hand which was clenched in a fist – 'STOP!'. The other three girls stopped while Psyche covered their rear with her pistol pointing into the smoke which worked its way towards them. Prowl examined the hatch carefully for any sign of trip wires or explosives. Prowl turned to Polaris and nodded that all was clear. Polaris passed that all was clear and they began to move through the hatch.

First Prowl, then Polaris were through. Just as Glide put a foot through, Prowl screamed out as somebody grabbed her left arm and yanked her into the shadows.

Polaris turned towards her friend and yelled out a warning to the rest of her team.

A shape came out of the darkness towards her and Polaris simply squeezed the trigger of her pistol twice and the 'shape' dropped to the ground. In the flashes of her gunshots, Prowl could be seen on the floor clambering back to her feet.

"You okay?" Polaris asked as she kicked the 'dead' body and elicited a yell of pain.

"I'm still alive no thanks to fuck face down there!" Prowl retorted as she purposefully stepped on the same 'dead' body.

Fusion Training Center Control Room

"I'd stay down a bit longer, Jackal!"

"Not fucking funny, Hit Bitch – I'm gonna kill that fucking Polaris!" Jackal growled with humour in his voice.

"Yay!" Keira grinned as he sister rapidly took charge of the team and formed them back up again.

"First blood to Polaris," Hal announced from the console.

As Keira watched the screens, the four Predators moved deeper into the facility. The first door to the left was locked but they paused as they found a set of double doors blocking their progress forward.

"Hold position, Petra!" Hit Girl ordered with a smirk. "They're just on the other side of the door . . ."

"What's Psyche found?" Sarah asked as the vigilante picked something up off the ground. "Is that s shotgun?"

"Mossberg 400 Tactical – Chainsaw," Hit Girl advised. "Should take the hinges off if she's careful. Only two breaching rounds are loaded."

"Did you just say breaching rounds?" Petra demanded.

"I'd keep that pretty little head down, Petra!" Hal suggested as Psyche raised the shotgun and blew out the top hinge and then did the same to the lower hinge.

The heavy door fell on top of Petra who yelled obscenities to anybody who would listen, "I fucking hate you, Hit Girl!"

Prowl led the team onwards as Psyche dropped the empty shotgun beside the hapless Petra.

The Bunker

The lights in the corridor flickered in an apparently random sequence of flashes.

The corridor was long and dark in places. While Prowl kept an eye open on the forbidding corridor ahead, Polaris turned her attentions to the next set of double doors to the left. The doors were partially ajar and the nine-year-old took her time to peer through into the room beyond. It was a dormitory with about ten beds, five to a side. The lights flickered just as they were in the corridor outside.

"I go in, followed by Psyche and Glide," Polaris ordered and she received nods in response.

Polaris turned back to the trapped Petra who was playing 'dead'. Polaris spied a pair of flashbangs on the vigilante's belt which she quickly appropriated. She was not falling for another of Hit Girl's traps . . .

"Fire in the hole!" Polaris hissed as she pulled a pin and threw one of the elongated canisters into the dormitory. Everybody turned away and hid their eyes.

There was a loud bang and a bright flash of white light.

"Go!"

Polaris pushed through the doors followed by Psyche and Glide. As they passed the second pair of beds, the first pair seemed to rise into the air as they were thrown to one side and two dark forms stepped out and span a pair of wooden jō-staffs around in a decidedly disconcerting manner.

..._...

Polaris deployed her ASP and immediately went on the offensive attacking the form to her left. Psyche and Glide both followed suit with their own ASPs. They attacked the girl to the right just as a yell was heard in the corridor outside and Prowl was attacked by another armoured form armed with a bokken. All four Predators were fighting as hard as they could to defeat the unexpected attacks that had come out of the darkness.

Out in the corridor, alone, Prowl felt no fear as she deployed her ASP and fended off the attack from the unknown form. To Prowl, it was business, as she took in her attacker's movements and examined her skill level. The attacker was not a professional fighter by any means, maybe an early-level Phase 1 equivalent. Prowl quickly gauged her attacker and thrust forwards.

Back in the dormitory, Glide was having the time of her life. So what, if her attacker was over a foot taller than her and armed with a five-foot weapon longer than she was tall; she used her speed and agility to attack with the ASP and more than once she heard a yell of pain from the attacker. Psyche dodged around the fleeting Glide to strike against the unknown assailant. Psyche was not happy; who were these two, they were not members of Fusion. Where'd the bloody hell did they come from; 1-800-rent-a-vigilante? Whatever . . . they were going down!

Polaris was letting everything out as she fought her attacker single-handed. Her ASP flashed in the lights and struck hard and with meaning. Polaris ducked to avoid the equally painful jō-staff as it was wielded with extreme skill. Who the heck was the person behind the jō-staff; they were damn good! The fight was turning in Polaris' favour but then, out of nowhere, there was a flash of light and smoke spread throughout the dormitory.

"Sound off!" Polaris ordered.

"Prowl intact and out of contact!"

"Glide intact and out of contact!"

"Psyche confused but out of contact . . ."

As the smoke dissipated the Predators were very much alone.

Fusion Training Center Control Room

"This fucking sucks!" Glide yelled out.

"Little girls had enough, yet?" Hit Girl said calmly into the microphone.

"Just wait till I get my hands on you, you fucking . . ." Glide began before Prowl put a hand over the younger girl's mouth.

"Eat this, Hit Girl!" Polaris growled as she raised a single finger into the air. "I'm going to enjoy shoving this ASP up your tight dripping . . ."

"Time to move!" Psyche suggested loudly and the four girls ran out of the dormitory.

"Colourful . . ." Keira mused as Hit Girl laughed out loud.

"Now for the good part, Sarah . . ." Hit Girl mused. "The Predator's Nemesis awaits them . . ."

..._...

The four girls moved together down the corridor into the darkness; their pistols raised before them, the ASPs stowed.

"Come hither, little Predators . . . I'm going to slice you and I'm going to fuck you up . . ."

A dark shadow emerged into the light ahead. The light reflected on the dull yellow highlights while the dark grey armour blended into the darkness. The girls began to open fire with their pistols but the armoured assassin simply flipped sideways into a doorway. The girls feverishly reloaded and they each turned their attentions to a door on their right. The room was in darkness.

"Come hither, little Predators . . . I'm gonna make you run . . . I'm gonna show how fucking useless you pussy Predators are . . ."

Glide bolted forwards as the anger surged within her.

"No!" Polaris yelled out but to no avail.

The remaining members of the team ran after their comrade-in-arms; they had no choice.

..._...

It all began to go wrong – for the Predators . . .

Glide was kicked down and she fell backwards into some chairs as Nemesis emerged from the darkness. She yelled out, shocked that she had been put down so easily. Prowl covered for Glide as Psyche pulled the fallen Predator to her feet. Prowl kicked and punched for all she was worth. Hardly any strikes got through. The longer arms of Nemesis allowed her to strike but keep the younger girls at arms-length. Nemesis barely noticed Polaris outflanking her to the right, an ASP raised in each hand.

Nemesis kicked Prowl away and she drew a long, thin, bokken from her back. Polaris struck with both ASPs and Nemesis skilfully deflected the nine-year-old Phase 2 Predator. Psyche joined the action and attacked with her own ASP. Nemesis drew a shorter bokken from her left boot and fended off the strike before she kicked Polaris into Psyche and both went down hard and collided with a group of tables and chairs. Prowl and Glide came in hard and together, they worked as a team, attacking and dodging as they jumped over the tables and chairs, using them to good effect as they went.

Prowl heaved a chair at Nemesis who smashed it to one side with her armoured gauntlet. Glide made a good effort to distract Nemesis while Prowl went in hard and fast striking at Nemesis in every way that she could. The nine-year-old landed strike after strike on the nineteen-year-old vigilante as Glide kept moving in and out of Nemesis' reach. Then Nemesis struck out and she kicked Prowl and Glide to the floor. Polaris and Psyche came in for an attack which Nemesis dodged . . . and then she was gone only to be replaced by a hissing voice from the corridor.

"Oh, little Predators . . . the bitch has arrived to bring about the endgame . . ."

The Bunker

Psyche groaned – it had to be Hit Girl!

Polaris reassembled her team and after a brief check for injuries, they moved off but they paused at the door to the passageway. Prowl used a mirror from her jacket to peer down the passageway to the right. A single shape was visible.

"The little Predators are scared . . ." the electronically enhanced voice taunted.

"Fuck this!" Polaris growled. "Everybody ready?"

"Let's get the fucking bitch!" Glide responded.

"Ready?" Psyche enquired.

"Let's do it!" Prowl finished.

Fusion Training Center Control Room

The four girls exploded out of the doorway mere seconds after Polaris threw the remaining flash-bang into the passageway.

Once the camera had readjusted from the bright flash, the Predators were seen to be advancing on the single armoured vigilante who stood alone in the corridor. The individual was not tall and she had her arms crossed over her chest with the armoured gauntlets resting on her shoulder-blades. Hal manipulated the lighting in the corridor to illuminate the upper half of the vigilante's body. There was a brief flash as the bright lights reflected off two triple sets of lethal-looking claws which deployed from either gauntlet.

"Fuck!" Psyche was heard to growl. "Wildcat!"

"Isn't that dangerous – her using those claws?" Sarah asked with a worried voice.

"Nah," Hal responded. "Wildcat is using her training gauntlets – not that the other girls have any idea; they're brand new!"

Wildcat stood her ground as the Predators advanced.

Polaris

I was a little scared.

Wildcat had a reputation. Good or bad? That depended on whether or not you were her friend or an enemy. Those claws looked lethal and I was surprised that Hit Girl allowed them to be used in training – but Psyche had warned us of Hit Girl's 'training' ideas.

"Psyche – take Glide and attack from the left. Prowl and I will come from the right."

"Copy that!" came the three responses.

"Time for some kitty behaviour training!" I growled out loud as I approached.

"Time for little pussy Predators to be put in their fucking places before they hurt themselves!" Wildcat taunted.

With a yell, I bolted forwards and jumped to the right. I planted my right foot onto the corridor wall and pushed off. I swung past Wildcat and took my ASP across her left shoulder blade. Prowl struck her ASP into Wildcat's left lower arm as she moved her claws to intercept. Simultaneously, Psyche and Glide attacked from the left. Glide used her small size to slide between Wildcat's legs and strike from the rear with her ASP. She struck the insides of both thighs plus an additional swipe at a more sensitive region.

Wildcat yelled out – not from pain; she was sufficiently armoured where it mattered but she was incensed that the littlest Predator would attack her snatch.

Psyche

"Good shot, Glide!" I yelled out as I saw the third strike hit home.

The kitty was not amused and the language was bordering on that which would make Hit Girl blush. I took my ASP across Wildcat's right shoulder blade and kicked my knee into her right side. The lethal claws whipped past my eyes as Wildcat struck out at me but then her right elbow shoved me into the wall and I collapsed to the ground.

I heard a scream and I saw Glide kicked to one side and then a double scream as Prowl landed on top of Glide. I ran to pull the two girls back to their feet as Polaris covered but she was quickly flipped over onto her back and brought down hard. We moved away to regroup while Wildcat just stood her ground and watched.

I nodded at Polaris, Prowl, and Glide. We all ran forwards with Polaris and me in front. We had just started to run towards Wildcat when to my surprise, Wildcat began to charge us!

Glide

Wildcat was charging and I had a feeling that she was pissed – might have been something to do with me taking the ASP across her twat . . . just maybe.

Polaris and Psyche were just feet from the charging Wildcat when the feline vigilante dived over us all – I was stunned and my awe pretty much killed me as Wildcat grabbed me and 'blew my brains out across the corridor' with her pistol.

"Glide is dead!" came a voice from the Control Room.

"Fuck!" I growled as I 'played dead'.

Prowl

My cousin had just been killed and I outlived her by about forty-five seconds as Wildcat took the claws of her left hand across my throat.

I thought I was a gonna for real, but the claws were a tough rubber and not their usual titanium. Nonetheless, I 'died'.

"Prowl is dead!"

Fusion Training Center Control Room

"Two down, two to go . . .," Hit Girl chuckled.

As Sarah and Keira watched the screens in stunned silence, Wildcat expertly backflipped away from Psyche and Polaris.

"Her signature move," Hit Girl commented.

"Nice!" Keira replied.

Before either Psyche or Polaris could respond, two dark shapes emerged from nowhere and the throats of both Predators were 'cut' from behind.

"Thank you – the training session is over," Hit Girl called over the comms. "All Predators please report back to the start."

..._...

Psyche and Polaris felt the 'knives' removed from their necks and they turned to find an empty corridor.

"What the fuck?" Polaris growled.

"Told you this place was fucking nuts!" Psyche chuckled.

"It was fun . . ." Glide commented.

"I'm gonna be sore in a few hours . . ." Prowl added.

A minute later, the four Predators stood in the darkness near to the start of The Bunker and they pulled off their masks. There were four bright flashes and then four gunshots rang out and the four girls fell backwards onto the floor. They all sat up rubbing their chests and looking very annoyed. Mindy, Keira, Sarah, and Cassie, all lowered their pistols and smirked at the girls.

"That was for the annoying behaviour on the plane!" Keira commented with a smile for her sister.

"Not fair!" Harper muttered as she glared daggers at her big sister.

"What have I ever done to any of you?" Kaitlin pouted as she stood up.

"You opened your mouth!" Naomi laughed. "That was fun . . . can we do it again?"

"I hate you, Mum!" Stephanie growled from the floor.

"I did nothing," Mindy said sweetly and Stephanie scowled.

Bang!

Stephanie yelled out as another bullet hit her armour. Mindy casually blew away the muzzle smoke from her pistol.

..._...

As the four girls were helped to their feet, two more individuals entered the room. Both were tall and masked. They wore dark grey body armour and each had a pistol in a holster plus a wooden jō-staff in their left hands. The two new arrivals pulled off their masks to reveal the smirking faces of two near identical teenaged girls.

"Everybody, please meet Sky and Chrissy, otherwise known as Venom and Bane," Mindy explained. "Venom and Bane were both Phase 3 Predators."

"Hi," the four girls said together.

"Hi – you all fought well," Sky offered with a friendly smile.

"Well fought, Psyche; we've heard a lot about you," Chrissy smiled.

"Well fought the both of you," Stephanie replied with a grin. "Where'd you both come from, anyway?"

"A story for later, Steph," Mindy replied. "Let's get cleaned up and we can debrief over some food."

"I'm starving!" Harper complained.

"What's new!" Keira grunted.

Chapter 289*: The Killing Room

Saturday, 18th June, 2016
Early evening

Safehouse F
The Changing Room

"That was fun, but this bruise sucks!" Kaitlin moaned as she examined her chest while she enjoyed the soothing hot water of the shower.

"I've got two of the sodding things!" Stephanie chipped in from another shower.

"No pain no gain," Harper offered reasonably from her shower.

"I'll agree with that," Naomi agreed as she washed the shampoo from her hair and looked down at her own bruised chest.

"I think you all did very well," Megan commented as she got changed out of her combat suit. "I hope I didn't hurt any of you . . ."

"We're fine," Stephanie replied with a chuckle. "Us Predators are tougher than you think."

"Damn straight!" Kaitlin agreed and everybody laughed.

"Well done, girls!" Mindy announced as everybody gathered for the debrief.

The three Vengeance girls appeared very happy with themselves, as was the lone Fusion girl. Seated behind them, Megan, Chrissy, Sky, Cassie, and Hailee all smirked.

"The four of you got your asses kicked but we were unfair in our methods. Did you each learn something, today?"

"We learnt that you're a conniving bitch!" Harper announced.

"Harper!" Keira growled.

"Sorry," Harper offered.

"Don't be," Mindy replied with a laugh. "I am what I am!"

"Tell me about it!" Stephanie muttered to general laughter.

"I threw real vigilantes at you: Jackal, Petra, Venom, Bane, Nemesis, Wildcat – they all enjoyed having some fun . . ."

"Until somebody dropped a damn door on me!" Hailee grunted.

"It was fun," Stephanie laughed. "Thanks for the flash-bangs!"

"I could have taken you down, Wildcat," Naomi commented smugly.

"Never in a million years!" Megan sneered back.

"A standard Predator tactic – it's called a Pyrrhic Victory; the idea is to inflict devastating damage on the victor which then turns victory into instant defeat," Naomi explained and Megan winced. "Drop a frag as you go down . . ."

"She's correct," Stephanie confirmed. "Taught towards the end of Phase 1."

"Not bad, Naomi – now," Mindy went on. "I've been talking to the Vengeance Management . . . and they have seen fit to expand their ranks. There will be a lot of training ahead, girls – you want in?"

The grins on the faces of the three young girls gave their answer. Cameron and Natasha both stood up and moved to stand next to Mindy.

"Crimson and Drift, please, the floor is yours," Mindy finished.

..._...

"Let's start with Glide – front and centre!"

Kaitlin looked a little worried for a second before she sprang up and stood before the two Vengeance commanders. Crimson grinned as she handed over a small card to the grinning girl. The card was a pale blue with a pair of narrow red stripes across the top-right and top-left corners. In the centre, was the Vengeance symbol, a pair of sabres with the points together and the hilts angled out to form the V of Vengeance. A QR code featured in the bottom-left corner along with a code along the top and right side. The top-left corner of the card bore a single gold stripe with a red border as worn by a Royal Marines Commando Lance Corporal. In the bottom-right corner, there was a name: GLIDE.

"Welcome to Vengeance, Trainee Operator Glide."

The eight-year-old blushed furiously and she giggled before she ran back to her seat where Stephanie examined the access card.

"Prowl! Front and centre!"

Naomi was blushing before she even reached Crimson who handed her an almost identical card but for the name in the bottom-right corner: PROWL.

"Welcome to Vengeance, Trainee Operator Prowl."

The girl flushed bright red but she smiled enormously as she also ran back to sit next to her cousin where they instantly compared their access cards and Harper began to fidget badly.

"Polaris! Front and centre!"

Harper jumped up and ran forwards, her face set in an enormous shit-eating grin. The card which Crimson proffered differed from that of the other two girls. Instead of the single stripe, a single 'pip' was present in the top-left corner. Her name was present in the bottom-right: POLARIS.

"Welcome to Vengeance, Senior Trainee Operator Polaris."

Kaitlin cheered which caused Harper to blush a bright pink as she jogged over to sit with her sister who gave her little sister a big hug.

"Finally – Scorpion! Front and centre!"

Keira almost jumped as her name was called out.

Her expression said, 'Me?'

Mindy nodded and with a friendly shove from Harper, Keira stood up and walked over to Cameron who held another blue card. This card bore three vertical pips at the top-right corner, plus her name: SCORPION, at the bottom right. However, it also bore a set of naval-aviator wings above her name.

"Welcome to Vengeance, Operator Scorpion."

Harper screamed louder than the rest put together as her sister blushed a bright red.

Safehouse F Level 2

After we had all eaten, Harper came up to me.

"Hi, Harper, how you doing?"

"Thank you, Mindy, for everything. I have had the most amazing couple of days and I know that I have many more ahead of me."

"I enjoyed seeing what you girls could do and I am very pleased that I could help in giving each of you a new life. I know what it is like to have skills that take over your senses and emotions. It is very hard."

"Mindy . . . do you know what happened to my Mum and Dad?"

..._...

I wished so badly that Harper had not asked that question but no matter what I thought about it, I could not lie to the girl. I looked over the railing and I saw the two girls I was looking for talking together below.

"Saoirse! Stephanie! Up here, please."

The two girls quickly ran up the nearest set of steel stairs and skidded to a halt before Harper and me. Saoirse gave me a strange look – I had no idea what my expression was, but it was probably full of sorrow; that was how I felt.

Both Saoirse and Stephanie were worried by the expression on Mindy's face.

"Harper has asked if I know what happened to her parents," Mindy explained simply.

The colour drained from Stephanie's face, as it did from Saoirse's. Both looked appalled by the very thought – but both knew that it had to be done.

"We both found out in the most horrific way possible," Stephanie said. "Which ever way Harper finds out, will be bad, but maybe we can limit this."

Mindy looked at her two Predators and she felt so much compassion for the two girls. Yes, she had lost her parents, just as they had. Only Mindy had never known her mother, but she had been there when her daddy had been killed. She knew what it was like to have lost both parents, but she had no idea what it was like to know that you had killed both of them in cold blood.

"What's going on?" Keira asked as she came up to the little group.

..._...

Mindy was struggling with how her day had suddenly changed. How did you explain to a person that the person they loved; their sister, killed the only two other people in life that you loved even more?

"Harper has asked if I know how your parents died . . . I do. It is truly horrifying and that is coming from me, Hit Girl; I find it horrifying and disturbing! That should give you an idea that what happened was bad. Now, I have never told my own daughter this, let alone Saoirse. I hoped it would never come up. Saoirse, Stephanie? The CIA recorded those deaths, each and every time. Marty discovered the recordings about a month ago. I apologise for not telling you both, but I hated Stephanie going through that event herself, the first time, and the same with Saoirse."

"I never want to see that," Stephanie said quietly and Saoirse nodded in agreement. "But I think Harper should. She has no idea what happened and she needs to know . . . and so does Keira."

"She's right," Saoirse admitted as she smiled at Stephanie. "We'll both be there for Harper . . . and for Keira."

Stephanie nodded as Mindy turned to Keira.

"I can't help you with this, but these two can. Keira, I want you to promise me one thing – you will not judge."

"I . . . okay . . ." Keira said quietly as Mindy led everybody into the Briefing Room.

"Lock it up!" Mindy shouted down to the Control Centre and Abby nodded.

Several seconds later, a steel shutter descended to shut off all access to the Briefing Room and ensure complete and total privacy.

The Film

The film began by showing an empty room.

The room was small but very stark. It looked like an examination room in just about any hospital. Against one wall was one of those wheeled hospital beds. In the middle of the room was a metal desk with a computer workstation sitting atop it. Over in the farthest corner, there were two occupied chairs; two adults sat on them, a male and a female.

The door to the room was both seen and heard to open and two people entered the room. One was a middle-aged woman; she was tall, thin, and horse-faced with greying dark hair. The other was a very young, dark-haired girl of maybe eight-years-old. The girl looked around as she took in her surroundings . . . it was Harper! The woman began to speak in a throaty voice with a British accent.

"In this program, you will save the lives of our citizens . . ."

It was a lecture about patriotism, national pride, and saving lives. There was much emphasis on American and British lives – no other nationalities. The woman would add extra British emphasis, presumably because of Harper's nationality.

"As part of this program, you will need to sacrifice your old life . . ."

The Briefing Room

Harper was physically shaking as she watched the scene unfold before her.

"I have no memory of that – none, none at all . . ."

"I do. I remember my own moment in that room – you are not alone, Harper," Stephanie said quietly as she sat down beside the younger girl.

The Film

The image changed to show another room, this one tiled on walls and floor with a large drain to one side. Both Stephanie and Saoirse flinched involuntarily. In the centre of the room was a large steel tank and it was full of water. Harper was hauled into the room and she was stripped of all her clothing but her knickers.

The Briefing Room

Keira screamed as Harper was pushed bodily into the tank of water, face down, by two older girls. Harper could be seen to struggle violently but she had no chance against those holding her down.

"It was so cold . . .," Harper said unbidden. "I had never felt so cold – not ever. The shock of immersion was immense and I fought against those that held me under the water. After what felt like minutes but which had to be only seconds, I was pulled up to receive air . . . then I was plunged under again – I tried to scream and I fought."

Harper could be heard screaming and retching as she was hauled out of the water. The terror in her scream was obvious in the seconds before she was shoved under again . . . and again . . . and again.

The Film

We were back in the room with the two people in the corner.

It was the same rhetoric from the woman, the same shit.

"In this program, you will save the lives of our citizens . . ."

The same lecture about patriotism, national pride, and saving lives.

"As part of this program, you will need to sacrifice your old life . . ."

..._...

The film would cut to other scenes, all showing Harper being all but tortured. She was seen screaming in a cell; she was in obvious distress as she covered her ears and hugged a corner. Then came the water tank again, then the woman and her lecture, then the cell . . .

Finally, the sequence stopped back in the room with the two people in the corner.

"An asset's greatest weakness are those who know them. People who know you can tell others about you; therefore, they must be eliminated . . ."

The woman stepped forward and she stood before Harper. The woman's arm came up and in her hand, there was a pistol. It was a Heckler & Koch P30SK.

The Briefing Room

Harper was shaking uncontrollably and sobbing, so we took a short break. Keira took a moment to get a drink and she encouraged Harper to do the same. Even Stephanie had gone white at what she was witnessing along with Saoirse who looked physically sick at what she was witnessing.

"I'm ready," Harper said weakly, several minutes later as she hung onto her sister with one hand and held Stephanie's hand with her other. "Let's get this over with."

The Film

"Take this weapon and eliminate those closest to you. When you have done so, you will leave here not as who you were, but as Harper Brown."

Without hesitation, Harper took the weapon from the woman, grip first. She hefted the pistol and she brought it up in two hands. She aimed for the two adults seated in the corner.

The Briefing Room

"It was easy to do; it just felt natural. The pistol felt right in my hand. Then, two gentle squeezes of the trigger and as the smoke from the gunshots was sucked away by the air-conditioning and the sound of the gunshots faded – two bodies lay dead before me . . . my family was dead."

We all looked at Harper as she spoke.

"The doctor walked over to them, she pulled the hoods from the heads of their slumped bodies. I had shot both of them in the head; they were instant, clean kills . . . they were my first – not that I remembered killing them."

Harper paused and her face took on a look of horror.

"I killed our parents," she whispered.

Keira was stunned – just as much as Harper.

What had she just witnessed – a double murder?

Might it have been a triple murder had she herself been there?

Uncontrolled emotions began to bubble up from deep within Keira. There was the shock. The horror. The anger. The hate. The disappointment. The sorrow. The resentment. The compassion. Then the horror again. How could Harper . . . Harper looked wretched as she looked up at her sister, her expression almost pleading as she sobbed.

"Please don't send me away . . . I didn't know what I was doing . . . I . . . please don't send me away . . ."

Keira smiled down at her little sister and she wrapped her arms around the nine-year-old and pulled her close. She then looked directly into her little sister's dark brown eyes. The tears continued to stream down Keira's face unimpeded as she spoke.

"I love you more than anything, Harper. I would never send you away; you are all I have. You had no idea what you were doing. You were brain-washed into that act. That was not you. That was not my Harper. Yes, I am appalled by what you did; but I don't blame you . . . I never will."

"You really mean that?" Harper sobbed.

"Of course, I do; you are my little sister and we will always be together, come hell or high water."

"I love you so much, Keira, and I am so happy we are back together."

"You coming back to me was my greatest wish in the whole world, Harper."

..._...

As everybody, but Keira and Harper, left the Briefing Room, Naomi and Kaitlin came running up.

"Stop!" Mindy ordered.

"What's wrong with Harper?" Naomi demanded.

"She needs to spend some alone time with her sister. Please leave them alone. Neither of you are to push her for information. Do not ask what went on in there. Harper will tell you when, and if, she feels the time is right. If I find out that you've nagged her about it – I will personally fly over to Scotland and take you both to task. Do you understand me?"

The two young girls were stunned at Mindy's tone, however, they both nodded in the affirmative as they felt a distinct chill creep up their backbones.

That night

Glenview

Against my better judgement, I allowed the sleepover.

To be honest it was against all judgment. I had to insane to allow it – maybe I was insane! Danny appeared after ten minutes.

"It's horrible!" he grimaced as he cuddled in with me on the sofa.

"What's up, champ?" Dave asked.

"Girls!"

I laughed.

"What've they done, now?"

"They tried to make me punch Megan."

"Well, why didn't you?" I asked, intrigued.

"She said she'd cut off my, you know..."

I giggled – Danny was not amused!

"Not funny . . ." Danny growled.

"They're just having a bit of fun," Dave assured his son.

"I'm a little worried about what 'fun' seven Predators, an eight-year-old, and an eleven-year-old, could be having!" I groaned.

The sleepover consisted of Stephanie, Naomi, Kaitlin, Harper, Saoirse, Sky, Chrissy, Megan, and Anne-Marie.

"So many girls is not good!" Dave chuckled.

"Tell me about it!" Danny grimaced.

I thought for a few moments.

"I'm gonna go get some Tasers . . ."

..._...

Earlier that evening, I had spoken with Cassie and Sarah. I explained what Harper had asked. Cassie had been appalled. I explained about the film – Sarah looked physically sick at the thought.

"Do you have films of Naomi and Kaitlin – well, you know . . ." Cassie had asked.

"No – Marty hasn't found them . . . yet," I had replied. "Harper will say something eventually and I'm very worried about Kaitlin; she's only eight."

"I know," Cassie has said. "It has to come out at some stage."

..._...

After retrieving a pair of Tasers and several replacement cartridges, I handed a set to Dave and then I headed upstairs to the British Sector. The noise was . . . raucous, to say the least! I could hear yells . . . squeals . . . howls of pain . . . giggles . . . 'shows over motherfuckers!' I rolled my eyes as I gently pushed open the door and . . . my view rotated violently and I found myself staring straight up at the ceiling with my back on the carpet.

"Hi, girls!"

Sky smirked down at me as she released hold of my right arm. Saoirse grinned sheepishly beside a giggling Anne-Marie.

"Hi, Mom!"

"What ya doing?" I asked casually.

"Defending the British Sector!" Stephanie chuckled.

"I knew this place was a bad idea," I growled.

"You are in our custody, Hit Girl, and you must comply . . ."

"Or what?" I demanded with an evil grin.

". . . Or I Taser your purple arse!" Megan announced as she aimed the Taser at me.

I muttered a few choice words that had Harper blushing with embarrassment and I felt myself hauled up and pushed onto the bed. I was allowed to sit up and then Saoirse smiled at me.

"We order you to answer some questions, Hit Girl; you make a mistake . . ."

"I'm itching to use this . . ." Megan grinned as she toted the Taser in her hands.

"Bring it on!" I growled.

The British Sector

"How long," Saoirse asked with a grin, "was it between you crushing on Dave and giving him a kiss?"

Mindy saw Stephanie roll her eyes and shake her head at her friend. Anne-Marie giggled as Mindy took a deep breath.

"Four years, 4 months and 23 days – give or take an hour or two . . ."

All the girls gasped.

"That long!" Harper exclaimed.

"I was going through a phase . . . a weird phase," Mindy replied.

"What was it like?" Megan asked.

Mindy chuckled at the memory and her mind drifted back two years and almost 10 tenths.

"It was my very first kiss . . . we had just stopped the Motherfucker and I was about to leave New York forever . . ."

...+...

"I'm leaving New York, Dave. I can't go home . . . I can't put Marcus in that position."

"Woah! He won't arrest you; you just saved the city."

"Yeah, well I also killed six guys with a cop's gun – vigilantes don't get a free pass."

"You can't go; people need you."

"They've got you, now."

"I'm not like you."

"You don't have to be a badass to be a superhero, Dave, you just have to be brave . . ."

...+...

"It was very wet . . . it was the most sensual thing I had ever done in my life. But right then, I owed Dave and I so wanted it to go further . . . but Dave belonged in New York – I did not."

Mindy had the rapt attention of every girl present. Megan had lowered the Taser and she was just as enthralled as the others.

"I left New York. I was alone. I had no one. My life had been stripped from me for a second time. The solitude was becoming unbearable. I thought I knew who I was. I was alone before, after Daddy died. But at least I had had Marcus to look after me and Dave to talk to. They both knew my history; what I was. That was the first time that my life had been stripped from me. I was constantly looking back, to try and find a way that might have stopped me having to leave New York, from having to leave Dave. I hated myself for saying it, but I missed Dave. The only thing that kept me going, was remembering that kiss; my first ever kiss. I felt warm, and more than a little tingly inside every time that I remembered that kiss."

Naomi and Kaitlin giggled but stopped as Megan glared at them.

"Thinking of Dave always made me smile. I thought of what could have happened between us if I had listened to him. Instead of telling him to go to hell. What if I had kissed him much earlier, instead of just pounding his ass into the mats of the Safehouse? The solitude was killing me, from the inside. I found myself in Ohio then four weeks after leaving New York, I had found myself an apartment in Chicago. Then, just one tiny miscalculation and my attempt at being a normal human being was shattered. I was running. I was scared. I was alone. I had nothing, but the clothes on my back . . . and the blood on my hands. My safety, my freedom; it had all been forsaken."

Hardly anybody was breathing – never had so many Predators been so quiet!

"I was reduced to the Chicago underworld. I lived off drug dealers: I used them as my personal ATM. But my grip on humanity was slipping from my grasp. I had never needed to control my humanity before; I had always had somebody – Daddy, Dave, Marcus. I was turning Feral and killing for enjoyment . . . I was turning fully into Hit Girl while Mindy Macready faded from existence."

"How did you . . .?" Stephanie asked.

"Thanks, in no small part, to Marty, my knight in shining armour came looking for me . . ."

"Dave!" Anne-Marie exploded.

"Exactly right, little one. Dave found me. Only it was not the meeting you might find in some gooey chick-flick. I think my exact words when we first met were: 'What the fuck do you want? I don't need your fucking help, cunt!' . . ."

There were several intakes of astonished breath from around the bedroom.

"I sent him away . . . and I hated myself for it. Then I went and got myself shot. Dave found me, carried me back to my shithole of a room, and he tended to my wound. When I awoke, I tore into him again and I reiterated my previous comment."

Mindy flinched a bit at all the angry glares she was receiving from the assembled girls.

"Then Dave tore into me! I won't tell you what he said, but suffice to say, he got through to the bitch inside and . . . well, the rest is history and very personal! Needless to say, we all owe our lives to a guy who decided to pull on a green and yellow wetsuit then go out and fight crime on the streets of New York. Without him, I would be dead, another dead corpse on the streets of Chicago. None of what you see would ever have been created. Urban Predator would still exist and you all . . ."

". . . would be in hell," Sky finished darkly.

"We all owe our very existence to Kick-Ass," Saoirse summed up.

"I've never told that story until now. But now you all know there was a man named Dave Lizewski, and that he saved me, in every way that a person can be saved."

"Did you just quote Titanic," Chrissy asked with a smirk.

"Maybe . . ."

..._...

"I learnt how wonderful a man, Dave was. He could be loving and kind. He was also a geek! But my love grew; it had always been there, just buried. I trained him and I taught him to focus his anger . . ."

"I know!" Saoirse interrupted. "I saw Kick-Ass go ballistic when some cunt laid a hand on Psyche during the Toulouse attack. He beat the man to death. The head was like a crushed watermelon when Kick-Ass was done. Kick-Ass kept yelling about his daughter – he was like a wild animal. After Hit Girl, I'm scared of one person – Kick-Ass!"

"That's our Dad!" Stephanie grinned and Anne-Marie nodded furiously.

"Let's go thank him . . ." Anne-Marie suggested.

The Living Room

Mindy cringed as she saw the horrified look on her husband's face as he was hugged by the marauding Predators, plus his daughter and his sister-in-law!

"Thank you, Dave, for everything!" Saoirse grinned as she gave Dave a kiss on the cheek.

Danny looked totally freaked out by it all and he spoke out: "As Megan might say: What the fuck?"

Everybody laughed, including Dave.

"I told them about our first kiss and about my first trip to Chicago," Mindy said slowly. "Sorry . . ."

"Did you enjoy the story?" Dave asked with a chuckle.

"Yeah," the girls all admitted.

"Mindy learnt that she enjoyed these . . ." Dave said as he arose from the sofa. He towered over everybody as he strode over to Mindy and he wrapped his arms around her and . . .

"Ewww!"

"Disgusting!"

"Fucking awesome!"

"Cool!"

When Dave finally released Mindy, she was breathing heavily – and not just because she was out of breath!

"Damn!" Mindy groaned. "That tongue just gets longer each time!"

Stephanie cringed and led the stampede back up the staircase . . .

The British Sector

"Stephanie?" Sky asked as they re-entered the bedroom.

"Yeah?"

"You have the best parents ever."

"We do, don't we?" Stephanie replied with a grin at Anne-Marie and Megan.

The Living Room

Danny had vanished up to his bedroom leaving Dave and Mindy alone apart from Horatio who lay purring on the sofa.

"Somebody should write a story about our lives," Dave mused.

"One problem – anybody who read it? We'd have to kill them!" Mindy replied deadpan. "Plus, it would be X-rated, what with Chloe and Josh fucking every few chapters!"

"Good point . . . still, it would make a damn good read. Some funny bits too, every time you fuck up!"

"Hey! Those things I like to forget . . ."

"So," Dave asked. "What next for the mighty Fusion story, then?"

"Peace and tranquillity in Chicago?"

"With you about? Nah – if I were a betting man, I'd say the next chapter would be about Megan; she's not caused any shit for a while!"

"Good point . . ."

The following morning Sunday, 19th June

The farewell was a little tearful as Vengeance left to head for the airport and then home.

Mindy received a hug from each of the three young girls before they climbed into the SUV. Cameron and Natasha followed suit.

"You come and visit us, soon – they should have just about finished clearing up after your last visit!" Cameron joked and Mindy glared dangerously.

"We miss you, Mindy," Cassie grinned as she hugged her friend.

"You all take care – you hang in there, Harper," Mindy said.

"Thank you, Mindy," Keira smiled. "You've put my mind at rest about Harper . . . and you've given us both a future. Anything we can do, you just call."

"I will . . . count on it!"

The Vengeance storyline will continue in Chapter 8: Vengeance Expansion of Vengeance.

Chapter 290*: The Vengeful Wildcat

Sunday, 19th June, 2016
Afternoon

West Columbia

Marcus had to admit to himself that he had never thought he'd ever see the day . . .

Megan grinned up at her step-father and he felt like he had somehow drifted back a few years.

"You're gonna need a bigger jar . . ." Megan laughed as she made a vain attempt to stuff a dollar bill into the very full swear jar.

"I have to admit that I did not expect anybody to ever beat Mindy."

Megan grinned enormously.

"That is nothing to be proud of, young lady," Paige cautioned.

"It's not often I beat Mindy at anything," Megan pointed out.

"I must have been a very bad person in a former life to be punished like this," Marcus groaned.

Morton Grove

Megan was very special to me, in every way.

Most people who did not really know her found her rude and arrogant. Okay, I would be the first to admit that she had some rough edges, but I still loved her without reservation. I would always remember the first time that we met: it was just after my parents had been killed, about eighteen months ago, in Washington DC. It was a Saturday at a place called D-JAK.

...+...

"Hi, I'm Megan!"

"And I'm busy!" I replied, curtly.

"Hey! I'm trying to be nice here, ass!" Megan retorted, with quite a bit of sassy attitude.

I took a moment to look over towards Mindy before I turned back to Megan.

"Sorry, that was unfair; I'm Curtis!"

"I lost my Dad a few months ago; I'll listen if you want to talk," Megan said.

I looked at Megan, then looked over at Mindy again; I was uncertain about opening up. Finally, I smiled and Mindy nodded her encouragement so I walked over to a corner and sat down. Megan followed and she sat down across from me and then we both started to talk.

...+...

I had been taken by Megan straight away. She was funny. Her language was coarse and a little foul at times, but I had grown up around Chloe, so I was not put out. We had both been ten at the time, but I still thought Megan was cute and I loved her auburn hair. Her smile was beautiful too and I found that I could sit and listen to her talking for hours. Megan could talk for hours, too – believe me!

We began to become close. We would go everywhere together; Chloe thought it was cute. Megan was the first girl that I had seen naked other than my cousin. Megan was also the first girl to allow me to touch her – never mind where! When Megan became Wildcat for real, she changed, but only for the better in my view. My love for her grew and we were inseparable. I always hated it when Megan got hurt, as did everybody.

A lot changed in Gotham. Megan was hurt, and we both got a little carried away! That was a first for both of us. We also found it incredibly embarrassing that Erika had figured out what we had been up to almost straight away. More than once, we both got caught up to no good, but I did not care as long as I was with my Megan.

Gibraltar had been a wakeup call to us all. I had almost died until Chloe had given me the kiss of life – yuck! Megan had teased me about that kiss for quite a while which was typically Megan; that girl could find fun in the darkest of moments. I had not even started puberty the first time that I had been able to play with Megan's body. Megan had never commented on my own lack of development, just as I had not commented on hers the first time that I had seen her naked in the Medical Center of Safehouse F. Megan could be kind when she wanted to be and she always was with me.

I had done my best to help her when Paige had been shot – that was hard on us both.

"So, this is the Kitty Lair!"

"Funny!" Megan replied as she grinned at Saoirse.

"I expected less pink," Morgan commented as she looked around the room.

"You seem to have a thing for Hit Girl," Saoirse went on as she noticed the posters that adorned the walls. "Jackal, too."

"Yeah, I really had a thing for Hit Girl and Jackal, back in the day."

"She talks like a veteran!" Morgan laughed.

"I am a veteran!"

"An eleven-year-old veteran?" Saoirse queried with a chuckle.

"I've fucked up more cunts than both of you put together!"

"Feisty!" Morgan laughed and she ignored Megan's scowl.

..._...

The teenage girls began to poke around.

"Wow!" Saoirse blurted out as she dug around in a drawer. "Never knew you could get Rainbow Dash bras!"

"Get off those!" Megan retorted as she grabbed the aforementioned bra from Saoirse's hands.

"You still only a double-A, Megan?"

"Yes!" Megan scowled as her cheeks went very pink. She quickly stuffed the bra back into the drawer and slammed it shut.

"Nice choice in tampons," Morgan commented. "I use the same brand – you find them comfortable?"

"Yeah . . .," Megan groaned as Saoirse smirked.

"What's this . . .?" Saoirse muttered as she sat down on the bed. She reached under the duvet and . . .

"No!" Megan exclaimed as Saoirse examined what she had discovered.

"A dog . . . no, a kitty collar?"

"You, dark little kitty, you!" Morgan laughed as Megan blushed a bright red.

"I know nothing about it . . ." Megan tried only to receive disbelieving smirks from the two older girls.

"SD – pin her!" Morgan ordered.

The three girls scuffled on the bed for a minute but brawn overpowered size and Megan was pinned, face down on the bed, by Saoirse. Morgan placed the collar around the struggling and very mortified Megan's neck and she secured it at a well-used hole.

"Her size, too," SD chuckled.

"Now," Saoirse mused. "Is this just for when you play with your clit, alone – or is it for when Curtis comes . . ."

"Nice double entendre, SD!" Morgan laughed.

Megan shrugged knowing that she had no choice.

"The latter . . ."

"She's been spending too much time with Josh," Saoirse chuckled. "Does Chloe know what her cousin gets up to?"

"Yes, she does . . ."

"You know, Megan – all joking aside – you're a lovely girl and Curtis is a very lucky boy. As you grow up, he's going to be even luckier," Saoirse commented.

"Thanks," Megan offered grudgingly. "Please don't tell anybody about. . ."

"I'm not the total bitch that Stephanie makes me out to be, Megan," Saoirse said as she removed the collar. "We won't tell a soul – just between us girls."

"Thanks."

"I meant what I said, Megan. You're a lovely girl . . . and a great friend. You've made us both feel welcome and neither of us ever want you to change."

"Why don't we have a girls' night out – just Foxtail, Raven, and Wildcat," Morgan suggested.

"Will Mindy allow it?" Saoirse enquired doubtfully.

"She's my big sister and we're all Operators – of course she will; she can only say one word . . ."

That evening

Glenview

"NO!"

"Why not?" Megan demanded.

"It's way too dangerous out there."

"Nobody has seen FEAR in almost two weeks," Megan pointed out. "The only fun I've had all week is kicking some Brit Predator butt!"

"Megan – I don't want anything to happen to you. You're going to be twelve in less than three months and if anything should . . ."

"I'll be fine; I'll have Foxtail and Raven with me. Foxtail is way better trained than me and Raven put together."

"You want to go out on your Ducati?"

The smile said it all.

"On two conditions."

Megan groaned but nodded.

"You have backup . . . don't interrupt . . . backup which will be out of sight but close enough if trouble starts. That is non-negotiable. Second – all three of you are inspected by Chloe and Josh before you go anywhere and you carry extra ammo. You also sharpen those damn blades of yours."

Megan nodded her acceptance to the terms.

"Thanks, sis. I know you're just looking out for me but this is the new Wildcat; I know my limits."

Megan scowled as Mindy howled with laughter.

Safehouse F

"Give me a break!"

"Wildcat – shut it!" Jackal growled as he checked out every inch of Wildcat's combat suit and utility belt. Shadow came next and double checked the more feminine areas that Jackal would not touch.

Next came Foxtail and Raven. Foxtail was fuming as Psyche stood mere feet away; Psyche grinned at Foxtail as Jackal checked out every item of her kit and combat suit. Raven went along with the charade but both girls were kitted out perfectly as was Wildcat. Jackal had noticed Psyche's attempts to humiliate her friend.

"Psyche – you next."

Jackal grabbed Psyche before she could run and he flipped her upside down and he violently shook the giggling vigilante for a few moments before setting her – actually dropping her – back down onto the ground. Psyche scowled with embarrassment as Foxtail and Morgan laughed.

"Good to see you secure your kit, Psyche!" Jackal grinned.

..._...

"You take care out there," Shadow said to Wildcat when they were both alone for a few moments.

"I'll be fine."

"I care about you, you know – despite everything . . ."

"I know, Chloe; you can't get rid of me that easily!"

"I hope not. I need somebody to annoy the fuck out of and I couldn't stand Mindy and Joshua moping over your being injured . . . or worse."

"Thanks, Chloe," Megan replied as she gave her former adversary a hug.

North Cicero Avenue

Wildcat with Foxtail and Raven

I had heeded Hit Girl's advice and so we stuck to open streets.

Three powerful machines rode down the street. My Ducati Hypermotard SP led with Foxtail's Aprilia Caponord 1200 Rally to my left and just behind. Raven's Yamaha Super Ténéré cruised to my right and level with Foxtail. Three girls enjoying an evening on the streets of Chicago. The place was peaceful – at least it was until a Kawasaki Versys 1000 LT in metallic black and plasma blue cruised past us. It was flanked by a pair of Kawasaki Versys 650 LT machines in metallic black. My eyes were drawn to the black and red armour.

"FEAR!" I growled.

Safehouse F

Hal's head snapped up at the single word. She hit the alarm and began to issue commands.

"Ready One and Ready Two: Scramble! Medic prepare to move! Psyche, Mist: Scramble!"

Beyond the armoured glass which enclosed the Fusion Command Centre, Psyche and Mist could be seen running for Brute.

Ready One

North Milwaukee Avenue

Hit Girl and Shadow started their engines and they both accelerated north-west towards the red cross on the map projected onto their visors.

Hit Girl was angry at being caught out, but she knew that FEAR was unpredictable. She cursed herself for allowing Wildcat to be out without close protection.

"You even dare blame yourself, Hit Girl, and I'll fucking kick your arse!" Shadow growled as the two of them weaved in and out of the light evening traffic.

Ready Two

North Cicero Avenue and West Shakespeare Avenue Two miles behind Wildcat, Foxtail and Raven

"Fucking knew it!" Jackal growled as he accelerated his Triumph Tiger 800 XCA towards sixty.

"The hand of fate falls," Kick-Ass added as he followed Jackal on his Ducati Diavel Carbon. "Bet you anything that Hit Girl's blaming herself."

"No bet," Jackal replied sourly.

Medic

Safehouse K

The Honda Fireblade Black Edition accelerated out of the Safehouse and up South Iron Street.

At the South Damen Avenue on-ramp for I-55, Medic headed northeast to the I-94 where she took the ramp northbound.

Medic was hitting ninety mere seconds later.

North Cicero Avenue

Wildcat with Foxtail and Raven

FEAR accelerated up the tree-lined street.

"Hit Girl, this is Wildcat – we're giving chase!"

"Copy that!" Hit Girl replied – her tone was none too pleased and all three girls winced behind their helmets.

The chase was at speed – about fifty – but not excessive as the traffic was medium to heavy. We were moving too fast to use firearms and so far, FEAR had not made any overtly hostile actions. Mind you, just her mere presence was a hostile action! I knew that help was on its way so we were not alone. Neither of us were delusional enough to think that we could take FEAR alone – although Foxtail had her moments . . . just joking!

FEAR's two cohorts did nothing more than prevent us getting too close to their Mistress. I worried that FEAR might have had a plan. Was our meeting planned or just a coincidence? I ran through my training looking for answers but nothing came. I was surprised to see FEAR bear left at West Sunnyside Avenue. Not only did she bear left, she almost got creamed by a large semi as she made the illegal turn over the concrete median and up the wrong side of the avenue. One of her cohorts accelerated ahead and turned right through some steel mesh gates.

We followed and found ourselves passing beneath the railroad and then making a hard right up a dirt slope. We rode across two railroad lines and then made a left over a bridge and followed an old raised track bed that headed north. Every machine had dual-purpose tyres which were perfect for the off-road activity.

It was a struggle to ensure that I had the correct focus on events and not to allow my judgement to be clouded by past events.

Safehouse F

Brute

As Mist and Psyche reached the armoured Range Rover, a voice called out.

"Hey! Wait for me!"

Psyche turned to see Trojan a few yards away and running towards them.

"You're not rostered for duty, tonight?" Mist said quickly as she climbed into the driver's seat.

"It's Megan – I need to be out there."

Psyche studied Trojan for a moment.

"I can't stop you; you outrank me," Psyche admitted to Trojan.

"But I outrank you, Trojan, so get in!" Mist ordered.

Wildcat with Foxtail and Raven

We paralleled North Cicero Avenue for about a quarter mile before we angled northeast and passed over both North Cicero Avenue and I-94.

The route was then arrow-straight and we hurtled through some dense greenery as we passed through LaBagh Woods. To be honest, it was a very scenic ride and for a moment I began to enjoy the ride before I was snapped back to the reality of the situation by Hal demanding an update. I knew that we were being tracked and that cameras mounted on our motorcycles were sending back full-colour 4K images to the Safehouse.

"No overt threat from FEAR at this time," I reported.

It was surreal racing through northern Chicago in pursuit of a murderous criminal who was not actually attacking us – there had to be another angle . . . all became clear as we approached West Devon Avenue and FEAR clammed on her brakes along with her cohorts. We did the same a few yards back with warning after warning flowing through my mind. Foxtail noticed the subtle change in the FEAR's two cohorts as they reached down for something and then turned, each with an MP5K in their hands.

We spun our tyres as we rapidly reversed direction and headed back down the retired railroad track. Four more machines appeared out of the trees – FEAR had friends!

Ready One and Ready Two

Under the direction of Hal, both Hit Girl with Shadow and Kick-Ass with Jackal had been diverted via I-94 where they were all able to blaze north at over one-hundred-and-twenty-miles-per-hour. The average speed of advance for Wildcat and her team was only twenty-miles-per-hour.

One minute and two miles later, Ready Two left the I-94 at West Peterson Avenue. Ready One continued north for another mile and a half before coming off at West Touhy Avenue. Hal had already realised that FEAR was following the old railroad tracks and therefore, she spread her forces along the route in an acceptable gamble.

Ready One was closing steadily on Wildcat and her team.

Brute – (Mist, Psyche, and Trojan)

Mist had her foot to the floor as they hurtled up I-94 before Hal directed them to leave and head north up North Western Avenue.

There, they were met by a marked CPD unit which provided an escort north. Trojan was not happy; he knew that his partner was in trouble and over the comms he heard Wildcat's chilling report.

"Ambush! Ambush!"

"Put your fucking foot down, Mist!" he growled.

Wildcat with Foxtail and Raven

We opened fire before they could as we fell to the ground from our machines.

Two men fell immediately as the others dove for cover. We were caught in a crossfire and I noticed FEAR accelerating away.

"No fucking way!" I yelled. "Let's move, fuck these wankers – frag 'em!"

Foxtail threw a fragmentation grenade at the remaining two men while I did the same with the one man remaining after FEAR had taken one man with her. Two explosions later, we heaved our machines vertical and gave chase after FEAR.

West Devon Avenue

A quiet wait for his girlfriend had turned into an entertaining evening for the young man.

First, the peaceful evening had been shattered by the sound of multiple motorcycle engines and then gunfire before two loud explosions had ripped out. Two motorcycles and roared across the road, just before the explosions, both very similar with somebody clad in red and black armour on the first machine. They were followed, a few minutes later, by three more machines, each bearing a Chicago vigilante before they vanished after the other two motorcycles.

Just as his girlfriend pulled up in her car, several minutes later, the sound of high-powered motorcycle engines could be heard again and a purple Ducati Panigale motorcycle burst out of the old railroad and pulled a wheelie as it shot across the street. Another almost identical machine in blue followed behind.

"I think somebody's pissed off Hit Girl," the man commented to his confused girlfriend.

Ready One

Pissed off was an understatement!

Hit Girl had seen the dead bodies and she had heard the sharp reports of the two grenades. Against her better judgement and against her emotions, she knew that she had to let Wildcat take responsibility and keep after FEAR – at least until she herself could arrive.

There! FEAR had stopped a distance ahead . . . and Wildcat was engaging!

Wildcat with Foxtail and Raven

FEAR had stopped and climbed off her motorcycle.

She just stood there on the old track bed, seemingly oblivious to the three vigilantes' approach. Her cohort stood off to one side, his arms at his sides in a non-threatening stance. Wildcat stopped and so did Foxtail and Raven. The younger vigilante swung her left leg off the Ducati and she pulled off her helmet as her own cohorts did the same and the three girls faced off against FEAR.

"My, my, three little ones!"

"We're way more than you can handle, bitch!" Foxtail replied as she drew her beautifully lethal butterfly swords.

"Fuck you, you whacked out bitch!" Raven threw in as she drew her Katana.

"Let's have some fun!" FEAR drawled as she brought her own sword to readiness.

..._...

FEAR's cohort had stepped well back, away from the impending action. FEAR drove forward as the three vigilantes spread out to reduce the chances of a single strike tacking down more than one of them. The large sword was truly fearsome and nobody had any desire to find out just how well it could cut through flesh and armour. Wildcat already knew that her claws were apparently useless against FEAR's armour so she decided to rely on her Katana which she knew had a keener blade.

The war sword came down towards Wildcat but Wildcat's own sword blocked the strike only the power behind the strike and the weight of the sword were too much for Wildcat but Raven joined in and lent her own weight to the fight. Foxtail slashed out with her twin blades and FEAR yelped as the ultra-sharp blades slashed through the weak armour of her left side. The strike gave Wildcat a chance to recover her stance and move out of the arc of the war sword.

"Hope I didn't damage your expensive looking suit!" Foxtail hissed.

"Oh, Foxy, nothing that a needle and thread can't fix," FEAR drawled in reply.

Raven and Wildcat dove forwards while FEAR was conversing with Foxtail and they struck from the left and the right. Raven's katana struck the heavier armour of FEAR's right upper arm while Wildcat manged to catch a pouch on the left side of FEAR's utility belt. Whatever was in the pouch cooked off and smoke was emitted which began to hide FEAR from view. FEAR ripped the pouch from her utility belt and she threw it to the ground in anger.

Wildcat narrowly dodged the tip of the war sword as FEAR swung it viciously and kicked Raven in the chest sending her backwards and down the embankment of the railroad track. Foxtail blocked the next swipe with her own swords but only just.

..._...

Wildcat struck at FEAR's left leg with her sword but FEAR saw it coming and she kicked out at Wildcat. Wildcat fell backwards and she scrambled away from FEAR. For a moment, it looked like FEAR had the upper hand and Wildcat was about to be kitty food. Neither noticed the motorcycle skid to a halt on the loose gravel, nor the angry vigilante who leapt off the machine and threw her purple crash-helmet off to one side.

"Get away from her . . . you bitch!"

FEAR turned her attentions from Wildcat to the newcomer who was drawing the matched Katana swords from her back.

"Hello," FEAR drawled.

"Enjoy your swim?" Hit Girl growled as the seasoned vigilantes circled each other. "Wildcat – get back!"

"It was refreshing – just what I needed after a night's workout."

"No water around here but I'm happy to give you that workout."

Hit Girl raised her blades just as FEAR brought her war sword to bear and the cold steel clashed together. Hit Girl pushed back with all her might and FEAR stepped to one side, parrying Hit Girl's thrusts away from her own body. There was limited space to fight but that just meant a higher skill was required.

FEAR's remaining cohort made a move but Shadow stopped him.

"You keep out of this, cunt!" she growled as she put a bullet into his forehead before she went after Raven.

..._...

Whatever could be said about FEAR, she was a very proficient melee fighter. She could move with a finesse that kept her alive before the blades of Hit Girl as they were brought to bear with practiced ease by the purple vigilante queen. FEAR's strength was also apparent as she wielded the heavy weapon. Hit Girl was ready for anything that came her way and she used her agility to stay away from the keen blade.

Then everything changed. Wildcat and Foxtail spun around as Raven came scrambling back up the embankment.

"Trouble!" she called.

Her statement was punctuated by gunfire and the sounds of large vehicles pulling up either side of the embankment. Then another voice called out.

"Am I too late?" Sunset Phoenix asked as she ran up behind Raven and took a swing at the young vigilante with her double-bladed ninja sword staff. Raven blocked the strike with her Katana and quickly rolled off to one side.

Wildcat was worried. Something about Sunset Phoenix was off – she was full of herself, which was nothing new, but she exuded confidence where previously there had been none. Her character was different somehow. Her pink outfit still made her look a joke but as Wildcat struck out, her Katana was expertly blocked by the sword staff and the bitch smirked down at her younger adversary.

West North Shore Avenue

A growing crowd was gathering from the nearby properties, drawn in by both the sounds of gunfire and by the clashing of cold steel.

The sight before them was way better than any news report showing Fusion in action. Most Chicagoans would have given away their children to witness Hit Girl fighting. Most had never laid eyes on FEAR, nor the pink hussy, Sunset Phoenix. But at that moment, they were able to watch the spectacle of two famous Chicago vigilantes, Hit Girl and Wildcat, plus the lesser vigilantes, Foxtail and Raven, fighting Chicago's most wanted criminal, FEAR. Not to mention that it was incredibly rare for Fusion to operate so far north of the City, in what was a good neighbourhood.

Down on the street, Shadow was keeping Sunset Phoenix's cohorts occupied while up on the track bed, swords flashed in the streetlighting as they span at speed. The sword wielders span almost as fast as they intercepted the inbound strikes from their opponents. Cheers erupted from the crowd as FEAR and Sunset Phoenix were pounded. The crowd watched and yelled out in awe when Wildcat executed a perfect backflip as she dodged a strike from Sunset Phoenix.

Then, just as FEAR and Sunset Phoenix appeared to be on the losing end of the fight, several of their cohorts rushed forwards with a selection of weapons that varied from short ninja-to style swords to metal baseball bats. Shadow was seriously outnumbered but still on her feet.

Fusion had no choice but to disengage FEAR and Sunset Phoenix so that they could defend themselves from the new attack.

..._...

Hit Girl was furious as she gave FEAR a sharp kick in the chest which sent the bitch reeling and in her shock, she dropped her war sword – Hit Girl raised an eyebrow behind her mask at that faux pas.

"Go!" Sunset Phoenix appeared to order and FEAR ran for her motorcycle before roaring off northeast towards Lincolnwood.

In the resulting melee, Wildcat and Foxtail took off after FEAR on their own motorcycles while Hit Girl turned her attentions towards Sunset Phoenix as she ran for her own motorcycle with her cohorts providing a shield for her retreat. Hit Girl and Raven killed three, with Shadow adding a couple more to that number before the rest broke off the fight and ran for their vehicles.

Hit Girl ignored the cheering crowd and quickly replaced the twin Katana swords securely on her back and remounted her Panigale. Raven and Shadow followed suit and within a minute the trio were accelerating after Wildcat and Foxtail. They all raced through the industrial heart of Lincolnwood, still on the abandoned railroad bed. FEAR dodged a large truck and several cars as she bolted across North Central Park Avenue and was closely followed by her five pursuers.

"We have contact with Sunset Phoenix!" came the call over the radio from Jackal.

Brute with Ready Two

Mist with Psyche & Trojan plus Jackal & Kick-Ass

Strictly speaking, it was Brute that made contact with Sunset Phoenix – or maybe Sunset Phoenix made contact with Brute . . . either way, Sunset Phoenix was not a happy bunny!

"I don't care what universe you're from; that's gotta hurt!" Psyche chuckled as Trojan groaned at her reference.

Mist said nothing as she was just a little stunned having gotten a very close up view of the pink-clad vigilante as she had hurtled across the hood of the Range Rover SUV.

"Kawasaki Ninja ZX-10R – nil. Range Rover Sentinel – one," Jackal quipped as he came to a rapid halt beside Mist.

He dismounted, pulled off his helmet and left it on his machine before he stepped over the twisted superbike and advanced on Sunset Phoenix as she struggled to her feet. Her black armour and combat suit with the almost-pink, purple pizzazz highlights was badly scored from the impact with the armoured SUV and the road but she appeared uninjured as she threw down her equally gouged crash helmet.

"I think she's a little pissed!" Psyche growled as she leapt out of Brute to stand beside Jackal.

"Another fucking whelp!" Sunset Phoenix growled.

Trojan followed Psyche but turned towards a pair of loud bangs as Kick-Ass rammed the heads of two cunts into the side of Brute.

"Hey!" Mist yelled. "I signed for this SUV, you know!"

"Take it up with Ares!" Kick-Ass retorted with a chuckle.

"You gonna take us all on?" Trojan drawled as Sunset Phoenix was encircled.

"Fuck the lot of you!" Sunset Phoenix growled as she threw something to the ground.

There was a large explosion, a bright flash, and a copious plume of pink smoke erupted from what had to be a combined flash-bang smoke grenade. Nobody dared fire into the smoke for fear of hitting an innocent member of the public. The roar of a motorcycle could be heard from beyond the dissipating cloud and Jackal ran through with Psyche before they were left glaring after the rapidly departing Sunset Phoenix.

"Run, bitch," Psyche growled. "We'll find you and we'll fucking gut you . . ."

Hit Girl with Shadow, Wildcat, Foxtail & Raven

At Howard Street, we left the abandoned railroad and turned east before taking McCormick Boulevard north at highspeed.

For a mile and a half, the five motorcycles and riders dodged in and out of the traffic before Raven dropped out with a mechanical issue on her Yamaha Super Ténéré just below Dempster Street. As FEAR turned right onto Dempster Street, Shadow and Foxtail continued north to the next junction with Church Street to block FEAR's advance north.

Dempster Street

FEAR had something about Wildcat and she seemed determined to destroy the younger vigilante in as long and drawn out a method as possible.

She also appeared to have scum-of-the-earth types scattered all over the city. This became rapidly apparent as a truck appeared from a side-road and something about the way it was being driven gave me cause for thought. My suspicions were confirmed when it veered across the road headed directly at us before fine tuning its path and heading for one particular individual. I barely had time to yell a warning before the truck crunched into what I had to assume was its intended target. My heart missed several beats as Wildcat and her Ducati vanished from sight behind the behemoth. Once the truck had moved on, I was stunned to see that all which remained was the twisted and crushed remnants of the brown and silver motorcycle.

I felt sick to my stomach as I slammed on my brakes and my eyes darted everywhere as I looked around for the bloodied and broken corpse of my sister.

Chapter 291*: Tattoo

Monday, 20th June, 2016

Dempster Street

"Thought that was fun, huh!"

FEAR's head snapped around to see a white-clad individual just feet away astride a large black Honda Fireblade motorcycle. FEAR only had seconds to register the armoured sole of the boot which then struck her full in the chest and she fell to the road but rapidly rolled away from her falling Kawasaki.

Medic swung her legs off the motorcycle and she removed her helmet before using the latter as a weapon. FEAR received the helmet full force across her face as she struggled back to her feet. She reached up for her war sword but only felt air as she ran for the truck which had just rundown Wildcat and she swung herself aboard as it passed by.

Medic climbed back onto her motorcycle and roared off down the street to where Hit Girl sat astride her Panigale.

..._...

"Hey!" A voice growled over the comms. "Hit Girl ain't the only one with goddamn reflexes, you know . . . wildcats have them too and I like to walk on the wild side!"

Hit Girl grinned as she saw the younger girl sitting on her haunches over at the side of the road. There were marks on her suit and helmet which showed her close call. Hit Girl was very glad of her mask which prevented anybody from seeing her tears of joy.

"Hit Girl, I am registering Wildcat's bike as down," Battle Guy called from Safehouse F.

Hit girl strode over to the wreckage and stood beside the forlorn Wildcat.

"It's a gonna," Hit Girl replied as Medic pulled up.

There was a puff of smoke from just forwards of the seat and below.

"What in hell was that?" Wildcat demanded.

"Just destroyed the electronics package so nobody can use it against us," Battle Guy explained. "I've arranged for the CPD to recover Wildcat's Ducati and FEAR's machine. Ares is on his way to Raven."

"Thanks, Battle Guy, I'll take Wildcat back with me," Hit Girl replied as a pair of CPD cruisers appeared and they secured both motorcycles from the growing crowd of bystanders.

"You okay?" Medic asked as she looked down at Wildcat.

"The only wound is in my heart," Wildcat replied as she looked down at her Ducati – or what was left of it. "It was my first motorcycle . . ."

"Let's go home," Hit Girl suggested and she climbed back onto her Panigale with Wildcat clambering on behind.

With Medic following, Hit Girl turned for home before being joined by Shadow. Foxtail would stay behind with Raven until Ares arrived with Iron Hide.

"Err, Hit Girl?" Mist called.

"Problem?"

"Please take Trojan off our hands!" Mist begged.

"What the fuck is Trojan doing out . . .?" Hit Girl demanded but then she paused and felt the arms around her waist tightening. "Let's rendezvous . . ."

Half an hour later, Wildcat was doing her best to persuade Trojan that she was all in one piece and that she was not hurt. Not that she minded feeling his strong hands running over her . . .

"Ewww!" Psyche growled as she grabbed Wildcat's dented helmet and jumped up behind Hit Girl. "I ain't riding back with those two!"

"Funny, Psyche!" Wildcat giggled as Trojan began to get more than a little personal with his gauntlets.

"Just had a thought," Psyche called out as Hit Girl accelerated away. "Anybody checked to see if Wildcat has any kitties in her oven?"

Early the next evening
Tuesday, 21st June

Safehouse D

"I know it is not your birthday – yet – but considering last night, I decided you deserved this . . ."

The 112-hp 821-cc motorcycle was painted in an overall digital urban camouflage made up of the same browns found in Wildcat's combat suit. The machine was fitted with carbon-fibre racing silencers on the engine exhaust, carbon-fibre front wing and various other carbon-fibre covers. Under the seat, the licence plate read 'WILD ONE'. The motorcycle was fitted with a smoked windshield and LED turn indicators. On either side, at the rear, were a pair of 25-litre panniers in the same colour scheme as the rest of the motorcycle.

"Oh . . . my . . . God – a Ducati Monster!" Megan wailed.

"A Ducati Monster 821 Dark, to be exact . . ." I corrected her. "Dark, just like my little sister."

"Thank you," Megan said quietly as she gave Mindy a rather painful hug.

That same evening

Summit Drive

"Where is it that you go? What do you do?"

"Kelly – stay out of it," Katrina warned her younger sister.

"You came back home the other night and I know you were in pain; you were hurting. If I didn't know better, I'd have thought that you were somehow involved in that fight at Damen Silos."

"Kelly, where do you get these ideas?"

"Kat, I'm not stupid . . . Oh, my God – are you one of those that Hit Girl has been fighting?"

"Kelly, I'm your sister and I've never lied to you."

"So, why are you?"

"You know what happened to Dad – he was killed by Hit Girl. You know what happened to Mom – she died within months of Dad's death; she couldn't live without him."

"Stay away from me, Kat – I want nothing to do with any of this."

Later that evening

Safehouse F

Mindy had just returned from a short patrol.

As she pulled off her mask and walked towards the armoury, she saw Anne-Marie standing alone on the mat. She had tears streaming down her face and she was shaking. The shaking seemed to get worse as Mindy approached her daughter.

"What's going on, Anne-Marie?"

"We've had a security breach," Marty commented as he walked out of the Command Center.

"Who – Anne-Marie?"

"She misplaced her access card; it's outside," Marty explained as Anne-Marie began to cry even harder.

Mindy turned on the sobbing eight-year-old and she could see how hard the girl was taking it; Anne-Marie looked petrified. Mindy felt the anger building up inside her. Anne-Marie needed to be taught a lesson and in a way, that would never be forgotten. Mindy loved the little girl's wayward behaviour – she felt it reminded her of herself at that age – only that wayward behaviour had been allowed to escalate to the point of carelessness that had put the entire organisation and dozens of people at risk.

Mindy seized hold of Anne-Marie by her wrist and began to almost drag the now screaming girl towards the steps down to Level 0. Chloe had appeared behind Marty and she suddenly felt worried for the eight-year-old's welfare.

"Mindy . . ."

"Can it, Chloe!" Mindy snarled.

..._...

Mindy dragged the terrified young girl into the Interrogation area and stopped. She looked down at the sobbing Anne-Marie without any sign of compassion for the little girl's plight.

"You have disappointed me, Anne-Marie. You are not worthy to wear that uniform; take it off – now!"

The shaking Anne-Marie followed the order and she pulled off her boots, pants, and top. Mindy pushed the girl into the Holding Area and with a curt nod towards the camera and a flick of her hand, the cell door slammed shut. Anne-Marie began to scream.

"No, Mommy – please!"

"I have a recovery to perform. Get used to your new home, girl!"

With that, Mindy turned and stopped before Chloe.

"Watch over her and keep her safe," Mindy said very quietly so Anne-Marie could not hear.

"I will," Chloe replied.

Mindy headed straight back upstairs, retrieved her helmet and climbed onto her Panigale.

"Battle Guy – send me a route!"

Less than a minute later, Hit Girl was gone.

Belle Plaine

Every access card had a built-in chip which allowed the card to be tracked.

It meant that each member of Fusion could be tracked within the Safehouse, if required, but it also allowed the card to be tracked if lost or stolen. The signal had brought Hit Girl to within one-hundred metres of the card.

"Okay, Hit Girl," Battle Guy explained. "I've set the tracker to high-power. It will only last about twenty-minutes but you should be able to get an accurate fix with your monitor. Take care!"

"Thanks, Battle Guy – how is she?"

"She's calmed down and Chloe is sitting with her."

"Thanks."

Hit Girl studied the five-inch screen mounted on the left lower arm of her combat suit. A map of the area was visible and in the centre, at her current location, there was a small pulsing arrow symbol pointing to the left. She turned in the direction and followed the pulsing arrow for about eighty yards before she parked up the Panigale, removed her helmet, and continued on foot.

"Looks to be the third house on the left," Battle Guy announced. "The card has an elevation of about twelve feet, so expect it to be on the second floor. The monitor should guide you to the exact room."

"I have it – second floor . . . room at the back-right corner. I'm going in."

1437 West Cuyler Avenue

The house was very nice and spread over three floors.

All the lights were out, as might be expected for the late hour. Hit Girl made her way around to the rear of the property and climbed up to a small balcony. There, she bypassed the alarm on the door inside and picked the lock. A minute later, she was standing in a small bedroom with a single bed in the centre of one wall. The bed was occupied by a young boy of about ten-years-old. The door to the landing was closed.

The boy came awake as Hit Girl gently shook him. His eyes went wide at the shadow in the darkness but he did not scream.

"I knew you would come," he stated simply.

"You have something that belongs to me," Hit Girl replied.

The boy slipped out of his bed and he walked over to a small desk on an adjacent wall. He rummaged in his school backpack before turning and holding out the access card to Hit Girl.

"Thank you," Hit Girl said as she took the card and placed it securely in her utility belt. "I know you will be curious about that card and who it may have belonged to. You will not pursue the owner of that card. You will not mention the card to anybody – I assume you've told somebody, your friends, maybe?"

"Just my best friends, Mark and Kaleb. I'm Justin, by the way."

"Good – you pass on my warning, Justin. I shall know if you are searching for Rogue and I shall be very displeased . . ."

"Of course, Hit Girl. I would never do anything to put Fusion at risk. My friends will never believe me . . ."

"Give them one of these," Hit Girl chuckled and she passed over three of her 'Hit Cards' as Kick-Ass insisted on calling them. "Thank you for being so candid, Justin. Good night."

Safehouse F

Mindy headed straight down below when she returned to the Safehouse.

Anne-Marie was no longer crying but she looked very subdued behind the bars of the cell. Chloe sat outside the bars, watching the younger girl. Mindy clicked her fingers towards the camera and the cell door slid open. She went down to one knee and she beckoned for her daughter. Anne-Marie ran forwards and hugged Mindy tightly around the neck.

"Are you okay, honey?" Mindy asked.

"Yes . . . I'm sorry, Mommy."

"I know you're sorry. You made a mistake that put a lot of people at risk. That was a taster of what could happen to us if we are all exposed – we would all spend the rest of our lives in a prison cell. Do you understand how serious losing this card was?"

Mindy waved the dark blue card in the air and Anne-Marie's eyes followed its movements.

"Yes, Mindy, I do."

"Good. Now get dressed and let's get ready to go home."

..._...

Mindy walked upstairs holding Anne-Marie's hand with Chloe close behind. There were a few relieved looks as Anne-Marie was seen in one piece . . . and smiling.

"Steph, could you take your sister and get her sorted out so we can go home, please?"

"Come on, jailbird," Stephanie quipped but then she saw the pained expression on her sister's face. "Bad joke, sorry!"

Stephanie wrapped an arm around her little sister and gave her a hug before guiding her towards the changing rooms.

The following evening
Wednesday, 22nd June

Glenview

The three kids had finished their homework and everybody had eaten their evening meal.

Stephanie was sitting on the sofa with Horatio while Danny watched TV. Anne-Marie was busy helping Dave in the kitchen as part of her grounding. Mindy was busy feeding the ever-hungry mutts in the basement. Stephanie took a moment to smirk at Anne-Marie as she trudged past the living room with her arms full of neatly folded clothes destined for the bedrooms upstairs. Anne-Marie threw a scowl at her big sister.

A few minutes later, Anne-Marie walked past and scowled at her brother and sister enjoying themselves while she had one-hundred-and-one chores to complete before she could go to bed. Once Anne-Marie had gone back into the kitchen and was receiving direction from Dave concerning her next task, Stephanie gave Horatio a final cuddle and then headed upstairs for a shower.

Twenty minutes later

The British Sector

Stephanie loved the power-shower in her ensuite bathroom.

The amount of water that fell made the shower feel like you were beneath Niagara Falls. Stephanie relished the hot water as it ran over her body and she would stand under the torrent for almost twenty minutes enjoying the soothing nature of the water on her aching muscles after a hard afternoon's training.

That evening was no different as she allowed the water to rinse the shampoo out of her long blonde hair. Then a voice dared to pervade her watery heaven.

"You know, one problem with having Hit Girl as your mother; it gives new emphasis to that common expression: 'Mom's gonna kill you'. So, I'm just gonna come out and say it: Mom's gonna kill you!"

"What are you wittering about?" Stephanie growled as she recognised the voice. Anne-Marie turning up for conversations at strange times, such as while she was in the shower was nothing new.

"That – on your butt . . ."

Crap!

"Oh . . . Don't tell Mindy . . ." Stephanie tried.

"I'm gonna so enjoy seeing you get roasted!"

"Get back here you little bitch!" Stephanie yelled as the younger girl bolted and vanished out of the bathroom.

The Kitchen

I heard the screaming and the yells coming closer as I made myself a coffee in the kitchen having just finished feeding three hungry canines and one starving feline.

The screaming turned out to be a giggling Anne-Marie with a very angry Stephanie shouting after her. The language was extremely foul as well as very aggressive and it appeared to consist of some rather creative ways for Anne-Marie to die.

Finally, Anne-Marie burst into the kitchen.

"Mom . . .!" She screamed as Stephanie, soaking wet and clad only in a towel, rugby-tackled her sister to the floor and then wrapped a hand over the younger girl's mouth.

"Stephanie, let your sister go . . . what the hell is that doing on your behind, young lady?"

Stephanie released her sister and the ten-year-old quickly readjusted the towel to cover up her butt as she stood up, however, she was not quite quick enough.

"Was that a tattoo on your right butt cheek?" Danny enquired as he came to investigate the noise.

"Just what I was asking . . . when did you get that?" I demanded.

"A couple of weeks ago . . ."

"That looks fresh to me! Who went with you; you know it's illegal to go without an adult present?"

"We bribed the guy . . . a hundred bucks."

"You said 'we' – who else was with you?" I asked suspiciously.

"Not telling . . ."

I had a moment's clarity and another girl drifted into my mind.

"Last week . . . you were out all afternoon with your aunt . . . admit it!"

"Not even if you pull my nails out with pliers!" Stephanie retorted.

"That can be arranged . . . Danny, find me some pliers . . ."

An hour later

West Columbia

"Mindy!" Marcus exclaimed as he opened the door. "What a pleasant surprise!"

I felt Stephanie shove her way past me and then turn to glare at me.

"Stephanie looks happy . . ." Paige grinned.

"I think we need Megan; is she around?" I asked with an evil grin.

"Megan!" Marcus bellowed up the stairs.

Megan came bounding down the stairs with her usual exuberance but she instantly slammed on the brakes as she saw her welcoming committee and the depressed looking Stephanie. Marcus waved Megan's attentions toward me.

"Do you have something to show us, little sister?" I asked sweetly.

"I have no idea what you are talking about," Megan responded with an innocent smile.

"Megan," I said slowly. "We will get to the bottom of this even if we have to strip you . . ."

Megan turned on her niece.

"You told them?" she almost screamed.

"I had no choice – it just came out . . ." the wretched Stephanie replied. "She tried to pull out my fingernails with pliers."

"Somehow, I doubt that, Stephanie . . ." Marcus chuckled. "If she really wanted to do that, she'd have done it."

"She made me get it on my butt!" Megan growled accusingly.

Stephanie looked outraged at the accusation.

"She wanted the pussy to wrap its tail around her right nipple!" Stephanie responded and I heard an audible gasp from Paige as she brought her hand up to her mouth and I saw the beginnings of a smirk. "Only . . . well, the man at the shop said her tits and her nipples were too small . . ."

Marcus looked appalled by the open discussion of his daughter's chest. "The man . . .?" He growled.

Megan and Stephanie both instantly realised their error and they both dived back in.

"No – he never touched her . . ." Stephanie blurted out.

"I was wearing a tight T-shirt . . ." Megan added.

I knew what Marcus would have been thinking and I might have been on the same page to some extent. Marcus would have shot the man; I would have cut his balls off . . .

"So, missy, where is this 'pussy'?" Paige demanded. "And no wisecracks!"

"On my right butt cheek . . ." Megan admitted with reluctance.

"Stephanie has a version of her Psyche symbol on her own butt cheek – Anne-Marie discovered it and Stephanie kind of showed all . . ." I explained.

"Dead meat . . ." Marcus growled as he glared down at the two girls who visibly wilted before him. "I should cuff you and haul you in, Megan."

"Don't; she'd enjoy the cuffs too much!" Stephanie growled.

..._...

Marcus stormed off into the dining room where he helped himself to a large whiskey from the small bar he maintained there. Paige glared down at her daughter and put on an impatient expression. Megan groaned and knew what was coming.

"Do I have to?" the eleven-year-old wailed.

"Get to it!" Paige ordered and the girl slipped her pyjama pants down just enough to show the small pussy cat that resided on her right butt cheek.

"You too," I ordered Stephanie who reluctantly followed suit and lowered her jeans and panties to expose the small 'psyche' symbol.

"A matching pair of idiots!" Paige commented. "Looks like a month, Megan . . ."

"I intend to give Stephanie the same," I commented with an evil smirk.

Both girls groaned as they covered up their new body art.

Glenview

Anne-Marie had an enormous grin on her face as we returned home.

"Has the criminal been sentenced?" She asked gleefully – overjoyed to see Dave and Mindy angry with somebody else.

I ignored her and turned to Stephanie.

"Get upstairs and get into bed. I don't want to see or hear from you until the morning – is that clear?"

Stephanie glowered at me but she decided not to argue.

"We are very disappointed in you, Stephanie," I said evenly as Dave came and stood beside me. "Go!"

Anne-Marie opened her mouth to say something derogatory as her sister ascended the stairs but I intervened.

"One word from you, and you're grounded too."

The eight-year-old girl fled.

The following afternoon
Wednesday, 22nd June

Glenview

"Hi, girls!"

"Hi, Dave," Saoirse and Morgan said as they entered the house.

"Hello!" Mindy said in surprise as the two teenagers entered the kitchen.

"Hi, Mindy," Saoirse offered.

"Hi," Morgan said with a wave.

"What's up?" Mindy asked.

Saoirse looked over at Morgan who nodded back.

"We've come to speak on behalf of the condemned," Saoirse said.

"Megan and Steph?" Dave asked and Morgan nodded.

"Let's go get comfortable, shall we?" Mindy suggested.

..._...

Once the four of them were comfortable, Saoirse looked up at Mindy.

"It's our fault . . . well, mine actually, that they got the tattoos."

"You?" Mindy queried. She was fully aware that Saoirse had a tattoo of a fox on her right buttock – in fact Anne-Marie was always going on about it, ad infinitum!

"When we were out on the boats, me and Morgan were talking and well, we talked about getting a tattoo each – to help us bond . . ."

Saoirse actually appeared embarrassed – that was rare in itself. Morgan took over.

"We've been spending a lot of time together as we get to know each other properly. SD's been helping me get over my past . . . hence the change in hair colour. We've become true sisters in every sense of the word. SD has things she needs to talk about and some of those things can't be discussed with her best friend."

"Stephanie," Dave stated and Morgan nodded.

"Yeah," Morgan confirmed. "On Tuesday morning, we went to get these . . ."

Morgan shyly lifted her t-shirt just revealing a pink bra. There, just below her right breast and slightly under her right arm was a stunning tattoo that combined a raven with a fox. The black raven body sat below the black-outlined head of the fox. Saoirse did the same on the opposite side of her own body to reveal an identical tattoo. Each piece of body art was about six inches in height.

"Not bad!" Dave mused and Mindy nodded her agreement.

"Do your aunt and uncle know?" Mindy asked.

Morgan's expression said it all.

"No."

..._...

"Did you enjoy getting the tattoo?" Mindy asked Morgan.

"It hurt – more than SD made out it would – plus it was humiliating!"

"I didn't want to scare you," Saoirse said kindly and Morgan grinned.

"Humiliating?" Dave enquired.

"I had to remove my bra and apart from SD, nobody has ever seen my breasts," Morgan explained as she turned pink again. "I almost chickened out at that point and walked out of the shop. SD's happy to show off her bits like most Predators, apparently, so she was topless within seconds!"

"So, how did Dumb and Dumber get involved?" Dave asked.

Saoirse giggled at Dave's comment before she turned serious.

"We met Megan and Steph later that afternoon," Saoirse explained. "It never occurred to me to lie about what we had been doing when she asked. You know, Steph, she's a nosy little bitch!"

Mindy laughed and nodded.

"I told them about the shop – the shop guy barely took a look at our slightly-fake IDs," Morgan added. "I said it was perfect for underage tattoos."

"What's the difference between a fake ID and a 'slightly-fake' ID?" Mindy asked.

"The ages were altered and we both look eighteen . . ." Morgan replied as her cheeks went a deep shade of pink.

"So, without you two, the Psychotic Predator and the Pussycat would never have gone for tattoos," Mindy summed up.

Saoirse and Morgan both nodded.

Chapter 292*: Tempest and Discord

Friday, June 24th, 2016

Glenview

"Hey, Dave . . ."

"Yeah, Marty."

"When was the last time you checked your Kick-Ass website?"

"Not been on there for many months . . . why?"

"Well, you have a message – actually . . . there are a lot of messages, but considering you don't get kittens down from trees like you used to . . ."

Dave grinned.

". . . This one is a definite call for help: 'Fusion: Discord in trouble. Need extraction ASAP.'"

Safehouse F

The senior staff were gathered in the Command Centre.

"Any chance this is a trap?" Mindy enquired.

"Maybe. According to Joshua, Discord did help us gain entry into that bunker so we could finish Urban Predator," Dave pointed out.

"Dis . . . cord."

Joshua hissed the two syllables of the word and his face was one of revulsion.

"Okay, Joshua – spit it out!" Mindy ordered.

"That fucking evil bitch stripped Megan naked and then she tried to come onto me. I saved her fucking life twice. No more!"

Chloe spoke up first.

"Josh, she's a troubled kid, just like all the others. I know what she did to Megan was bad, but she did help you in the bunker."

"She had no choice; I was about to snap her fucking bitch neck!"

"Okay!" Mindy breathed. "Joshua, you are relieved from this mission."

"Good fucking riddance!" Joshua breathed as he left the Command Centre.

"I'll talk to him later. He fucking hates that girl and the boy. He'll never forgive them for what they did to Megan," Chloe said with a grimace.

"Okay," Mindy said as she came to a decision. "Dave, you will head up the mission. Take Chloe, Joshua, and Megan."

"Josh?" Chloe asked.

"He needs to learn to control his hatred. I won't see a fifteen-year-old girl get killed just because she did something bad. She was under the influence of bad people. I know that Megan is still haunted by what did and what might have happened to her. Going will help them both. Most of Vengeance are busy with a major operation but Cassie is heading south to open up an MI5 Safehouse. Okay, people, wheels up in one-twenty!"

Chloe was not convinced but nonetheless, she left the Command Centre and went looking for Megan and Joshua.

..._...

She found them both in the armoury and Joshua was firing on all cylinders.

"The fucking bitch can die for all I care!" Joshua growled as he took down his FN Five-seven Mk2 pistol.

"She did bad things, Josh – she really did – but I can't let her die just 'cause she stripped me naked. I won't stand for it and I know you won't either. I know you, Joshua – you're soft as a puppy dog when you want to be but hard as nails when required. I hate to contradict you but you're wrong this time, Jack!"

"Megan – what I saw happen to you . . ."

"It's behind me. So, I showed a bit of pussy and my tits – big deal; name one person who has not seen my tits . . . not to mention that Steph's comment the other day had my Mom making me piss on a stick to make sure I wasn't up the duff! I can cope with humiliation; it's part of my life . . ."

Joshua laughed for a moment before he returned to his sullen state.

"Okay, just for some fucking peace and quiet – all I need is for Chloe to get on my case, now."

"Here's your chance!" Megan grinned as I let the door close behind me.

"Fucking great!" Joshua moaned.

"Megan – you have a mission . . . and so do you, Josh."

"What!" Joshua exclaimed.

"Mindy thinks it'll do you good," Chloe advised her boyfriend.

"Does she now!" Joshua groaned knowing he was boxed in.

Two hours later

Chicago Midway Airport

The car drove straight into the hanger before stopping a few feet from the lowered boarding stairs of the jet.

The Gulfstream 650ER executive jet was painted in a matt light grey on the fuselage but with a subtly darker shade of grey on the wings and tail. No markings were visible on the fuselage except for the aircraft's international identification code on the engine nacelles: N345AF. The aircraft was at Fusion's disposal and came with an experienced flight crew of two pilots and a flight attendant. The crew were all armed and very discrete when it came to their passengers and cargo.

The aircraft could seat 16 with 6 sleeping. The forward section of the aircraft, aft of the cockpit, housed the access hatch and the galley. Next, through a sliding armoured door, came four seats, two per side facing each other across a table either side of the aisle. Aft of them were two sofas which faced one another across the aisle. Further aft were four seats grouped around a table, facing fore and aft in pairs. Across from them was a credenza. Another sliding armoured door separated off a private cabin with seating for four, three on a sofa to port and a single seat and table to starboard.

That office housed the encrypted communications equipment including satellite communication equipment. There was a large head and then the aft cargo compartment. The aircraft had a range of up to 7,000 nautical miles at a cruise speed of almost 500 knots.

..._...

"Welcome aboard, my name is Amy, please take your seats and we will taxi directly," the smiling lady advised her four passengers.

She did not appear to notice that only one was an adult, two were teenagers, and the other was a tween. She knew full well that they were not normal passengers and neither was the cargo being loaded into the cargo bay in the tail. Megan and Joshua took their seats to port while Chloe and Dave sat to starboard. Joshua and Chloe both faced forwards. The aircraft began to move under the control of a tractor the moment the cargo hatch and the main boarding hatch were secured. The sleek aircraft swept out of the open hanger doors and began to start its twin tail-mounted engines.

"Take-off clearance has been granted, we are taxiing for a direct take-off at max V," the pilot announced as the aircraft began to gather momentum along the taxiway.

Six minutes later, the 100-foot jet accelerated down the runway and then took on a steep upward angle as the wheels left the ground and were raised into the fuselage with a thump. The jet continued to climb to its cruising altitude of 41,000 feet and turned onto a north-easterly course over eastern Canada. Fifteen minutes later, the pilot announced their speed and course: "We are cruising at Mach 0.9, on a course of zero-three-seven, at an altitude of 41,000 feet. We are very light and we have a tail wind for most of the flight so our ETA is expected to be approximately 22:00, UK time. Please sit back and enjoy the next seven hours."

"That take-off was fucking awesome!" Megan exclaimed with a huge grin.

"Hi, guys," Amy interrupted. "Anybody fancy a soda? We have some freshly made burgers aboard and I can get them cooked in no time – anybody for a cheeseburger?"

Joshua and Megan grinned.

"Got some bacon?" Chloe asked.

"Bacon, double cheeseburger?" Amy asked and Chloe nodded.

"Make that two, please," Dave added. "Once we've stuffed our faces, we need to sleep."

22:05

RAF Northolt, United Kingdom
A little over thirteen miles east of London

The Gulfstream jet landed without fanfare and the passengers, awoken fifteen minutes previously, prepared to disembark.

Megan was still stretching as she grabbed her bag from the co-pilot as he unloaded the cargo bay. The man smirked at his passengers and wordlessly wished them Godspeed.

Commander Lawrence had been there on the tarmac as the jet had taxied to a halt.

"As Mindy requested, two Sentinels."

"Thank you, Spook," Dave said as he shook hands with the Royal Navy officer.

Once all the kit was loaded, Dave climbed aboard one Sentinel with Chloe while Megan climbed aboard the other Sentinel. Dave and Joshua drove the armoured Range Rovers out of the airbase and they both turned south on the A4180 and then east onto the A40 trunk road.

..._...

A little over six miles to the east, Joshua perked up as they passed over the M25 motorway.

"Isn't this near where Mindy met us in that Police BMW X5 she wrecked a few months back?" he asked.

Dave laughed.

"Yes, it is."

Four miles later, the two vehicles pulled off at the A355 junction and stopped beside an almost identical Sentinel.

"Good evening, my fellow Yanks!" Cassie smiled from the other vehicle. "Follow me to the Safehouse – it's just a mile or so from the target."

..._...

Twenty minutes later, the three armoured vehicles pulled up outside a small property just to the south of Farnham Common. It was away from prying eyes and it allowed the team to change into their body armour and check out their weapons. The house was all ready for them, thanks to Cassie having blazed down from Scotland at high speed and opening up before going to collect them.

"Marty has confirmed the mobile phone pings as coming from a farm just to the south of here. It is isolated and weapons fire should not carry far as long as it is suppressed. Five will intercept any Police activity but we have been cautioned not to involve any outside agencies such as the local plod. I'll remain here with Cutlass . . . just in case I need to rescue your sorry arses!"

"Never gonna happen!" Wildcat hissed with a smile.

Discord with Tempest

"Leave her alone!"

"Shut the fuck up, you little whelp!" The man yelled back as he pistol-whipped Tempest across the face.

The thirteen-year-old boy fell back with a scream as blood flew from his nose. Another man stepped forwards and he kicked the boy in the stomach which elicited another scream of pain. It was totally unnecessary and beyond barbaric but the same man put a bullet into the boy who immediately went silent.

Discord screamed as the man roughly shoved her down to the floor and two other men pinned her. She struggled and she screamed as the man began to attack her clothing. The fifteen-year-old felt the first vestiges of panic as the tips of the man's fingers dug under the waistband of her jeans, then a hand roughly reached around and yanked at her belt buckle.

With a jerk, the belt came apart and the buttons on the jeans were pulled open. The hand yanked the jeans and panties down together. Discord had never felt so scared and she screamed as loud as she could for help. Her mind told her that none was coming and that she would die that night. However, she feared what the men were about to do much worse to her than dying.

She felt her boots, socks, jeans, and panties pulled off her. The man slapped her hard on her bare backside eliciting a yell of pain and Discord began to shake as well as sob and scream. She was roughly rolled onto her back and through her tears she saw the men smirking as they pulled her legs apart and studied what resided at the top of her long legs and shapely thighs.

One of the men then attacked her blouse which ripped and was pulled off her. Her bra came next leaving her completely naked with several men staring down at her body from head to toe. Discord shook with fear. She had been stripped just like she was then, by another; Joshua. She had deserved it after what she had done to that Megan girl. Joshua had let her live to face punishment.

Both her and Tempest had been beaten for that act of misjudgement. They had then been sent to die on guard duty. Only it was Joshua that had found them, in his guise as Jackal. That had shocked her – she had had a member of Fusion at her fingertips, maybe another; that Megan. That could have been a route to glory for them both; only it all went wrong – she was glad it had all gone wrong.

She had had an out – or she thought she did. But Fusion had not appeared, so she was going to die. She concentrated on anything as her body was lifted off the ground and she was pushed against a table, face down and her legs were pulled apart.

Kick-Ass

While the others kept watch, Kick-Ass moved forwards and he studied the layout of the farm through his NVGs.

He already knew the rough layout of the site from overhead imagery supplied by Battle-Guy. To the left was a low bungalow, with several lights burning. To the right was a low barn and screaming could be heard coming from an open door. Five cars were parked in the space between the barn and the bungalow.

Kick-Ass checked out the partially open barn door and he signalled the rest of the team and waved them inside while he kept overwatch.

Jackal with Shadow and Wildcat

We had arrived not a moment too soon.

The girl was naked again and this time I was not gratified to see it.

Only this time, it was not intended purely to humiliate; the intention was obvious as the girl was held up against a table and the man behind her had his trousers around his ankles. The man was only seconds away from driving his rock-hard cock in between the sobbing girl's exposed labia. The man was oblivious to our presence as were the others watching eagerly – tough; their loss.

I raised my pistol and double-tapped the man in the back of the head; the second round was totally unnecessary but it felt good. The corpse with the destroyed head fell forwards against the now screaming girl; her naked body covered in the man's blood and brains. I ran forwards, dragged the corpse off Discord and grabbed hold of the girl as she sank to the ground, sobbing.

"I've found the boy; he's been badly beaten up and I think he's been shot in the back..." Wildcat announced as she examined a body that lay on the ground several yards away.

"She's very beautiful, Jackal, no wonder you got hard . . ." Shadow commented without malice.

"She has a nice body but I only have eyes for you, my lover . . ." I replied quickly.

"Just remember that Jackal – you can look, but you can't touch," Shadow cautioned as she helped me lower the girl gently to the ground.

..._...

Her being naked allowed us to easily assess her wounds. They were mostly superficial and mainly consisted of many cuts, scratches, grazes, and bruises. I had to remember that this was the girl who had made light of humiliating Wildcat, not to mention her attempt to get a rise out of me . . . but she had also shown Wildcat compassion and she had helped us big time in Toulouse. The worst, I figured, would probably be the mental trauma at almost being raped, but with what I knew about the Urban Predator kids that I had already encountered, I knew it would most likely go much deeper than that.

The enemy was at bay, so we carefully loaded Discord and Tempest into our vehicles. Tempest was still unconscious, which was good, considering his wounds.

M15 Safehouse Farnham Common

We very quickly left the area and we made it back to the Safehouse unscathed.

There, Chloe took Discord – apparently, her real name was Sarah – to get cleaned up and dressed. Dave carried Tempest into the kitchen where the table had been cleared and the boy was laid face down on the table.

Dave and Cassie, with help from Megan, cut away the boy's clothing to find his bullet wound. It was a through and through, so no bullet was visible. After cleansing the wound and dressing it to prevent further infection, Cassie and Dave pulled off their rubber gloves and they went to wash their hands.

Megan had noticed that Marc had a tattoo on his right bicep: it was of a thundercloud emitting lightning bolts.

..._...

Chloe had taken her time with Sarah. The girl was humiliated and worried as she took a quick shower before Chloe handed her what was left of her clothing. Chloe had Sarah were of a similar build so Chloe produced a spare t-shirt to replace the ripped blouse. As Sarah had pulled on the t-shirt, Chloe had noticed a large tattoo on the girl's right shoulder blade. It was black and based on a 'draconequus' creature inspired by Greek mythology which was a serpentine being with the head of a pony, but numerous different animal parts to symbolise the inharmonious nature of the creature.

I had been pacing up and down in the living room awaiting her arrival.

I had no idea how I was going to react when I spoke to her. I felt compassion for the girl; none of what had occurred was her fault and I had to consider her past actions since that time in Milan. Chloe was right, as ever, I had to give her a chance. Sarah looked very shy when she came into the living room and she saw me.

"Hello, Sarah, how are you feeling?" I inquired as nicely as I could.

"Embarrassed."

"You have no reason to be; you are among friends," I tried.

"I was naked, again – not to mention that I was about to be . . ."

Sarah broke down and she began to sob. I hugged her tightly as she cried.

"Am I interrupting something, Joshua?" Came a very familiar voice a few minutes later and I instantly released the girl.

"I think the attack has just come to the fore . . ." I explained quickly.

Chloe smiled and nodded approvingly at my actions.

"I wouldn't wish something like that on anyone," she said calmly.

With Chloe's help, I guided Sarah to a couch and sat her down.

"I'm sorry . . ." she sobbed with obvious relief in her tone.

"Don't be; you've been through hell, Sarah," Chloe tried as she sat down beside Sarah.

A few minutes later, Sarah had calmed down and she stood up.

..._...

Megan then walked into the room and she headed over towards Sarah who looked down at the ground and she tried desperately to avoid Megan's eyes.

"Bet you are overjoyed at seeing me almost raped or worse . . ." Sarah said.

Megan did not respond, she simply reached up and slapped the older girl around the face.

"I am not in any way overjoyed, Sarah, and I am appalled that you would even think that," Megan replied as she controlled her anger.

"Sorry . . ." Sarah mumbled.

"You were forced to become Discord, against your will. I don't believe that you enjoy what you do – except for maybe getting a rise out of Josh . . . only joking. I want to believe that there is good in you; you showed me compassion when you did not have to and you saved my life so I owe you for that. I hope that we can be friends, Sarah – Marc, too."

Megan reached up again and the older girl flinched away. Megan touched the scar on Sarah's right cheek.

"I'm sorry about giving you that scar."

"That Glock hurt," Sarah admitted with a smile but then the smile faded. "How's Marc?"

"He's got a new hole in his side but nothing to worry about," Dave explained. "Let's get packed up; the plane is awaiting our arrival."

Saturday, June 25th

RAF Northolt, United Kingdom

It was not long after one in the morning when they boarded the Gulfstream for the return flight.

Marc, still unconscious, was strapped into one of the sofas and a drip was hung from the overhead. Sarah and Megan sat on the sofa opposite while Dave, Joshua, and Chloe took seats at tables. Once airborne, Amy came aft and asked for any food and drink orders.

Megan waved Sarah to go first.

"I could murder a wildcat burger," she quipped and even Joshua laughed.

"Fresh out of wildcat," Amy advised with a wink at Megan. "Unless you want it fresh off the bone . . ."

Megan's eyes went wide for a moment before she quickly suggested a normal burger.

"Make them doubles with bacon and cheese, please, Amy," Dave suggested to nods all round. "Some Coke too, thanks."

Amy chuckled as she headed forward to the galley.

..._...

"Sorry if I spoke out of turn, Megan," Sarah offered apologetically.

"I had a feeling that you knew who we all were," Joshua mused.

"If I had known back in France . . ."

"I know – ticket to glory," Megan added.

"We're all friends now," Dave confirmed.

"How many does that make, now?" Chloe asked.

"Too damn many, if you ask me!" Joshua chuckled. "At least we have a boy now – they've all been damn split-arses up to now."

"Is that an extension of 'tramp'?" Sarah grinned and Joshua grimaced at the reference.

"I was very wrong to say that; you're most definitely not a tramp, Sarah. To be honest all you fucking Predators are fucking nuts!"

"How many more of us have been rescued?" Sarah asked.

"You and Marc make nine," Dave replied.

Seven hours later

Chicago Midway Airport

As soon as the aircraft landed, it taxied directly into the hanger where they were met by Dr Bennett and Mindy.

Dr Bennett immediately came aboard and she quickly set to work examining Marc's injuries. He had regained consciousness around the time we had started our descent into Chicago. At first, he had been apprehensive and worried but the sight of Sarah and her soothing words had quickly calmed him down. Dave updated the boy on what had been happening, where they were, and where they were going.

"Where are they going?" Megan asked.

"Glenview, to meet Stephanie and Saoirse, and then onto Safehouse Q," Mindy replied.

Later that morning

Glenview

I led Sarah and Marc into the living room where Stephanie and Saoirse were awaiting their arrival.

Sarah stopped dead as she entered the room and as she stared at Saoirse, a whole host of emotions seemed to sweep across her face before she spoke.

"Saoirse – I . . ."

"She knows you," growled Stephanie, who had a none too friendly expression on her face as she studied the new arrivals.

The same expression crossed Sarah's face as she turned her gaze onto the younger girl.

"What is she doing here?" Sarah spat.

"She has a name," Saoirse retorted, a little anger in her tone. "Her name is Stephanie."

"I don't care what her name is; she's a fucking wild animal!"

I looked over at my daughter – obviously, she got about in the Predator world!

"You're a bit like Mindy, Steph: people always remember you but not always for the best of reasons!" Dave quipped as his wife scowled before turning her attentions back to her daughter.

"What did you do, Stephanie?" Mindy asked wearily and dreading the answer.

In response, Sarah pulled up the left side of her t-shirt and she revealed a nasty looking scar about four-inches long.

"She slashed me," Sarah explained.

I looked back at Stephanie.

"She pissed me off – she's damn lucky that I was in a good mood and I chose not to kill her."

"Ladies – please," I insisted.

Stephanie grimaced and she stepped forwards, towards Sarah, who backed off. At any other time, seeing a fourteen-year-old back down from a ten-year-old would have been funny.

"I'm sorry, Sarah," Stephanie said as she held out her hand to Sarah. "That was a bad time for us all. Us Predators need to stick together. Friends?"

"Thank you, Stephanie," Sarah replied as she tentatively took the offered hand and shook it.

"My friends call me, Steph."

"Me, too?" Marc asked.

"As long as you don't tie me up, naked, and then wank over me."

Marc went bright red and Sarah did her best not to giggle.

"What are you so grumpy about?" Stephanie asked Megan while Sarah talked with Mindy.

"I'm flat broke."

"Why?"

"The tantrum I threw when Mom made me take that damn pregnancy test; it cost me nearly thirty bucks . . . thanks for that by the way!"

"You're always welcome!"

"How's it feel, meeting two more Predators?"

"It sucks; they all remember who I was. Either 'cause I was a traitor or because I hurt people for the sake of it . . . I'm not that Psyche – not anymore."

Stephanie looked genuinely hurt and unhappy so Megan quickly changed the subject.

"Where's Horatio?"

"The pussy is with that great canine pussy, Razor – it's almost impossible to separate those too . . . pussy . . . fuck, dammit!"

"Problem, Stephanie?" Mindy asked.

Stephanie turned to look at Sarah and then at Saoirse with a quizzical look on her face and then she smirked.

"SD?"

"Yes, Steph."

"A though just occurred to me. Is this the very same Sarah that you ate out on stage?"

Saoirse went a brilliant shade of pink.

"Fuck, Stephanie!" Saoirse growled as she felt Sarah's hand on her shoulder.

Saoirse turned to see a very angry teenage girl a foot away from her.

"You told this girl about that?" Sarah demanded angrily.

"It was accidental – how the fuck was I meant to know that I would ever see you again, Sarah?" Saoirse tried and quite reasonably she thought.

"Still – that was a very private moment . . ."

"Private?" Stephanie demanded incredulously. "You ate each other out in front of two-hundred people!"

Sarah smiled before she replied.

"Believe it or not, Steph, we have never spoken about that moment, since it happened; to be honest we never even spoke afterwards – we were too embarrassed to even look at each other."

"So, an encore is out of the question, then?" Stephanie inquired with a deadpan expression.

Chapter 293*: Nightmare Revealed

Sunday, June 26th, 2016

Lizzie Edwards saw herself as one of Fusion's biggest fans.

The bedroom which she shared with her big sister, Lauren, was liberally plastered with posters and photos of the Chicago Vigilantes. Currently, her favourite was a relative newcomer to the scene. Various photos of the female vigilante were prominently visible alongside the likes of Hit Girl, Kick-Ass, and Shadow. Lizzie had no idea that her dream, and much more besides, was about to come true.

That vigilante was known as Nightmare.

That evening

The Edwards Home

"What is this?"

Lizzie Edwards was scared, however, something in the back of her mind told her that she was safe from harm. The female vigilante standing before her was a good few inches taller than her and she had a slim build, despite the teal and dark grey tiger stripes that liberally covered the combat suit which bulked out her figure. On her right hip was a holster carrying a SIG Sauer P239 Tactical pistol in 9-millimetre. Around her waist was a utility belt that carried various pouches as well as a 7-inch knife over her left thigh – Lizzie knew all about her favourite vigilante and the version before her matched the posters on the walls of her bedroom.

The vigilante was standing in that same bedroom having climbed in through the window, just moments before. She knew that the vigilante was known as Nightmare, she also had a shrewd idea who the vigilante really was beneath all the armour, but there was every chance that she was very, very wrong. Lizzie Edwards began to cry, but the vigilante reached out with her left hand and she took hold of Lizzie's right.

"Don't be afraid. . ." the electronically altered voice said.

"I – I'm not. If only my sister could see this. . ."

"She's here, my dear Lizzie, she's here."

Lizzie was very confused and more than a little worried as with her right hand, the Chicago vigilante reached up and she pulled off her mask. For a moment, Lizzie blinked, scared to look but she then took in the face before her. She took an enormous intake of breath as her eyes struggled to comprehend what, or rather who, was standing before her.

..._...

The twelve-year-old girl stopped crying and she smiled.

"I knew it!" Lizzie exclaimed. "I knew it was you!"

"Thank you for keeping it quiet," Lauren replied as she hugged her younger sister. "I had a feeling that you knew what was going on."

"This is so awesome – my sister's a vigilante!"

Then came the expected host of questions and comments.

"I saw you on TV – you were awesome!"

"What was it like to kill people?"

"Does Mom know?"

"When you climbed that tower at the silos – you were so brave!"

"Do you know who Hit Girl really is?"

"What will Mom say?"

"Were you scared that night?"

Then she lapsed into silence and the twelve-year-old just flopped backwards onto her bed, stunned by the evening's revelations. But she bolted upright a minute later when their mother pushed open the bedroom door.

"Lizzie, what have I told you about leaving your dirty clothes on the landing. . . oh . . . hi, Lauren – what have I told you about bringing firearms into the house?"

Lizzie's mouth dropped open in shock.

"You know!"

"Of course, honey; I'm her mother!"

Lauren grinned.

"Sorry, Athena!"

"What!" Lizzie exclaimed. She glared at her mother and elder sister. "You, too?"

Emily Edwards glared at her youngest daughter and she shrugged.

"Sorry. . ."

"This sucks!"

..._...

The rest of the evening was spent with Lizzie examining each and every part of Lauren's combat suit as her sister undressed. The weapons were placed securely inside a locked container which in turn was bolted to the bedroom floor and the combat suit went into a locked, Kevlar holdall.

Lauren was very pleased that she did not have to withhold the secret any more. Lauren had been certain that Lizzie was figuring things out and after talking with Mindy and her mother, Lauren was told to come over, in 'uniform'. Both Lauren and her mother had sworn Lizzie to the utmost secrecy and she had nodded her ascent. Lizzie kept lapsing between moments of non-stop chatter and questions to total silence as she struggled to comprehend all she had learnt.

Lauren found her sister's confusion funny and she went to sleep with a big smile on her face.

A few hours later

"What's going on . . .?"

Lizzie struggled to sit up in her bed, her hands rubbing her eyes. Lauren was doing the same thing but then she suddenly came alert and she could hear shouting.

"Get out!" their mother screamed from downstairs.

"No!" came an answering bellow.

"Dad!" Lauren growled angrily as she jumped out of the bed and ran for the bedroom door. "Stay here, Lizzie!"

Lizzie made to move.

"I said to stay!"

Lizzie flinched away from her sister, scared by the dark expression on her face. She complied and slipped back under the covers.

..._...

"You fucking, bitch – those are my daughters, up there . . . and I want to see them!"

"It's two o'clock in the fucking morning, you drunk bastard!"

"I've seen what you've done to Lauren; she hates me . . ."

"You made her hate you all by yourself."

"You fucking whore . . . I'm gonna . . ."

The hand moved through the air, the palm of the hand open. Only it was intercepted and brought down smartly before a hand wrapped around Bill Edwards' throat. The arm squeezed and a voice hissed into his ear.

"One quick squeeze and you will never breath again . . ."

Bill Edwards did not recognise the voice which hissed in his ear and he would never have guessed that his daughter could scare him so badly. A hand grabbed hold of his throat and he felt the nails digging in.

"Do you want me to rip your fucking gutless throat out?"

Bill Edwards did his best to shake his head.

"People like you make me sick – I think you need to be taught a lesson; something that you will never forget . . ."

With that, Bill Edwards felt the arm release but as he attempted to turn, something hard collided with the side of his head and he lost consciousness before he hit the living room floor.

..._...

"Mom? Are you okay?"

"Yes, honey – I wish you didn't have to see him like that, but thank you for coming to my aid."

"I warned him . . . when he found me at the cinema."

"Yes, honey, you did – he was never one to take subtle suggestions. So, what do you have planned?"

"I have an idea but I'm going to need some help."

The Willis Tower 95th Floor

Bill Edwards was not a happy man – not by any stretch of the imagination.

His head hurt and for some reason, he did not feel right. As he opened his eyes . . .

"Holy fuck!" he yelled.

Everything was upside down and he had a remarkable view of Chicago at night. Then fear gripped him as he realised that he was upside down and hanging from a building, very, very high in the air. He looked around in a panic and at first, he thought he was alone. But no, just a few feet away, he could see the silhouette of somebody close by.

"Enjoying the view?" the electronically enhanced voice asked.

"Scary, ain't it?" another electronic voice asked and Edwards span around to see another form.

"Where am I?" he demanded.

"The 95th floor of the Willis Tower – I've been where you are and it sucks."

"Who are you?"

"My name is Psyche. My pal over there, that's Nightmare – she's a bit crazy, by the way."

"Why . . .?"

"Let's just say that we're friends of your daughter and she is not happy with what you're doing to her mother. They want you to stay out of their lives – for good!" Psyche went on.

..._...

Edwards struggled with his hands but they were secured, tightly, behind his back. His feet were secured as were his lower legs, almost to the knees. As he struggled, he began to swing from side to side. As his eyes adjusted to the darkness, he saw that the two armour-clad individuals were wearing harnesses and hanging off the side of the building, quite comfortably, the right way up.

"What are going to do to me?"

Edwards was determined not to give in to vigilantes but his voice betrayed him and wavered slightly.

"Don't know yet . . ." Psyche replied.

Edwards never saw the fist which swung from the other side and struck him hard in the stomach. Edwards struggled to regain his breath and his inverted position did not help.

"You've pissed us off," Nightmare growled as she kicked him in the face and sent him slamming into the tempered glass of the empty office behind.

Edwards screamed at the pain both from his smashed nose and his bruised head from the collision with the glass.

"I won't go near those girls again . . ."

"Don't fucking believe you!" Psyche drawled.

"You need to suffer a bit more," Nightmare growled as she brought out a knife and cut away his shirt allowing the wrecked garment to drift away, over a thousand feet, to the street below.

Nightmare then cut the belt of Edwards pants and slit up his right side while Psyche did the same on the left side. Each leg was then cut and the pants joined the shirt below. Nightmare seemed to hesitate but Psyche moved in and cut away the man's underwear leaving him naked from the knees up.

"Bit pathetic, really," Psyche commented as she ran the tip of her knife along the man's genitals. "I thought men were supposed to have bigger dicks."

Edwards was shaking with both fear, and the cold.

Nightmare giggled behind her mask at Psyche's comment.

After a brief phone call to Mindy, Dave and Stephanie had appeared at her house to remove the unconscious Mr Edwards. It had been Stephanie's idea to use the same place where she had been left dangling a few months previously. Kick-Ass was above them, in control of the ropes with Jackal and Shadow to assist.

While she had no love for the man who was dangling all but naked before her, she had been a little freaked out about removing his underwear but Psyche had jumped in to cover her unintended hesitation. While she was still squeamish at seeing men naked – in fact, she had never seen any completely naked – seeing her own father naked was something else completely. She steeled herself for what was to come; it had to be done to give her, her sister, and her mother some much-needed peace.

Psyche nodded at her; it was time.

"You . . . are . . . going . . . to . . . fucking . . . learn . . . you . . . piece . . . of . . . worthless . . . shit!"

As Nightmare yelled at Edwards, she punctuated each pause with a kick to some part of his body. The final kick went to somewhere delicate and the man screamed out in pain as blood from some of the kicks ran down his body.

"Time to go, bye bye!" Psyche growled and she began to cut the ropes binding his legs.

"No . . . please . . ."

The man was begging and he began to weep.

"You can't . . ."

"Oh, yes we can," Nightmare chuckled.

Psyche cut the final rope and Bill Edwards screamed as he began to plummet earthwards.

..._...

As he fell, the single rope binding Edwards' ankles together came taught after several feet and he was jerked to a rapid halt.

Terror was etched across his face and Nightmare cringed as she witnessed her father piss himself a thousand feet above the City of Chicago.

"Hope nobody's looking up!" Psyche quipped before she looked at Mr Edwards. "I'd keep my mouth shut, too, if I were you!"

As Bill Edwards watched, Psyche and Nightmare were hauled up the side of the building and onto the rooftop above.

"Don't leave me!"

There was no response as he was left to swing from side to side staring down at the dark city below.

..._...

"You think we should pull the fucker up?" Jackal asked.

"Nah – he's enjoying the view too much," Shadow chuckled.

"Pull me up – please . . ."

"Don't think he's enjoying anything, to be honest," Psyche commented dryly as she peered over the edge of the tower. "Mind you, I think his dick's getting smaller."

Nightmare laughed out loud and she blushed behind her mask.

"Thank you, all of you. I hate that man for what he's done to my Mom . . . but he is my Dad and while I want him out of our lives, I don't want him dead."

"That's your decision and your decision alone," Kick-Ass said.

"I want to go back to my family now."

"Pull him up!" Kick-Ass ordered and Jackal heaved on the rope.

The Edwards Home

"Lauren!"

"I'm back, Mom."

"I was so worried – your father?"

"He won't trouble us any more . . ."

"You didn't . . ."

"He's alive."

The following morning
Sunday, June 26th, 2016

The Edwards Home

"Mom!"

"What Lauren?"

"You may want to see this news item . . ."

'... In other news, a naked man was found wandering around the 95th floor of the Willis Tower in the early hours of the morning. The man, believed to be in his forties, was unable to explain why he was atop the tower but he kept saying that he had to leave Chicago. No charges were filed against the unknown man who appeared to have lost his mind but Police said that he had been provided with clothing and given a bus ticket out of the city...'

"Was that . . .?" Emily asked, a big smile spreading across her face

Lauren simply nodded.

Glenview

Mindy turned away from the TV and she looked over at her husband and daughter as they ate breakfast.

"You two appeared to have had fun, last night," she commented with a grin.

"Nothing to do with me," Stephanie offered. "Ask Psyche and Nightmare – they went a little nuts, last night . . ."

Dave simply shrugged and winked at his daughter who giggled as she dug into her cereal.

"I'll give you both points for creativity. Now, I need to go have words with Emily and I have a feeling that she is not going to like my idea."

"She'll give in – we all do . . . eventually," Dave replied sardonically.

That evening

1908 Wagner Rd, Glenview

"Mindy . . . I know some say that you are totally nuts . . .," Mindy rolled her eyes, "and I would not normally agree with them, but right now . . . no, we can't!"

"Emily – I insist . . . and you don't want to cross me; I'm nuts!" Mindy warned with a smirk.

"It's far too much. Really, Mindy, we can't . . ."

"Why not?" Lizzie demanded.

"It's a little much, Mindy . . ." Lauren said in agreement with her mother.

"I just want you all to be safe – besides, you'll be closer to everybody else," Mindy pointed out reasonably.

"I'm not going to win this argument, am I?" Emily said.

"No – I'm a pushy bitch!"

..._...

The house had six bedrooms across three floors and was over 5,000 square-feet in size. Each girl would have their own bedroom and a private en-suite bathroom for the first time in their lives.

"I love it, Mindy – it also means I don't have to put up with Lauren farting all night!" Lizzie laughed as Lauren scowled at her younger sister.

"Okay!" Emily said as she finally gave in and gave Mindy a big hug.

Mindy grimaced but she went along with the hug as she was very glad Emily had taken her up on her offer.

Three days later
Wednesday, 29th June
Evening

Safehouse F

"Oh, wow!"

Lauren giggled at her sister's reaction which was much the same as her own first visit. Lauren recognised the expressions that flitted across her sister's face as she recognised the many familiar faces from either school or D-JAK. There was also some jealousy when Lizzie had first seen Lauren's on-duty uniform.

"Don't worry, Lizzie," Mindy chuckled. "We'll get you one, too."

"Me?"

"We know you can look after yourself – we've seen you in action at D-JAK. If you want in then we have a place for you . . . Torment."

"Torment. . ." Lizzie breathed. "I like it."

"Does that mean you won't be breaking into any more houses?" Hailee asked with a smirk.

"Sorry about that – I was going through a phase. . ." Lizzie explained shyly.

"No harm done."

..._...

"Let's see what you can do, Lizzie," Stephanie suggested. "Remember, this is not D-JAK. Down here, anything goes, okay?"

"Okay. . ."

With that, Stephanie began to circle the twelve-year-old girl. Lizzie had picked up her skills quickly at D-JAK so Stephanie was expecting something approaching a passable attack. . . Instead, Lizzie launched into a succession of Taekwondo patterns which had Stephanie rapidly retreating in surprise before she fell over backwards as Lizzie planted her right foot into the younger girl's chest.

"You been holding out on us, Lizzie?" Stephanie demanded as she rubbed her chest.

It was the grinning Lauren who replied for her sister.

"Lizzie practices every minute she can. Mom has to keep moving shit to stop it getting broken. Lizzie has also been trawling the internet for moves which D-JAK doesn't teach."

"Thanks for the heads up, partner!" Stephanie growled. "Well done, Lizzie; you're full of surprises."

"Thanks, Stephanie . . . oooph!"

Stephanie smiled down at Lizzie as she lay on the mat, her arms wrapped around her stomach.

"Never let your guard down."

..._...

It was a very happy trio that left Safehouse F and headed north to their new home. Emily Edwards was very pleased with how her daughters were turning out and very impressed with her younger daughter's skills. It made her feel more relaxed knowing that both of her girls could look after themselves. Having her husband run out of town was a dream come true, but for the 'sheriff' to have been her own daughter. . .

For the Edwards family, life had finally improved in every way.

Chapter 294*: The Gathering Darkness

Thursday, June 30th, 2016

Glenview

It was the last day of school and everybody was just a little bit more hyper than usual.

Stephanie was still steaming because she had failed to win the award for best attendance the previous day.

"I could have hacked the school to give me the perfect attendance," she moaned. "Missed it by only three days, too!"

"Trust me – that doesn't work!" Mindy laughed.

"Talking from experience, are we?" Dave asked.

"Yeah – I got busted on the same day some white-assed pimp got his ass kicked!" Mindy laughed as she kissed her husband.

"I try to forget that day. . ." Dave winced.

"So, do I – it caused so many problems."

Mindy was jerked back to the present as Anne-Marie began to yell at her brother.

"Daniel!" Dave growled and the argument rapidly stopped as the boy handed back Anne-Marie's socks.

Even though both Anne-Marie and Stephanie were still grounded, Mindy was giving them a little extra leash each day that they behaved. She was still mad at the both of them and she was determined for them to work to the end of their sentences. However, for that day, though, the start of the summer dictated a little compassion.

Mindy was overjoyed when the three menaces were dropped off at school and she could relax.

Mindy's idea of relaxation was to go for some exercise which was also a good way to exercise the three canines.

On leaving the house, she would turn left out of the gates along Burr Oak Drive before taking a left onto Burr Oak Drive West and around to East Burr Oak Drive and onto Mickey Lane which took her down to Winnetka Avenue where she turned right to head east.

At Sunset Ridge Road, she would turn right again to head south until she reached Elmwood Avenue. There, she would turn left to head east again until she reached Brandon Road where she turned left again before running down Woodlawn Road to Wagner Road which, after a left turn, took her north.

She would pause at Cole Park to allow the dogs to have some fun and she would throw several rubber balls around and chase after the animals. After about half an hour, they would begin the run back home turning left back onto Wagner Road, heading north.

At Winnetka Road, they would turn left and head west towards home before making a left turn onto Sunset Ridge Road and then a right onto Burr Oak Drive and through the gates to the finish line. In total the run covered 3.5 miles, not including the running around at Cole Park. The dogs would dive for their water bowls and down the best part of a gallon of cooling water before they headed out into the garden to lie in the sun.

Mindy took the opportunity to go for a much-needed shower – Dave would avoid her with his nose turned up at the smell. The hot shower revitalised her aching limbs and prepared her for the rest of her day.

"You smell sweeter," Dave commented as he gave his wife a kiss on the lips.

"I thought you liked me all sweaty," Mindy pouted as she brushed her long blonde hair before putting it up into her customary pony tail.

"I do – in the sack. . ."

"Well, that will have to wait – I have an appointment at the Data Core."

"Your loss. . ." Dave teased."

Mindy paused at the door for a moment before she turned and smirked at her husband, casually unbuttoning her blouse.

I basked in his body heat.

I was naked as the day I was born and I lay on my front on top of Dave, my head nestled under his chin. His hands moved gently up and down my back – the movements sent tremors through me as his fingers traced up and down my backbone. Dave would laugh as I squirmed and I knew that he was enjoying himself – I could feel something hard on my stomach. I loved the man, almost more than life itself. The decision to reveal my true-identity to him was still the best decision of my life. While I had only been eleven at the time, somehow, I had known that I was doing the right thing.

Now, I regretted nothing as I listened to his pounding heart; the heart that loved me and cared for me. He was my soulmate and I believed myself to be his. Without Dave, I might be dead, haunting the streets of New York City or even those of Chicago. Instead, we had kept each other alive and now we lived in a gorgeous house and upstairs we had three kids who were now the centre of our lives. It still freaked me out that somehow, we had two eight-year-old trainee vigilantes and a ten-year-old cold-blooded killer as our children. I was still a little unsure about the twins and whether I was doing right by them.

"What's worrying you, honey?"

"Nothing..."

"You're scowling and either that means I am no longer any good at turning you on, or you have something on your mind . . . and by your shudders, it has to be the latter."

Damn him for being so astute!

What was bothering me?

My life . . . that was what was bothering me. We seemed to lurch from one crisis to another . . . often with something nice in between, or with some exciting booty.

Crisis Number One – I ran away from New York and almost died, but I gained Dave, a sex life, and a home. We started to watch over our new home, the City of Chicago – shame about their pizza. I also gained my first Katana and got my Panigale back – yay!

Crisis Number Two – Dave found out that Miranda was dead (kind of) and we both found out that Chris fucking D'Amico was still alive despite having been half eaten by an incompetent goddamn shark. Then we had our first round of ninjas! We also discovered a young nutcase (sorry, young girl) who actually saved our lives... Chloe AKA Shadow joined us. Those two bastards (Dave and Marcus) produced the damn swear jar! On a lighter note, I acquired my second Katana and my Tanto – Dave got his Ko-Wakizashi. We also met Abigail and Dave acquired his Harley.

Crisis Number Three – We met Curtis! We also met Kyle – Chloe's then boyfriend – and Commander Ryan Bennett, USN. Marcus produced Sophia AKA Eisenhower, a very welcome addition to our growing team. We adopted two CPD Officers: Murphy and Fellowes. We also gained Safehouse A.

Crisis Number Four – That legless wanker tried to kill Dave; but it failed and Shadow save Kick-Ass' life. On the positive side, Marty was properly on board. Back to the negative and we suffered another round of ninjas . . . and I was injured which allowed me to meet the intrepid Dr Cathy Bennett – Chloe's long-suffering mother.

Crisis Number Five – The Archer began to target innocent people and we entered, the week of hell. I lost my Panigale to that bastard! Once that fracas was over, we brought Chloe onto the team permanently. Battle Guy gained his armour.

Crisis Number Six – Curtis again! He followed his cousin and found Safehouse A – Chloe tried to kill her cousin. A more real crisis cropped up – I was shot, twice. . . We never knew it at the time, but Joshua was there, in Chicago, and he witnessed me getting shot. Dr Bennett learned our identities and became our official medical support. I was presented with a new Ducati Panigale by CPD SWAT.

Crisis Number Seven – Chloe and I got dragged into a fucking bank heist! Chloe killed face to face, for the first time. I also became a landlord and Cathy found out it was Chloe at the bank. Commander Bennett found out about his errant daughter and Chloe and her Father healed a long-standing rift between them.

Crisis Number Eight – Ralph fucking D'Amico broke out of Riker's Island. We also discovered that a new vigilante, Hawk, was in fact somebody we knew; Kim Burgess – I almost killed her before I attacked Dave and Marty Tasered me! Not my best hour...

Crisis Number Nine – Chloe and I headed off to New York City. There we found Safehouse A had been broken into and I almost killed Joshua. At the same time, Ralph D'Amico began a scheme to have Kick-Ass and Hit Girl arrested in Chicago. Marcus was sent to Chicago to 'help'. We found out that we had a new ally in Chicago – Hank Voight. Dave met Jack Bay. A nasty week ensued with Dave and me separated. The week ultimately culminated in Ralph D'Amico shooting Chloe and almost killing Joshua. At one stage, we thought Joshua dead. I also shared a bath with another female for the first time – Dave keeps bringing that up . . .

Crisis Number Ten – The Russians! They smoothly slotted themselves into the vacuum that was previously occupied by our good friend, Ralph D'Amico. I was worried about our safety – the Bratva were not known for their compassion or their pleasantness. Then things began to escalate as a cop was killed by the Bratva. Dave and I got banged up as we began to take the war to them. Then we found ourselves lured into a trap by a young boy. Then I got myself pinned by a falling beam and had to be rescued by Shadow and Jackal of all people. We also found out that Jackal was highly skilled at Grand Theft Motorcycle! After some time, spent healing, we went after that boy, who turned out to be the missing Tommy Morgan. We rescued him and returned him to his parents – a definite high point amongst many lows. I was not to know at the time how badly that attack would thrust Fusion into the limelight.

Crisis Number Eleven – It wasn't really a crisis . . . whether it was, or not, depended on your point of view. Megan came onto the scene trying to bite my arm. She was like a wild animal back then with a foul mouth to match. Dave called her 'mini-Mindy' which infuriated the hell out of me at the time. Never expected that our lives would later become intertwined in more ways than one.

Crisis Number Twelve – Very soon after I had accepted Dave's proposal of marriage, Shadow went missing. Turned out to be a pair of nutcase Brits trying to find their way home. We helped them, Ralph D'Amico lost his arm, and we got Shadow back. I also lost my cool with Chloe and as a result, I gave her the boot – out of Fusion! Then Dave got me and Chloe back together again – ultimately a good thing in hindsight. Other than Dave, Chloe was the one other person who understood me and I could not imagine life without her – as I would have been dead.

Crisis Number Thirteen – Right on the back of Crisis Number Twelve, Curtis' parents were killed and he became an orphan. That trip to Washington D.C. had been the worst of my life and I so felt for the little guy. There also formed a dubious duo: Megan and Curtis – those two together were a damn nightmare!

Crisis Number Fourteen – The Russian Mafia struck back – the Bratva had escalated its tactics in a major way and yet again, I was hurt, along with Shadow and Jackal in an explosion.

Crisis Number Fifteen – The New year brought us the Sisters of Trinity. A trio of fucking nutcases who seemed to enjoy causing shit. Then I was shot again and I was rescued by the young Megan Wilson with the help of her Mom, Paige. My identity was also revealed to them both; there was no alternative if I was to live. Turned out to be the best decision ever. Then Dave got a shocker when one of the Nightingales was revealed to be none other than Night Bitch from New York, Dave's ex-squeeze.

Crisis Number Sixteen – Safehouse A was destroyed – at my own hand. On the plus side, we got to move into Safehouse F – note to all: it is not, will not, and won't ever be called, a Hit-Cave!

Crisis Number Seventeen – Jack Bay was attacked and almost killed along with Joshua. However, Natalie Bay was killed. I went on a killing spree to discover who was behind the attack. I also allied ourselves with the Bratva – part of that keeping your enemies closer shit. Then we got a name: Richard Montfort and Kick-Ass had his Harley destroyed by a rocket while he was on it – big drama! We found ourselves assaulting a warehouse in Milwaukee of all places and we gained another name: William Tait and we learnt that he had a yacht which we assaulted from my pride and joy, the Vigilante. Montfort was aboard and he died. We then found ourselves back in Milwaukee assaulting a penthouse and killing Tait.

Crisis Number Eighteen – Hit Girl hit Britain. A little worm tried to blackmail Fusion into being his own personal assassins on behalf of HMG. Needless to say, I was not happy but we prevailed after causing a little mayhem around the UK, and the little worm was dismissed – but not by me.

Crisis Number Nineteen – Megan killed for the first time and there were some coordinated attacks against civilians which took a lot of putting down. Shadow was also hurt during one such attack. Todd died passing us some intelligence and we met somebody new; Petra. Worse came to pass when during a waterborne attack from the Vigilante, Wildcat came face to face with Ralph D'Amico and then we almost all got blown up by a bomb the bastard had placed.

Crisis Number Twenty – During an assault on what we believed to be Ralph D'Amico's lair, Shadow went missing. We assaulted again with SWAT and the Russians. We arrived just in time to prevent Shadow from losing her right arm. Eisenhower got to chomp on the bastard's balls before I chopped off his head and Shadow blew the fucker's head apart with Jackal's pistol.

Crisis Number Twenty-One – The Bratva went through a revolution and a hard-liner took control. The Cold War was back on in Chicago and we had a few run-ins with them.

Crisis Number Twenty-Two – I almost killed Tommy and myself when I drove my SUV into a river

Crisis Number Twenty-Three – The new CPD Superintendent went on an anti-vigilante mission and Megan disobeyed orders and she was stabbed three times during the pursuit of a mass-murderer plaguing Chicago. Had to rescue Petra who had become an unwitting victim of the CPD's anti-vigilante drive. Megan decided to act out and had to be hauled home in cuffs. We then departed on a pleasant cruise to recover during which we came into contact with pirates – killed 'em all and sank their boat – and then got involved with people smugglers – rescued a bunch of people.

Crisis Number Twenty-Four – During an attack on a drug dealer, we came across an assassin by the name of Mathilda. She had then appeared to declare war on the Sicilian Mafia of all people, and then the city descended into chaos. After a night of continuous action everything went eerily quiet. The city began chomping at the Mayor who seemed incompetent to put it mildly. Oh, yes – Chloe and Megan were at each other's throats, again.

Crisis Number Twenty-Five – Let's not go into the fiasco in New York!

Crisis Number Twenty-Six – Marcus was shot! We tracked down the killer in another city – Gotham. We used some very unorthodox measures, including sending Chloe and Erika into a lesbian bar. I also went a little off the rails again after a car crash. However, the man who shot Marcus paid with his life – piece by piece. . . Curtis was shot and Megan was injured but she also learnt a valuable lesson about her mortality. More came back to Chicago than actually left. We had gained two young children, Daniel and Anne-Marie, after promising their father that we would look after them should anything happen to him. He was killed but we rescued the children and as a result, our lives changed forever.

Crisis Number Twenty-Seven – An Amber Alert had been called – fourteen kids had gone missing along with their teacher and the driver. We discovered them in a warren of tunnels close to the original Safehouse K and Lauren Edwards came onto the scene as one of the victims. Before killing the kidnappers, we extracted some information desired by GCHQ and we tracked down a RIB of cunts. We interrogated them for the name of a ship. As a result, that ship was stopped by a combined RN/USN effort and many people were saved.

Crisis Number Twenty-Eight – After training Batman and Catwoman, plus the most wonderful wedding ever, we engaged in a massive firefight at a trainyard. Hailee was badly hurt and I had to lecture her about following orders. Sophia became pregnant and we fucked around with the Superintendent.

Crisis Number Twenty-Nine – Our lives took another turn. A young nine-year-old girl called Stephanie Walker came onto the scene. Miranda Swedlow also returned which was a surprise for all. After a big operation, we turned the tables on that bastard Superintendent and the Mayor saw him for what he really was – a corrupt bastard in uniform. Jack Bay became the Superintendent and Marcus became a Captain.

Crisis Number Thirty – Paige was shot during a failed kidnapping. Wildcat went slightly nuts on a night out with interesting results and Shadow fell off a roof. We also took down some giant bastard causing havoc in central Chicago. Megan needed to be taught a lesson before she pushed things too far. Then we were ambushed by the Sicilian Mafia. We had a firefight in an old theatre where we learnt that the D'Amico family was still haunting us.

Crisis Number Thirty-One – Where do I start? After adopting Stephanie, we went on a post-Christmas cruise around the Caribbean. Everything went well until Anne-Marie was taken. We tracked down the kidnappers and assaulted a chunk of Sovereign British Territory to recover her. Got my new yacht banged up into the bargain but at least our family was back together again.

Crisis Number Thirty-Two – Urban Predator. We learnt about a sick CIA plan to use young kids as assassins based on yours truly. Then the CIA attacked us at Safehouse K – and I blew it up! The CIA teams died too.

Crisis Number Thirty-Three – We discovered that Stephanie had a nemesis who was out there to kill her. Her name was Foxtail and she was believed to be a Phase 3 Predator, fully trained and deadly. On the positive side, Lauren joined the team as Nightmare – a very apt name for her! It wasn't really a crisis but through no fault of our own, we managed to lose a chunk of our All-American home to the British in a superbly executed secession (had to look that word up) of Stephanie's new bedroom which became Sovereign British Territory in the form of The British Sector. Solved the Nemesis problem by turning Foxtail and Stephanie gained a friend; Saoirse Doherty.

Crisis Number Thirty-Four – A New York vigilante came to cause trouble in Chicago and we had a run in with NCIS. Managed to protect the vigilante known as Raven from herself and hand over a criminal to NCIS.

Crisis Number Thirty-Five – Mixed in with Crisis Number Thirty-Four, the goddamn CIA attempted to frame Stephanie for gun-running. The Stephanie and Saoirse fell for a CIA ruse and almost got themselves killed.

Crisis Number Thirty-Six – Fusion was packing to go to Europe. We were going to take down Urban Predator once and for all. Turned out it wasn't just a crisis – it was a mega-crisis and the scars dug deep for many of us. Hailee suffered badly after she was taken and tortured. Stephanie suffered the death of a controlling part of her life – Aurora. We almost lost Abby after the CIA changed tactics. We caused a little bit of trouble in Germany, Italy, France, the UK – to name a few countries. . . I got to unleash my pride and joy – Ocean Vigilante. We met a French vigilante and we teamed up to take down the final Urban Predator site where we freed the final set of kids. That final set of kids included three very special girls who became part of our sister organisation in the UK, Vengeance. One was also reunited with her sister. Both Anne-Marie and Danny killed for the first time, too.

Crisis Number Thirty-Seven – This was wrapped up in the previous 'crisis'. Fusion was hacked, only it was a proxy-hack (according to Marty). The CIA had attempted to put the blame on five young kids but with the help of Battle Guy and Hal, the five kids put the hack down. We decided to keep the kids on retainer and they became Synthesis.

Crisis Number Thirty-Eight – We had only been back in the US a matter of days when the city began to explode – literally. I also learnt that there were some new vigilantes in town, plus some pinky-purple thing called Sunset Phoenix and also another possible super-criminal known as FEAR.

Crisis Number Thirty-Nine – Just a mini problem when Chloe's best friends discovered her deep dark Shadow secret! After a short sharp shock to explain what might happen if either of the two girls spoke out, they were sent on their way.

Crisis Number Forty – The Silos; major battle. Did some base jumping and kicked FEAR's ass! Went on another cruise and got involved with some drug-dealers. Marcus now thinks it is impossible for me to go anywhere and stay out of trouble.

Crisis Number Forty-One – Anne-Marie lost her access card. Big drama, but recovered the card and nobody hurt.

Crisis Number Forty-Two – Big race across Chicago and a fight with Sunset Phoenix and FEAR. Wildcat almost killed when her Ducati was destroyed.

Crisis Number Forty-Three – Fucking tattoos!

Crisis Number Forty-Four – An echo from our time in Europe: Tempest and Discord. Had to send a team to extract them from a rather nasty situation. . .

Crisis Number Forty-Five – Lauren and Lizzie's father came on the scene and started causing shit. Psyche and Nightmare sorted him out with a little help from their friends.

..._...

"Wow!" Dave commented. "What a fucked-up world!"

"Fucking tell me about it – don't we deserve a moment's peace?" I demanded.

"We must have been really bad in a previous life."

"Not funny. . ."

"Just look on the bright side – our lives our never dull!"

Mindy chuckled and the chuckle quickly changed to laughter as she considered Dave's comment.

Early that afternoon

Latitude: 41°49'35.79"N Longitude: 87°42'4.10"W

The facility was a part of Safehouse E, but they did not need to know that.

As far as they were concerned, the bunker was a secret and only they knew of its whereabouts. Elizabeth 'Libby' Dade had received a cryptic phone call from Battle Guy, the day before. On that afternoon, the high school turfed out the kids for the summer at noon and another call was received. A simple location was provided and the five teenagers wandered into the Brighton Park area of Chicago. Once they had arrived at a very non-descript and all but invisible brick structure with a single door at the top of six concrete steps, Libby had placed her hand on an eight-inch by nine-inch black pad which was affixed to the brickwork. Access was via handprint biometrics and the door clicked open a second later. They were met by Hit Girl.

"Welcome."

Hit Girl guided the five teens down a passageway that was narrow and only allowed movement in single-file. Once they reached the far end of the eighteen-foot-long passageway a door automatically released.

"No hand scanner?" Jesse Dade asked.

"Facial recognition in the passageway," Hit Girl explained.

"If we fail the facial recognition?" Jesse persisted.

"You die."

"O – kay. . ."

..._...

Through the door was a small room with a wall-mounted screen and another eight-inch by nine-inch black pad which was mounted at a forty-five-degree angle towards them just below the screen. There was also a small tray mounted beneath the screen with a slot beside it.

"One at a time, please," Hit Girl advised.

Libby went first, placing her hand on the pad. Words began to appear on the screen:

ELIZABETH DADE . . .

ACCESS GRANTED

PLEASE TAKE ACCESS CARD

There was a dull clatter as something appeared in the tray. Elizabeth took the item. It was a dark blue access card with the name 'SYNTHESIS' in the bottom right corner and a silver eagle and stripe in the upper left portion.

"Your access card. On arrival, you will collect your card; you will need it to access everything beyond this room. To leave, you must insert your access card into that slot, just to the left of the tray. If you do not, you will not be able to leave the facility."

"If access is not granted?" Jesse asked.

"You die."

"I feel safer already . . ." Jesse muttered.

Jesse was next and he was soon holding an identical access card in his hand. The remaining members of Synthesis followed suit: Kate Bradford, Laurence Gray, and Peter Savage.

"Let's go," Hit Girl said as she swiped her own access card to pass through the next door.

Synthesis Data Core

The room was large with eight sides.

The main door into the facility, constructed of armoured steel, was at the seven o'clock position, with another, identical, door over at the five o'clock position – that door led to the server room. At the six o'clock position there was a superbly equipped kitchen with a fridge, sink, microwave, and dishwasher. The remaining five walls of the regular octagon were occupied by a computer workstation located on each wall.

Each identical computer workstation was made up of six 37-inch monitors arranged in a two-layer grid. In front of each of the workstations was a very comfortable looking, high-backed, black leather chair. Located on each desk was a cordless keyboard, cordless mouse, and a selection of other peripherals.

The entire room was air-conditioned and had subdued lighting with more focused lighting fitted at each workstation. In the middle of the octagon, there were two giant printer/copier devices and a massive A0 printer.

"What is that for?" Libby asked as she examined a metal box mounted beneath one of the workstations.

"In each of those is a loaded Glock 19 pistol and two spare magazines. Heavier weapons are available in the cabinet located beside the main access door."

"I've never . . ." Peter began.

"You will each be given training on the weapons held," Hit Girl lectured. "This entire facility is protected by active and passive security including a complete Faraday cage on all sides. No standard cell coverage is possible in here, however there is a relay for your cell phones via the main datacentre. All communications are monitored, both inbound and outbound, including your cell phones. Security is 24-7 and can be onsite very quickly – but I would not recommend testing us. . ."

Five sets of eyes wandered around the amazing facility taking in everything. Finally, the geek side of them all came to the fore.

"Can we?" Libby asked tentatively and Hit Girl laughed.

"Please do. . ."

The five kids scrambled for the workstations where they swiped their access cards and the screens came to life. There was plenty of chatter as they examined the hardware and software available to them. Hal and Battle Guy both came on via video link and they began to take the five hackers through the facility.

Hit Girl chose to go for a wander as it quickly got very technical and therefore very boring as far as she was concerned.

Later that afternoon

Outside North Park Elementary School

Megan and Curtis had been picked up by Paige, so it was just me and my three kids.

"Who wants pizza?"

It was a pointless question as three kids simultaneously exploded with joy as we walked towards the car. It was a perfect day and I felt happier than I had in a long time. Maybe things were settling down and we could all enjoy life as a family – well, as much as any vigilante family could.

'I so wish you could be here, Daddy. . .' I thought as I looked up at the sky.

"You're the greatest Mom ever!" A wildly grinning Danny said as he held my hand.

"Whatever it is you want, you ain't getting' it," I laughed.

I truly was a very happy woman and nothing could tarnish that afternoon nor diminish the joy that I felt within me . . .

K

The proverbial bubble of joy burst as my brain told me that the sound was a gunshot – a suppressed, long-range, gunshot but it was still a gunshot. I had no idea where the bullet went but before I could do anything . . .

"Mum, I feel strange . . ."

I turned to look at Stephanie; she swayed as she stood on the sidewalk. However, that was not what had caught my attention; it was the rapidly spreading crimson stain that threatened to inundate the front of her white blouse. Anne-Marie screamed at the sight – Danny went white as a sheet and his hands went to his mouth.

After a moment, Stephanie sank to her knees as blood dribbled from her mouth and ran down her chin. I grabbed hold of her when she fell forwards and I cradled her in my lap while I, myself, sank to the concrete sidewalk. I pulled out my cell . . .

"9-1-1 . . ."

"My daughter's been shot . . ."

Chapter 295*: Hanging By A Thread

Thursday, June 30th, 2016

Outside North Park Elementary School

It was all a blur.

The ambulance arrived within three minutes and the paramedics quickly seized the unresponsive Stephanie from my arms. After laying her down on a blanket, they cut off her blood-soaked blouse; her entire torso was a mass of blood and I could see the torn flesh where the bullet had entered her body. I shook with a mix of anger and fear as Anne-Marie and Danny both grabbed hold of me. The only good thing, if there was such a thing at that point, was that Stephanie was still breathing. Her body was torn and it was broken; I had no idea if she was going to survive.

It was mere minutes before the paramedics stood up and Stephanie was placed onto a trolley and then moved into the waiting ambulance. My mind registered many more sirens and then I felt a pair of strong, and somehow familiar, hands pull me up to my feet.

"You go with Stephanie; I'll take the twins."

It was Marcus; I recognised his truck parked a few feet away, a blue light flashing on the dashboard. I had no idea how he had arrived so fast. As I just stood there in a state of stunned confusion, he turned to the paramedic as she was about to climb into the driver's seat of the ambulance. He pointed at a CPD cruiser that sat several yards away, blue lights flashing.

"That unit, there, will escort you . . . that's my granddaughter you have in there. . ."

"She's in the very best of hands, Captain."

With that, I climbed into the back of the ambulance and almost immediately, I felt us moving fast, the siren screaming. I sat where directed and I held my daughter's limp hand as the paramedic monitored her condition.

Mercifully, the ride was not a long one.

Northwestern Memorial Hospital

"We have an inbound – ten-year-old girl; gunshot to the chest."

"Maggie – page Dr Manning and prepare Trauma Three."

The ambulance arrived minutes later.

"Maggie!" The Paramedic called as they wheeled in the girl.

"Talk to me."

"Ten-year-old female, bullet wound to the chest. Unresponsive, flaccid agonal breathing."

"Trauma Three."

Trauma Three

I followed the trolley and my daughter as both were wheeled towards a small, glass enclosed room over to the left.

"On my count . . . one, two, three. . ."

Stephanie was moved over to the hospital trolley and the Paramedic removed the one from the ambulance.

". . . IV is already in. Pulse is weak and thready . . ."

". . . having trouble bagging – a lot of resistance . . ."

I barely understood half of what they were saying but I knew enough to know that Stephanie was in serious trouble.

". . . BP seventy over forty, heart-rate one-thirty . . ."

That was bad; her blood pressure was very low. I felt completely overwhelmed and very alone as Stephanie lay there being prodded and poked by various doctors and nurses. Tears flooded down my cheeks; both unchecked and unbidden.

"Are you the mother?"

I turned to see a nurse before me.

"Yes, Stephanie's my daughter . . . is she . . .?"

"She's in the best of hands, but she's lost a lot of blood and the trauma to her chest is bad."

Safehouse F

Dave put down the dumbbell and he picked up his cell.

"It's the purple terror!" he chuckled to Marty as he pressed the speaker button. "Hi, honey. . ."

There was no pre-amble and they barely recognised the voice that spoke, but the first three words sent a chill down their spines.

"Thunder! Thunder! Thunder!" Mindy began. "Stephanie. . ."

That was it, all they heard after those three words was sobbing.

The 'Thunder' codeword was reserved for a perceived direct threat to Fusion and there was a special set of arrangements to be actioned when that codeword was triggered. It was almost a full minute before Mindy spoke again and by that time, Dave and Marty were in the Command Centre. Marty had hit an alarm button as they had left Level 0 which had, in turn, drawn the other people in the Safehouse into the Command Centre. Therefore, it was Dave, Marty, Saoirse, and Hailee who heard Mindy's explanation.

"Stephanie was shot . . . sniper. She's in the ER and it doesn't look good. . ."

"Anne-Marie, Danny . . . you?" Dave asked, his face stricken with a mixture of sorrow and anger.

"The twins are with Marcus and I'm fine. I'm at Northwestern with Stephanie. . ." Mindy paused for a moment and Dave took the cell off speaker and walked into a corner to speak with his wife. "Dave . . . she's so young. . ."

Marty looked over at Saoirse and Hailee who were just as stricken but with horror on their faces. He quickly gathered his thoughts as he punched up some details onto a screen.

"Senior staff will go to Safehouse Zulu. We maintain a force here at Fort Fusion and we send personnel to Safehouse W," he explained. "Petra, you will take charge here with Hal, Foxtail, Trojan, and Mist. You will be joined by Medic in due course. I will deploy with Kick-Ass to activate Zulu and we will be joined by Rhino, Hawk, Wildcat, Rogue, and Ravage. Jackal and Shadow will follow on to Zulu once they have checked out the surrounding area. Leon will be out on counter-sniper and overwatch. Nightmare, Torment, and Athena will remain on standby but on alert for Safehouse W. Ares, Aphrodite, and Splinter will go to Safehouse W with Raven."

Dave returned as Marty finished speaking.

"You ready to roll, Battle Guy?" he asked.

"I was born ready. . ." Battle Guy replied.

"Dork!" Dave retorted with a forced smile.

West Columbia

Not surprisingly, Megan was pleasantly surprised to see her niece and nephew walk through the door. However, her surprise quickly turned to worry when she saw the tears on their faces and the set of Marcus' expression. Paige was worried about her husband's expression too.

"What is it, Marcus?" she asked her husband.

"Stephanie has been shot – it was a sniper. . ." Marcus replied.

There was stunned silence for almost a full minute before anybody said anything.

"What the fuck?" Megan exclaimed.

"She's at Northwestern Memorial with Mindy – I heard the call over the radio and I was only a minute away . . . I saw Stephanie. . ."

"There was so much blood . . ." Anne-Marie wailed as Megan hugged her and Danny.

"Is this a threat?" Paige asked, just as her cell vibrated with a text message.

Megan's beeped less than a second later.

"Yep!" Megan announced as she read the three simple words.

"Time to go. . ." Marcus announced as he drew his pistol.

"Right!" Megan commented as she reached behind the couch and produced a small Glock pistol.

Paige ran upstairs and within a minute, several 'go-bags' appeared at the foot of the stairs. Paige had Damon in her arms as Marcus scrambled for the bags and threw them towards the door.

Almost as one, they all headed for the door.

D-JAK Prime

We passed the other parked cars in the lower level of the parking lot and Dave drove the Audi directly towards a steel roller-shutter which raised at a signal from Marty's tablet. Beyond the steel shutter, there was a bare concrete area that had space for maybe half-a-dozen vehicles to park. There was no other visible exit.

Once the roller-shutter had closed behind them, the lights went out and at another signal from the tablet a rectangular area was illuminated in dull yellow dashes. Dave aimed for the closest end of the rectangle and lined himself up before he stopped dead-centre inside the rectangle. At another command, the car began to drop . . . and drop . . . and drop. . .

The elevator stopped about one hundred feet down the sheer concrete shaft and a steel door opened up directly ahead of the car.

Dave drove forward into total darkness.

Marcus parked his truck in the usual space in the parking lot and everybody unloaded the go-bags before he waved and drove off.

None of the kids had any idea what they were doing at D-JAK and, it seemed, neither did Paige!

"Welcome!" A voice called out.

Megan turned to see Kim walking toward them.

"Why. . .?" she began.

"Questions later, young lady – let's move. . ."

Northwestern Memorial Hospital

After I finished the call to Dave, I returned to my daughter.

Stephanie was surrounded by numerous medical personnel. Her blood-soaked clothing was in a pile on the floor along with several bloody wound dressings and bandages. I could hear some of what was being said and none of it sounded good. The ten-year-old was lying naked on the bed and a tube had been thrust down her throat to help her breathe. An IV had been inserted into her left arm and another just above her right ankle. Various wires had been attached to her torn body and were connected to various machines.

I could see her vital statistics up on a large monitor above and to the right of her. She was breathing but her heartbeat was ominously slow and as I watched the line began to straighten. . .

". . . stats are dropping . . ."

". . . no breath sounds on the left . . . no pulse; she's coding . . . milligram of epi . . ."

The Inner Psyche

I was happier than I had been in a long time and Mindy looked the same.

She had not been smiling all that much, recently – not surprising really. . . Then I felt a sharp pain on the left side of my chest which spread with a burning sensation as something moved across my body and then the sensation ceased as whatever it was stopped ploughing through my body. Pain swept over me; I felt strange and my muscles would not obey my brain. . .

"Mum, I feel strange. . ."

That was all I could say as Mindy turned around and I felt my legs collapse beneath my body then blackness enveloped me.

..._...

I seemed to wake up . . . only there was blackness and then light appeared dissolving the blackness into white and a great feeling of peace swept over me. There was no pain – no feeling at all. Then I blinked as two people walked towards me . . . Mum? Dad? It was them but how?

"Hello, Stephanie."

"Mum?"

"Yes, honey."

"Dad?"

"I'm here."

"How. . .? I . . ."

"Yes, we know what happened – that was not your fault, honey," my Dad said and I felt immense guilt surge through me at the thought of what I had done to my parents.

I looked around – somebody was missing.

"Where's Jamie?"

My parents looked at each other and exchanged a glance like I had seen them do a million times before. Then my Mum replied.

"You will be reunited with him again, Stephanie; I can promise you that. . ."

He should have been there; I so wanted to see my little brother – I did not understand.

"But. . ."

"You need to go, honey – now is not your time; you have so much more to do," my Dad said with a smile as he began to walk away.

No . . . don't go.

"Go . . . be strong – you are a survivor, Stephanie," my Mum added as she walked after Dad.

I didn't want them to leave me but everything went black again and I could hear different voices around me.

Northwestern Memorial Hospital

Tears were flooding down my face as I watched my daughter die before my eyes.

The doctors and nurses were doing everything they could; I knew that. But I was hearing bad phrases: 'still V fib', 'give her another milligram of epi', and worse still: 'no pulse'. A doctor was violently pounding on my daughter's bare chest as he tried to restart her heart then another doctor moved in and he unwrapped something.

"Slide over so I can needle the left chest . . . hold compressions. . ."

With that, the doctor stabbed my daughter below her left shoulder and I almost collapsed with the next comment.

"We've got a pulse. . . Pressure?"

My anxiety and downright distress had eased and my legs felt. The emotions flowing through me were way beyond anything I could cope with.

"A hundred over seventy-eight. . . Heart-rate, one-twenty. Let's get her to the OR. . ."

...—...

I had to let her go.

I hated to see her being wheeled out of the room and into the elevator but that was as far as I could go. I was left a wreck with tears streaming down my face. Never, in all my life had I ever expected to be in such a state – and in public! None of my extensive training covered anything like what I was struggling with right at that moment. Even worse, I had never felt as bad as I was at that moment about losing my own Daddy and there I was bawling my eyes out over a little girl that I had only known for seven and a half months. . .

"Mindy?"

I turned to see Hank Voight and Erin Lindsay a few feet away.

"We came as soon as the Captain told us," Hank explained and he smiled the way he did when he tried to look compassionate.

"How is she?" Erin asked.

"They've just taken up to the OR . . . oh, God . . . Erin, she crashed and I thought I'd lost her. . ."

That was it; I folded and Erin caught me, hugging me tightly as I sobbed.

Safehouse Zulu

"Holy crap!" Megan breathed as she was led towards a barely noticeable elevator.

Kim looked up at an equally unremarkable camera and the doors to the elevator slid open. The inside looked grungy and dirty but Kim waved them all inside with our bags. The moment that they were all inside, the doors closed and they all began to drop. It moved as fast as the elevator at Safehouse F and stopped less than twenty-seconds later. The doors opened and Megan peered out. There were many bright lights and she noticed that the elevator exited into a glass and steel enclosed area – a kill zone.

Kim placed her hand on a scanner which turned green and the elevator doors slid shut before the glass and steel doors directly ahead of them, slid open soundlessly.

..._...

"Welcome to Zulu!" Marty announced with a flourish.

"Cool!" Megan breathed, a sentiment that was echoed by Anne-Marie, Danny, and Paige.

"This is Level 1 – the main living space. Below us is Level 0 and above us are Levels 2 and 3," Marty went on.

The newcomers each ran their eyes over everything that was laid out before them. There was a large area which was luxuriously decorated in easy-on-the-eye pastel colours which detracted from the fact that they were seventy feet below ground. Unlike Safehouse F which was purely functional, Zulu was much more comfortable and a bit like Safehouse K had been before it had been destroyed.

Plush right-angled couches and chairs were arranged which allowed upwards of a dozen people to sit in comfort and there was an enormous TV mounted on a small partition wall. The ceiling had subdued and diffused lighting that gave a homelier feel to the large space.

"This is the recreation area. Beyond it, over there, are two storerooms, then a bathroom and the dining room – beyond the dining room is the kitchen. Over there, beside the kitchen, is a staircase that leads to all levels and over there, opposite the stairs, there is an elevator that also services all levels," Kim explained. "To our left is a door that leads to the suites, of which there are three. Mindy and Dave have a three-bedroom setup: Suite A. Marty and I, along with Matty, have a bedroom in Suite B. Megan, you will stay with Paige and Damon in the next bedroom. Chloe and Joshua and probably Cathy will share the remaining two-bedroom Suite."

"I'll let you all settle in and unpack before we show you the other levels," Marty added.

"Where's Dave?" Anne-Marie demanded, refusing to be distracted.

"He's in the Operations Centre up on Level 3."

Northwestern Memorial Hospital

It was several minutes before I was able to compose myself properly and I was ashamed about my public show of emotion.

"I'm sorry, Erin."

"Don't be. Look, can we go somewhere and talk?"

"Yeah."

I was led into a vacant treatment room where Hank closed the doors and stood against them while I sat down in (actually collapsed into) a chair and Erin sat on the edge of the bed.

"I know about what you do, Mindy. Hank never told me . . . I figured it out myself. Can I assume that Stephanie is one, too?"

I looked over at Hank and he nodded.

"You could," I replied cautiously.

"She's highly skilled but she has not been with you long; can I assume that she gained her skills somewhere else?"

"You could."

"Can I assume that Stephanie has enemies of her own?"

I laughed.

"The list is extensive and distinguished but it was decreased by two big players a few months back."

"The organisation that created her?"

"Gone – partly by her own hand."

"Somebody tried to frame the girl for firearms trafficking, a few months back," Hank informed Erin.

"Oh?"

"Frame up – but a good one. The idea was for the CPD and then ATF to crucify Stephanie – that part failed but there was a backup plan, actually two," I explained. "The video showing her buying weapons had a teaser in it – she and a friend saw it. They acted on it in error. They met with two other kids from that organisation which created Stephanie. She got the drop on them and persuaded them to turn – only there was a backup. The kids were killed – sniper. The sniper missed Stephanie and her friend."

"Those two kids?" Erin mused. "Their heads were almost blown clean off. The FBI removed their bodies before we could investigate; I remember it."

"It hit Stephanie hard but she's resilient."

"Tell me about her."

..._...

"Stephanie's favourite place is cuddled up with Dave on the sofa. While she'll argue with me about the stupidest things, she never talks back to him or gives him a second of grief. It was Dave who found her and he rescued her. Maybe she's just a Daddy's girl . . . Even though she's a killer and an expert in many forms of combat, she can be the sweetest, kindest, little girl out there. I've seen her treat her younger brother and sister with love and understanding, even though she is mad as hell with them both. Don't get me wrong, if she was pissed off, she could put a bullet into the very centre of your foreheads without a second's thought or the slightest remorse."

"I would really like to get to know her . . . if you allowed me; she seems a wonderful little girl," Erin said.

"She's a Brit to the core. Her idea of a comforting snack is a plate of toast with marmite and a mug of tea. She loves to stretch out on the sofa and watch Disney Channel with her siblings. Her favourite music tends to be stuff from the 80s and 90s. She hates meatballs, but loves spaghetti Bolognese – she's quite a good cook too; way better than me. While her cooking is palatable, her mouth even gives me cause to wince from time to time!"

Hank chuckled.

Safehouse Zulu

Anne-Marie headed towards the elevator they had just left.

"The other elevator – over there," Marty pointed out.

"Thanks, Marty!"

Anne-Marie turned to her left and headed towards another kill zone. She placed her hand on the pad beside the door. The glass and steel doors slid open soundlessly so that Anne-Marie, Danny, and Megan could pass through. Once the doors closed behind them, just as soundlessly, the elevator doors opened and they entered the elevator itself and Megan pressed 'LEVEL 3'. After the elevator doors had closed, the elevator shot upwards at speed before stopping at Level 3. They exited into another kill zone before they saw the smiling face of Dave on the other side of the armoured glass and steel. Once clear of the kill zone, the twins ran to hug their father.

"Welcome, guys – you too, Megan."

..._...

Dave took the kids through another kill zone to the left and then into the Operations Area. Unlike Level 1, the area was very sparsely decorated with bare concrete walls and a functional tiled carpet on the floor. The space was lit with bright white light which made the space feel very business-like.

A conference room with glass walls backed up against the kill zone. A polished, dark wood table occupied most of the space with seating for twelve and a trio of large-screen monitors were mounted on the walls. The rest of the area was giving over to the Briefing Space. There, three very large touch-screens were mounted on a wall and eighteen chairs, arranged in rows of six, faced the screens.

Beyond the Operations Area, was the Command Centre.

..._...

The Command Centre was beyond a large partition made up from two layers of armoured glass spaced eight-inches apart, just like that at Safehouse F. Again, in an emergency, steel shutters would close off the Command Centre in an emergency. Dave pressed his hand against a glass pad to release the inner and outer doors which slid to one side.

"Cool!" Danny muttered.

The Command Centre was almost clinical in design. The walls to the left and right were painted a dark grey while the far wall was white with six, eight-paned, mock windows spread across the wall. Diffused light filtered through to illuminate the room. The floor was a light grey, almost white, and was made up of many 2-foot by 2-foot tiles – a computer floor.

"Not bad," Anne-Marie commented.

"Pretty slick," Megan agreed.

Five, large, curved desks were arranged in the shape of a pentagon. The three furthest desks, one straight ahead and the others to the left and right, were identical. Each desk had a single chair but eleven computer monitors. Five, 24-inch screens were arranged side by side on the desktop, while six, 48-inch screens were arranged in two rows of three above the lower screens with the top row angled over at 45-degrees. The remaining pair of desks were clear of conventional computer screens but each still had a single chair. On closer inspection, those desks each contained 72" horizontal touch-screens.

"How's Steph?" Anne-Marie then demanded of Dave getting things back on track.

"I'm not going to lie to any of you; Steph is in a real bad way right now."

"When can we see her?"

"Not for a while, honey."

"I want to see her right now!" Anne-Marie persisted.

"Believe me, honey, you don't wanna see your sister like she is right now and I'm sure that she wouldn't want you seeing her like that, either."

"She helped me when I broke my arm – I need to be with her."

"Look – she's lying on a bed and she's stark naked, with tubes and wires running into her. I know it's difficult, but give it a few days and then as soon as she is ready, we'll go see her."

Anne-Marie could be seen struggling with the perfectly reasonable comment until she finally gave in.

"FUCK!" she yelled before she cringed and looked up at Dave. "Sorry. . ."

"We'll let that one slide; you just voiced what we were all thinking, little one."

4500 North Winchester Avenue

The woman finished her climb to the rooftop and she looked around before she climbed up a vertical ladder onto the next level above the roof.

She paused before a point on the south-east corner and raised a portable sniper-scope on a bearing of 211-degrees. In the eye-piece, she could easily make out the police and the blue tape surrounding the scene of the shooting. The range was a very basic 307-yards; an easy shot for even the most rookie sniper.

The woman pulled out her cell.

"Go ahead!" came the familiar voice.

"Definitely a sniper; I've found the nest."

"Okay – thanks, Mathilda."

Safehouse Zulu Command Centre

Dave turned to look at Megan.

"It's a confirmed sniper."

"Shit," Megan replied, understanding the implications.

Dave walked over to one of the horizontal screens and brought up a list of Fusion members. He selected 'ATHENA' and then 'MOBILISE'.

"I'm moving Nightmare, Torment, and Athena to Safehouse W."

An hour later

"Where we going, Mom?"

"Someplace safe, Lizzie."

"What could be beside the Calumet River?" Lauren asked.

"You'll like it. . ." Emily promised.

"Is it one of Mindy's whacked out warehouses?"

"Wait and see. . ."

..._...

The building was right on the water with a good-sized portion extending out over the water. The outside of the building was made up from apparently rusted sections of corrugated steel which made the building blend into the surroundings. Historically, the building belonged to a shipping company and barges would dock inside the building to be unloaded.

Emily Edwards made for an equally rusty-looming steel door which clicked open as they approached. Lauren frowned and went on guard as her mother pulled open the door and waved her two daughters in ahead of her. As the door closed silently behind them, lights came on and a very modern, very clean, armoured door appeared before them.

With a click, the door opened and Tommy Morgan smiled at the new arrivals.

"Come on in, ladies."

..._...

A yacht sat in pride of place over to one side of the building. Unusually for a yacht, it was out of the water and resting in a frame on the dock. Straddling the yacht was a large boat hoist with twin six-foot-tall wheels at each corner. Three sets of bright orange webbing slings ran beneath the yacht's keel.

"Hey! I've seen that boat before," Lauren exclaimed as she laid eyes on the Vigilante. "Well, the schematics, at least."

The performance motor-yacht was just over sixty feet in length overall, with a 44.5-foot waterline. The 27-tonne craft had a top speed of around 32-knots. The hull was black, while the upperworks were purple, which appeared almost black in the dark. Mounted at the highest point of the yacht were a radar antenna and twin domes that housed satellite communications and navigation equipment. There were also two large whip antennae for non-satellite communications.

"That is one of the most beautiful sights that I have ever seen!" Lizzie exclaimed.

"She's nice, isn't she?" Tony Morgan, AKA Ares, grinned. "The Vigilante was Mindy's first boat."

"Lauren, Lizzie?" Tommy asked. "You wanna see where you're sleeping?"

Northwestern Memorial Hospital

Ever since Hank and Erin had left, I had been alone.

I hated being alone, especially as my eldest daughter was being cut up in the operating room several floors above. I needed Dave. I needed his support. I needed his love. But I knew that there was a bigger picture and Dave was busy keeping many other people safe; I would just have to wait my turn – the needs of the many outweighed the needs of just one veteran purple vigilante and her vigilante daughter.

Then, after having waited for almost four hours, my needs were partially met as my cell rang.

"Hi, honey."

"Dave!"

"What's happening?"

"She's in the OR . . . she crashed and . . . oh, God, she can't die, Dave. She just can't."

"They're doing everything that they can, I'm sure."

"I just couldn't bear to lose her . . . I wouldn't know what to do without her in my life. . ."

"I know, honey; Stephanie is a big part of everybody's life."

Just then, a Doctor appeared and he headed directly towards Mindy.

"Dave – I need to call you back."

"Stay strong, honey."

..._...

"Mrs Lizewski?"

"Yes."

"Your daughter is out of surgery, Mrs Lizewski. She's not out of the woods, not yet; she's a very sick little girl," the Doctor said. "She's responding well, so her prognosis looks good. The next forty-eight hours will be critical."

"Can I see her?" I asked – hopefully not too eagerly.

The Doctor grinned.

"Yes, in about half an hour. They're going to move her to Room 28. Don't expect her to wake up – not for a while. Her body is putting everything it has into healing itself, so don't expect her to wake up for at least another twenty-four hours."

"Thank you, Doctor, thank you so much – I really mean that."

Room 28

I paced backwards and forwards outside Room 28 as I awaited Stephanie's arrival.

Finally, after what felt like hours but had only been about thirty minutes, I saw a bed being wheeled down the corridor towards me. As the bed approached, I felt trepidation about how Stephanie might look.

"Mrs Lizewski?" a nurse asked.

"Yes!"

"Here's your daughter. Please don't be alarmed; she looks much worse than she really is."

Stephanie was almost completely covered in a pure white sheet as she was wheeled past but I could make out her long blonde hair spread out liberally on the pillow despite the medical apparatus spread around her. Once the bed was pushed into place, Stephanie and the bed were connected up to the room's sensory systems.

The sheet was pulled back and folded down to reveal my daughter's torso down to her waist. My hand went to my mouth at the sight of her and I pushed back on a sob as it tried to form. The majority of Stephanie's torso was a vivid purple from the bruising and most of her chest was covered under medical dressings but there was enough skin visible to see the vivid bruising. Many wires led out from various places on her young body and connected into various monitors beside the bed. Two intravenous drips fed blood and a saline solution into her left forearm and the back of her left hand respectively.

A nasal cannula fed oxygen directly into Stephanie's nose. She appeared to be sleeping peacefully but I knew that inside, her body was fighting to heal her. I fervently hoped that her body would fight just as hard and uncompromisingly as Psyche did when she was in action. I hated seeing the ten-year-old in such a vulnerable state; her body torn and bruised by just a single bullet. She had been through so much in her short life and at that moment, she appeared frail and I hesitated to touch her once the nurses had left the room and closed the door behind them.

Nevertheless, I touched her right hand and I felt warmth on my skin. Even if outwardly asleep, Stephanie would have reacted to any touch. Her finely tuned reflexes would have brought her awake and I would have found a knife to my throat – or worse. But, instead, nothing. I felt so overwhelmed by everything.

"I can't do this alone. . ." I said out loud.

"You will never be alone," a voice said and the reassuring arms of my husband wrapped themselves around me as I began to sob uncontrollably.

Chapter 296*: The Thread Strengthens

Two days later
Saturday, July 2nd, 2016
Mid-afternoon

Northwestern Memorial Hospital
Room 28

Two days of flitting between the Safehouse and the hospital – it was only a three-mile, fourteen-minute, drive but it had seemed like an eternity, each and every time.

Two days of trying to be with the twins and with Stephanie without letting the former think that I had abandoned them in favour of their elder sibling.

Two days of pacing around the same damn room.

Two days of shit coffee from the machine down the corridor that hated dollar bills.

Two days of well-meaning nurses offering kind but infuriating words.

Two days of absolute hell.

But it was nothing compared to what my daughter was going through – nothing at all.

..._...

For the first time, in a real long time, I was scared.

I knew full well that I wasn't her real mother, in that I had not given birth to her, but I still felt like my insides were churning as I worried about her. I would go from moments of pure anger where even Dave would keep me at arm's length, all the way to moments of intense sadness where I would just cry and cry.

I missed her. I missed having her around me. Her infectious laughter. Her cheeky smile and shit-eating grin. I even missed her cold, and very lethal, view on killing. Above all, I missed the love that the young girl spread about. She loved me, she loved Dave, and she loved her siblings; Anne-Marie and Danny. She even had love to spare for everybody in Fusion. In return, without exception, everybody loved her. She was very popular with just about everybody that she met and, generally speaking, everybody loved having her around. We had all felt her wrath, at one time or another, as well as her fists.

Within Fusion there was much sadness but there was also a demand for blood – somebody was going to pay dearly for what they had done to Stephanie.

..._...

When she awoke for the first time, I was there; I was always there.

First came some movement; the first in well over a day, and then I heard a moan followed almost immediately by crying. I turned to see Stephanie's eyes open and she looked around the room in a panic. I squeezed her hand gently and reassuringly as I spoke.

"You're safe, Steph. You're in hospital."

Stephanie's eyes stopped their wild scanning around the room and they focussed on my face.

"I'm scared . . . it hurts . . . Mummy, it hurts . . ."

"I know, honey."

I really had no idea how to react. She was not behaving like the Psyche which I normally knew; she was behaving like the ten-year-old girl underneath and she was both very scared and in a lot of pain. Her voice was croaky, so I held a plastic cup with a straw to her dry lips and she slowly took a tentative sip. Stephanie grimaced with the pain of swallowing the cool water but she smiled her gratitude.

I wiped away my daughter's tears with a tissue – I'd been going through a lot of tissues and had plenty.

"What happened to me?" she asked very quietly as she put on a brave face.

Safehouse Zulu

Anne-Marie was not a happy eight-year-old.

She lay on the floor between Sophia and Razor. The younger animal missed his owner and his canine intuition told him that something was wrong. Anne-Marie had taken to spending a lot of time with Razor. Hope and Kiara, along with Horatio, Hercules and Piper would just ignore their brother as he moped. The animals had all arrived at the Safehouse the previous day with Marcus and had promptly enjoyed checking out every corner of the facility.

Anne-Marie hated to be cooped up and above all, she wanted to see her big sister but nobody was letting her leave the Safehouse, let alone traipse a few miles across the city to the hospital where her sister lay at death's door.

"Anne-Marie, Danny! Training!" Chloe called as she walked out of the Accommodation and into the Recreational Space where Anne-Marie, Danny, and Megan were watching TV.

"Ye-ha!" Danny yelled as he vaulted the back of the couch and ran towards the stairs.

"Anne-Marie, come on."

"No."

"Come on, girl."

"I'm not training today, Chloe, so go take a hike!"

Anne-Marie never saw Chloe's expression change, nor the hands that yanked her off the couch and then dragged her bodily towards the stairs. The eight-year-old struggled and she swore violently but Chloe just ignored the younger girl as they headed up a level.

..._...

Joshua looked up as he heard yelling and he saw Chloe dragging Anne-Marie into the Training Space before throwing the younger girl onto the mat. Anne-Marie immediately sprang to her feet and turned to face Chloe.

"Bring it on, quarter-pint!" Chloe growled.

Anne-Marie kicked out at the older girl but Chloe dodged out of the way with practiced ease. However, the little Lizewski was not finished. She was angry and scared for her sister; Chloe knew that and she wanted to help. Anne-Marie had not talked with anybody, not even Dave. Mindy was always at the hospital except when she came by to shower and grab a change of clothes. Megan had tried, with no success, and Anne-Marie had clammed up as far as her twin brother was concerned.

Chloe continued to dodge as Anne-Marie tried everything she knew to strike at the bigger girl. In return, Chloe was not giving the smaller girl an easy ride. A slap here, a strike there. Anne-Marie screamed through the pain and she just learned to move quicker and dodge faster. Joshua began to get concerned about how far Chloe might take things, despite him guessing correctly what she was up to. He walked over to a wall-mounted phone and selected the tannoy setting.

"Dr Bennett to the Training Space!"

..._...

Chloe knew how far to take the sparring session. She was able to see when Anne-Marie was beginning to tire but instead of backing off, Chloe moved faster to exhaust the girl quicker. Anne-Marie was kicked backwards and she stuck the mat hard with a scream. She sprang up and threw herself back into the fight kicking Chloe in her side. Then she paused and looked up at Chloe who just smiled before sitting down on the mat.

"You done?" Chloe asked once she was comfortable.

"Yeah," Anne-Marie replied as she sat down close to Chloe.

"Feel better?"

"Yes, I do."

Chloe pulled Anne-Marie over and wrapped her arms around the eight-year-old.

"Talk to me."

"I miss Steph."

"We all do," Chloe said. "I know it hurts; I miss her too and so does Josh. I've been there. When Josh was hurt, I hated waiting for him to heal."

"It just hurts inside – I want her home."

"Being eight isn't easy; I remember!" Chloe chuckled.

"Tell me about it – total nightmare," Dr Bennett said as she entered the space and her daughter scowled. "Just thought I'd come to check on any injuries."

"We're fine, Dr Bennett, thanks," Anne-Marie said.

"We're all here to help you Anne-Marie; you just have to talk to us and explain that you're struggling with what has happened. We have all been through bad stuff and we know something about inner pain and frustration," Chloe said as she hugged the eight-year-old.

"Thank you, Chloe – you know, you'd make a great Mom."

Chloe looked pained at Anne-Marie's suggestion but then she laughed.

"I'm a long way away from that, girl!"

"A long, long, long way," Joshua confirmed.

"While I am in no rush to become a grandmother, Chloe, Anne-Marie is quite correct."

"Huh?" Chloe inquired and slightly flabbergasted at the suggestion.

"Over the past two-and-a-half years, Chloe, you have changed from an obnoxious teenaged brat into a mature, open-minded, young woman. Both your father and I are very proud of what you are right now and I would even say that your meeting Dave and Mindy in that alley, was probably the best thing that could have happened to you – despite it also being the stupidest thing that you have ever done, which is saying something!"

"Thanks, Mom – I think. . ."

"I'm sorry I spoke to you, like that – it was not nice," Anne-Marie apologised.

"As long as we each learn from our mistakes as we make them, then there is hope for us all," Chloe said seriously.

Safehouse F

"This sucks!"

"Why?" Hailee asked as she looked across the table at Curtis.

"I'm the only guy here. . ."

Saoirse looked over at Abby and she grinned fiendishly.

"Have no fear – we won't rape you," she teased.

"Thanks, SD, that makes me so much happier!"

"I think he misses Megan's company," Hailee suggested.

"More like her hand on his. . . Ow!"

Saoirse rubbed her arm where Curtis had just punched her.

"You're not supposed to hit a lady," SD growled.

"Well," Curtis replied smoothly. "When a lady appears in the Safehouse, I'll refrain from hitting her."

Hailee and Abby burst out laughing and Saoirse went very pink in the face.

"Despite what Stephanie might say, I am a lady!" Saoirse retorted with a grin.

Then she went quiet and just stared at the table and her mug of coffee. She had mentioned the name that they had all agreed not to mention. All of the fun stopped dead and everybody became very subdued.

"Despite my wanting to kill her all those times, I hate what has happened to her. I miss her so much. . ."

Tears ran down Saoirse's face as Hailee hugged her.

Northwestern Memorial Hospital
Room 28

Once Mindy had finished explaining the events since Stephanie had been shot, Stephanie spent several minutes going through everything in her head.

"I can't think straight – my head is mush!"

"That'll be the painkillers; they fuck with your mind and your brain goes slow," Mindy explained. "Been there. . ."

Stephanie lifted up the white sheet covering her with her left arm – her right was pinned to her side – and she peered down the length of her body. Her eyes took in the mass of dressings which covered her chest and the vivid bruising visible around the edges. She looked up at Mindy, a single tear running down one cheek.

"Am I going to die? I don't want to die. . ."

"You are not going to die. We've been here before, you and me – you are not going to die!"

More tears fell.

"Say it!"

Stephanie shook her head and began to sob.

"Stephanie Lizewski – you are not going to die, goddammit!"

"I'm scared. . ."

..._...

Mindy was worried by her daughter's demeanour. For her to heal, Stephanie needed to be positive. Being depressed and scared would not help her at all. There was a knock on the door and a man entered.

"I'm Doctor Charles – is now a good time for a chat?"

Mindy took in the writing embroidered onto the man's lab coat. On the right chest, it read:

*Daniel Charles, M.D.
Dept. of Psychiatry*

Mindy's eyes narrowed. She hated shrinks! Doctor Charles noticed and he smiled the most disarming smile Mindy had ever seen.

"I'm not here to 'shrink' anybody; I'm just here to see if I can help. I believe the young girl in the bed has been through a very traumatic event and from your expressions, you're both struggling to cope. May we. . .?"

Behind the doctor was a young woman of medium height and bushy long brown hair. She smiled.

"Doctor Sarah Reese," she said introducing herself.

"Please. . ." Mindy said as she waved them both to a pair of available chairs.

Doctor Charles took a seat while Dr Reese remained standing.

"I'm Mindy Lizewski and this is my daughter, Stephanie."

..._...

"Hello, Stephanie," Doctor Reese began. "I understand you've only been aware of your injuries for the past few hours?"

"Yes," Stephanie replied slowly. "My Mum just explained everything to me."

"You're English?"

"Yes – got a problem with that?" Stephanie bristled.

"Of course, not," Doctor Reese chuckled. "Just don't get that accent around here very often."

Doctor Charles never said a word but Mindy could tell that he was studying Stephanie's expressions and mannerisms as she replied to Doctor Reese's questions. Mindy was unsure about the Psychiatrist; how deep was he going to dig and would Stephanie, in her weakened state, expose herself and by extension, Mindy and the rest of Fusion.

"What was your first reaction to your Mom's explanation, Stephanie?"

"I felt scared. Me and my Mum, we have no secrets . . . but I wish she'd not told me I'd actually died – not her fault; we've agreed never to lie to each other."

"A good mother-daughter relationship," Doctor Reese replied approvingly.

"My kids have had various knocks and scrapes – many times – but nothing like this," Mindy said. "She's so young and she has her whole life ahead of her."

"Stephanie," Doctor Charles said as he spoke for the first time in several minutes. "It's obvious that you're loved very much. Think of that, each time you feel scared or lonely."

"Thanks, Doctor Charles," Stephanie offered with a shallow yawn.

"We'll leave you to get some rest," Doctor Reese said as Doctor Charles stood up. "If either of you want to chat, we'll be available."

"Thank you," Mindy said as the two Doctors left.

An hour later. . .

Room 28

Stephanie scowled as I placed a tray down before her.

"I'm not hungry."

"Yes, you are; you haven't eaten in two days. . ."

"Not happening. . ."

Stephanie studied the contents of the tray.

"Jelly?"

"It's Jello, honey," I corrected her.

"It's jelly – jelly is for little kids . . . I am not a little kid!"

"No, it isn't, and anyway, you'll find it easy to swallow."

"I can't; I hurt too much."

"You have to eat, Stephanie; your body must be screaming out for energy and it needs that energy to start healing."

"But it hurts . . ."

"I know; I've been shot before and I know what it feels like."

"I'm not eating it . . ."

It was time for some tough love.

"Okay," I said coldly. "If it keeps you alive and it helps you to get better, then I will do whatever it takes and coming from me, you know that that is no idle threat, Stephanie."

For a moment, I saw fear but then I saw that I had hit home. Stephanie knew full well what I was capable of and how far I would go to achieve my aim.

"It's embarrassing. . ."

I patiently held the spoon, loaded with Jello, to her mouth.

"You're my daughter and I love you. Whatever it takes, remember. . ." I said in a reassuring tone.

Stephanie reluctantly opened her mouth for the spoon and she swallowed the Jello. Then she began to cry – I felt her left hand grip my own as tightly as she could manage – which, admittedly, was not very much in her weakened state. I recognised the expression of hopelessness and frustration on her face as she sobbed. I had never seen Stephanie in such a state; she was so far away from how we normally saw her – the hard-as-nails girl who would not think twice about punching way above her weight – that it brought me to tears as well, despite my wanting to stay strong for my daughter.

After a lot of stops and starts, I managed to get a good quantity of Jello into Stephanie. She finally lay back and gave me a weak smile before she closed her eyes; her small hand still gripped my own. I felt the pressure on my hand gradually ease as the ten-year-old girl fell asleep and I took a moment to dive into the bathroom to wash my face.

That evening

Room 28

When I entered the room, both girls were fast asleep.

I was very pleased that Mindy was getting some rest – she had been on the go without sleep for a long time. Mindy was struggling to cope on every level. Nothing that Damon had taught her had prepared her for what had happened – not that Damon had been able to teach anything about parenting. Okay, that was nasty but it was also very true. Mindy was my number one responsibility in life and I had to cope with what Damon had made her. The three kids were equally the second most important responsibilities, although temporarily, Stephanie was moved above the twins – they did not mind; they knew what was at stake.

Seeing Mindy and Stephanie suffering so much, hurt me badly. It also hurt to see a girl so young going through so much shit. I had felt anger like I had never known before – if I ever got my hands on whomsoever had shot Stephanie, I would rip them limb from limb and I would take great joy in listening to their screams as I did so.

I was not the only one to think in that way; Chloe and Joshua were seething. Just don't get me started on Saoirse; Kim had told me the girl had spent over an hour sharpening her Butterfly swords the other night and her face had been like thunder as she did so. Nobody had dared go anywhere near the girl while the swords were out. The twins had not taken it well; they desperately wanted their big sister back and for the moment, they were unable to even come to see her. Anne-Marie had been inconsolable the other night during dinner; she just broke down in tears and sobbed for over an hour before she finally succumbed and fell asleep. Danny was just as worried about his big sister as everybody else was, only he reacted differently and I usually heard him crying at night.

..._...

I sat down in a chair on the opposite side of the bed from Mindy and I wrapped a hand around Stephanie's much smaller one. I felt the hand move and her gun-metal blue eyes opened and they looked around for a moment before they focussed on me. My daughter smiled and I squeezed her hand gently. It was the first time that I had seen her awake since she was shot.

"Hi, Daddy. . ."

"Hi, Steph. How are you feeling?"

"Scared. . ."

One word and then she seemed to fold into tears.

"You are not alone, Stephanie, and you never will be. We are all here for you and we will all do everything that we can to help you."

"I know. . ."

The poor girl began to sob harder but within a few minutes, the ten-year-old managed to regain control of herself and I wiped away her tears; she forced a smile and then looked a little embarrassed.

"Thanks, Dad. I think I upset Mindy earlier," Stephanie said as she looked over at Mindy.

"Just remember; when things get too much it's okay to cry but it's also good to talk – something your mother never seems to understand."

"I hate not being in control. I hate being helpless; Mindy actually had to feed me earlier. . ."

For a moment, I thought that Stephanie was about to burst into tears again but thankfully she did not.

"You have a lot in common with Mindy; you're both control freaks and you both hate it when you have to rely on others. You're strong, so you will get through this. It'll take time and I know you'll be just as well-behaved as Mindy was when she got hurt. You can't rush healing; it happens in its own time. You'll hate having everybody doing things for you but it is unavoidable. Your right arm can't be used for a while and there will be a limit to what you can do with your left."

"As long as I can wipe my own arse and fanny, I'll be happy."

I laughed as I detected some of the old Stephanie showing for a moment – but only for a moment. . .

"The pain in my chest makes it difficult for me to breathe . . . and to eat. . ."

She was crying again and it looked like the talking had taken a lot out of her.

"Go back to sleep, Steph. Rest."

"Yes, Dad."

Stephanie closed her eyes and the young girl was soon asleep.

Earlier that afternoon. . .

Office of Doctor Daniel Charles

"So, Sarah, what did you get out of that little interview?" Doctor Charles asked as he leaned back in his chair behind his capacious desk.

"The little girl is hurting and she is very scared. Underneath, there is something else; I saw it in her eyes. I don't think the girl normally gets scared about anything – which is making the whole experience more frightening for her. Her mother seemed to latch onto everything that her daughter was saying – no idea why," Doctor Sarah Reese replied from a comfortable chair opposite the desk.

"Very good. Yes, you are right – there is something going on."

"Child abuse?"

"No – definitely not; too much love between the two of them. I also think Stephanie can normally look after herself very well, thank you very much. Wouldn't rule out some abuse before she met her current parents, though. Her medical notes are interesting. According to the State of Michigan and the City of Chicago, Stephanie Walker was adopted by Melinda and David Lizewski at Christmas, last year. She is the eldest of three children apparently – monozygotic twins the other two. Behind her right ear, there is a small tattoo – a commando dagger if I am not mistaken."

"A dagger?" Sarah asked.

"She is very fit – a bonus considering her injury. Something about that child troubles me – let me think on it some more."

The following morning
Sunday, 3rd July

Northwestern Memorial Hospital
Room 28

I was very glad that I was there to protect the medical personnel.

Mindy awoke just as a male doctor and two nurses appeared on their rounds. While the nurses busied themselves tidying up the room and changing Stephanie's catheter drain bag, the Doctor took a few moments to check Stephanie's notes which hung at the foot of her bed before he gently shook the young girl awake.

"And how are we feeling, this morning, young lady?"

Stephanie blinked as her eyes became accustomed to the bright sunlight which streamed in through the freshly opened curtains and then she scowled.

"You're not from around here, are you?"

The doctor laughed.

"And neither are you, young Stephanie."

"Okay, you got me there, doctor . . . who?"

"No, I am no time lord, just plain old Doctor Edward Salmon. So, how have you been feeling, since you awoke yesterday?"

"I hurt and I feel frustrated. I hate being in bed all the time and I keep crying and . . . and I feel scared. . ."

"Don't feel bad; all that is perfectly normal. That should surprise your Mum; she says that you are not a normal girl."

Stephanie smiled weakly.

"She's right, I suppose. . ."

"Now, let us look at your wounds. This is going to hurt; I'm sorry, but there is no way around it."

..._...

I moved around the bed towards Mindy; I sensed trouble. The Doctor pulled back the sheet and he first ran his eyes and fingers across the dressing that covered most of Stephanie's chest from just below her right shoulder and across her chest to her left side.

"This will hurt. . ." The Doctor advised as he gently eased back the dressing.

Stephanie screamed out in pain and I felt Mindy try to jump up but I used all my strength to hold her down in the chair.

"They're . . . hurting . . . her. . ." she hissed angrily.

"They have to – she'll get through it. . ."

Mindy, reluctantly, ceased trying to push past me and she sank back into the chair.

"I know. I just feel so helpless."

"Just control yourself; the Doctor probably enjoys living," I whispered and Mindy growled like an angry Rottweiler but I saw a smirk on her lips.

Stephanie was crying with the pain but it had obviously subsided now that the dressing had been removed. I cringed at what I saw. The wound was jagged and had been stitched up, but where the stitches were, the skin was savagely bruised and I dreaded to think what the insides were like. Mindy had seen the bullet, and naturally, she had identified it almost immediately.

It had originated from a Soviet 7.62-millimetre sniper rifle round and such a large and savage bullet had played havoc with the young girl's insides. Her left lung had been nicked which had caused it to collapse. The trauma had included three broken ribs but had avoided anything critical. The bullet had ultimately lodged between two of Stephanie's ribs after it had damaged the shoulder joint of Stephanie's right arm. Mindy had deduced that it should have been a very long-range shot, otherwise Stephanie would have been torn in half. That was a conundrum unto itself. The bullet must have been part-loaded which meant that the bullet had, thankfully, expended most of its kinetic energy before it had struck the girl. The doctors had had to perform an operation just to get at the bullet and remove it. The bullet was now in the custody of Hank Voight.

..._...

Stephanie held tight to Mindy's hand as the Doctor prodded and poked the wound. Finally, once the Doctor was satisfied that all was in order, a nurse applied a fresh dressing to the wound. I turned away to allow my daughter some privacy as the other nurse pulled the sheet down past Stephanie's knees – she was naked – and then checked the catheter which had been inserted into her bladder.

"Ewww. . ." Stephanie complained as the nurse probed her nether regions and Mindy laughed. "It's not funny, Mum – how would you like to have a damn tube stuck up your twat. . ."

Mindy raised an eyebrow along with the Doctor. The nurses just smirked and exchanged a glance.

"Forget I said anything. . ." Stephanie groused.

Mindy looked up at me all smiles. Her expression spoke volumes – she was overjoyed at hearing the real Stephanie.

An hour later. . .

Office of Doctor Edward Salmon

Mindy sat across from the Doctor on a couch while the Doctor sat in a chair.

His office was decidedly well fitted out as suited a senior surgeon. Dave had left about twenty minutes previously after Stephanie had been given her daily dose of various drugs which had had the side effect of knocking her out for several hours.

"So," the doctor began. "Is Stephanie a healthy child, does she exercise much?"

I smirked as a vision appeared in my mind of a ten-year-old girl dressed in jungle camouflage as she viciously killed dozens of gunmen while on a crazed rampage across an island in the Mediterranean.

"Yes, she keeps active," I replied.

"Does she get on well with her siblings?"

"Oh, yes," I replied as another image of the girl appeared in my mind. It was of Psyche shooting a woman for hurting Anne-Marie. "She'd kill for them. . ."

"Metaphorically speaking, of course . . ."

"Of course, . . ."

"Now, in a few days, once I am happy that Stephanie is out of danger and she is healing correctly, I will pass her onto Paediatrics and unto the care of Doctor Natalie Manning, one of our paediatricians. Incidentally, Doctor Manning saw Stephanie when she was first admitted into the ER and is up to speed with Stephanie's condition. She will then oversee Stephanie for the next few weeks as she heals enough to be allowed home. Stephanie still has a long road ahead of her . . . I understand her normal doctor is Doctor Catherine Bennett – she's up on the fifth floor, west wing?"

"Yes – Cathy looks after us all. . ."

"Code Blue, Room 28 . . . Code Blue, Room 28!"

The doctor was out of the room in a second with Mindy close behind the moment the computerised announcement began.

Chapter 297*: And The Thread Breaks

Sunday, July 3rd, 2016

Northwestern Memorial Hospital
Room 28

Stephanie was not moving.

Nurses were all around her and one was astride her on the bed, her arms outstretched, elbows locked, as she pushed down hard on Stephanie's chest. Another nurse had placed a mask over Stephanie's mouth and she was squeezing rhythmically to send air into Stephanie's lungs.

"What's happened?" the doctor demanded as he burst into the room.

"She went into sudden cardiac arrest . . . she complained about intense pain in her right shoulder and then she lost consciousness; she went into arrest a few seconds later," a nurse reported as a crash trolley was rushed into the small room.

Mindy quickly moved out of the way. Her face had gone very white as nearly all the blood had drained away at the sight of her daughter being mauled as the nurses fought to keep her alive.

Twenty minutes later

Dave left the elevator and he turned left towards Stephanie's room.

As he turned the last corner, he instantly went on guard; Mindy was sitting on a chair outside the room with her head in her hands and he could hear sobbing.

"Mindy?"

Mindy looked up at Dave, her expression full of sadness

"Dave, I'm so sorry – she's gone. . ."

Dave was stunned and he dropped the bag he was carrying and knelt down beside his wife for a moment before he peered into Room 28. All that could be seen was the bed, a white sheet pulled up over a small mound which lay in the centre of the bed.

"What happened?"

"She arrested . . . I was with the doctor in his office – I wasn't. . . I wasn't there. . ."

Mindy began to sob even harder.

Room 28

With a jerk, Mindy bolted upright in the chair.

She looked around with a start as she heard Dave laughing and she felt her face warming up. Even Stephanie was smiling.

"Am I that boring?" she demanded with mock annoyance.

"I must have dozed off. . ." Mindy began.

"Snoring like a rhino!" Stephanie commented.

"Nah – more like a faulty chainsaw," Dave chuckled.

"I'm sorry – I had the worst nightmare. . ."

"You need a coffee. Shall I?"

"No – I need to stretch my legs; back in a few minutes."

Mindy left the room and she headed for the coffee machine. Just as she was straightening out the fourth dollar bill to insert into the infernal machine, a speaker blared.

"Code Blue. . ." Mindy froze and she began to turn back towards Stephanie. "Room 17 . . . Code Blue, Room 17!"

Mindy almost collapsed at the relief which flooded over her.

Mindy

It was embarrassing falling asleep, like that, but I was tired and the doctor's words in his office had reassured me greatly so I must have let my guard down.

Humiliation number seven-hundred-and-forty-seven! Putting that aside, I was over the moon to see Stephanie smiling. She still looked very poorly as I walked back into the room but the smile on her face was an awesome step forward.

"You need rest, Mum."

"I do . . . but I don't want to leave you."

I received a glare from Dave and another from Stephanie.

Stephanie

I continued to glare at my Mum.

"I'll be fine – I'm in a hospital; it's not like I'm going anywhere," I groused. "One arm is strapped to my side, I have numerous wires super-glued to where my boobs would be, if I had boobs, and let's not forget that I have a plastic tube stuck up my. . ."

"Okay, Stephanie – enough. . ." Dad chuckled.

". . . twat!" I finished and Mum laughed out loud.

"Let's go before she uses up her entire vulgar vocabulary!" Mum suggested.

"Oh, I have plenty more in reserve," I retorted.

"Take care," Mum ordered as she gave me a hug.

"What she said," Dad added as he ruffled my hair.

"Love you both."

..._...

To be honest, I was glad to be alone.

It had been a very busy morning what with being prodded and poked in places that I had, up until that morning, deemed private. I was also feeling a little overwhelmed with all the attention – especially from Mindy. I knew that it wasn't her fault; she was just worried about me and that made me feel good inside. Somebody loved me . . . and I knew it was not just Mindy; it was Dave and everybody else too. It was that love between us which had allowed me to tell them both how I was really feeling without then feeling ashamed or shy. I felt like a sissy crying all the time but neither Dave nor Mindy laughed at me. They were just there for me which was comforting and just what I needed.

Okay, sitrep!

My upper right arm was strapped to the side of my body with a bandage which passed around my torso just below my chest and held my right forearm across my stomach. I was a little annoyed that I was naked but I could live with it. My shoulder hurt like hell when my meds began to wear off but for the remainder of the time, it was just a dull throbbing which I could tolerate. My chest was sore from the right to the left, but mainly on the right. Just like my shoulder when the meds wore off, it was a killer. I had not, as yet, seen my wounds but my Mum's face as the dressing had been removed that morning had remained with me. I knew that it would take a lot to shock her!

As for the rest of my body: there was something on my left side just beyond where my right hand lay but I had no idea what was there; I could just feel another dressing. I knew that somebody had been playing between my legs as I could feel something taped to my left thigh and there was something between my . . . whatevers – I knew it was a urinary catheter which kind of freaked me out a bit. It felt strange having been in bed heading on for three days – I hated it too; I preferred to be active, not stuck in a bed like a damn potato!

I also hated the fact that I had spent an inordinate amount of time crying and I felt ashamed about feeling scared. I had no reason to be scared; I was better than that. I was a Predator. I was Psyche. I was a member of Fusion. Only, the whole shooting thing had frightened me to death. I had been hurt before but nothing so major. I knew enough to know that I should have died – in fact, I had died . . . once. It had hit me like a brick wall at 90 miles-per-hour; I was mortal. Ever since I had killed that girl in the shower, I had seen myself as akin to being immortal.

I could feel the tears running down my face as I considered how close to death I had come. I did not want to die; I had my whole life before me. I had a family. I had everything. I had almost lost everything and everybody that I cared about. As I sobbed, I felt myself drifting into the doldrums and I cried even more.

Then something really good happened . . .

Saoirse

"Saoirse!"

"How's the Phase 2 reject?"

"Let's not go there – how about the Phase 3 fuck up?"

I tried not to notice the tears running down Stephanie's cheeks and the sad, depressed look on her face.

"I'm okay. Believe it, or not, I miss you."

"Bullshit!" Stephanie retorted as she wiped away her tears with her left hand.

"Shit getting you down?" I asked as I sat down on a chair beside the bed.

I cringed at the sight of the bruising above Stephanie's dressings.

"That bad, eh?"

"Yes – it is."

"This must make you happy, SD, seeing me like this," Stephanie offered with a grin.

"Don't even fucking joke about it, Stephanie!" I replied angrily.

I had cried my eyes out when I had heard about Stephanie being shot. Stephanie was only joking but it was very close to the mark – too damn close.

"Six months ago, I would have liked nothing less than to see you dead, or in a bed like you are now. Ever since I stopped trying to kill you, you've been so kind to me. You allowed me to stay in your room. You allowed me to sleep in your bed. You helped me through a lot of shit and I owe you everything, Steph. Now, I want to help you. Talk to me."

"I feel like crap and I hate being cooped up in here."

I reached over and took Stephanie's left hand – it was shaking as she cried again. I hated to see her like that. Normally she was a gobby bitch, always smiling and winding people up and we were like sisters as we both caused trouble together.

"It's gonna be hard, Steph, but I'm going to be with you, every step of the way."

"Promise?" Stephanie's voice wavered a little and my heart went out to my former enemy.

"Cross my heart and hope to die."

"You're going to regret it."

"You're going to be fine, Steph."

"I'm gonna be a disaster."

"How do you know that?"

"Because I'm in a hospital, for fuck's sake!"

I laughed; I liked to see the old Stephanie – belligerent and unyielding. I was frightened for her; I knew it would be a ferocious uphill struggle, like nothing she had faced before. I had witnessed kids shot – and the aftermath. . . I knew that Stephanie was a tough young girl and I knew that as a person, she was well able to handle everything before her.

"I feel so weak and helpless and I'm always crying. I've never felt like this before; I couldn't even feed myself this morning – just like yesterday. I felt so ashamed having Mum stuff jelly in my mouth and then some crappy porridge, this morning."

"Steph, you're one of the strongest people I know. You've been through three years of hell and survived. If anybody can do it, you can. I hate to say this and if you tell anybody, I'll deny it; but . . . there are times that I envy you."

"Me?"

"You have a perfect life, now, and you handled being a Predator way better than I did."

I intended to make it as easy for her as I humanly could and I knew that I was not alone.

That afternoon

Northwestern Memorial Hospital Room 28

As we walked up the corridor, they saw Saoirse leaving Room 28.

"Hi, guys," she said.

"How is she?" Mindy asked.

"She's sleeping – been asleep for about two hours."

"Thanks, Saoirse, you're a really great friend."

"No sweat, Mindy."

Mindy smiled as she walked past, entourage in tow, then Saoirse turned.

"Mindy?"

"Yeah, SD?"

"Thanks . . . for everything."

Saoirse blushed as she said it and then turned and headed for the exit before Mindy could respond. Dave looked over at Mindy who just shrugged.

"Now, don't go waking your sister, please," Dave warned the two tearaways as they all entered Room 28.

..._...

"Holy, shit!" Anne-Marie almost exploded when she saw her big sister.

"She looks bad," Danny agreed.

"She is bad, Danny, she is," Dave commented quietly.

Anne-Marie went around the bed and peered at her sister's bruises. Sadness and compassion spread across the eight-year-old's face and she looked up at her Dad.

"She will get better, right, Dad?"

"I hope so, honey, I really do. The bullet did a lot of damage to her insides and it will take months for her to heal fully. She will need your love and understanding as she heals. She will be very frustrated and she may say things she doesn't really mean – always remember that," Dave said as he crouched down to look into his youngest daughter's concerned eyes.

"Will she still be the same?" Danny asked.

"Yes, she'll still be the same foul-mouthed, little bitch," Mindy told her son.

..._...

"Somebody talking about me?" a sleepy voice queried from the bed.

Anne-Marie and Danny turned to see their sister looking at them. She looked very tired and her eyes had lost their usual sparkle. The twins appeared apprehensive about approaching their sister but they moved forwards none the less. Stephanie smiled happily as she saw who her visitors were.

"Hi, guys," she whispered.

"Hi, Steph," Anne-Marie began. "You look really bad."

"Thanks – I think."

"I didn't mean. . ."

"I know. I feel pretty crappy and I know I must look like shit, Anne-Marie. I'm just really happy that you all came to see me."

"We've missed you, Steph," Danny said slowly.

"I've missed you all – I hate being here."

"I can believe that," Anne-Marie stated. "I was really scared when I saw you covered in blood. . ."

Stephanie reached out and she grasped her little sister's hand. Anne-Marie was rather surprised at how weak her big sister's grip was. She decided that Psyche or not, Rogue could put her big sister down with one hand tied behind her back. As she squeezed Stephanie's left hand the older girl sniffed back some tears which Anne-Marie never noticed but Mindy did; Mindy missed nothing.

"Just saw Saoirse – is everything okay?" Mindy asked.

"Yeah – I was really pleased to see her. We chatted for a while and then I felt tired and I fell asleep."

Stephanie never mentioned the fact that she had held Saoirse's hand until she had fallen asleep.

The following morning
Monday, July 4th

Northwestern Memorial Hospital
Room 28

Nobody was in much of a celebrating mood, besides, ever since Fusion's British connections had grown, Mindy had decided it was in bad taste – not that Joshua had ever complained.

Rather than spend the night with Stephanie, Mindy had chosen to spend the evening with the twins and Dave at Safehouse Zulu. That morning, Mindy returned to the hospital with the twins and Megan in tow. However, Stephanie was not in a very receptive mood and Mindy was very worried.

"Can't I be left in fucking peace?" Stephanie moaned as everybody entered.

"I thought you'd be pleased to see us," Mindy suggested.

"Well, I'm not."

"Not even happy to see me?" Megan asked.

"Should I be?" came the tart response.

"What the fuck's up with her?" Megan asked Mindy who just shrugged.

"Megan, why don't you take the twins to go get a soda?"

"Okay."

Once Megan and the twins had left the room, Mindy turned on her daughter.

"What has got into you?" Mindy demanded.

"A bullet, apparently."

"Stephanie!"

"I need to get out of here."

"You need to rest."

"I hate it here."

"I know you are frustrated. . ."

"You know nothing about me!"

"You're my daughter. . ."

"No, I'm not! I'm just some shitty wretch you scooped up off the damn pavement like a fresh, steaming, dog turd."

"What!"

"Why do you care? I am nothing to you – I am nothing – I . . ."

Stephanie lay back in the bed and her face scrunched up in obvious pain. Then she yelled out as the pain grew before she started to shake. Mindy stabbed the emergency call button that lay on Stephanie's pillow just as Megan and the twins returned. That was the moment when Stephanie screamed out and then went silent and very still.

Two nurses burst in the door and Mindy shoved Anne-Marie and Danny out of the way. One nurse checked Stephanie's carotid artery in her neck.

"No pulse!" the nurse called out as she hit an illuminated blue button labelled 'CODE' above the bed and Mindy's nightmare became all too real.

"Code Blue, Room 28 . . . Code Blue, Room 28!"

One nurse yanked back the sheet and began to compress Stephanie's chest. Megan screamed out as three of Stephanie's ribs audibly snapped under the pressure being exerted by the nurse. A doctor arrived next and she took charge.

"Hold!" she called out and the nurse stopped compressions while the doctor checked the monitor. "There we go. . ."

The nurses stood back for a moment while the doctor checked the carotid artery again and then listened to Stephanie's chest.

"Let's get her up to CT!"

The nurses rapidly disconnected wires and tubes from the panels above the bed and reconnected some into a portable monitor before opening the room doors wide and wheeling the bed with Stephanie out of the room.

"What's going on?" Mindy demanded in horror at the rapid change in events.

"She arrested. We're sending her for a CT scan to find out why," the doctor said as she headed after Stephanie.

Anne-Marie was speechless with tears streaming down her face and she gripped tightly onto her brother and Megan.

"What the fuck just happened?" Megan breathed.

Morton Grove

Chloe

"It's not fair!"

Joshua was getting his Initial Licence on Thursday.

"He's older than you, honey."

"P – l – e – a – s – e . . . I'll be the best daughter ever . . . I'll never be bad – ever. . ."

"Like that would ever happen!" Curtis muttered with a grin.

Chloe opened her mouth to retort but she closed it and smiled sweetly.

"She's making me feel sick. . ." Curtis added.

"She is being more loving and sweet than usual," Mom agreed.

"Aw, come on – I'm being a perfect lady about this," I tried.

"Why would I want to sign anything that says I am: 'legally responsible for the below mentioned minor'?"

"Because you love me and you're the greatest Mommy ever. . ."

"I'm gonna throw up!" Curtis growled.

"Pretty please. . ."

"You're right Curtis; this is making me feel queasy too. . ."

Mom finished filling in the form and I held my breath as she signed it.

"YES!" I exclaimed.

What had made me literally grovel? Mom was filling in my Form DSD X 174. It gave consent for me to DRIVE as Chloe Bennett! I had gained my instruction permit when I had turned fifteen and in another month, after turning sixteen and having completed fifty hours of practice driving and a Drivers-Ed course, I could get my Initial Licence. Okay, I had been driving for a while, as Shadow, and on public roads, and at high speed, and I had crashed a car and two motorcycles – another advantage of the licence was that I could get it endorsed so I could ride a motorcycle as me, as Chloe Bennett.

I was so excited; my next appointment was with Joshua to ease my built-up tension. I crossed my legs and Curtis raised an eyebrow as Mom's cell rang.

"Mindy. . . Calm down – tell me. . ."

My smile faded and so did my cousin's. I saw Mom's face go pale as she listened to Mindy for a few minutes before she returned her cell to her pocket.

"Stephanie's been rushed back into the OR after her heart stopped."

Three days later
Thursday, July 7th

Northwestern Memorial Hospital
Room 28

"Hi, Stephanie, I'm Doctor Natalie Manning. I'm a paediatrician here at Northwestern."

"Hello."

"You've had a bad week, so far, but it appears that the worst is now behind you. Now we've removed that fragment of bone which was crushing your artery you are expected make a perfect recovery. It will be hard – I won't lie to you about that – but I understand you're a strong little girl."

Stephanie smiled as the Doctor made some annotations on her notes.

"I don't remember very much of Monday, or much else until last night," Stephanie admitted.

"You were out of it from when you crashed to when the anaesthetic wore off sometime yesterday afternoon. You've had three operations to repair some more damage which Doctor Salmon found after opening you up again."

"I'm hungry."

"How'd you fancy some oatmeal – your Mom said you aren't all that keen on Jello?"

"Yes, please. Can I feed myself?"

"You can try. Your right arm is still immobilised but if you feel your left is strong enough. . ."

..._...

"Ready for breakfast?"

"Mum!"

Mindy sat down on the bed beside her daughter and smiled. She gently stroked Stephanie's long blonde hair and her cheek.

"You feeling better?"

"I think so."

"Here."

Mindy placed a bowl of oatmeal before her daughter and then passed over a spoon. Stephanie picked up the spoon unused to using her left hand. Her fingers refused to work correctly but after a few frustrating minutes, she was able to scoop out some oatmeal and raise it to her mouth. Her hand was shaking which made the usually simple and everyday task a lot harder. Mindy did not intercede despite the looks of intense concentration and frustration that crossed her daughter's face as she tried to feed herself.

Finally, Stephanie succeeded and the look of success and jubilation on her face almost made Mindy cry but she had no idea why. Once started, Stephanie began to shovel the oatmeal in her mouth as fast as her shaking hand would manage.

"That was good," Stephanie said as she finally put the spoon back down. "Thank you."

"Whatever it takes, remember?"

"Whatever it takes," Stephanie confirmed with a grin before she sagged back onto the pillow, exhausted. "Whatever . . . it . . ."

Stephanie was asleep before she could finish the sentence.

..._...

"She finished it all?" Doctor Manning asked.

"All of it – she fed herself, too."

"Very good – we'll have her home before the end of the month. When did you last eat, Mrs Lizewski?"

Mindy frowned.

"I don't know. . ."

"Here."

Doctor Manning handed over two packs of sandwiches which Mindy almost ripped open in her desire for food.

"Your health is just as important as your daughter's. She can't heal properly if you become ill."

"Yes . . . doctor," Mindy mumbled grumpily between bites, too hungry to argue the point but unable to resist a dig. "My own doctor can be a bitch, too!"

That afternoon

"Joshua!"

"Hi, kid. Sorry I couldn't get here sooner."

"What the fuck are those?"

"Flowers. . ."

"What do you think I am?"

"A girl."

"I am not . . . okay . . . nice colours – what are they?"

"Electric blue galaxy Dendrobium orchids."

"Cool . . . thanks!"

"Anything for my little pal."

Stephanie scowled as a thought came to her.

"What day is it, Mum?"

"Thursday."

"Date!"

"July 7th – why?"

Stephanie grinned and reached over to Joshua.

"Happy Birthday, Joshua."

"Thanks, Steph."

"You having a party?" Stephanie asked dejectedly.

"No – I've postponed it till next month. Me and Chloe will have one together. That means you'll be there – no party without my pal."

Stephanie appeared to dissolve into tears and she refused to let go of Joshua's arm as she sobbed. Joshua looked up at Mindy in confusion. Mindy just shrugged.

"I just miss everybody. . ."

That evening
Safehouse F

It was time to get back out into the City.

Voight had not found anything and as far as he could tell there were no pending attacks on Fusion beyond what we normally coped with every day. Shadow and Jackal were out checking on the situation. Everybody else was trying to get back to normal. The intention was to return to our own homes by the weekend. Fellowes and Murphy had been patrolling our homes looking for anything untoward but nobody appeared to be monitoring anywhere that we usually frequented.

While I worried about Stephanie almost every waking minute (I had nightmares every sleeping one), I still found the downtime therapeutic in some warped way. There was a lot of anger as everybody trained and a strategy was built. I had toured all the Safehouses with Marty to ensure that nothing had been compromised. Abby had set her Synthesis minions to work digging into the internet and the dark web to find out anything they could about a hit on a young girl in Chicago. Mathilda was scouring Chicago's underworld looking for information there. Tommy was assisting her with his in-depth knowledge of the Russian side of the underworld.

I was on the mat with Megan, when Abby yelled my name.

"Mindy!"

I ran into the Command Centre and Abby looked upset.

"Shadow's been injured – she's on the way back in with Jackal. . ."

The wait was interminable but finally, Abby yelled out that they were coming down the ramp. Hailee and Saoirse were there and they both grabbed Shadow's motorcycle as she almost fell off it. Jackal parked his own machine rapidly and jumped off. He picked Shadow up like she weighed nothing and carried her through the barrier and onto the mat. Abby screamed.

There was an arrow embedded in the armour of Shadow's left thigh.

Chapter 298*: Echo and Foxtrot

*Late evening
Thursday, July 7th, 2016*

*Northwestern Memorial Hospital
Room 28*

I was alone and 'enjoying' my eighth night in hospital.

I had been instructed to keep my mind busy; I had nothing to lose – my mind was fully functional even if my body was a train wreck. I thought back to the previous week – the Wednesday night, the night before I had been shot.

Wednesday, June 30th

I was struggling with flashbacks.

I needed time to myself and I wanted to be alone. I knew that if I woke Mindy, she would want to accompany me. I also knew that I was breaking about a dozen unbreakable rules and bending many more. Nonetheless, I soon found myself in a taxi, heading south. The guy dropped me off some distance from my destination for obvious reasons.

"You okay out here, alone?" he asked as I got out of the taxi.

"Yeah, I can look after myself," I replied with a smile.

"Okay. . ." he responded dubiously as I slammed the car door shut and walked away towards West 36th Place.

I enjoyed the darkness; it had never scared me. I savoured it's all encompassing blackness which comforted me more than daylight did. My senses were always peeked in darkness as sound travelled better. I performed several counter-surveillance sweeps to ensure that I was not being followed or monitored in any way. I was skilled at counter-surveillance and had been for several years

..._...

Mindy had issued standing instructions that pedestrian traffic to the Safehouse was not to use the same entrance but to spread across the various different entrances to put off trackers. Therefore, I headed for Pedestrian Entrance Two or PE2 for short. PE2 was a very non-descript property at South Albany Avenue and West 36th Place. The dwelling was unoccupied – supposedly the property was owned by a large company who used the place for transient sales-people, or so I had heard. I hopped over the steel fence into the front garden and then quickly headed down the side of the property to the side door.

I punched in an access code into the hidden keypad and the door unlocked. Once inside, I made for what the plans deemed 'a tornado room'. The room was built from solid steel and concrete. Entry was by hand-print identification only. I placed my hand on the reader and the screen turned green. The steel door slid to one side and I stepped inside a small ante room. Once the main door had closed, another opened before me and I found a small lift awaiting me. I placed my hand against the screen to one side of the lift and the doors opened soundlessly.

Once inside the lift, I hit the second button from the top and the doors closed and the lift plummeted downwards.

Safehouse F

Safehouse F was a haven for me.

It was rare to be there when the place was empty as in most cases the place was full of people going about their tasks. Eating, sleeping, sparring, shooting, planning – it all went on forty feet or so beneath Chicago. As I exited the lift and headed for the kill zone, I took the time to study my surroundings. The walls were bare concrete as I made my way down the corridor known as F4. The floor was concrete painted with a red paint. The lighting was harsh and white. I reached the security door and placed my hand on the pad which flashed green a moment later.

I turned right and faced the outer door for the kill zone. I repeated my hand scan twice more before I entered the three-storey Safehouse. It was cool inside and I shivered slightly. The stone walls added a coarseness to the facility as the bright overhead lights automatically clicked on. I smelt the ozone from the air-conditioning system and the smell of bleach. As always, the facility was spotless. To my right, the armoured glass walls of the Command Centre shone in the bright lights. Beyond the glass, the multi-coloured lights and screens of the computer systems never slept.

I turned left and headed for the changing rooms. I opened my locker and pulled out my pistol and access card – I felt naked without them in the Safehouse. The H&K P30SK Compact pistol, in its holster, clipped onto the belt of my jeans while the access card slid into my left back pocket. I strode out and headed towards the vehicles at the far end of the Safehouse beyond the great glass barrier. I swiped my access card and passed through.

..._...

Before me, sat Beast, Brute, and Hound. I walked past the big 4x4s and stopped at the motorcycles. The first belonged to Kick-Ass, with Hit Girl's Ducati Panigale beside the Ducati Diavel. I stopped beside my own Honda CRF250L which sat between Wildcat's Ducati Monster 821 Dark and Foxtail's Aprilia Caponord 1200 Rally.

I turned and stared at the top of the stairs that led to the lower level. That was where I had tried to attack Shadow, my first time in the Safehouse. I remembered waking up in the bed and accidentally triggering Wildcat's claws – almost made me shit myself! I took the other stairs upwards and walked along to the Briefing Room. There, I stopped before the memorial wall.

At the top was the picture of Mindy's Mum and Dad – they both looked really happy. I understood that it was taken before Mindy was born. Next to that, on the right, was a framed picture of Dave's Mum and Dad on their wedding day. I knew that Dave's dad had been murdered on the orders of Chris D'Amico. Below those two was a picture of Big Daddy in full battle-order with his daughter, Hit Girl. She was about my age, maybe a little older. Very few people had ever seen Hit Girl in that get-up. I thought she looked awesome and I hoped I would be just as awesome – one day. It also struck me that Hit Girl was really short!

Below them was a larger photo with many people in it. Justice Forever. I felt pangs of sadness and tears in my eyes as I focussed on Night Bitch – she had her arms wrapped around Kick-Ass. I recognised Dr Gravity, Battle Guy, and Finding Tommy. I knew that Insect-Man and the Colonel were long dead – the Colonel another victim of Chris D'Amico and his cunts. Then my eyes fixed on the next photo and I smiled.

The image was of a very handsome Royal Marines Commando in full dress uniform with his bride. It was Joshua's Mum and Dad. I knew that his Mum was dead but I had never asked about how his Dad had died. Beside that picture was another one. I did not know the lady but I had been told that she was Natalie Bay and that she had been murdered on the same night that Joshua himself had been shot and almost killed.

I had not wanted to get to the last picture on the wall. I sank to the floor and cried as I looked into the eyes of Miranda. She had died saving my life. Losing her had been so hard. Dave and Mindy had brought me into the Safehouse alone one night and we had hung that picture. I had come apart and sobbed for quite some time before I was able to say anything like a thank you.

I was a Predator. I was trained to kill. I was trained to look after myself – only there were so many things where I needed outside support. For that I had Dave and Mindy, then the twins, then Saoirse. I knew that I would never be alone again as long as I lived. How much torment could a ten-year-old take before she went totally barking and fell off the wagon of sanity?

I left the Briefing Room as soon as I had finished crying and I headed downstairs towards the Engineering Workshop beyond the vehicles.

Safehouse E

I passed through a pair of airlocked security doors and made my way 'next door', as Marty would put it.

I smirked when I considered my first time in Safehouse E. I had been all but naked which had soon changed to totally naked thanks to Mindy and her warped training ideas. The 'next door' Safehouse was very stark in appearance. It was all concrete and steel while what paint there was on the walls, was grey. I walked past the armoury and headed upwards towards the concealed Safehouse E entrance.

As I climbed up through a hatch, I found myself underneath a car!

..._...

As I emerged out of the inspection pit, I turned to look at the car. The car seemed somehow familiar but I could not think where from. It was a gloss black from bumper to bumper and it had two doors . . . otherwise, it was sleek and very business-like, but dated. One strange thing to note was an illuminated 'scanner' at the front, mounted just below the hidden headlights at the rim of the bonnet. It scanned from left to right and then right to left. The colour? Purple – thought it should have been red, to be honest.

"Needs a bit of work," I muttered.

"At least I'm fully grown!" a female voice growled.

The voice was reminiscent of that generated by our Fusion masks. I was instantly on my guard as the voice was not familiar and I expected to be alone at going on for 4am.

"Who are you?"

"My name is Z.O.E."

"Zoe?"

"Zed – oh – eee."

"I know how it's spelt – who are you?"

"Look to your left."

"The car?"

"Intelligent girl!"

Was I actually conversing with a car?

"What are you, KITT?" I laughed.

"No, but if you would like I can change my voice to the Knight Industries Two Thousand – better?"

The voice had changed from a female to that of a male and was vaguely familiar.

"I liked the previous voice, thanks – that one is a bit before my time."

"As you wish. . ." the female voice replied. "Are you going back down below?"

"I am – why?"

"You can take me with you. . ."

At that, the driver's door swung open.

"Centre console – small cell phone."

I reached in and picked up what looked exactly like a small cell phone.

"I am integrated into the Safehouses and I will obey any commands you give me – just preface any commands with either 'Zoe', 'Duty Officer', or 'Computer'."

"Is that last one a joke, or was your creator a Trekkie?"

"Bit of both, I think."

"Shouldn't that LED thing be red?"

"If you wish. . ."

The scanner changed from purple to red.

"Blue?"

The scanner changed from red to blue.

..._...

As I went below, I decided to test out the device. I paused before a locked door that blocked my way down the passageway.

"Zoe . . . please open Echo-One-Seven."

I felt slightly stupid – until the door clicked open.

"Err . . . thanks."

"You're welcome, Stephanie."

"You know who I am?" I asked as the door clicked shut behind me.

"Stephanie Lizewski, nee Reeman. Kidnapped. . ."

"Okay – I know my own backstory!"

Thursday, July 7th

Safehouse F

I noticed something secured to the shaft of the arrow; it was a note.

In hindsight, it was callous but I was intrigued. I momentarily ignored Chloe's wound and removed the note. I unrolled the note and read it. I began to shake with both a mixture of fear and anger – but mostly anger. Dave grabbed the note from my shaking hands and I saw his fingers flex and his face went very dark.

"What is it?" Hailee asked as she looked past Dave's shoulder and read the note herself:

*I MUST APOLOGISE
I MEANT FOR A CLEAN KILL
IF YOU WISH, I CAN FINISH THE JOB*

"That's fucking sick!" Hailee exclaimed. "Totally sick!"

Josh got up from the mat where Abby was seeing to Chloe's wound which turned out to be minor as less than an inch of arrow had penetrated the armour and the suit.

He walked over to Mindy.

"We are all behind you, Mindy. . ."

As Josh touched Mindy's arm he suddenly found himself on his knees as Mindy twisted his hand savagely and pinned him. Joshua swore loudly with the pain. Mindy released him immediately.

"Oh, Josh, I'm so sorry."

"Mindy, if you hurting me helps you get through this then keep at it," Josh offered seriously.

Mindy laughed and she gave Josh a hug.

"Thank you . . . all of you."

"We are Fusion," Joshua stated. "We are a single entity, fighting crime, together."

"Well said, Josh," Hailee commented.

..._...

"We know of two people who regularly use arrows like this," Marty stated as he held up the arrow recently removed from Shadow's armour.

"You mean those two miscreants that appeared a few weeks back?" Mindy asked.

"Yes, them."

Mindy's mood darkened.

"Then let's go see Apollo and Artemis – I want to talk to those two."

"Mindy," Dave cautioned. "Talk first, mutilate later. If they're guilty. . ."

An hour later

West Cermak Road and South Ashland Avenue

The pair of Yamaha MT-10 motorcycles cruised side by side down the avenue at the speed limit.

The Race Blue machine was ridden by Apollo in a black combat suit with blue highlights. The twin machine, in Tech Black was ridden by Artemis in her all black combat suit. Both vigilantes were out on the streets doing what they could to keep the streets safe. Then their peaceful night came apart, very quickly as several motorcycles and a pair of armoured SUVs appeared as if out of nowhere.

It was a classic ambush as the purple Ducati Panigale shot out of a side street and came up on their right. A yellow and green Ducati Diavel Carbon appeared on their left. Two more motorcycles pulled in front, a Ducati Monster 821 Dark and an Aprilia Caponord 1200 Rally. Behind, two black SUVs, one a Range Rover Sentinel and the other a GMC Sierra 3500HD with a mounted mini-gun pulled into the convoy.

"I think they want to talk," Apollo said dryly to his cousin.

"We done anything wrong?" Artemis growled back.

"Not that I know of. . ."

Artemis raised her right hand, signalling surrender, and Hit Girl pointed to the right and they both kept with the convoy as it turned down South Ashland Avenue.

..._...

The two cousins had no choice but to obey instructions. They stayed close and rode for another mile or so in a seemingly endless spiral around the roads before they approached a large five-storey structure. The convoy rode up a ramp and straight into the building before they all stopped in the darkened interior.

A roller-shutter closed behind them and they suddenly felt trapped and very worried. Lights came on all around them as the Fusion vigilantes dismounted from their machines and gathered around them after removing their helmets. The occupants of the SUVs remained inside their vehicles – just in case they did something stupid.

They were not that stupid – it was Fusion and you did not take on Fusion; unless you were fucking nuts!

The two cousins appeared distinctly apprehensive as they carefully pulled off their helmets and looked around, their hands well away from any weapons. Hit Girl strode forwards and she circled the two young vigilantes, her lip curling. She said nothing as Apollo and Artemis stood very still, uncertain of what to do. Hit Girl grabbed a Saya with Katana off her back.

"You were both in the city, last night – we have you on CCTV."

"We were out," Artemis replied slowly. "What. . .?"

Hit Girl swung the Saya and struck the back of Artemis's lower legs. The eighteen-year-old fell over backwards and crashed to the concrete floor. Apollo was seized by Kick-Ass before he could go to his cousin's aid.

"Get your hands off of her!" he yelled.

"I will ask the questions!" Hit Girl growled. "You, Artemis, will answer them!"

Artemis nodded as she did her best not to cower beneath Hit Girl's stare. She was scared – who would not be when faced with an angry Hit Girl!

"Pass me an arrow," Hit Girl went on. "Slowly. . ."

Slowly, Artemis reached into the quiver on her back and she retrieved a standard arrow. She handed the arrow to Hit Girl who looked closely at the tip. Hit Girl looked down at Artemis and her stance changed.

"You shot Shadow. . ."

It was almost a hiss, but it was enough to make Artemis quiver with fear.

"No . . . never . . . please. . ."

"Beg all you want . . . tonight, you die."

..._...

"We did nothing – we would never. . ." Apollo tried. "Please . . . we have no idea what this is about. . ."

"We are on your side – we would never hurt any of you," Artemis added desperately.

Hit Girl grabbed Artemis' armour and pulled her to within inches of her face.

"Why should I listen to you, you fucking vigilante wannabe?"

"Because we are your friends."

"I don't have friends – that's for fucking pussies like Wildcat!"

Without warning, Artemis was thrown backwards and her head hit the concrete. Only the armour on her mask protected her from injury.

"Ow!" she complained.

"Let the whelp go!" Hit Girl ordered and Kick-Ass released Apollo who ran forwards to assist his cousin. "What can you say to help your case?"

"We lost three arrows the other night – they were missing from my quiver – we think they were taken during a brawl," Apollo explained doing his best to keep the anger from his voice. "Is Shadow okay?"

"Yes, she is – not that it is of any concern to you. Let them go!"

The following morning
Friday, July 8th

Northwestern Memorial Hospital
Room 28

I awoke feeling remarkably refreshed, considering.

Don't get me wrong, I hurt like hell all over but you had to be alive to feel pain, so I was glad of it. I had managed to get a really good night's sleep – my first since arriving in the damn hospital. I knew that I had fallen asleep remembering my visit to Safehouse E and F but somehow, I had had the weirdest dream involving a talking car and a voice-activated Safehouse!

I opened my eyes and I didn't see much until somebody opened the damn blinds! I blinked in the early morning sun and I was able to make out a shadow by the window. As my eyes adjusted to the light, I recognised the familiar silhouette.

"Mum?"

"Morning! How's my little girl feeling?"

I considered a rebuke but then decided that I liked being called that – at least in private.

"She's doing good; I'm feeling a lot better."

"Pleased to hear it. Sleep well?"

"I did – very well, thanks, Mum."

"Good – you've got some fun today. . ."

I scowled as my eyes focussed properly and I noticed that Mindy was wearing shorts and a t-shirt. That was very rare in public – it was usually jeans and a blouse as a minimum.

"What's with the get up?"

"It's time to get your ass out of that bed and into a bath!"

"You're going to bathe me?" I asked in horror as Mindy just smiled dangerously – I hated that smile!

Ten minutes later. . .

A nurse – Kittiwake, her name was – had run a bath in an adjoining bathroom.

Next, ignoring the indignant moans from her patient, she pulled back the sheet protecting the young girl's dignity and proceeded to disconnect all of Stephanie's wires and drips . . . plus the catheter.

"I hate that thing!" Stephanie complained.

"Give it a few more days and then you can start using a bedpan," Kittiwake said and she laughed at Stephanie's grimace as she carefully removed the various wound dressings.

"Why does everybody enjoy humiliating me?" Stephanie demanded as she winced at the pain when the dressings were removed.

"We don't. . ." Mindy chuckled as she effortlessly scooped the naked ten-year-old off the bed and carried her into the bathroom.

"Better not be too hot. . ."

"Shut up!" Mindy ordered as she carefully lowered her daughter into the water.

Everything was fine until the water touched Stephanie's wounds and she cried out in pain. It took a minute for the pain to ease as she settled back into the warm water. Initially, Stephanie had been a little freaked out by the idea of somebody washing her but Mindy was surprisingly gentle as she went about washing her daughter from head to toe – something which Mindy readily admitted to being a first for her. For Stephanie, it was not as humiliating as she thought it would be – she knew that Mindy was doing it out of love and kindness. Stephanie also took great delight in splashing Mindy and getting her just as wet as she herself was. While Mindy washed Stephanie's long blonde hair, they talked.

"You're a really good Mum."

"Me?" Mindy chuckled. "I'm crap – being a Mom scares me more than facing down cunts."

Stephanie looked up into Mindy's eyes.

"You're the best Mom out there. You are kind and fair. You care and you give out compassion and discipline when required – harsh discipline too. I hate being disciplined but I hate letting you down more. I don't like being bad or getting into trouble but I'm learning to be a child again. I like being a child; I like being your child. I am proud to be your child"

Mindy did not know what to say so she said nothing. Stephanie saw the pink on Mindy's cheeks and the smirk of embarrassment and knew she had hit home.

"Thanks for being there for me, Mum. You've been there ever since you took me into your home, last year. You kept me sane while I hung upside down off a damn skyscraper. You kept me on the straight and narrow in the Caribbean and in Europe. You're a saint, Mindy – despite your night job!"

Mindy almost choked at that.

"Dave says I'm learning empathy from you three . . . I suppose I am . . . it's totally alien for somebody like me to worry about the feelings of others but I have to with you guys. I love having you guys around and I'll do anything to look after you. I know I fuck up from time to time . . . but I'm trying, I promise."

"We don't care if you fuck up, Mum. We just care that you're there for us when we need you – like right now . . . ow!"

Mindy had just finished drying her daughter's hair and she was brushing it firmly.

"More 'Sensitive Mum', less 'Hit Mum!'" Stephanie suggested to a chuckle from Mindy.

"Let's get you out of there."

..._...

Once Stephanie was dried off, Mindy helped her to stand up in front of the mirror and the ten-year-old girl looked shocked as she studied the wounds on her body for the first time.

"I'm a fucking mess!"

"Understatement of the year!"

Mindy helped Stephanie through to her bed. The bedding had been changed and instead of a sheet, a duvet in a blue cover was lying at the foot of the bed.

"Hope you like blue, Stephanie," Nurse Kittiwake said as she helped the girl back onto the bed.

First came all the wires on sticky pads in various places on her torso, then the catheter was reconnected – Stephanie made many colourful and crude comments as the nurse checked the 'plumbing' before she taped the tubing to the inside of Stephanie's left thigh. Some cream and dressings followed before a fetching light blue hospital gown was put on the girl and the drip was fixed back in place. Finally, Stephanie was laid back and the duvet pulled up over her.

"Comfortable?" Nurse Kittiwake asked.

"Yes, thank you – I feel a lot better after that bath; thanks Mum."

"Hungry?" Mindy asked with a smile.

"Oh, yeah!"

Just over an hour later, Stephanie had finished her breakfast and she was feeling fully energized instead of tired.

"You changed?" Stephanie asked her Mum who was now wearing a smart pair of blue jeans and a mauve blouse.

"Can't exactly stay in shorts and a T, can I?"

"Okay."

"Ready for some visitors?"

"Who?" Stephanie asked excitedly.

"Surprise. . ."

Mindy vanished out the door before she returned a few minutes later and Stephanie could hear excited voices in the corridor outside.

..._...

First in the door was Jackson Evans with his Mom, Debbie.

"Jackson?"

"Hi, Steph!"

They were followed by Ali Johns, Craig James, and Katy Evans, Jackson's twin sister. Stephanie was over the moon to see all her friends . . . even the boys.

"Hi, guys!"

"We've got a card – signed by the entire class," Katy said, handing over an enormous card liberally covered in signatures and comments. "Everybody was really worried but we're glad you're okay."

"Yeah," Craig grinned. "Jackson missed you."

Stephanie blushed at the comment.

"You're just lucky Steph can't hit you," Ali pointed out.

"She looks different – I've never seen her with her hair down; I like it."

Stephanie looked horrified as Katy and Ali giggled and she resolved to never have her hair down in Jackson's presence ever again.

"Can we see your wound?" Jackson asked.

"No!" Stephanie replied scornfully.

"Why not?" the boy persisted.

"It's in a place that you will never see!" Stephanie retorted.

"Huh?"

"Jackson, really!" his sister explained. "It's obvious; the wound is on her chest and she is not about to expose herself."

"I don't mind. . . She ain't got boobs, anyways."

"That's not the point!" Katy growled as she slapped her brother who just grinned sheepishly.

At the sound of snickering, Stephanie glared at the corner of the room where the two adults sat trying desperately not to laugh.

..._...

"She looks better than I expected," Debbie Evans commented.

"You should have seen her a few days ago – she's got one hell of a bruise on her chest," Mindy replied. "I saw her properly for the first time today, in the bath, and her body is in a shocking state."

"Jackson and Katy were very upset when they found out it was Stephanie who was shot. You've done really well to cope, Mindy."

"I've got a lot of people to support me."

"You've got us, too. Anything you need – just ask."

"Thanks. I'm just really pleased to see Stephanie laughing and joking. I've been so worried about her. She misses human contact. She misses her friends."

"She's a strong little girl."

"That she is."

That afternoon

Stephanie was over the moon at having had her friends to visit.

"Thanks for setting that up, Mum."

"They were really worried about you, especially your boyfriend. . ."

"I may be an invalid but I'll still slap you!"

"You'd lose a battle with a fly, right now. . ."

"Would not!"

"Would too!"

The argument petered out quickly as three people walked into the room. Stephanie's smile was enormous as she saw three of her best friends. Chloe, Saoirse, and Hailee gathered around the bed. Unbidden, Hailee peered down the inside of Stephanie's gown and she grimaced.

"I had better bruises," she chuckled. "They're way worse than you described, SD."

Chloe had a look herself before she sat down on a chair.

"Everyone had a good look?" Stephanie growled. "Anybody want to check out my snatch?"

Saoirse looked quickly at Mindy who smiled.

"Somebody's feeling a lot better," Saoirse commented dryly.

"Thanks to you and Mum. . ." Stephanie tailed off as she saw Chloe's painful grimace when she moved her left leg. "What's happened?"

Chloe explained the events of the previous evening once Mindy had checked that the door was firmly closed.

...+...

"We wanted to recce the area – check it was safe. I went out with Jackal on motorcycles and we headed in a large box pattern extending out a few miles. We saw the usual trouble-makers and a few snouts – we grilled them about the past week but found out nothing of use. After about an hour or so, we found that we had a tail. It was a black SUV that turned out to have fake plates. We didn't bother to try and ditch it; there was no point – at the time.

"Okay, in hindsight, that was a mistake but we had no way of knowing that at the time. We had stopped off to check on a group of young men when out of nowhere an arrow struck my thigh and penetrated my armour. I screamed; the pain was excruciating. The SUV vanished about the time I was hit and we never saw it again. Jackal bound the wound with a dressing and we headed back to the Safehouse where we found a very pissed off Mindy. While I was bleeding on the mat, she spied a note on the arrow and retrieved it."

"You were doing fine," Mindy chipped in. "But I'm sorry if I appeared insensitive."

"I'm used to it – besides, you had other things on your mind. . ." Chloe replied. "Anyway – my wound was only minor, but very painful. As for the note. . ."

Chloe hesitated and looked over at Mindy for guidance. Mindy scowled and got to her feet. She sat on the bed by her daughter and pulled out a piece of paper from her pocket. It was a copy of the original note. Stephanie read it and her face went very dark and then she shrugged.

"Not the first time somebody has tried to kill me, I suppose."

"You do have that effect on people," Saoirse said without humour.

"Yeah – the list of people would be pretty big," Chloe commented. "We're talking phonebook big!"

"So, no sex for you, then?" Stephanie retorted and Chloe scowled. "Till you heal?"

"Did you and Jackson get up to anything, then?" Chloe asked innocently.

Stephanie growled and Chloe smiled.

"SD, if you please. . ." Stephanie ordered and Saoirse slapped Chloe.

Chloe just laughed as she rubbed her arm.

..._...

"You saw mine, can I see yours?" Stephanie asked as she looked down at Chloe's thigh.

"The arrow only went in about an inch and Mom gave me a clean bill of health. . ."

"That's not what she said," Hailee commented. "Spill!"

Chloe's cheeks went a bright pink before she spoke.

"Alright! The good Doctor told me to stop behaving like 'a snivelling little bitch' and to 'suck it up' as I only had a scratch compared to a certain ten-year-old who had had her chest ripped open and had not even whimpered."

"I couldn't whimper; I was unconscious!" Stephanie pointed out quite reasonably.

"You were still very brave – much braver than Chloe!" Mindy chuckled before she looked at the girls in turn. "Now, our brave little princess needs some sleep."

Stephanie scowled at the 'brave little princess' bit but made no comment. As the three girls got up to leave, they each carefully gave Stephanie a hug. Saoirse whispered into her friend's ear.

"Stay strong, Steph; you're doing great."

"Thanks, SD."

Stephanie allowed herself to fall back onto her pillows with an enormous smile on her face and a good feeling inside. Within seconds she was fast asleep. Mindy grinned to herself and headed out to find a coffee.

She had some planning to do.

Chapter 299*: The Cage

The following evening
Saturday, July 9th, 2016

Safehouse Zulu

The subterranean bunker was busy.

Battle Guy was making final preparations for the night's activities. Everybody had been activated and the city would be very busy. The city would also be very safe – for most . . . but very deadly for the rest.

On the lowest level of Zulu, Mirage was being loaded. Nobody would pay much attention to a blue Ford Transit 150 exiting from the parking lot of a small shopping mall. In the driver's seat of the covert surveillance van, Mist sat ready. Behind her, in the rear, sat Splinter, Nightmare, and Eisenhower.

Lynx handed over the last of the ammunition and weapons and she slammed the side door shut.

Earlier that evening

Erika's Apartment

"Where were you, for the past week, Erika?" Toni demanded as Erika walked into the living room of the apartment that they both shared. "It was like you went underground, or something."

Erika smirked.

"Something like that. I told you, I had to go out of town to see my parents."

"I missed you. . ."

Toni kissed Erika on the lips and ran the fingers of her left hand over Erika's right breast. Erika breathed in as she returned the favour but with a hand on Toni's snatch.

"I gotta go, hun. . ."

"What – you only just. . ."

Erika laid a finger on Toni's lips.

"I'll be back before you know it – I promise."

Toni moaned.

"I need you," she said meaningfully.

Safehouse W

The Vigilante was back in the water and ready in all respects for sea.

Ares and Athena, along with Torment were standing by to get underway. They would wait until it was truly dark before heading up the Calumet River in case they were needed. The craft needed a check-ride after the refit to ensure that she was working perfectly.

The three of them expected to have themselves a peaceful evening.

Safehouse F

Hal stepped out of the Command Center and she raised her hand.

"Go get 'em!" she yelled and the Safehouse reverberated to motorcycle engines as Hit Girl, Kick-Ass, Jackal, Petra, and Raven started their engines.

Hal hit the button for the door and a minute later the noise diminished as the motorcycles ascended the concrete ramp. The high-speed fans in the ceiling drew out the clouds of carbon monoxide and Hal settled down to a night of monitoring her friends.

Chicago was going to be a hive of activity.

Safehouse D

"Let's roll!" Shadow growled as Hawk gunned the engine in Brute.

"You sure about this?" Wildcat asked.

"You know she's fucking nuts!" Trojan replied.

"Why did I agree to this?" Leon moaned as she ran her eyes across the dashboard before her. "It's like Darth Vader's bathroom!"

"You'll be fine!" Battle Guy chuckled from Zulu. "Just get Z.O.E. moving!"

"Mathilda Lando, a lone crusader in a dangerous world. The world. . . of the vigilante!"

"Yeah, yeah!" Wildcat growled. "Get a fucking move on!"

With the squeal of protesting rubber, the rebuilt, gloss-black, 1982 Pontiac Trans Am powered out of the Safehouse with Wildcat and Trojan following on behind providing close escort.

Brute followed suit but Hawk turned the armoured vehicle in another direction.

That same time

Safehouse Q

Marc Ryan was getting moody.

Two weeks. He had been stuck in the house for two whole weeks. Okay, he had three beautiful girls to talk with but he just wanted to get out of the house. His wound was healing well and Dr Bennett had visited every couple of days to change his dressings. Both Marc and Sarah had known of the twin girls, Sky and Christina.

"Damn psychos!" Sarah had growled.

Sky had laughed at the reference.

"We had a reputation," Christina had chuckled in confirmation.

The four of them found that they got on well together and they had quickly become friends. The fun had ended very quickly after a visit from Megan. She had told them that one of the other Predators, Stephanie, had been shot. All four teenagers had thought themselves safe only for that illusion to be shattered in a very violent fashion. Naturally, all four of them had immediately offered their help which Megan had politely declined – for the moment.

At first, Sarah had felt a slight satisfaction at hearing about Stephanie but almost immediately, she had felt bad about the thought and very worried about the ex-Predator. Stephanie had been right, they needed to stick together as much as possible.

Safehouse Zulu

Damon Williams was a little over six weeks old and he had just smiled for the first time only the night before while studying his big sister, Megan.

Marcus and Paige had been over the moon and both had started talking about two other little girls and their first smiles. For both Megan and Mindy, it had been a very embarrassing forty minutes! For the moment, Damon lay in his carry cot listening to his niece and nephew as they sparred together.

Anne-Marie and Danny had the job of looking after Damon, under the watchful eyes of Paige. Despite a 'no fighting' rule for most of the Safehouse, the twins were sparring in the Recreational Space on Level 1. Danny had the upper hand as he kicked his sister's legs out from under her. Anne-Marie did not go down quietly; she yelled at her brother and made an attempt at sweeping out his legs. Danny was ready for the attack and he jumped upwards and then came down on top of his twin. Anne-Marie punched Danny in the stomach causing him to roll off her in pain. She jumped up and kicked him in the left thigh before he rolled out of her reach and scrambled to his feet.

"Not bad, Scrappy!" Danny laughed.

"I ain't even started, Tinkerbelle!" Anne-Marie retorted.

Danny ran at his sister and just as he reached her, she sidestepped – but he had expected the move and he deftly adjusted, seizing hold of her and pushing her onto the couch where she landed heavily with a scream. He moved in to attack again. . .

"Okay, sparring is over!" Paige called out before anybody got seriously hurt – one kid in hospital was more than enough. "Both of you – go shower and then I've got some work to keep you both occupied and out of trouble."

The two eight-year-olds ran off laughing.

..._...

Paige then turned her attentions towards the scuffings on the other side of the large open space where Razor and Kiara were play fighting. The dogs seemed to have got the idea from the twins and there had been much growling, whining, and some yelping as the two six-month-old German Shepherd dogs rolled around the floor as Hercules and Hope just lay down and watched their siblings make fools of themselves.

Just as Paige headed over to break up the friendly squabble, Horatio decided to attack his pal and Razor yelped as several needle-like claws dug into his side. Razor barked at the diminutive ginger puss who hissed and bolted for the Galley with Razor in hot pursuit. Kiara just lay on the floor, her four paws in the air and her tongue hanging out the side of her mouth.

Paige caught up with the cat and dog pursuit in the Galley where she found the two furry, four-legged friends wolfing down some liquid sustenance after their brief burst of exercise. Horatio lapped at his kitty milk while Razor slurped noisily at some cold water in a large metal bowl.

Paige just shook her head and grabbed a refill for her coffee.

South Kedzie Avenue & West 26th Street

Hit Girl studied the interior of her visor as she heard a beep and then read a brief text message which appeared on the HUD before her eyes.

'Got info. Worm.'

"Okay – time to see our Worm!" Hit Girl announced and the five motorcycles turned east.

McKinley Park

Worm was a little more skittish than usual.

"I know you're upset about something – at least that is the general vibe around Chicago."

"Oh?"

"Your people have been very angry and they've been very forceful about their enquiries."

"Sniper attack – a week ago, . . ."

"The little girl? That was a stupid thing. . ."

"Get on with it!"

"Nobody has taken responsibility for the attack. Targeting kids is bad, Hit Girl; nobody wants a part of it."

"So, you have nothing!"

"Sorry, Hit Girl – saving the best for last. . . bad idea – but here it is: he calls himself a 'Corsair'; he was wounded during your attack at the silos. I heard where he is staying. . ."

"Now, that's my Worm!"

With my cash pot a thousand bucks lighter, we headed to the address Worm had given us. En route, I decided to check in on the twins – in hindsight probably not the best idea!

"Hi, Hit Girl – all's good," Lynx commented over the radio.

I wasn't buying it.

"You think I was born yesterday, Lynx?"

"Okay – the mutts are fighting and the kitty is trying to show who's the boss . . . hold on . . . Ravage! Give Rogue back her towel . . . and her underwear . . . no, she can't run around naked. My God, they're worse than Wildcat!"

"You seem to have everything under control."

"Horatio. . .! When will you be getting back here?"

"Sorry, Lynx – you're breaking up . . . call you later!"

"All good?" Kick-Ass enquired.

"Probably. . ." I commented in reply.

Mid-April, 2014

An unknown location in the USA

The days immediately after 'the killing in the shower', as most seemed to refer to it, were a combination of weird events and a complete change in my lifestyle – only, not all for good.

Nobody yelled at me when I cried at night – very few people even spoke to me. Each morning, when I went for a shower, my arrival in the showers would herald a surge of naked girls dashing out of the showers. I did not complain; I had the whole place to myself; my first private showers in months. At breakfast, in the past, I had always found it difficult to find a place – even for a skinny eight-year-old. Suddenly, entire swathes of table became available to me – it was like I had the plague or something.

In a way, I began to miss the bullying – I had become Little Miss Invisible which was a little bit depressing. On the funny side, I had kids almost twice my age giving me a wide berth in the corridors and elsewhere in the facility. I also suffered a lack of partners in sparring sessions – normally, they fought over who would get to spar against me; they loved to hurt me – but not anymore; they all thought I'd kill them!

Slowly, over a period of a couple of weeks, some girls began to graduate towards me. Mostly girls of eight and nine who were bullied, much in the same way I had been. I assumed that they thought being associated with me might give them some form of protection. There were four girls, three were Americans – apparently, the other Brits saw me as a traitor – and the other was a young French girl called Yvette. The American girls were called Jasmine, Ruth, and Maxine. Ruth was closer to nine while the others were just eight, like me.

Yvette spoke very little English which suited me as I spoke very little French. She said I was 'incroyable' – apparently, that meant 'amazing'. She was a nice enough girl with long, jet-black hair and pale green eyes. Jasmine was the youngest and she seemed to see me as somebody special – well, maybe I was special as I did have my codename.

That made me grin, even after a few weeks had passed. It kind of made everything worthwhile – all the suffering – in a warped kind of way.

Not that my codename improved my behaviour any.

..._...

"Walker!"

"Sir!"

"Are you listening?"

"Yes, sir."

"I don't think you are, young lady."

I rolled my eyes.

"Alright! 'An ambush is a surprise attack by fire from concealed positions on a moving or temporarily halted enemy' – happy?"

"Less of the insolence, young lady!"

"Fucking retarded dipshit!" I growled under my breath and Jasmine giggled.

"I am not going to warn you again, Walker!"

"Yes, sir – sorry, sir."

"Okay, back to ambushes. . ."

..._...

"He really rubs me the wrong way," I moaned as we left the classroom forty minutes later.

"I hate him," Jasmine agreed.

"He's no worse than the rest," Maxine warned.

"C'est un méchant homme," Yvette added.

"Huh?" Ruth asked.

I laughed.

"She says that the cunt is a bad cunt!" I explained.

"Instructor Graham?" An older boy asked with a smirk which goaded me into continuing my insults.

"Yeah," I replied. "He's a dumb fuck. . ."

Ruth had gone white and Yvette was shaking her head violently but like a dumb idiot, I ploughed on oblivious as the boy encouraged me.

"Instructor Graham is a grade one cunt fuck, and as far as I am concerned, he can go shit on a fucking stick!"

"Is that so, Walker!"

I span around to find myself face to face with Instructor Graham, himself, and he seemed a little annoyed. Everybody fled as the man grabbed hold of my sweatshirt and he dragged me down the corridor. I was for it – and in a big fucking way.

..._...

I was thrown across a desk in a classroom as the door was slammed behind us.

"Time for you to be taught some manners, you little bitch. Grab the end of the table and you let go, you get a whole lot more!"

I began to shake with fear as all my bravado vanished within just a millisecond and I grabbed hold of the end of the table. As I did so, I felt a hand grab hold of the waistband of my joggers and those of my knickers, at the back, and then yank them down to my ankles. I gritted my teeth and pressed my forehead down against the table top.

The leather strap bit into the soft skin of my right buttock and I screamed out as the sensation surged through me. I had never felt anything like it but before I could come to terms with that first strike, the next struck my left buttock and I screamed out again. I struggled to take a breath as I fought against the agony from my burning backside. Four more, two on each buttock, and it was over.

I barely heard the bastard as he whispered in my ear: "Don't you ever disrespect me again, Walker!"

..._...

I struggled to move as I sobbed into the desk. My arms hurt from gripping the table. It took many minutes before I was able to regain my feet and then I yelled out in pain again as I tried to bend down to pull up my knickers and joggers. Once that agonising task was completed, I wiped my eyes on the sleeve of my sweatshirt and opened the classroom door. I felt so angry and very humiliated by my treatment – not that I could do anything about it; the world of the Predator was a harsh one.

I turned right to head directly back to the dormitory – I needed somewhere I could collapse and cry. But, before I had gone far, I met a smirking older girl.

"Bet that smarted, Walker!" the thirteen-year-old girl sneered.

I was in no mood for anybody, so I strode directly up to the girl and I yanked down on her sweatshirt bringing her face down to my own height.

"Look, Hampton, you wanna be a clown?"

Hampton looked around at the other kids as they gathered to watch the impromptu entertainment.

"Fuck you, Walker – you ain't gonna kill me!"

"If you're going to be a clown, you need a big red nose. . ."

I rammed my fist into the shocked teenager's face and she screamed out in pain as her nose exploded and blood went in all directions.

"You fucking little bitch!" Sarah Hampton growled but before I could do anything, my 'crew' appeared and they quickly dragged me away from the scene and an impending pounding from the thirteen-year-old Phase 3 Predator.

..._...

I struggled to sleep that night and I woke up most of the dormitory when I went to the toilet for a wee. The following morning saw a very subdued Psyche keeping well away from others and not going out of her way to cause shit. I spent most classes hovering over my chair as sitting was unbelievably painful. The girls each took the opportunity to check out my strap marks and bruises when I showered the following evening.

"Mon Dieu!" Yvette commented in shock at the sight of my red, blue, and black buttocks.

Hampton would glower at me whenever our paths crossed and in general I kept away from her for my own self-preservation. Not that that worked. A week later, the girl still had a red nose and a major sense of humour failure. She cornered me – alone.

"I owe you something, Walker, and it's going to hurt you a lot more than it's going to hurt me. . ."

I did not wait to find out what she had planned – I whipped out a small switch-blade knife and slashed the girl on her left side. The knife skimmed her, cutting through her sweatshirt and I heard a scream as the blade found skin.

Not surprisingly, I was punished.

I received two strikes with a strap on my bare arse – for carrying a knife. Sarah Hampton also received the strap – three times – for allowing herself, a Phase 3 Predator, to be slashed by a Phase 2 Predator.

I never saw the girl again as she was transferred soon after her strapping.

Northwestern Memorial Hospital
Room 28

I was bored and my mind had wandered back over two years into my distant past – well, distant for a ten-year-old!

I smiled at the thought of my triumphs and grimaced at the thought of my impressive downfalls. I actually wriggled my bottom on the bed and I felt like I could feel the strap marks which were still faintly visible on my fair skinned backside. To be honest, I had forgotten much of my past – and for good reason, too. There had been pain and tragedy, some more pain, and also some pain. Did I mention pain?

Ever since other Predators had started to appear out of the woodwork, my long-term memory had begun to return – in part. Unfortunately, I had not been able to select what memories were restored and in which order. Sarah's arrival had brought many memories to the fore, including my first appointment with the strap and my journey of self-destruction which resulted in a much more severe punishment which indirectly led me to be the Predator that I ultimately became.

I began to feel depressed as I thought about what led to that punishment . . . but I was then rudely interrupted!

..._...

"Got time for some visitors?" a voice called out as the door was pushed open.

I was very surprised by my visitors – not to mention the time. But then I remembered what they used to be and that sneaking into a hospital after visiting hours was literally child's play!

"Hi, Sarah – come in, please."

"How you doing, shorty?" Chrissy smiled.

"I'm doing good, Chrissy, thanks . . . hi, Sky . . . hi, Marc."

"We just wanted to see how our fellow Predator was doing."

"Thanks, Marc – err . . . does Mindy know you lot are out?"

"You think we can't handle Chicago?" Sarah queried.

"Actually, I was more worried about what effect four Predators at large might have on Chicago!" I quipped.

"Too true," Chrissy laughed.

As I looked at the four laughing teenagers, I felt pleased. Without Fusion, without Mindy, what life might those four kids have had? I felt sorry for the two older girls; they had fallen victim to Shadow and her bō-staff. Marc was still recovering from his bullet wound, but it was nothing like my own. Sarah was intact – physically at least. I had heard about what she had been going through when she was rescued; horrible. . .

"We hear that you're past the worst," Marc commented as he came to sit on the edge of my bed.

"I bloody well hope so," I growled. "I want to get out there and start to tear limb from bloody limb!"

"That's the Psyche we all know and love," Sky offered with a friendly smile.

I laughed but then grimaced at the pain which shot through my busted ribs.

"Sorry!" Sky said with her own grimace.

"I'm fine – they snapped three of my ribs while resuscitating me the other day," I explained before I turned my head to look at Sarah. "I was just remembering our meeting in the corridor and later . . . when I slashed you."

Sarah winced and subconsciously rubbed her nose.

"My big gob got me into trouble, didn't it! If I had kept my mouth shut then you wouldn't have broken my nose, nor would I have got myself slashed and then strapped."

"You broke her nose, too?" Marc exclaimed.

"I'd like to say it was an accident. . ."

"Nothing you do is accidental," Sky commented dryly.

I tried to come up with a witty answer, but I failed and I just grinned stupidly instead.

"You know – at the time, it pissed me off no end that you never got The Cage. Even now, it rankles a bit," Sarah commented. "You were a wild animal, Steph; you reacted with your fists whenever anybody wound you up. Excluding me, and that girl in the shower, . . ."

Stephanie grinned sweetly.

". . . you broke that ten-year-old boy's arm, then you broke two ribs on that twelve-year-old girl, and that was only while I was at the same centre as you. You kept the Hospital Wing in business, girl!"

Chrissy gave Stephanie an approving look. Stephanie did not seem happy about Sarah's description of her.

"I don't know what was wrong with me – maybe it was the attention, or the lack of it. I began to lay out a path of self-destruction which, you will be pleased to know, led me to spend two weeks in The Cage."

"Two weeks?" Marc demanded. "What did you do?"

Stephanie grimaced and her face took on a pained expression as she thought back to those horrific events when she was just eight-years-old.

..._...

"I was stupid. I allowed those bastards to get to me – I let my guard down, badly. It started with my just being insolent to the instructors – they tolerated that for a while and some even laughed at my nervy behaviour. But then I took things too far – I began to ignore my conscience; I went against all reason. In hindsight I am shocked by my behaviour and my own total lack of regard for my own personal safety. Maybe I wanted them to kill me – I don't know. The instructors began to get annoyed with me – I'd receive a tap from a baton. That tap would increase to a blow. I gathered bruises all over my body until one day, they had pushed me too far.
